Verſ. 4. Praiſe him yee Heavens of heavens, yee waters above the heavens; This is ſpoken becauſe there are more heavens, every wandring ſtarre having his orbe, or heaven, as the fixed ſtarres have their heaven much higher, above all which, is the empyrean Heaven, the Throne, and Seat of God, called 2 Cor. 12. 12. the third Heaven; the waters above the heavens are the waters ſpoken of, Gen. 1. Then he ſeparated the waters above the firmament from the waters beneath; of which ſee upon that place. Now they praiſe God, becauſe to keep there, as he decreed above the Aire, called alſo heaven, in an hollow vaſt place, nothing ſupporting them, tends greatly to the praiſe of his Almighty power.

Verſ. 7, 8. Here he proceedeth to inferiour things, beginning with the loweſt in the waters beneath, as the Dragons, or great Whales, and then coming to raine and ſnow, &c. which are higher, made out of the waters above; Hee addeth, doing his will, to ſhew, that Clouds cover not the heavens, neither doth it raine, nor the wind blow, but according to the will and appointment of God, that if we have raine according to our deſire, to doe us good; or contrariwiſe, for harme to the fruites of the earth, being hereby corrupted, we may praiſe God, as the Author for the one, and turne from our ſins, fearing before him for the other.

Note.

Verſ. 11. Kings and all people, Princes and Judges; Having ſtirred up the Creatures, or ſpeaking by way of exhortation ſhewed, how they in their kinde praiſe God; now he cometh to men, beginning with the higheſt, Kings and Princes, whom he calleth upon three times, to intimate how hardly they are brought to it in their places to glorifie God, being rather by their high dignity puffed up, and having their eyes dazeled by beholding their owne worldly glory. Then young men in the flower of their age are exhorted to the ſame, and great need, becauſe they are moſt prone to follow their owne Luſts; the word בחורי ſignifieth choyce young men, and Virgins, both Sexes being bound alike. Laſtly, old men and children, touching whom it is ſaid, Out of the mouth of Babes thou haſt perfected praiſe, and old men muſt continue to the end in this duty.

Verſ. 14. He ſhall exalt the horne of his people, the praiſe of all his Saints, the children of Iſrael, a people neare unto him. Having ſhewed what great cauſe there is to praiſe God, verſ. 13. now he pitcheth in ſpeciall upon that, for which his Iſrael had greateſt cauſe of all other peoples to praiſe him; for he exalts their Horne, that is, graceth them ſingularly, making them for his ſpeciall favours moſt famous, above even the Saints taken out of other Nations, ſome here, and ſome there; for God alwayes had his Church in all Countries, but ſpecially under the New Teſtament; but to none hath he ſhewed ſo much favour in outward reſpects, as to Iſraels line, ſo that they that will ſpeake of Gods moſt famous gifts, muſt above all ſpeake of thoſe done towards them, who are ſaid to be neare unto him, becauſe they were ſo deare above others, and from greateſt obſcurity raiſed to greateſt dignity.

SIng unto the Lord a new Song, the ſame beginning with Pſal. 95. and it is Prophetical, ſhewing what ſhould be done under the New Teſtament, by a new people, verſe 2. Let Iſrael rejoyce in him that made him, let the children of Zion be joyfull in their King: ſo Pſal. 100. He hath made us, and not we our ſelves, viz. his Iſrael by regeneration, and who is our King but Chriſt, in whom when we beleeve, and ſo attaine the pardon of our ſins, we have joy unſpeakable. Verſe 1. Verſe 2. Pſal. 45.

Let them praiſe him with Timbrel and Harp; This is ſpoken according to that which was uſed then to be done, and after the Church came to a flouriſhing eſtate, in Conſtantines time, was uſed amongſt Chriſtians, who alſo praiſed God upon Inſtruments of Muſick, of the lawfulneſſe of which under the Goſpel it hath been before diſputed. Verſ. 3.

He will beautifie, or glorifie the meek, or poore, with ſalvation, for ſuch were Chriſtians a long time, being by perſecutors impoveriſhed and afflicted, but they deſpiſed the ſhame, and look't at his glory ſet before them, and for this praiſed God. Verſ. 4. Heb. 12. 2.

Let them be joyfull in glory, and ſing upon their beds; for the Saints are truly glorious even in their poverty through Chriſt, who hath united them to himſelfe, and dyed for them, to ſanctifie them, and make them a glorious Church; as for ſinging upon their beds, beds are places of reſt, and therefore it is meant in this ſafe eſtate, wherein they may well reſt, as David ſaid before, Pſal. 4. I will lye downe and take my reſt; not ſtrictly meaning upon his bed, but that in his minde he would reſt as quietly by the faith, which he had in God alwayes, as if he were in bed, taking his bodily reſt. Verſ. 5. Epheſ 5. 30.

The high praiſe of God ſhall be in their mouthes, and a two-edged ſword in their hands. It is ſaid, high praiſe, becauſe ſet forth with loud ſinging, and muſick in their Congregations, as was ſaid before, out of the abundance of joy for the faith of Chriſt, taught and imbraced amongſt them; of the two-edged ſword, ſee Heb. 4. 12. The word of God is quick in operation, and ſharper then any two-edged ſword, and Revel. 19. 15. Out of his mouth goeth a ſharp ſword. Theſe are the arms where-with Chriſts Souldiers, his Miniſters, fight, not materiall ſwords; and therefore at their firſt ſending out, the Lord forbad them to take ſo much as ſtaves in their hands, and when Peter ſmote with the ſword he was rebuked, it being ſaid unto him, He that ſmiteth with the ſword, ſhall periſh with the ſword; otherwiſe, as Jerom hath it, here would be no agreement with that which was ſaid before, his Saints, or his mercifull ones, as the word ſignifieth, and the afflicted or poore, ſeeing men ſmite not with the materiall ſword in mercy; neither doe the poore or weake this, but the mighty, and in wrath; and that which followeth, To execute vengeance upon the Heathen, is to be underſtood likewiſe, and the next words, To binde their Kings with chaines, and their nobles with fetters of iron. For, as Jerom well noteth, he ſaith not, to ſlay, but to binde them, as enemies being ſubdued are taken, and bound with chaines; as the wicked King Manaſſeh, being thus bound was carried into Babylon; ſo the Spiritually bound are brought captive to the poſſeſſion of the Church to their Salvation, for ſo Chriſt is ſaid, to lead captivity captive, Epheſ. 4. 8. and his Preachers by the weapons of their warfare, to bring into captivity, 2 Cor. 10. 5. to the obedience of Chriſt. And when this is done, vengeance is taken upon them, that is, upon their vile luſts, that held them captive before, they being mortified, and the Devils power, who held them, being broken. For Luſts be, as it were members, and the filthy fleſh, upon which vengeance is now taken, as a body of Death, but now offered up in ſacrifice, it being killed, that the Spirit may live; whereas it is added, ver. 8. As it is written, this doubtleſſe hath reference to that, Eſa. 45. 14. where binding with chaines is alſo ſpoken of in the ſame ſence, and Verſ. 6. and not to Deut. 7. 2. as many thinke, for their subduing, and killing with the Sword is properly spoken of, here binding, as the Saints and Servants of Christ bind, according to that power given them in Preaching, Matth. 16. to 10. and Heathens without, and by censure towards even the greatest Christians within the pale of the Church. And if the time of writing this Psalme shall seeme not to agree, the Psalmes being written before Esay, it is easily answered, Davids indeed were, but many of them were written by other holy men long after, as hath been before shewed.

Matth. 18.

Calvin. Calvin expounding this (written) of the Jewes, because in their vengeance taken upon the Canaanites, they did nothing of their own heads out of cruelty, but all as God directed them, and wrote it downe by Moses, yet acknowledgeth the Spirituall Sword to be here meant, and spirituall binding to Salvation, not to destruction; the power of which the Ministers of Christ have committed unto them, unlesse any be obstinate in their sinnes when they are thus bound, for then it is to their certaine destruction. But the Corporeall sword have neither they, nor any other Christians, but only the Magistrates, to cut off evil-doers, and to raise Armies against forreigne enemies, that seek the over-throw of them, and of their Religion. And whereas poore Christians may seeme to be exposed to treading upon by every one, if their Captaines use none other armes, but these of the Spirit, he prevents this objection, by saying, such honour have all his Saints; by meeknesse, and patience in suffering, only armed spiritually to make such great conquests.

PSAL. CL.

Vers. 1. THis is the last Halalujah, directed most probably to the Angels and Saints in Heaven, for it is said, Praise him in his Sanctuary, praise him in the firmament of his power; In expanso potentiæ ejus, the second word serving to explaine the first; the Sanctuary here spoken of being shewed to be Heaven, so called, because it over-spreadeth all, and of his power, because the Divine Power working such wonders here, as the bringing of Kings and Nobles under, before spoken of, by such weake meanes as the two-edged sword of the Word, cutting downe sinne in them, or cutting them off from the heavenly inheritance, and all plea against being condemned, because I say, this power comes from heaven. And this exhortation is in the nature of a Prophesie, fore-shewing that in the end it shall be so, and that God shall have glory from all for ever and ever.

thus ſpoken of, in alluding to the manner of old under the Law, whilſt the Sanctuary ſtood.

Let every thing that hath breath praiſe the Lord; That is, not only the Saints of the Jewes, but of all other Nations, not uſed to ſuch Muſicall expreſſions, but only to ſinging. The Hebr. hath כל נשמה every Spirit, and ſo the vulgar Latine renders it, and Aben Ezra ſaith, that it is properly put for the ſpirit or breath of a man, into whom it is ſaid, God breathed into him, the breath of life; but נפש ſignifying a ſoule, is put as well for the ſoule of any other living creature, as of Man, See *Gen.*7.22. *Eccleſ.*3.21. for the uſe of Neſhema, Jerome following the tranſlation that hath it ſpirit, ſaith, that bodies cannot worthily praiſe God, and therefore all men are exhorted to doe it with their ſpirits, and all ſpirits ſeparated from the body, and now in heaven. And in ſpeaking upon the number of the Pſalmes, hee ſaith, they three fifties, myſtically ſheweth three Eſtates. 1 Of Regeneration, by Baptiſme and Repentance. 2 Of Fructification, by good Workes; after this: 3 Of Glorification, when wee ſhall bee wholly intent to praiſe God for ever, being joyned to the Quire of Angels.

The End of the Expoſition of the Book of PSALMES.

The Preface to the Proverbs.

THis Booke is called, Hebr. משלי by Sept. tranſlat. Παροιμίαι by Cald. Nithloi, by Aquila, whom the vulgar Latine followeth, Parabolæ, yet the title of the Book in vulgar Latine is Proverbs, the word משלי, it commeth of משל dominari, to rule; and the wiſe ſayings here delivered are ſo called, becauſe they came from a great Ruler, K. Salomon, and have the dominion and pre-eminence, for the wiſdome lying herein, above all other writings of the wiſeſt men, for which they are with all diligence to be attended to by all men that deſire to be wiſe. Of theſe Myſteries or principall ſayings there be divers ſorts; 1. Compariſons made betweene two, the one being the more illuſtrated by the other, of which ſort are the Parables of our Lord taken from divers things. 2. Riddles or darke ſayings, one thing being ſpoken, of which at the firſt there ſeemeth to be no ſence, but being opened, notably ſetteth forth the matter intended, as that Riddle of Sampſon; Out of the eater came meate, and out of the ſtronge ſweetneſſe. Judg. 3. Figures, as it is ſaid in Sept. tranſl. touching Iſaac that ſhould have been offered, but was ſpared, and a Ram offered in his ſtead; Abraham, ſaith Theophilact, received him in a Parable, that is, in his being ſpared, and the Ram ſacrificed, there being a figure of that, which ſhould afterwards be done touching Chriſt, his Divinity not ſuffering, but his Humane Nature. Theophylact. 4. It is put, ſaith Chryſoſt. for a reproach, as Pſal. 44. 13. Thou haſt made us משל a reproach, or by word, yea a Parable; and the like doth David ſay of himſelfe, I am made to them a Parable, they ſpake againſt me. Chryſoſt. 5. It is put for a Proverb, a ſaying commonly uſed, as Ezek. 18. What meane ye by this Proverb, The fathers have eaten ſoure grapes, and the childrens teeth are ſet on edge. Where againe the ſame word is againe uſed in Hebrew. The Latine word Proverb is by one derived from Procul a verbo, farre from a word, either becauſe it is certaine, and grounded upon long experience, as words commonly ſpoken are not; or is farre from the words of one particular man or other, becauſe ſo ſaid commonly by all men. Toſtatus. But from Chryſoſt. who calleth Proverbs, Cana verba, hoarie-headed words, as being moſt ancient, we may better make this derivation, from Verba a procul, words fetcht from a farre off, becauſe they have been uſed time out of minde. Chryſoſt. 6. For Apophthegms or acute ſayings, for the exerciſe of the wit, as Numb. 21. 27. Therefore they ſay in Proverbs, Hebr. Moſhlin, come into Heſhbon, and let the City of Sihon be built; for the underſtanding whereof, it is required. And hitherto of the title, now for the kinde of writing. Herein are ſet forth many excellent ſayings fit for the exerciſe of mens wits at feaſts, for Ch. 9. Wiſdom is ſaid to have killed her fat beaſts, and to have mingled her wine, and furniſhed her table; and what are her dainties with which it is furniſhed, but many excellent ſayings, which went before, and followed after.

And from Salomon it may be conceived, that Plutarch writ his Synposia, or Coloquies at feastings, and Plato and Xenophon likewise.

The Proverbs, or wise sayings of this Book, are either Ethicall, Oeconomicall, or Politicall; Ethicall, concerning good manners, Oeconomicall, concerning Family matters, Politicall, concerning the Commonwealth. For the Authour of this Book, it is doubted by some, whether it were Salomon onely, or both he, and Agur, and Lemuel, of the two last Chapters; but as Plato hath divers speakers in his foresaid book, Socrates, Aristedemus, Phædrus, &c. So Salomon in his Book brings in Agur as one of the speakers, and Lemuel as another; but all was compiled by him alone, out of that excellent wisdome wherewith God had indued him, and these are but names, the one setting forth gathering, and the other God with him, as being invented to set forth the Dialogue. And some there are, who thinke that those two Chapters were not placed last as now they be, but after the 24. at the first, because chap.25. 1. it is said, These also were the Proverbs of Salomon, which the men of Hezekiah copied out. But no such thing can be proved thence, and therefore let us hold the order here used. For any coherence of these Proverbs there is none, except sometime of three or foure together, and therefore to seek to make them cohere together, is but lost labour: for the word Parable in Greek, it signifieth a casting about, and is, as Donatus defineth it, a Proverb accommodated to things and times; as some others, a word or speech conducible to the reason of life, containing much profit in it, in a moderate kinde of obscurity, or a speech rendring a thing manifest with obscurity. Some, saith Arboreus, think, that Salomon wrote not this Book of Proverbs, but dictated them onely at sundry times, and that they were written by others, and by some wise man gathered together into one, as they had been taken by divers; and they bring a reason of this conjecture from chap.25.1. where the men of Hezekiah are said to have written those from thence to the end of the Book. But it may rather be conceived, that they onely copied them out, being written before by the Authour. Jerome in his Preface to the Proverbs saith, That

Salomon wrote three Books, Proverbs, Eccleſiastes, and the Song of Songs. And it is noted by some, that he had three names, Salomon King of Israel, as here, Eccleſiastes, or the Preacher, and Jedidiah, according to which he writeth in each of them. In this, are all manner of wise sayings, and common proverbs for the instruction of all his subjects both learned and unlearned: In Eccles. select sayings to raise up mens mindes from worldly things, as most vaine and transitory; and in his Song of love, matters betwixt Christ and his Church, according to the signification of his

CHAP. I.

THe Proverbs of Solomon the ſonne of David, King of Iſrael; To know wiſdome, and inſtruction, &c. Of the name of Solomon enough hath been ſpoken in the Preface, for the knowing of more touching him; ſee his Hiſtory, 1 King. 1, &c. Lavater thinketh, that theſe Proverbs were not written, but only dictated by him, and by others written and gathered together into one, becauſe it is probable, if he had written them, that he would have done it in order. But to me this ſeemeth rather a reaſon, that he wrot them, ſome at one time, and ſome at another, as he was by the Spirit of God inſpired and moved to doe, and ſo left them to all poſterities, without digeſting them into a method, that they might be taken the rather for pure Spirituall, and Dictates of Gods Spirit through him; yea, it is expreſly ſaid, Chap. 22. 20. Have not I written to thee excellent things, in counſel and knowledge? For the diviſion of this Book he alſo makes three parts; 1. Of larger Diſcourſes, and exhortations, one having ſome dependance upon another, to Ch. 12. The ſecond of ſhort Sentences, from thence, to Chap. 24. The third of other new Sentences, gathered by the men of Hezekiah, from thence to Chap. 30. where the ſayings of Agur and Lemuel are added. And although there be no Coherence betwixt the Sentences, yet by reducing them to certaine Heads, he hath made them ſo to cohere, that by the helpe hereof a man may readily finde all things ſpoken touching one matter under one Head, and touching another under another: So that I thinke it may be very uſefull before I goe any further to inſert it here, with ſome little neceſſary alteration, having regard to the Alphabet.

To know wiſdome and inſtruction. Here Wiſdome, according to ſome, is meant Contemplative of high and profound matters, by Inſtruction Practicall: But becauſe the Wiſdome taught in this Book, is joyned with Practice, or elſe it is no true wiſdome, ſith that only is wiſdome whereby our manners are formed aright, and it is founded in the feare of God, as is ſhewed, verſ. 7. I rather aſſent unto them, that by Wiſdome underſtand that, whereby Theorical, and Practicall are both joyned together, and by Inſtruction that, which is attained by caſtigation, or correction the perſon corrected learning hereby the reformation of his life, patience and obedience; for the word rendred inſtruction is מוסר by the vulgar rendred Diſcipline, and it ſignifyeth caſtigation, or correction. So that it is meant, by theſe Proverbs, a man may learne the moſt excellent knowledge. which is not only when he doth underſtand the will of God in every thing, and frames his life and doings accordingly, and both in being corrected how to carry himſelfe worthily, and in giving correction to youth, to whom more properly Diſcipline belongeth; for this wiſdome Plato calleth a Philoſopher, Virum probum, an honeſt man, ſaying, That he excelleth other men as a King the common ſort, in that he ruleth over his luſts, and evil affections, whereas the fooliſh are ſubject to them. Thus Chryſoſtome defineth Wiſdom, it is the knowledge of Divine and Human things, whereby he worketh theſe, and abſtaines from them. And Baſil upon theſe words; To give wiſdome, to wit, that worthy, precious, and true, which ſtands in good manners to perceive the words of underſtanding, vulg. of Prudence, Hebr. it is בינה underſtanding, betwixt which and Prudence ſome diſtinguiſh thus; Underſtanding is the wiſe perceiving of things, which are hard to be underſtood; Prudence the applying of them being underſtood according to right counſel; as Joſeph ſhewed himſelfe moſt prudent, when he not only interpreted Pharaohs Dreame, but alſo adviſed him wiſely what was beſt to be done. Others expound Underſtanding of the knowledge of witty, and acute ſayings, attained to by wit and ſtudy, ſo that a man is able to ſpeake hereof; but Prudence of that, whereby a man ſpeaketh out of experience, as Tully diſtinguiſheth between Juris peritia, and Juris prudentia, the one being skil to ſpeake, attained to by Art, and Learning, the other not only by Art, but by going through many buſineſſes. Baſil ſaith, Prudence is knowledge to diſcerne betwixt the good and the bad, as the Gold-ſmith diſcerneth between good and bad money, to refuſe the one, and to take the other. I hold with Lavater, that in the word בינה both the knowledge of darke ſayings, and the ſhewing how to make uſe hereof is implyed, and doing accordingly.

To receive inſtruction of wiſdome, juſtice, judgement, and equity; Lavater, Diſcipline of wiſdome, doctrine, induſtry, and juſtice, Hebr. the word מוסר is uſed againe, ſignifying correction or diſcipline, and for the reſt of the words N. Tr. is beſt, only for equity, Hebr. משרים righteouſneſſe. And theſe three, ſaith one, are the parts of the wiſdome here ſpoken of, Juſtice being that whereby every one hath his due given him; Judgement, that whereby all our actions, both Eccleſiaſticall and Civil, are regulated by the Word of God, and nothing is done but what hath a ground therein; Righteouſneſſe, the minding and following after all things that be good and commendable, all which may be learned by this Booke. Lavater by Juſtice underſtands either faith which juſtifieth, or diſtributive juſtice, as was before ſaid, by Judgement that faculty which is neceſſary in a Judge to diſcerne the truth, in Cauſes that come before him, to judge accordingly, by Righteouſneſſe, walking in the way of Gods Commandements right on, without declining to the right hand or the left, and in going according to mens Lawes, not to be rigorous, for extreme right, as the ſaying is, is extreme wrong. Beda, by Juſtice a right action, by Judgement, the diſcerning between good and evil, by Equity the rectitude of the minde is underſtood, or Juſtice is to worke wel according to the rule of verity, Judgement to diſcerne and doe rightly in things that pertaine to our neighbours; Equity to ſeeke with a ſincere intention in theſe things that we doe, to pleaſe God only. To give ſubtlety to the ſimple, to the young man knowledge and diſcretion, ver. 5. The wiſe will heare, and increaſe learning. Here it is ſhewed for whom theſe Proverbs were written, viz. both for young and old, wiſe and ſimple; to breed knowledge in the one, and to encreaſe it in the other; for ſimple Hebr. is פתאים eaſily to be perſwaded, as the young are that yet be not tainted with evil.

Baſil. evil. Baſil hereupon ſaith, there are two ſorts of ſimple ones; 1. Of thoſe that by reaſon of their young and tender age, and good education withall, are yet unexperienced in evil wayes, but are not ſufficiently inſtructed to beware of the fallacies of ſinne to take heed of it. 2. Of thoſe that through a conſtant reſolution againſt evil, have gotten the root thereof extirpated out of their minds, by going long on in this purpoſe, and being hereby confirmed in a good way. Now of the firſt ſort it is here ſpoken, and not of the other, who are only ſimple concerning

Rom. 16.19. evil, as the Apoſtle exhorteth all of us to be; likewiſe of the ſubtile, there are two ſorts; 1. Of thoſe that having wit and underſtanding to decline evil and doe good, wiſely apply themſelves to the good in all things, taking heed of evil doing, and of the ſnares that are cunningly laid for them to draw them to evil, or to bring evil upon them. 2. Of thoſe that uſe their wit and Art to damnifie and hurt others, as the Serpent for this is ſaid to be more ſubtile then any beaſt, and we are

Gen. 1. Mat. 10.16. by our Lord bidden to be wiſe as Serpents; where ſee in what particulars the Serpents wiſdome conſiſteth. Muffet compareth this place with Pſal. 19. Giveth wiſdome to the ſimple, as all one therewith; and by ſimple he underſtandeth not only the young and unexperienced, but alſo the childiſh in underſtanding, that be of meaneſt capacity, but by this Booke all may come to learne ſubtilty; that is, not only to know good and evil, but alſo to foreſee and perceive evil comming, to avoyd it. To the young man knowledge and diſcretion, Hebr. to the childe,

Pſal. 119. 99. that is, the childe in underſtanding, both knowledge of Gods wil in great meaſure, as David ſaith, that he underſtood more then his Teachers, or then the ancient, ſuch as in regard of whom he was but a childe: By diſcretion, ripeneſſe of wit, and ſoundneſſe of judgement is underſtood; but for the attaining of this, a Pſal. 119. 97. man muſt doe by theſe Proverbs, as David by the Word, make them our meditation all the day.

Verſ. 5. Having ſhewed the benefit of theſe Proverbs in reſpect of the ſimple, now he ſheweth the benefit in reſpect of the wiſe, They will heare and increaſe learning; whereby is intimated, that no man is ſo old and wiſe, but that he may ſtill learne more; wiſe Solon ſaid, γηράσκω ἀεὶ πολλὰ διδασκόμενος, I wax old, alwayes learning more; Marcus Antoninus the Emperour being old, went after to the Schoole of Sextus the Philoſopher, ſaying, It is a goodly thing for an old man to be ſtill learning; and Salvius Julianus, a moſt famous Civil Lawyer ſaid, If I

Hieron. a Pol. in Ruff. had one foot in the Grave, I would ſtill be learning. They that refuſe to learne, to what age or wiſdome ſoever they have attained, remaine as Jerome ſaith, unlearned; they wil not heare that of Horace, Why, had I being corruptly prudent, rather be ignorant then learne? or, why had I being prudent, rather frowardly be ignorant then learne? There are two things which may make the wiſeſt

Cur neſcire prudens prave quam diſcere malo. ſtill willing to heare to encreaſe his learning; 1. Becauſe, although he, whom he heareth, be nothing ſo learned, yet he may have attained ſomething which he hath not attained to; 2. Becauſe, ſuch humility to abaſe himſelfe to heare others, even leſſe learned, makes all mens learning common to him, and ſo he increaſeth

Hugo Victor. l. 3. Didaſc. Auguſt. Epiſt. ad Hieron. his own, as Hugo Victorin. ſpeaketh; Humility makes that common to thee which is proper to every one, thou ſhalt be wiſer then all men, if thou wilt learne of all men, as they that receive of all, are richer then all. Auguſtine ſaith, To heare and learne, no Age ought to ſeeme to be old; becauſe that although it becometh the old men rather to teach then learne, yet it becomes them better to learne then to be ignorant; And a man of underſtanding ſhall attaine to wiſe counſell, vulg. The intelligent ſhall poſſeſſe Governments; the reaſon of this difference is תחב לוה from the words here uſed, which commeth from חכל ſignifying government of a Ship, and alſo a Rope, or Maſt, ſuch as belong to ſhips; it is alſo ſometime put for counſels, or cogitations, becauſe for government there is need of counſel; if the vulgar be followed, there wil be given in ſence thus; He ſhall be well able to governe himſelfe that hath gotten learning from hence, who is, as every man in this world, as a Ship upon the Sea, toſſed with contrary winds, and endangered; but being governed by a skilful Pilot it is ſafe, for he knoweth how ſometimes by leting the ropes looſe to dilate his ſayles for the beſt, ſometime by ſtreightning them to contract the ſaile, and ſometime by ſetting them accordingly, to ſaile by a ſide, or contrary wind; ſo he that increaſeth learning, attaineth skill to governe his owne ſhip, that is himſelfe, and ſo to keep it ſafe, which is otherwiſe in continuall danger. Lyra, Hugo, and Dionyſ: expound it of being preferred and ſet over others to governe them, as is a governour of the Commonwealth, which is alſo by Philo and others, compared to a ſhip. Lyra. Hugo Card. Dionyſ

To underſtand a Proverb, and the interpretation, the words of the wiſe, and darke ſayings. The word rendred Interpretation is מליצה by Muffet rendred an eloquent ſpeech, as the word alſo ſignifieth, it commeth of ליץ to deride or mocke, and therefore it is by Lavater underſtood of the ſpeeches of wicked men, who have attained the art of ſpeaking eloquently, and abuſe it to deceive the ſimple. But by this Book well ſtudied, a man ſhall be able to diſcerne their fallacies, and not be taken thereby. The uſe or benefit then which will redound to the wiſe by this, is here ſet forth to be double. 1. To underſtand a Proverb, of which enough hath been ſaid, that is, to know true and pithy ſentences, that be commonly uſefull amongſt men, and tend to their information of ſuch things, as being taken heed unto may much benefit them in the whole courſe of their lives, both in reſpect of ſoule and body. 2. To underſtand other ſayings, which, without the helpe of this learning, are not ſo well underſtood, and that both of deceivers, who by their eloquent and flouriſhing ſpeeches may deceive them, and alſo of the truly wiſe and ſharp witted, whoſe ſayings being not underſtood, are but as dark riddles, of which they know not what to make, but being underſtood, very delightfull, and illuminative. And it is not onely meant, that a man ſhall underſtand the ſayings of this Book, but be the better prepared hereby to underſtand the dark and myſticall paſſages of other parts of the word, of which the Prophets are full, and not onely to underſtand dark and wiſe ſayings, but to frame more, for further information to others. For Riddles, Arboreus brings for example that of Sampſon, and one of Ezekiel, and ſaith, that he muſt have faith in Chriſt, and be one of his Diſciples, that would underſtand theſe things, and the like, becauſe to them onely, he expounded all things apart. Verſ. 6. Muffet. Lavater. Arboreus. Judg. 14. Ezek. 17.

The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdome, but fools deſpiſe wiſdome and inſtruction. Having ſhewed who ſhall by reading and ſtudying upon theſe Proverbs increaſe their learning: Now he ſheweth, who ſhall not, namely ſuch wicked fooliſh perſons, as prize not, but lightly account of divine knowledge, as the prophane ſort ſpoken of by Job, who ſay We care not for the knowledge of his wayes. The beginning of wiſdome, ſaith one, The fear of God, is called, becauſe the principall part of wiſdome, without which all knowledge, even of divine things, is nothing. Here then muſt a man begin that will be wiſe, he muſt feare God for his glory, as his King, for his power, to condemne him as his Judge, for his ſtrength, as his Rocke, for his care, as his Shepherd, for his righteouſneſſe, as his Law giver, for his mercy as his Saviour, and for his love as the husband of his ſoule. To feare God is to eſchew evill, and do good, to depart from iniquity; and it is vaine for any other man to thinke to attaine wiſdome, but onely for ſuch; and indeed others in whoſe hearts ſin hath place, regard it not any further then for worldly ends, the magnifying of themſelves amongſt men, or their encreaſe of worldly wealth, for which cauſe it is neceſſary to get an holy heart, and obedient, and then wiſdome, which is ſo excellent, ſhall become our poſſeſſion: Sinne, and live wickedly, and thou canſt not avoid the imputation of folly; that is, not onely being void of underſtanding, but alſo uncapable thereof. The like ſaying to this, ſee alſo. Ch. 9. Pſ. 111. Job 28. And for the uncapableneſſe of wiſdome in the wicked, Syracides hath a notable ſaying Wiſdome will not enter into a malicious ſoul. nor dwell in a body polluted by ſin. Touching the feare of the Lord, it is not that ſervile fear of God for his judgements, as the bond-men of ſin fear, but the filial fear which indeed comprehendeth all true piety, according to Eſa. 29. 13. Their feare towards me was taught by the precepts of men, he having ſaid before, They honour me with their mouths; which implyeth, that by feare, all the honour, worſhip, and ſervice that men doe to God, is meant; whereas it is ſaid, Fools deſpiſe wiſdome, it ſtands with Verſ. 7. Job 21. 14. Muffet Job. 1. 1. Note. Wiſd. 1. Heb. 2 15.

with good reason, that they should be counted fools that doe so, because they onely look at things present, but not at things to come, whereas these be temporary, those everlasting, as all carnall, prophane persons, like Esau doe. For who thinkes not Esau a foole, that for a messe of pottage sold his birth-right? and how then can the carnall be thought any otherwise of, sith all worldly things, which their hearts are onely set upon, are in comparison of the heavenly inheritance lesse then a messe of pottage, in comparison of the greatest inheritance in this world: all the earth it selfe is but a little point in a large circle, in respect of the circumference of the highest heaven.

Note.

But before I go from this verse (besides that which hath been said, The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdome; That is, he that will be wise, must feare God, and devoutly serve, and worship him; and likewise this is the head and principall of all good things, as the word ראש here used signifieth) there is another exposition amongst the ancient Fathers, who by Feare here understand the feare of Gods wrath, and judgements for sinne, as Beda going upon this, The crowne of wisdome is the feare of God, as Job 28.28. according to the vulgar, and here, The beginning of wisdome the fear of God, Inquireth how this feare is said to be both the beginning and the perfection, or end to which it commeth, when a Crowne is put upon it; and answereth, The beginning is slavish feare, the perfection or crowne, filiall.

Beda.

And this is by St. August. by a similitude notably illustrated thus; A Shoemakers thred must have way made for it by an awle, and to the end that the thred may enter, the awle must out again. So slavish fear first pierceth, but that filiall feare may enter after this, the slavish must be outed againe, according to that of St. John, Perfect love casts out feare; where by Love is meant filiall feare arising from love; for as a man hateth him, whom he is afraid of for his cruelty, so he loveth him, whom he looks upon as a mercifull father, and feareth for this loves sake, in any thing to offend him.

Aug. in 1 Ioh. 4.

Againe, a Mason going about to make an Arch, first layeth a frame of earth in that forme in which he meaneth to build, then he buildeth with lime and stone, or bricke upon it, but this being dry and hard, he takes away the foresaid frame, and so the building stands alone: Thus also Origen, Ambrose, and Basil, the first of whom likens this feare to a Tutor, to whom the heire is subject as long as he is a childe, and fears his rod, but being come to full age, he is not under, and fears him no more. And Basil upon this place likeneth this feare to a Porter, that openeth the gate to let in the filiall. But against making the feare of God The beginning of wisdome, it is objected that Esa. 11.3. The spirit of the feare of the Lord, is the last of the seven spirits or graces there spoken of, and the spirit of wisdome the first, how then is the feare of God said to be the beginning, which must needs be first? Sol. Gregory answers, the Prophet proceedeth not there by descending but by ascending, naming the first step or degree of grace last: See more upon that place. This being so, they are greatly overseen, who deny feare any place in working of our hearts to good, and restraine this altogether to love, concluding all them to be wicked, and in an evill case, that flye evill, and do good for feare of hell, and not meerly out of the love of God and vertue, for which that saying is brought, The good hate to sinne for the love of vertue, but the evill for feare of punishment; which is true, when grace is perverted, but not in the beginning thereof. Lastly, for the fools despising of wisdome, we may understand it, of the feare of God before spoken of, for this is true wisdome and understanding, as Moses teacheth, and he that fears not when there is great cause to feare, but contemneth and sets light by Gods judgements threatned for sinne, and despiseth as fools those that are taken with the fear thereof, is a fool, and the worst of all fools, as he shall in the end find to his cost.

Vers. 8. My son heare the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother, &c. In this, and the verse following, Salomon beginneth his Proverbs, 1. In generall, taking upon him the person of parents, whose instructions, if any thing will doe it, will move the tender hearts of their young children to go odnesse, and and against evill, especially if they be perswaded, that they being obeyed, and followed, will be ornaments, most costly and precious, setting them forth as persons most excellent and glorious in the eyes of all others; Wherefore children are from hence perswaded to hearken to, and follow their parents instructions: For why? They shall be an ornament to thy head, and a chaine to thy neck. That is, look what grace a Crown, or border of gold, and precious stones is to the head, and a gold chain, or chain of Pearls, or Diamonds to the neck, such are parents instructions to their children, if they be godly, they living according to them, as their law. Vers. 9.

Touching these words, Forsake not the law of thy mother, Heb. Reject not the law: This is thus spoken, because the mother for her weakenesse, especially in her old age, is by ungracious children contemned, and her instructions also, nothing that is well spoken by her being of weight with them, but all rejected; And yet by calling her instructions their law, he intimateth, that they are bound to regard them, and to regulate their conversation and carriage according to them. And truly there is great reason, that mothers should be respected, and have this honour from their children of being obeyed in their commands, which be good and godly, because as Jerome saith well, they served you by carrying in their wombs the weight of your bodies; children are fed in the womb by the mothers food, who is hungry for her childe, and eateth to feed it, and being borne, nourisheth it with milk out of her owne body, their breasts, their hands, their arms, and all their limbs serve their children, whom most lovingly they take and bear, enduring any thing at their hands. For these so many and more good deeds done unto thee, pay (O Sonne) what thou owest, and render by all due offices againe to thy mother any service that she requireth. There is none so great love as the love of a mother to her childe: now nature teacheth us to love them that love us, and if in age they be froward and hard to be pleased, yet this must be borne withall, and the counsell which they are now most able to give, we must follow. The mother in Terrence could say, from whom many commodities have come unto thee, it is just and equall, that thou shouldst beare her discommodities; and love thy parents, saith Mimes, if they be good, if not, beare with them. In thus commending to children Obedience to their parents instructions, he implieth, that they ought to give their children good instructions, and not evill, for if they doe, these are not to be obeyed, because against our heavenly Father. For which cause a sonne that seeth his fathers wickednesse, and takes heed of it, is commended, and comforted, Ezek. 18. in this, that he shall not dye, but live. For the perswasion added, it falls out true in experience many times, that children obeying their parents come to honour in the Commonwealth, the ornaments whereof are precious chains about the neck, and something precious on the head, as the Diadem or Crowne thereof; but contrariwise, the disobedient and contemptuous, for a chaine of gold oft-times come to have an halter about their necks, and rings of iron upon their legs, for rings of gold upon their hands. And good reason saith Augustt. That children disobeying parents, should come to such shamefull deaths, because parents are Gods Vicars, as it were; he is the common Father, and King of all men; naturall parents as Vice-royes, representing his Majesty to their children, and therefore what is done to them, cometh so neare unto God, as that he takes it as done to himselfe; therefore Valerius saith well, Disobedience and contempt of parents ought to be punished with the like punishment to that which is inflicted for the contempt of God. Hieron. Lavater. Augustt. Valerius l. 1.

Touching the word rendred forsake, some render it by Evellere, to plucke out; whereby is intimated, That mothers instructions are planted in the hearts of their children when they be young, and take rooting there, so that without plucking them up by the roots, they cannot neglect them, and the word תורה signifying his command, signifieth also a dart, to imply the deep piercing of mothers instructions in their little children, which is most unnaturall therefore to neglect, as to plucke up plants by the roots, which their loving mothers so carefully planted in the ground of their hearts for their good, or to plucke out an healing-tent put into an ulcerous sore, that the putrified matter may no more run out, but the whole body be endangered. And this of receiving parents instructions, is mystically by some applyed to the The mystery.

the inſtructions of God our heavenly Father, and of our Mother the Church, whoſe Laws are not to be rejected. But whereas hereupon the Papiſts blame us for rejecting the Laws of the Roman Church, they altogether miſ-apply the matter, becauſe our Fathers inſtructions are firſt commanded unto us, and then our Mothers, as ſubordinate hereunto, and our Mothers againſt, or diverſe from our Fathers; for who ſo attempts to draw us to any other Goſpel, muſt be accurſed, whether Mother, or Angel from heaven. For the reaſon uſed to perſwade by an ornament, and Crown to the head, we may underſtand Kingly dignity by a Chain to the neck, the glory of wiſdome, both which a Prince ſhall have by following his godly fathers and mothers inſtructions, for which ſome parents like Salomon, left books of inſtruction to their children, as Cicero to his ſon Marcus his book of Offices; and Baſil the Emperour, wrote likewiſe three books of counſell to his ſon Leo: and our learned King James his Baſilicon-doron, to Prince Henry. Of a Crowne and a Chaine, ſetting forth dignity and wiſdome, is the obſervation of Toſtatus, and that from Pharaohs fact to Joſeph, and Belſhazzers to Daniel; in both which, wiſdome was moſt eminent, and therefore they were thus graced.

Toſtat.

Verſ. 10. My ſon, if ſinners intice thee, conſent thou not. After perſwading to obey parents; now on the contrary ſide, warning is given againſt hearkning to the flattering inticements of wicked robbers and cut-throats: For by ſinners here ſuch notorious ones are to be underſtood, as the next words ſhew; the vulgar for intice, hath Lactare, by flattering to frame to their owne evill manners, as a woman doth the childe that ſucketh on her: for as Galen and Avicen note, the qualities of the Nurſe are, by the childe ſucked in together with the milke. This, I confeſſe in this regard is the moſt ſignificant word, but פתה ſignifieth nothing elſe, but to incline by flattering. And this is moſt dangerous to youths, and therefore the warning given againſt hearkning to ſuch is moſt neceſſary for all. In the next place, that we might not be ignorant of the devices which ſuch have to inſinuate into the minde of others, to draw them to the ſame evill wayes where in they walk, theſe are pointed.

Verſ. 11. Let us lurk privily for the innocent: where in the firſt is ſhewed to be ſecrecy, we will ſhed bloud, and rob, and none ſhall know it; if any accuſe us, we will depy, and forſwear it too: For no man would commit ſuch horrible wickedneſſe, did he not thinke to goe undetected, and this keeps many, that have even a willing minde, that they dare not doe thus vilely, becauſe they feare it will come to light. But although it may be concealed from men, yet it cannot be hidden from God; and oftentimes he in his providence diſcovers ſuch abominations to men, that the wicked may come to condigne puniſhment: For either their owne conſciences ſhall make them confeſſe, or their tongues being over-heard bewray them, or by the goods ſtoln found in their hands they ſhall be diſcovered; or if murther be committed, by ſome miraculous means or other, if ordinary faile, as we have had many ſtrange experiments from time to time. But if they paſſe on undiſcovered in this world, all ſecrets ſhall at the laſt day of judgement certainly be revealed; wherefore Auſonius ſaith well, Daring to commit a foule ſin fear thy ſelf, though there be no witneſſe. The countenance of the evill doer many times, when he is challenged bewraying him, or his paſſions of anger, or trembling. Let us lurke privily for the innocent without cauſe. This, Without cauſe, is added to ſhew that robbers and murtherers have no cauſe to deale thus by other men, for they have given them none, onely the wickedneſſe of their owne hearts put them on.

Verſ. 12. Let us ſwallow them up alive, and whole, as the grave, as they that go down into the pit. Here is their ſecond device taken from the facility, or eaſineſſe to doe, as was before ſaid, for that which a man may eaſily do, he is hereby drawne much to do, if it be conceived to be no more, then the earths opening of the mouth to ſwallow up Corah and his company, or the graves receiving a mans body thereinto.

Verſ. 13. We ſhall fill our houſes with prey, and finde all precious ſubſtance. Here is a third device to move, taken from Gaine, which is of great force with worldly-minded minded men, whether they be poore, that their wants may ſuddenly be ſupplyed; or prodigall, that they may have where-withall to ſpend freely; or covetous, that they may in a ſhort time come to great riches. For, ſo it may be thus, the worldling careth not by what meanes he getteth Wealth, for having it he hath his god, whom he preferreth before all worldly things; but the Proverbe is, Goods ill gotten, periſh ill, Zach. 5. There is a flying booke for ſuch houſes to conſume the ſtones thereof, and the timber thereof. Male parta, male dilabuntur.

Caſt in thy Lot amongſt us, we will all have one Purſe; This is by ſome expounded thus: Be content to take the ſame fortune together with us, for which the next words make, We will all have one purſe; we ſhall ſure have great comings in, but becauſe they are to come, they muſt come as it were by Lot, we going together this way, but if we doe ſo, we doubt not but that our Lot will be very rich and good, and this ſhall all be thine as well as ours. Some expound it thus; Come, and when we have gotten ſo great a prey, we wil not wrong thee of thy part, but thou ſhalt have as good a part as any of us, the whole being divided into ſo many parts, as we are perſons, there ſhall be no partiality in aſſigning to each one his part, as was betwixt the Lion, the Aſſe, and the Fox, but each one caſting Lots ſhall have that which befalleth him. Laſtly, ſome expound it thus; Caſt in thy Lot, being that which thou haſt, and let us enjoy it in common, together with that which we ſhall get, as we wil doe by ours; but of theſe I preferre the firſt, it being a great motive to doe as they did, they being men of more experience, and ſuch as had happily gotten much already by Rapine and Murther, and yet eſcaped Judgement. And this may be taken for a fourth device to perſwade to this wicked courſe; For examples of ſuch as are in an evil way and yet proſper, are of great force to move the ſimple to doe likewiſe; but remember we, that things goe not on in the ſame courſe to the end. A ſinner may ſinne an hundred times, and have his life yet ſpared, but in the end it ſhall not goe well with him; the Pitcher goeth oft to the water, but at length it comes broken home; ſo the robbers and murtherers. Verſ. 14. Haud eodem curſu reſpondent ultima primis. Eccleſ. 8.

Their feete run to evill, and they make haſte to ſhed bloud. Having ſhewed the Allurements, and deceiveable Reaſons of the wicked inticing others, now he cometh to diſſwade from going their wayes, ver. 15. oppoſing ſtronger reaſons there-againſt, and here is laid downe the firſt; Their feete run to evill; that is, they pretend much good indeed, and the abounding of worldly goods, but it is only evil that they haſten to, and ſeeke to draw thee unto, and that moſt pernicious evil, the ſhedding of bloud, from which Nature it ſelfe abhorreth. Therefore let not this be a motive unto thee to goe with them, unleſſe like a foole thou wouldſt be beguiled by a ſhadow for a ſubſtance, as the Dogge, that ſwam over the river carrying a peece of fleſh in his mouth, which, the Sunne ſhining, caſt a ſhadow upon the water, whereby he was drawne to let fall that in his mouth to ſnap at the ſhadow; or as the ſilly Fiſh, drawne by the bait ſwalloweth the hooke. And hitherto one reaſon, now followeth another. Verſ. 16.

Surely in vaine is the net ſpread in the ſight of every Bird; About the expoſition of which words there is great difference; For, 1. Some Hebrewes expound them thus: The net is not ſpread in vaine before Birds, but to take and kill them; ſo Robbers lurke not in ſecret, but to kill him that hath the goods of this world, that they may the more ſafely enjoy them coming into their hands, he not being now in any capacity of purſuing them; and being thus underſtood, it is a reaſon of that which was ſaid before, ver. 16. They haſten to ſhed bloud. Verſ. 17.

1. It is not for nothing that they lurke thus, but doe herein like a Fowler, they beare bloudy and divelliſh mindes againſt their Neighbours, which ſhould effectually move any ingenuous perſon not to joyne with ſuch bloud-thirſty Hunters, for ſuch come to rob, and to breake through, they come alſo to murther, if occaſion of weake reſiſtance on his part, and ſtrength on their part be offered; and of the ſame minde are robbers by the way, if there be danger of purſuing, or they cannot otherwiſe get their prey.

2. Aben Ezra, As Birds are ſo fooliſh, that although a Net be ſpread before Aben Ezra.

their eyes, by which they may be taken, yet they are not made hereby to be ware, but come into it notwithſtanding, and are taken; ſo are wicked robbers, they cannot but ſee the dangers into which they run by robbing, and murthering, becauſe that in all places they are haunted and ſought after, and the nets of diligent and univerſall ſearches are laid for them, whereby they are commonly taken, and dye for it.

3 David ben Gerſon, Without cauſe; That the innocent Bird is laid for without cauſe on her part, ſhe no way deſerving to be thus dealt withal; So he, whom Theeves lurke to make a prey of, is by them thus uſed without cauſe, which makes their ſinne the more heinous, for that they doe not only rob and kill a man, but an innocent man, thus ſhedding bloud, that ſhall ſurely be revenged.

Gregor. Mor. l. 10.

4 Beda, Gregor. Lyra, Hugo, Dionyſius; My ſonne, I have ſpoken theſe things, that thou, underſtanding the inticements of theſe wicked ones, to be but as the laying of nets before Birds by cunning Fowlers, mayſt beware of them, as being otherwiſe if thou beeſt here-with taken, indangered in reſpect of thy life, which is more to thee then all worldly goods; and this they confirme by the next words, ver. 18. They lay waite againſt their owne ſoules, and machinate deceit againſt their owne bloud.

Salazar.

5 Salazar, As the Net is not laid in vaine before Birds, but they are herein taken at one time or other, although they be Maſters of the wing, that is, ſtrongeſt in flying, for they ſometimes light upon the ground, and then a Net may take them; ſo Robbers have not Nets laid for them in vaine, but although they fly farre, and long eſcape, yet at length they are taken.

6 But becauſe this is co-incident with the former, he hath another; As he that layeth a Net for Birds of prey doth a vaine thing, for they fly farre off, and ſo avoyd the Net, and by this meanes much time and labour is ſpent to no purpoſe; So the Robber ſeeking to inrich himſelfe, and to come to abundance by robbing, and murthering, either gets nothing, but ſome Puttocke, or Buzzard, which is vile meat, or that which he getteth proveth immediatly as a Fowle ſwift of wing, which ſoone flyeth away againe: and not only is it thus to the Thiefe and Robber, but to Every one that is greedy of gaine, which taketh away the life of the Owners thereof. Of all theſe, the firſt, fourth, and fifth cannot ſtand, becauſe they goe upon a reading contrary to this of the Originall, viz. a Negative, a Net is not ſpread in vaine, whereas Hebr. it is an affirmative, for in vaine is a Net ſpread; but they, who give that expoſition follow the Septuag. which goeth oft times not ſo much upon the word, as upon that which the Tranſlators tooke for the ſence; but foraſmuch as keeping to the Hebr. the ſence will rather be better, and from the words ſo rendred another reaſon may be drawne againſt harkening to the inticements of ſuch ſinners, viz. becauſe they lye in waite to ſhed the bloud of the innocent, which is abominable, and ſhall never goe unrevenged, but prove as a net, or a ſnare unto them, as they may eaſily ſee in naturall reaſon, and therefore be not thou my ſonne drawne by them, for if thou beeſt, thou alſo ſhalt be guilty of innocent bloud, like Caine, crying from the earth to God for revenge. As for the laſt of Salazar, it is acute, but not ſo well agreeing, the drift of the Wiſe man being not only to ſhew, that theſe robbers ſhall looſe their labour in the end, but that they are running upon the moſt abominable ſinne which can be committed, and therefore moſt highly provocative of the Divine Majeſty, which every one will moſt carefully fly, that is not given over to a reprobate ſence.

Verſ. 18.

They lay waite for their owne bloud, they lurke privily for their owne lives. Here is a third reaſon to diſſwade from going with ſinners that rob, and kill. For the preſent they damnifie others, and their lives are loſt by their meanes, whom they ſo barbarouſly butcher for their wealth, but the end will be, their owne Lives and bloud muſt goe for their bloud and rapines ſuffered at their hands; and unto this may be applyed that which was ſaid before, firſt, foure, and five, they ſhall ſhew themſelves as fooliſh as Birds, or Fiſhes, yea more, for in all their plottings to ſteale and ſlay, they doe but lay Nets, that will prove mortiferous to themſelves, and dig pits, into which they shall fall and perish everlastingly, which is to get the world, and to lose the soule, to make the most foolish bargaine that may be, whereof they shall be ashamed when it will be too late.

Such is the way of every one that is greedy of gaine, he will take away the life of the owners thereof. This, saith Lavater is added, as an Epiphonema, to that which was said before, v. 17. 18. And it containeth a more generall instruction concerning all covetous persons, and not robbers, and murtherers onely; They, as these, lay a foundation of destroying their own lives also, by their own covetousnes, as 1 Tim. 6. 9. it is said, They that will be rich, fall into many noysome and foolish lusts, that drown the soule in perdition. Robbers and murtherers, to get riches by taking away other mens lives, and consequently their own; And all others, that gape after gain, by laying themselves thus open to the danger of destruction, by being drawn to joyn in unlawfull wars, to use any fraud, or oppression, or to exercise any unlawfull arts, or wayes of gain, whoredome, baudery, gaming, strong drinke, or wine-selling, Idolatrous-image-making, Fortune-telling, or acting the part of a cunning person, by most of which, the greedy of gaine take away the lives of others, and by all, their owne, comming thus into the snare of inevitable destruction, as our Lord saith, Take heed of drunkennesse and worldly cares, lest that day come upon you unawares, for as a snare it shall come upon the inhabitants of the earth. Vers. 19. Lavater. Luke 21. 34.

Wisdome cryeth without, she uttereth her voyce in the streets. v. 21. In the place of concourse, in the gate. The Wise-man having disswaded from hearkning to sinners, who call others to consort with them, to their destruction, now opposeth against their calls, and flattering inticements, the call of Wisdome, which being hearkned unto, they shall not be able to draw any after them, and so into the great danger of the destruction before spoken. By Wisdome, understand Christ, in whom are All the treasures of wisdome hidden, and who is made of God unto us, wisdome, righteousnesse, &c. He uttereth his voice in his word, the holy Scriptures, wherein his wise and holy instructions are set forth at large, both in the Old and New Testament, for all come from the inspiration of his Spirit: And he is said to cry for his earnestnesse in teaching, and exhorting, which was fulfilled according to the letter, when he stood and cryed, If any man thirst, let him come and drinke, &c. And this crying and uttering his voice, is said to be without in the streets, because he taught publikly, and openly, as he saith, I spake alwayes publikly in their Synagogues, and Temple, and in secret I said nothing, and in chiefe places of concourse, for to such places great multitudes resorted, And in the gate, which of old was the place of judgement, where matters were heard by the Judges; For hither was Christ brought before Pontius Pilate, and here he declared himselfe to be a King, and to have come into the world for this end, although not a King of this world, to reigne in worldly pompe and glory here, having an humane guard and forces about him to subdue his foes, but a spirituall King to give Laws, according to which, who so liveth, shall be saved, and this shall be his wisdome, flowing from this fountaine of wisdome to eternall life. And it is to be noted, that the word rendred Wisdome is a plurall, to intimate the manifold wisdome of Christ and his word, comprehending all manner of wisdome, and the word תָּרִנָּה crieth, commeth of רָנַן to cry or sing, because that our Lord cryed so, as that it was, as it were by singing, that thus men by delight in the manner of his uttering himself, might be taken and drawne after him. For thus it was when officers being sent to take him, and returning without him said, when the reason was demanded, Never man spake as he spake, and therefore he compareth John the Baptist, and himselfe to children sitting in the Market place, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced, according to some, Cecinimus vobis, we have sung unto you. Thus Lavater and Muffet, who also saith, that after a father that spake to his son, a mother is brought in speaking, or it is shewed, how she speaks further to us all publikely, and openly from time to time, and if by her we understand the true Church of God, consisting of faithfull and zealous Preachers, the sense will be good, if not best, because wisdome is a feminine. And not a masculine, Vers. 20. Col. 2. 3. 1 Cor. 1. 30. 2 Tim. 3. 16. Joh. 7. 37. Joh. 18. 20. Joh. 18. 37. Deut. 4. 6. Joh. 7. 46. Lavater. Muffet.

line, as Christ is, so that when it is said, She uttereth her voice, it cannot be so well understood of him, but of her. And then by the Father speaking before, understand Christ figured out in Salomon, the Son of David, King of Israel, for so is Christ often called, as where it is said (Jesus thou Son of David) and Where is he that is borne King of the Jews? And therefore he speaks of Salomon, as his type, saying, The Queen of the South came from afar to hear the wisdome of Salomon, and behold a greater then Salomon is here. The Church then is here spoken of, that is, the Apostles, Prophets, Pastors, and Teachers, some of which in their holy writings have laid the ground of all true wisdome, viz. in their Prophesies and Epistles, and in their further setting forth of the same with a lively voice; for which cause, St. Paul saith, I have laid the foundation as a skilfull master-builder, Let every one take heed how he buildeth hereupon. Others lay these rich treasures open, and offer them to their hearers daily, more and more, that they may take and inrich their soules herewith; and all this is done so, as that all men may take notice hereof, and be made wise to salvation, which is the onely true wisdome; all wisdome else being but foolishnesse to this. Now that by the Church, not onely the Congregation in generall, but Preachers in particular, may be understood, appeareth from the saying of the Lord, Tell the Church, adding, What ye binde upon earth, shall be bound in heaven, to declare, that he meant Apostles, and other teachers, and who else, as mothers, travell in birth with the people taught by them, but he that is set over them, and to whom the care of forming Christ in them is committed, as Paul speaketh, saying, My little children of whom I travell again in birth till Christ be formed in you. When the faithfull and zealous Preacher then speaketh in the Congregation, Wisdome uttereth her voice, and crieth in the chiefe place of concourse, for which the same Apostle saith, We speak the wisdome of God in a mystery. He that heareth the Preacher, and findeth him with the men of Berea, to speak according to the Scriptures, heareth the voice of wisdome, and so he is to make account whosoever he be, that would become wise to salvation; It is no matter what voice be uttered by others diverse from this, for it is all vanity and folly, and tends to the destroying of the hearer, this onely is true wisdome, and therefore by all men that would be saved, to be hearkned unto. The Sept. for crying, hath ᾄσεται singeth, and indeed this is most apt, for such as are without, going upon the way, they are stayed and taken with melodious singing, so that they stand still, and go no further on therein; so a sinner by the incantations of Wisdome, if he be converted; otherwise he heareth not the Voice of the Charmer, charme he never so wisely. Lyra by Wisdome understandeth that practicall wisdome, of which it was spoken before, so likewise Jansenius and Salazar; but for so much as that is an effect of teaching, and here the instrumentall cause, or the efficient is spoken of, God who speaketh in and by the Preacher, I rest in that, which was before said, understanding by Wisdome the Church; that is, Church-men, there being nothing more common, then when they are spoken of, to say, the Church saith thus, or thus. The word rendred street, is רחבה, which properly signifieth a large place, as Jacob having digged one Well, called the name thereof Rehobeth; and it setteth forth the free liberty, wherewith the zealous Preacher teacheth, not suffering his mouth to be stopped, as the Apostles did not; Act. 4. and Peter being in bands said, The word of God is not bound. It is a base and degenerous spirit, and not the Spirit of God, that makes a man yeeld, and fear to speak against the open sinnes of any openly, whether they be of the common sort, set forth by places of concourse, or Rulers and Governours, set forth by the Gate, where Judges use to sit, and they that have Sovereigne power. For these words in the chief place of concourse, Heb. is בראש המיות in the head of tumult, or noise, for the word may signifie either, as it is derived, and because the comming together of many into one place, is not without a noise, it may well be rendred in the head of concourse, which I take not to be, as some doe, the inferiour Magistrate, but the Temple, which is the chiefe place of assembling of all other. Arborensis, who saith, that an uncreated wisdome is here meant, whereof it is spoken, Ch. 8. 22. 23. yet concurreth with that which was said before touching Preachers, Prophets and Apostles, Apoſtles, whom this uncreated wiſdome uſeth, as her mouth to inſtruct, and to make men wiſe, ſo to judge them, as Eſa. chap. 1. chap. 3. chap. 5. Jer. chap. 2. ch. 5. Ezek. 20. chap. 45. Peter Act. 2. and Act. 10. &c.

How long will ye ſimple ones love ſimplicity, ſcorners delight in ſcorning, and fools hate knowledge? Here are three ſorts to whom the word of wiſdome is ſpoken. 1. Simple ones, who are eaſily carried away through their credulity by cunning deceivers, into the wayes of errour or ſin, through a love thereof wrought in them by their falſe perſwaſions. 2. Scorners, or deriders, that mock at all exhortations to good, and commination of judgements, againſt which ſort St. Peter ſpeaketh. ſaying, There ſhall come mockers in the laſt dayes, ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his comming? 3. Fools that hate knowledge, that are ſo deſperately wicked, that they both hate reformation, as the word of God, and all godly Teachers require; and alſo ſuch as have this wiſdome and knowledge, ſeeking by all the malignity that they can exercile againſt them, to beat them herefrom, or to cut them off, as Ahab and Jezabel did the Prophets of God. And Antiochus Epiphanes is ſaid to have had indignation againſt the holy Covenant, the memory whereof he ſought to obliterate both by threatnings, and executions of all that were knowing, whom he could come by. For the wicked ſaid to hate inſtruction, or to be reformed, See Pſal. 50, 17. All theſe ſorts of men are here intimated to be incorrigible, and uncapable of good by wiſdome, that we may all take heed, although we in many things ſinne all of us, yet that we neither be פתיים eaſily perſwaded to evill wayes, and the love thereof, but loath them, nor לוצים deriders, or as the word ſignifieth, Interpreters of the Teachers words ſuch a way as to make them ſeem ridiculous, as the Jews did Chriſts, when he cryed, Eli, Eli, Lamaſabachthani, ſaying he calleth to Elias, let him come and help him, or כסילים ſo unwiſe, as to hate wiſdome; that is, righteous living, and walking by rule either in our ſelves, or others. For it is worth the noting, that having before ſpoken of ſinners, he ſaith, If they intice thee, intimating ſoft and ſecret perſwaſions and flatteries; But now coming to ſpeake to theſe kinde of men; he ſaith, Wiſdome cryeth, for hereby is intimated that theſe are moſt hardly and rarely wrought upon by any inſtructions or exhortations, but eaſily inclined to evill, ſuch advantage to ſin is given by mens naturall corruption, and ſuch a bar put in the way to hinder the coming in of any grace into the heart. For that the crying of wiſdome prevaileth not with ſuch; the next words, v. 24. ſhew, as alſo the fearfull ſequell hereof, I will laugh at your deſtruction. One by Simple underſtands ſuch, as ſin out of ignorance and weakneſs, by Scorners, ſuch as make a mock of ſin, counting it but a matter of ſport; yet even to ſuch Wiſdome cryeth, therefore to all; whereas Plato required the skill of Muſicke and Geometry in all that came to his School, before he would admit of them. The Vulgar renders it, Yee children how long will yee love childiſh things, yee fools deſire things hurtfull unto them, and the imprudent hate knowledge; but the beſt is according to the Hebrew.

Turne yee at my reproof, behold, I will powre out my Spirit unto you, I will make knowne my words unto you. Wiſdome having challenged the wicked for their evill wayes, and their love unto them, and delight therein, and their hatred of knowledge, now falls to exhortation, ſaying, Turne yee; that is, although ye have hitherto gone on in wayes evill, and dangerous to your owne ſoules, yet now for your own ſafety repent and come out of them, and let this my juſt reproof work upon you to make you ſo to do, and harden not your hearts to go on ſtil. Although ſome of you be ſimple and over-credulous, and ſo in danger of being ſeduced by envying deceivers, and have been well pleaſed with their ſinnes and errours, to which ye have been drawne by them; yet be not taken with the love of wayes ſo pernicious any more, but hate and abhor from them. And although ſome of you, that have more naturall wit, have abuſed your wits to deriding the Preachers of righteouſneſſe, and to turne thoſe things that ye have done evill into jeſts, ſcoffing at thoſe that walke more carefully according to my rule, as Iſhmael mocked at Iſaac, and have thought it a glory to you thus to doe; yet now be aſhamed of this, as true converts are, according to that, What fruit had yee of thoſe things whereof yee are now aſhamed. Laſtly, although ſome of you haue done worſe then all this, even hated inſtruction, as croſſe and contrary to your corrupt nature, and hated thoſe that have been better taught, yet now love and be affected to ſound Teaching, and living accordingly, and to all thoſe that doe thus; and if ye doe ſo, then make the benefit that wil hence redound to your ſoules, I the Lord, who am the Author of the Wiſdome that cryeth unto you ſo to doe, Will poure out my Spirit unto you; that is, the ſpirit of Grace, and Sanctification, and the ſpirit of Wiſdome and Underſtanding, as is further declared in the next words, I will make knowne my words unto you; ſo as that ye ſhall underſtand the myſteries of the Kingdome of Heaven to your comfort and ſalvation, and to the inabling of you to ſpeake and inſtruct others herein, according to which it was by Joel propheſied; I will powr out of my Spirit upon all fleſh, and your ſonnes and daughters ſhall propheſie, &c. and fulfilled when the Spirit filled the Apoſtles with ſo great learning, that they ſpake in all Tongues the wonderfull things of God; and in Saul, from a perſecutor and hater of the Truth, turned to be a faithfull and zealous Preacher; and to the ſimple, David ſaith, The Law of God giveth underſtanding to the ſimple.

Joel 2. Acts 2. Pſalme 19.

Note. Note hence, that turning from wickedneſſe muſt firſt be, and then men ſhall be capable of the Spirit, and of underſtanding, otherwiſe they are but like blinde men, who although in the midſt of the light, ſee it not, neither can they; yea the the light makes them blinde, like perſecuting Saul, for which our Lord ſaith, That he came to make the blinde to ſee, and that the ſeeing might be made blinde. And to you it is given to know the myſteries of the Kingdome of Heaven, but to them it is not given, they have eyes to ſee but perceive not; the word is to them as a ſealed Booke.

Acts 9. Joh. 9. Mat. 13. 11. 12. Eſa. 29.

Note. 2. Note, that to have the Spirit to underſtand, and know the words of God ſo, as to be doers thereof, is the greateſt bleſſing that can befall any mortall man in this life, becauſe this is promiſed, as a fully ſatisfying reward to ſuch as turne; therefore it is ſaid, He that looketh into the perfect Law of liberty, not being a hearer of the Word only, but a doer of the worke is bleſſed in the deed.

Jam. 1.

Note. 3. Although no man can thus perfectly know the words of God, for In many things we ſinne all, yet who ſo turneth from the love of ſimplicity to the love of the truth, and righteouſneſſe, deſiring to underſtand, and to be ſanctified hereby, and from ſcoming, to the reverencing hereof, and from the hatred of knowledge and knowing men, to a love of it among them, is before God ſo accepted of, as that now it being asked, this fountaine of living water is opened to flow unto them, and the ſcales that blinded them before, fall from their eyes, as from Sauls, and now they ſee, and know, and ſhall have their knowledge increaſed, from being in part to plenary in Gods good time to their perfect and full beatification in the life to come, for to ſee and know, as we are called, is fulneſſe of joy and bliſſe.

Jam. 4. 1. 1. Cor. 13. Pſal. 16.

Note. Laſtly, as Lavater noteth, this being ſo, there is no colour of excuſe for thoſe that are wavering, and inconſtant, when any wind of new doctrine ariſeth; ſaying, there are ſuch divers opinions that we know not which to follow; for here is a foundation laid of never erring, be the times as full of errour as may be, I will make knowne my words unto them, when I have powred out my Spirit unto them; For from hence it is plaine, that among thoſe that hold divers Opinions, he only is led by the Spirit of God, that makes the evident Word of God the ground of his opinion, and not a pretence of new light, or revelation, as it is ſaid, Eſa. 8. 20. To the Law, and to the teſtimony; it is not then for want of meanes to know the right, that ſo many are carried away with errour, but becauſe they had rather heare a braying Aſſe, then one clearly teaching the pure Word of God, as the ſame Author ſpeaketh; or as Saint Jude, They have the perſons of men in admiration for an advantage; the way that they lead them in, being pleaſing to the fleſh, or conducing more to their worldly gaine or glory amongſt men, as might eaſily be ſhewed in all Schiſmaticks and Sectaries.

Lavater.

Beda, Hugo, Dionyſ. Beda, Hugo, and Dionyſ. take this for a threatning thus; Turne if ye will, if not.

not, I will poure out my ſpirit of fury, and will make you know my words before ſpoken, in declaring the dangerous caſe that the wicked are in, to be true. But becauſe the threatning againſt thoſe that will not turne, followeth, verſ. 24. 25. and the Lord is not wont upon exhortation to turne immediately to threaten, but firſt by promiſing to ſeeke to allure, and then to threaten the obſtinate, I paſſe this over as not agreeing, and reſt in that which went before.

Becauſe I have called, and ye refuſed, I have ſtretched my hand and no man regarded, &c. After promiſes that might allure, here followes threatnings that may terrifie all the wicked, that goe on in their ſins. Becauſe I have called; that is, I the Lord by the voyce of my Church, the Miniſtery of my Word here ſet forth by the name of Wiſdome, have called upon you, ſimple ſeduced ones, ſcorners, and Piety-haters, from time to time, to turne from theſe and all other your evil wayes; I have ſtretched out my hand; that is, both by ſeeking to make you in ſilence to attend unto my words, and when words would not prevaile, doing Miracles and Wonders amongſt you, that hereby ye might be made the rather to hearken to me, and when Miracles tooke no effect with you, neither exerciſing judgements upon you, that were able to make any heart to relent, except of thoſe that are given over to a reprobate ſence; But before this, I ſtretched out my hand in delivering you out of bondage, and doing you good; for Verſ. 24.

1. When Paul was to ſpeake in the midſt of a tumultuous people, it is ſaid that he beckoned with the hand, that ſilence might firſt be made; ſo the Lord ſtretcheth out his hand, as it were, in his ſervant the Preacher, who ſtanding up to ſpeake to the people, they all attend to his preaching in ſilence in reſpect of the outward man, but ſuch a tumult and noyſe of profits, and pleaſures, and their owne luſts is made within, that Wiſdome can have no audience. Acts 21. 40.

2. For ſtretching out of the hand in deliverances, and doing them good, it is ſaid; That he brought them out of Ægypt with a mighty hand, and ſtretched out arme, and this was not without Signes and Wonders: and of this, and the benefits beſtowed upon the Iſraelites, the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh, to aggravate their wickedneſſe the more, that were not moved hereby; I have ſtretched out my hands all the day long to a ſtiffe-necked and gaine-ſaying people. And thus the Lord Chriſt alſo ſtretched out his hand in perſon, and by his Apoſtles, as they prayed, Act. 4. 30. Exod. 3. 20. Eſa. 65.

3. For ſtretching out the hand in executing Judgements, this was done in Ægypt, when God by Moſes ſtretched out his hand, and brought divers Plagues upon Pharaoh, and Iſrael afterwards ſinning, when they were ſmitten in the Wildernеſſe with the Plague, with the Sword, and with fiery-flying Serpents, and in the Land of Canaan often by the oppreſſions of forreine enemies. To this effect almoſt Lavater ſpeaketh alſo. And there is in ſtretching out the hand yet ſomething more, viz. offering to help out of danger, Pſal. 10. 12. ſo that in ſaying, I ſtretched out my hand, it is meant, I held it out every time that I called, being ready if any ſinner would give his hand, to helpe him out of the pit into which he was fallen. Jer. 5. 25. Pſal. 74. 3. Lavater.

But ye have ſet at nought my counſell, and would none of my reproofe; that is, Neither my loving exhortations, whereby I counſelled you for the beſt, nor my ſharp reprehenſions and threatnings were of any avail with you, no nor my favours, or Judgements, to move you to repent. A grievous accuſation, which is not only of the Jewes, or of ſome of former times and ages, but of all the wicked of all times, that live under the meanes, and yet continue unreformed. The Lord calleth, but they heare not, although they heare Sermons; neither doe they regard his Word or Workes, as is complained alſo, Pſal. 28. yea, the wiſeſt counſell to ſave their ſoules, that is given by the moſt wiſe God, and not by man, is by them ſet at nought; ſo is God vilified by ſinfull duſt and aſhes; and if this ſhall be the Indictment of every obſtinate ſinner, who would not be moved to ceaſe from ſinne, and without any further delay, for he that is not, ſinneth not againſt man, but God, and then who ſhall plead for him? Some referre the calling, and ſtretching, or lifting up of the hand to Chriſt thus; I called when I ſaid, Come to me all ye that Verſ. 25. 1 Sam. 2. 25. Note. Beda. Hugo. Mat. 11.

are weary and heavie laden, and ſtretched out my hand, when to heale your Diſeaſes, and Sickneſſes. Iſidor reading it. Ye have contemned my counſell, ſaith, that the Greek word ἀμῶ is, to cut off, and ſo hereby it is implyed, that they did by his counſell ſo wiſely given them, as one doth by that which he cutteth off and caſteth away, as the ſuperfluous branches of a Tree, or the parings of an Apple.

Iſidor.

Verſ. 26, 27. But now ſee what puniſhment ſhall be laid upon the wicked for this, v. 26. I will laugh at your calamity, and mock when your feare commeth, as deſolation, as a whirlwind. To ſpeake properly, it is not incident to the Lord to laugh, or to weepe, but yet laughing at the vanities and miſeries coming upon the wicked, is alſo aſcribed to him. Pſal. 2. 4. The Lord ſhall have them in deriſion, becauſe he makes them to be derided, and not pittied by men when their calamity cometh. And this is the greateſt of all miſeries, not only not to be pittied, but in the midſt of greateſt miſeries to be derided. And the miſeries to come upon the wicked are the greateſt in the world, for which they are ſet forth by Deſolation, a Judgement comprehending in it all others, and a Whirle-wind, then which there is nothing more violent or ſudden. Thus Lyra, who will have deriſion underſtood of men to whom ſinners ſhall be made a laughing-ſtock, or ſcorne, by reaſon of the baſe and miſerable ſtate into which God in his wrath will bring them. So it is threatned to tranſgreſſors, Deut. 28. Amongſt other of Gods heavie Judgements, and in ſetting forth the Judgements to come upon them, he uſeth not only the compariſon of Deſolation, which cometh by cruel enemies ſuddenly depopulating a Country, by taking preys, burning, ſpoyling and killing all; and of a Tempeſt, but he addeth further; When diſtreſſe and anguiſh cometh upon you, as if their miſery ſhould be ſo great, that he could never tell when to have done in varying his words to ſet it forth; the firſt of theſe two words עוק ſignifieth a ſtreight, whereby is meant ſuch miſery beſetting them, as that they ſhould not know which way to get out of it; and indeed ſuch ſhall be the miſery of the incorrigible wicked in Hel, they that are caſt in there ſhall never get out; and the next word צרה to beſiedge or ſtreighten is a Synonimy to it, further ſetting forth the ſame. And all this is by ſome referred to the Jewes deſtruction by the Romans for deſpiſing the Sonne of God, the Wiſdome of the Father; but with Beda, I rather underſtand more generally of the laſt Judgement to come upon all the wicked for evermore, for that ſhall be moſt ſudden, and into ſuch ſtreights they ſhall then come as never did any before, the way into Paradiſe being never more ſtraitly kept, that the man expelled for ſinne might never enter more; Then the way of coming out of this Dungeon, that the wicked here ſhut up may never have any liberty of coming out any more, but live in torment everlaſtingly.

Verſ. 28. Then ſhall they call upon me, but I will not anſwer, &c. that is, Upon me, from whom this Wiſdome cometh to reprove, exhort, and threaten them, but all their ſeeking to me then ſhall be vaine. Thus Dives in Hel is ſet forth, craving for one drop of cold water; and wicked workers, to be opened unto, but they are not heard, neither doe they finde the leaſt comfort.

Luke. 16. Matth. 7. Luke 13.

Lavater. Lavater taking the Judgements before ſpoken of to be temporall, for the removall of which, although the wicked pray, they ſhall not be heard, noteth this queſtion; Why will not God heare them, ſeeing he hath promiſed to ſave all that call upon him? and anſwereth, That it is meant of the wicked praying through extremity of miſery, but not touched in their hearts with any true repentance. But foraſmuch as ſome have found ſome favour, that they fought unto God, although unreformed, as Ahab, Rehoboam, and Jehoaz, I cannot ſubſcribe unto him, but rather hold with Beda, That the calling here ſpoken of is when it is too late, as it is ſaid; Then many ſhall ſeeke to enter and ſhall not be able; and Eſau could not obtaine the bleſſing, becauſe he came too late, though he ſought it with teares.

Verſ. 31. Therefore ſhall they eate of the fruite of their owne wayes, and be filled with their owne devices; that is, They ſhall fare according to their doings, as the Proverbe is; Ut ſementer feceris ita & metes, As thou ſoweſt thou ſhalt reap;

For

For our doings be our ſowing, and he that ſoweth evil ſeed, cannot reap, and eate good, but baſe Corne, Tares inſtead of Wheat, and here-with he ſhall be filled; So he that liveth and goeth on unreformedly in ſinne, ſhall be filled with anguiſh and miſery. Note.

For the turning away of the ſimple ſhall ſlay them, and the proſperity of fooles deſtroy them; that is, Their going from holy inſtructions ſhall prove unto them as Childrens leaving of helps, where-with they are helped to ſwim in deep waters, is the cauſe of their drowning; So their turning from good inſtructions, and preferring their owne evil wayes, ſhall prove death, and everlaſting deſtruction unto them. And if any ſuch ſhall thinke otherwiſe, becauſe they live in proſperity, and for this be the more proud and licentious, even this which they take to be an argument of Gods love and favour towards them, being hence the more incouraged in their evil wayes, ſhall prove a ſword to ſlay them, neither ſhall they by any meanes eſcape. Thus Xenophon in Cyropædia; It ſeemes to me harder to beare good things well then evill, for theſe worke reproach to many, thoſe wiſdome to all. As the Peacock looking upon his gay tayle extended is proud, but looking downe to his feet dejected: So by proſperity the heart of the wicked is puffed up, but by poverty and miſery caſt downe, whereby God is moved to pity, being otherwiſe ready to caſt downe and deſtroy them, as proud Herod. Verſ. 32. Note. Lavater. Xenophon. Δοκεῖ μοὶ καλὸν πρᾶγμα εἶναι καλαστερῶν ἢ τὰ κακά.

But who ſo hearkeneth to me ſhall dwell ſafely, and be quiet from feare of evill. Here on the contrary ſide, the ſafe and danger leſſe condition of the righteous, that regard and lay up inſtructions in their hearts to live accordingly, is ſhewed, when as the wicked are like the raging Sea, if there be a calme now, a tempeſt ſoone ariſeth, and the waves thereof roare and make a noyſe, and indanger the Ship; the righteous even in tempeſtuous weather are ſafe, and without feare, as they that are in a ſafe Harbour, for they know and beleeve, that God hath wayes to ſave them, and his power and goodneſſe ſhall never faile them; however, they have a quiet Conſcience in reſpect of this, that their ſins are pardoned, and they are through faith in Chriſt juſtified from them, whereby they have peace with God. But it is to be noted, that theſe are ſuch as hearken, and are obedient unto the voyce of Wiſdome, not ſuch as are for faith only, inferring from Juſtification hereby, that doe now what they will, it is no ſinne, as the fooliſh Antinomians hold, and carnall cavillers. CHAP. II.

MY Sonne, if thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandements with thee; ſo that thou incline thine eare to wiſdome, and thy heart to underſtanding, &c. In this Chapter are two parts, or things: Verſ. 1. Verſ. 2.

1. It is ſhewed how Wiſdome may be attained, verſ. 1, 2. &c. to verſ. 10.

2. What the benefit of Wiſdome is, from thence to the end of the Chapter; touching the firſt, To get wiſdome; that is, Grace to turne from ſinne, and to beleeve in Chriſt.

1. Thou muſt be humble to encline thine eare, to the voyce of Wiſdome; that is, To hearken diligently to the Word preached and read, and not to be as moſt Hearers are, like ſtocks and blocks in the Congregation, ſhameleſſly ſleeping the time away, or ſitting there without any attention, not having their eyes faſtned upon the Preacher, as Chriſts Auditors are ſaid to have been upon him, when he taught in Nazareth, although their malice and infidelity hindered them from profiting, but upon other objects of vanity. He that would attaine wiſdome to Salvation by hearing, muſt contrariwiſe looke at nothing elſe, but make this his worke, by hearing to learne and underſtand more of the Will of God from time to time; and thus none wil doe, unleſſe they be humble, to bend and bow to this teaching, acknowledging the great need thereof, being of themſelves ignorant Luk. 4. 2 Tim. 3. 15.

and ſo in danger of being drawn away to ſin and errour to their deſtruction: For, the humble God will teach; and Chriſt ſaith, Thou haſt hidden theſe things from the wiſe, and revealed them to babes; that is, from ſuch as are wiſe in their owne conceit, and to ſuch as are like little children in humility, as elſewhere he ſaith, Unleſſe ye be converted and become as little children, ye cannot be ſaved. As into the low valleys the waters flow, and make the ground fruitfull; ſo the Spirit, which is as living water, into the humble heart. And therefore they that are conceited of their owne knowledge, ſaying, that they know as much as the Preacher can teach them, are not onely fools, but uncapable of this wiſdome, and conſequently of ſalvation.

Pſ. 19.

Note.

Verſ. 3. Yea if thou cryeſt after knowledge. Here followeth a third thing to be done, that we may get knowledge; we muſt pray, and that earneſtly for it, for this is ſet forth by crying; and in ſaying thus, it is implyed, both that we neither have wiſdome, or underſtanding in us; neither can we attaine it of our ſelves, for men beg not for that which they have at home, neither doe they ſeek for it, but for what they want; but for this, if it be neceſſary for them, and they cannot ſubſiſt without it, they both call and cry, and crave, or elſe they periſh, as hunger-ſtarved perſons beg for almes. Moreover it is implied, that God is not ſo difficult to be intreated for divine knowledge and grace, but that if we aske, he will give it us; as alſo James teacheth. Other things we may aske and not have, but this we ſhall aſſuredly, For, aske, ſaith he, and ye ſhall have, ſeeke, and ye ſhall finde. But as James alſo hath it, we muſt aske in faith, and not waver, and faith is not of all men, but to whom God giveth it. To this I ſay, that the faith indeed, which juſtifieth, is the ſpeciall gift of God, and man cannot of himſelfe attaine unto it; but there is a faith, which is a beleeving of that we heare, and may know by the viſible works of God to be true, whereby a man beleeveth that there is a God, and that to bee true, which is taught in his word, for ſo it is ſaid, The devill beleeveth and trembleth; yet neither is this faith meant by James, for this draweth not a man to God, but driveth him from God; but a ſtedfaſt beleeving that there is a God, and that he is a rewarder of thoſe that ſeek unto him, and this faith there muſt, and may be in every one, to whoſe ears the voice of Wiſdome cometh, and then cry for wiſdome, and attaine it without all doubt. For God, as Lavater hath it, is not like unto a man, who to make another thinke himſelfe beholding to him, promiſeth him faire, ſaying, If thou haſt need come to me, and I will lend thee this or that; but come to him in thy need, and then his offer appears to be but words, and no performances: For the rendring of the words here, Heb it is לבונה If thou cryeſt to underſtanding; that is, ſaith Beda, to Chriſt the Son of God, the wiſdome of the Father; but Hilary, by crying to Wiſdome, underſtandeth a mans endeavouring with all his might by reading, meditating, and hearing, to come to this ſaving knowledge; for he ſaith, Wiſdome is to be called upon, every office of reading reading is to be deputed to underſtanding. Hugo and Dionyſ. follow the ſenſe already given, which is beſt, and therefore followed alſo by Lavater and others. And it may be rendred either, Call to wiſdome, or for wiſdome to God by earneſt prayer; yet that of Hilary is alſo to be added, read and ſtudy for it. And it is to be noted, that it is crying and calling aloud that is here required; which that we may do, we muſt take heed of all things that may weaken and dul our calling, that we cannot be ſo ſonorous; and theſe things, according to the Philoſopher are two, 1. Coldneſſe; 2. Intemperance; for he that is hot and temperate in his dyet, and moderate in his paſſions, utters the loudeſt cry and call; frigid perſons, and ſuch as are filled with feare or griefe, or with overmuch meat and drinke, cannot ſpeake to be heard far off: And by bidding, cry and call aloud to underſtanding, he intimateth that wiſdome is far off from us, till we attaine unto it, and therefore not with an eaſie and ſoft call to be fetcht; wherefore if thou deſireſt to attaine it, take heed of all things that may oppreſſe thy voice when thou prayeſt, ſo that it cannot be heard, or prevail: take heed of coldneſſe and deadneſſe in prayer, and pray with fervency.

Note.

2. Of glutony and drunkenneſſe; and be abſtemious, as Daniel by abſtinence ſought moſt anxiouſly the knowledge of things to come. It is a true ſaying of Hierome, A fat belly, a leane minde; that is, farcing and fatting the belly by following the appetite, the minde is dulled, and made uncapable of underſtanding.

Hieron. Pinguis venter, macra mens.

3. Of ſlaviſh feare and worldly griefe; and be temperate and moderate, as it is ſaid, Phil. 4 4. Let your moderation be knowne to all men. Chryſoſt. ſpeaking of chaſte perſons, or ſuch as make themſelves Eunuchs for the Kingdome of heaven, ſaith, Incontinent perſons are heavy or low voyced; but theſe Eunuchs in minde, white in manners, lofty in voice; for ſo are the laſt words Greek, although in Latine rendred, Mente ſublimes, lofty in minde. The Adulterer then, and incontinent, cannot call ſhrill and loud enough for wiſdome; for which he is ſet forth as an Oxe going to the ſlaughter-houſe, and a fool to the ſtocks.

Prov. 7.

If thou ſhalt ſeek for her as ſilver, and hid treaſures; Vulgar, and dig her out as treaſures but the word ſignifieth to ſearch, and becauſe in ſearching for treaſures hid in the earth, men dig, it is ſo rendred. The meaning is, If as men, that be worldly, ſpare for no labour to get money, whereby they may be inriched; thou likewiſe laboureſt for wiſdome; And this is a fourth thing to be done to get wiſdome. It is indeed the gift of God, and therefore to be begged, but as we beg, and cry for it, ſo we muſt labour alſo: What paines do men take to get earthly treaſures? they dig deep into the earth, they with great labour try their mettals to get a little ſilver; the Merchant with great hazard travelleth to the Indies for ſilver and gold, and precious ſtones. Of this of the Merchant Horace ſpeaks ſaying, The diligent Merchant runneth to the furtheſt Indies through rocks and fires, that he may get wealth, and not be preſſed with poverty; where by fires he underſtandeth the Equinoctiall line, where the torrid Zone is, under which he paſſeth to the Indies; and Ovid, Itum eſt in viſcera terræ, &c. Men goe into the bowels of the earth and dig up treaſures, the irritaments of evill; And witty is that of Pliny, ſpeaking of the paines taken by many to finde little precious ſtones to be ſet in rings; how many hands are worn, that one little joynt of the finger may ſhine? And yet treaſures with ſo great labour attained, are not durable; for both they that have them are mortall, theeves may dig through and ſteale them, and in greateſt extremity, they will ſtand them in no ſtead; that is, in time of ſickneſſe and death, and at the day of judgement. But the Treaſures which we are here exhorted to get, are everlaſting, and at theſe times, deliver the poſſeſſors thereof from all evill; And therefore with all intention and earneſtneſſe of minde to be laboured for all the dayes of our lives.

As alſo Seneca to finde ſome gold, we turne out abundance of earth, ſo to get wiſdome. And in this our labouring to get wiſdome, we muſt be like like unto the covetous man, in whom the deſire of having, increaſeth the more he hath, according to that common ſaying, Creſcit amor nummi quantum ipſa pecunia creſcit; The love of money increaſeth as much as money it ſelfe; and as a godly learned man once ſaid, Neither is a covetous man ever ſatisfied with riches, nor a learned man with knowledge. Neither doe covetous men only by juſt and lawful meanes ſeeke riches, but even by robbing and ſtealing, and by trade and deceit, although to get them they adventure their lives; ſo he that labours for Wiſdome, if he liveth in a place where the ſtudy of Divine Learning is ſtreightly forbidden, and there is danger of death to ſeeke after it, as was the caſe of Chriſtians living under Heathen perſecutors, and of thoſe of the reformed religion under Papiſts, yet he by ſtealth in the night takes time to read and ſtudy for this, not paſſing for the danger incurred by ſo doing.

Touching the Similitude betwixt digging for treaſures lying hid in the earth, and wiſdome, it is alſo ſpoken, Job 28. and to finde out theſe treaſures of ſilver or gold, men that have skill to doe it, as Agricola noteth, goe to waters that flow out from mountaines, and there they obſerve the ſands, diligently marking their colour and ſmell, and hereby they diſcover the metals, and their veines, through which thoſe waters come, for they bring ſome of that metall with them.

Georg. Agricola.

Now the mountaines, at the feet of which the treaſures of Wiſdome iſſue out, ſaith Jerome, be the holy Doctors of the Church, who both in Life and Doctrine ſet forth the true Word of God, by opening the myſticall places hereof, and living an heavenly life accordingly. To theſe then he muſt come ſeeking wiſdome, and ſearching for it, that wil finde it, he muſt come to their preaching publickly, and to their writings in private, hearing, reading, and with great labour of the minde finde out this treaſure lying herein; To this effect Salomon ſaith, The mouth of the righteous is a veine of life, out of which, as out of a rich veine of earth, wiſdome to Salvation cometh; and not unlike to this is that of Malachy, The Prieſts lips ſhall preſerve knowledge, and they ſhall enquire the Law at his mouth. And as men that ſeeke for treaſure, although there be abundance, are not ſatisfied to take ſome away, or moſt of it, but they wil have all, and are carefull to leave none behinde, as Chryſoſtome reaſoneth; ſo muſt we doe by this heavenly, never leave ſearching till we have found it all out. And as to come to treaſure no ſmall paines muſt be taken, but the greateſt labour that is, for ſuch is digging, ſo to get wiſdome. And laſtly, as he that diggeth for treaſure to get it out of the earth, to be inriched by it, diggs in his owne ground, for he that diggs in another mans, as the Civil Law ſaith, if he findes any treaſure ſhal not have it, but the man in whoſe ground it is found; ſo we muſt every one labour for wiſdome in our owne hearts, that knowledge lying there may be digged out to the beautifying and adorning of us with all rich graces of Juſtice, Temperance, Sobriety, Chaſtity, and Holineſſe, and not to the inriching of others only, as many doe, ſaying to thoſe that they teach, Ye muſt doe as I ſay, not as I doe; they count it a great glory to finde this treaſure, but are themſelves ſtil very poore, becauſe they digge indeed, but digge not out, they doe fodere, not effodere, as the vulgar wel renders it.

Mal. 2. 7.

Chryſ. Hom. in orat. H.

Then thou ſhalt underſtand the feare of the Lord, &c. Here to ſhew, that a mans labour that ſeeketh for wiſdome, as is aforeſaid, ſhall not be loſt; the Wiſe man ſheweth, that whoſoever thus ſeekes it, ſhal finde both the feare of God, which was ſaid before to be the beginning of it, and the knowledge of God; That is, of thoſe things concerning his heavenly Majeſty, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt, which he hath revealed in his Word, and by faith he ſhal aſſuredly know Jeſus Chriſt his Sonne to be his Saviour, in which two things the feare of God making a man to eſchew evil, and to doe good, and in this knowledge of God ſtandeth perfect wiſdome. And it is to be noted, that in ſaying, Thou ſhalt underſtand the feare of the Lord, and finde the knowledge of God, for herein he proceedeth according to the Allegory before begun of finding ſilver and treaſure, For it is obſerved by thoſe that write of precious metals, or treaſures hid in the ground, that where treaſures were hid, they were wont of old to lay into the ground above them aſhes aſhes or coales, ſo that he who went to digge for them firſt came at theſe, and hereby knew treaſure to be neare; and for a Mine of Silver, they that digge firſt come to the head thereof, which is leſſe precious, and then to the vaſt treaſures lying there, but more deepe; According to this it is here ſaid, That he who ſeekes for wiſdome ſhal firſt come at the feare of God, of which enough hath been ſaid before, ch. 1. 7. and then to this underſtanding, to that as a neceſſary introduction and leſſe precious, and then to this moſt rich treaſure of knowledge and faith.

For the Lord giveth wiſdome, out of his mouth comes underſtanding. Here a reaſon is yeelded, why by crying and calling to God in prayer we ſhould endeavour to attaine it, he is the Giver hereof, and therefore this is of him to be begged. Here is alſo a reaſon of that which was ſaid of inclining our eares, and hearts, Out of his mouth underſtanding cometh; therefore to his ſpeaking in the Miniſtery of his Word, our eares muſt be intent. And the next words imply a reaſon, why we muſt ſeeke for wiſdome. Verſ. 6.

He layeth up ſound wiſdome for the righteous, a buckler to them that walke uprightly. The vulgar; He ſhall protect the health of the righteous, and keepe them that walke ſimply, Hebr. He hideth wiſdome for the righteous; the word תושיה ſignifieth either wiſdome or any other entity or matter, wherein there is a being and continuance, A field to them that walke perfectly; or we may read it thus, as cohering with us, where it is ſaid, Out of his mouth cometh underſtanding, and the hidden thing; for ſo wiſdome was before compared: he meaneth then, that this alſo cometh thence to the righteous, and if any man would know what good this is to them, in the next words it is ſhewed. It is a very ſhield to ſuch as walke perfectly, or uprightly, the arrowes or darts of ſpirituall enemies cannot by reaſon hereof come at them to peirce or hurt them, neither ſhall the aſſaults of corporeall enemies prove hurtful to them, as is often ſhewed in the Pſalmes, where God is ſet forth to be a Shield, a Rock, a Tower to fly to, and to cover the righteous under his wings; not that wicked perſecutors ſhall never be able to kill their bodies, but not to hurt their ſoules; and that their very bodily lives ſhall be ſafe from their ſtriking, but only when he giveth leave for the making of grace the more to ſhine in them, as he permitted Satan againſt Job. Hence comes the ſaying, A good conſcience is a brazen wall; and Zechary ſaith, That God is a wall of Braſſe or Fire about his to defend them. Verſ. 7. Bona conſcientia murus aheneus eſt

He keepeth the paths of judgement, and preſerveth the way of his Saints; the vulgar: For paths of judgement hath pathes of righteouſneſſe, reſpecting rather the ſence, then the ſignification of the word, becauſe Judgement is ſometime put for Juſtice, as it is here, and may well be, as the cauſe may be put for the effect. For whence cometh it to paſſe, that a man walketh in the paths of Juſtice, but that being wiſe he rightly judgeth this to be the way, wherein he ought to walke, and all other wayes to be wicked and evil? Now God is ſaid to keep the paths of righteouſneſſe, becauſe as Gregory Nazianzen hath it, He by induing them with wiſdome makes them againſt all the wiles of Satan to know which be theſe wayes, that they may walke in them and not be miſtaken. And he takes a Similitude from a Lion, who when he flyeth from thoſe that purſue him, with his tayle doth put out by trouling it upon the ground, his foot-ſteps, that not being now diſcernable they may not know which way to goe after him to kill him. Know ſo, ſaith he, that ſo the roaring Lion, the Devill by his ſubtilty obſcures the right way ſo, that I know not this to be it, or that; but then praying to God for wiſdome, he keepeth and guideth me in the right way, making it plainly to appeare unto me, and ſo he doth to all his Saints, as is here ſaid. Lavater renders it Iter beneficorum, Hebr. it is חסידים mercifull ones, and therefore it may well be rendred Saints, ſith all the Saints are merciful and beneficous, or ſuch as are daily doing good, and they are Hypocrites and no Saints, what ſhew of holineſſe ſoever they make, that are not ſuch; for this is the pure religion which maketh a Saint, To viſite the fatherleſſe and widowes in their adverſity; That is, to ſhew mercy to the poore. Verſ. 8. Gregor. Nazian. Jam. 1. 2.

Then

Verſ. 9. Then ſhalt thou underſtand juſtice and judgement, and equity, and every good way. Here according to Lavater, he beginneth to ſhew the benefit coming by wiſdome. 1. Hereby a man ſhall be kept in a good way. 2. From all evill wayes. The good way is the way of juſtice; that is, of righteous and holy living, of judgement to doe every one in his place, as true judgement requireth betwixt man, and man, without reſpecting perſons; of equity, being equall and eaven in all our dealings, not declining ſometime to the right hand, and ſometime to the left; But of this enough before, chap. 1. 3. onely here is alſo every good way ſpoken of, and for way is put the word מעגל, but v. 12. where the evill way is ſpoken of, that by wiſdome he ſhall be kept from; it is דרך, betwixt which two Auguſt. putteth this difference; the firſt is the ſtreight and narrow way; the other the broad way ſpoken of Matth. 7. 14. the firſt cometh of עגל ſignifying round; and the good way is by this word ſet forth, becauſe it is uniform, and round without angles or crookedneſſe, ending where it begun, he that goeth in this way, being at the end of his dayes where he was at the beginning of his ſpirituall life; that is, in the true faith and feat of God: But evill wayes contrariwiſe are croſſe, and winding and crooked, they that walk herein, being now in the way of ſome ſeeming holineſſe, but then in the way of prophaneſſe, now of looſneſſe and diſſoluteneſſe, then of covetouſneſs, hypocriſie, or wil-worſhip, on the right hand of adding to the word then on the left of taking away herefrom: whereas the good way is ſaid to be ſtreight, and narrow, and yet ſpacious and large, Pſ. 31. Thou haſt ſet my feet in a large place. Auguſt. thereupon ſaith, It is ſtreight and hard to walke in, becauſe at the firſt through the corruption of our nature hard to walke in, and for the difficulty of the precepts given us, but afterwards love and delight herein makes it large; and then as our Lord ſaith, His yoke is eaſie, and burthen light; So likewiſe Chryſoſt. Hom. 3. de Laz. And of this delight in the good way it followeth here, v. 10. When wiſdome entereth into thy heart, and knowledge is pleaſant unto thy ſoule: For naturally there is in us an enmity againſt the law of God, and whilſt it is thus with us, we can neither underſtand the things of God as we ought, or walke in good wayes, or be kept out of evill. But when this is our delight, we ſhall both underſtand, and be kept from every evill way, as followeth.

Lavater. Auguſt. Auguſt. Matth. 11. 28. Verſ. 10. Rom. 8. 9.

Verſ. 11. 12. Diſcretion ſhall preſerve thee, and underſtanding keep thee, To deliver thee from the way of the evill man. In which words he further amplifieth, and maketh plaine what was ſaid v. 8. He ſhall preſerve the way of judgement. God as the efficient cauſe, and underſtanding as the inſtrumentall. For then is the way of judgement preſerved, and the Saints way, when they are kept from all evill wayes, in the wayes of righteouſneſſe and holineſſe. In ſaying, From the way of the evill man, and before, in every good way; he intimateth, that this life is as a way leading either to everlaſting life, or death, ſo that every one had need to take heed how he liveth; for as the way wherein he goeth, ſo is the end, as the life, ſo is the death, and end of his life; to thoſe that lead a good life, joyfull and comfortable; to evill livers, diſmall and terrible. And in ſaying, The evill man, and then varying the phraſe, The man that ſpeaketh froward things, He intimateth, that there are two ſorts of wicked men, of whoſe wayes we had need to beware. 1. Evill livers, in exerciſe of riot, incontinency, robbery, murther; touching which ſort he ſpake before, chap. 1. 8. ſwearers, curſers, and contentious perſons, 2. Evill teachers, that by their deceivable teaching draw men out of the way of truth to errour, for both are alike pernicious to the ſoule, as is taught, 2 Theſſ. 2. 11. 2 Pet. 2. 1, 2. Now that we may be kept from the wayes of theſe evill men, diſcretion tells us that we ſhould not keep company with them, but avoid them, as is commanded touching inordinate livers, 1 Cor. 5. and touching corrupt teachers, Tit. 3. 10. For he that would not be infected, will not come amongſt infected perſons; nor he that would not be ſtung, amongſt Adders and Scorpions. But ſuch are the wicked, their waies are alſo ſaid to be waies of darkneſs, and they leave the paths of uprightneſs; for that evill wayes are darke and dangerous, Chriſt ſheweth, when he ſaith, This is the condemnation of the world, that men love darkneſſe more then the light, becauſe their deeds are evill; that is, hereby it appears, that they live, and love to live live in darkneſſe, becauſe they love, and adhère to their ſinnes. For that ſinne is darkneſſe, St. John ſheweth, ſaying, If we ſay, that we have fellowſhip with him, and walk in darkneſſe, we lye, and do not the truth; whereby he meaneth, If we live in ſin, as the next words ſhew, If we live in light, we have fellowſhip with him, and the bloud of Jeſus cleanſeth us from all ſin; that is, if we live holily and righteouſly as Chriſt did, who is therefore called light. And here in the next words, Verſ. 14. Who reioyce to doe evill; wherein he goeth on to ſhew, whoſe wayes are wayes of darkneſſe. And he addeth, Verſ. 15. Whoſe wayes are wicked, and they delight in frowardneſſe. That by all this, two ſorts, viz. wicked ſinners and evill teachers are ſet forth, all agree; it being hereupon obſerved alſo, that they are commonly wicked livers who teach perverſe or froward things; or as the Sept. hath it, Who ſpeake nothing to be beleeved; for they that teach even well, but live ill, are not thought worthy to be beleeved in that which they teach. And the things that falſe prophets teach, are well called perverſe or froward, or things not to be beleeved, they being but as water made to looke white by lime, as Ireneus compareth it, and offered for milke: ſo likewiſe Nazianzen. And to an Apothecaries pot falſly written upon, as if it contained a medicine, but indeed is full of poyſon. Laſtly, as Origen hath it, like unto a falſe light ſet up to them that ſaile upon the ſea in a darke night, pretending to guide them to a ſafe harbour, but indeed miſleads them to rocks or quick-ſands. And for their wayes of darkneſſe, Irenæus illuſtrates this by the ſimilitude of a Fiſh called Capia, which caſteth out an Inky-blackneſſe about it, ſo that it cannot be ſeen, and by this meanes eſcapeth taking by the Fiſher.

Touching the delight that the wicked take in evill doing, they are for this compared by One, to ſuch as by cheaters are drawne to play at dice, and ſo to loſe all their money whilſt they are playing; ſo fooliſh men are drawne with pleaſure to ſin and errour, till they be utterly undone hereby, or as the Graſhopper that ſings merily a little while, and then dyeth with hunger and cold: Therefore Nazianzen ſpeaking in the perſon of ſuch, ſaith, I do that which my mind hateth, and damneth and am delighted in evils, and laugh at death fixed in my breaſt, by a Sardonian laughter; as Euſeb. Emiſ. ſaith, That there is a certain herb, the juyce whereof being taken makes a man laugh till he dyeth; the like is alſo ſaid of ſome touching certain poyſonous Spiders, with which he that is poyſoned, leaps and danceth till he dyeth.

For the laſt Epithite given unto evill wayes, froward or perverſe, by Sept. crooked; by Symachus, crooked as the going of the Sea-crab, or doubtfull; by Aquila diſtorted, and ſuch as are apt to bring a man out of the way. Theſe all ſhew the manifold vileneſſe of wicked wayes.

1. They are crooked, and full of windings and turnings; as the way of a Waggon, which the Wagoner, to avoid hillocks and rugged places turns this way and that; ſo the wayes of the wicked to avoid difficulties occurring, turne many times from the way wherein others travell.

Againe, for going like the Crab, it goeth not that way which it looketh, but towards the left ſide, or backward; ſo the wicked are bent ſtill in their going not that way which the eye of right reaſon looketh towards, but to the left hand, which is alwayes in Scripture put for the worſt. The Vulgar for perverſe or crooked, hath it infamous, becauſe walking in ſuch wayes, makes men infamous and vilely accounted of.

To deliver thee from the ſtrange woman, the ſtranger that flattereth with her lips. Here is another great benefit of Wiſdome: By the ſtrange woman, he meaneth any woman that is not a mans owne wife, for aliena ſignifieth either a ſtranger, or another mans wife: For of both theſe ſorts there are whoriſh women, ſome ſingle, that make whoring their trade, as it were; and ſome married, that not being ſatisfied with their owne husbands, ſeek to allure other lovers unto them; the one ſort flattereth, and ſo allureth lovers to her for gaine, pretending love unto them, but it is indeed to their money, as long as they are any thing worth, ſuch an one telleth one lover that ſhe loveth him above all other men, and never admitteth of any more to come unto her, but as the German Proverb is, A buſh is not hanged out at any Taverne for one cuſtomer. Some whoriſh women againe are married, and deceive their Husbands by their flattering ſpeeches, making them beleeve that they love them moſt dearly, and none other men, but meanwhile they have their Paramours in ſecret, upon whom they diſpend their Husbands goods, yet by their faire ſpeeches they are ſo bewitched by them, that they are even angry with thoſe, that give them warning thereof, through which meanes they undergoe great obloquie, being counted bauds to their wives. Of Whores flattering ſpeeches ſee more, Chap. 5. and how her words are like unto Honey. To this effect Lavater; Another ſaith, that the ſtrange Woman here ſpoken of is another mans wife, who to ſatisfie her filthy Luſt, allureth young men unto her: and hereunto the next words, ver. 17.

Muffet.

Verſ. 17. Which forſaketh the guide of her youth, and forgetteth the covenant of her God; That is, dealeth falſly with her Husband, to whom ſhe married in her young and tender age; thus making him her head and guide, and by ſolemne Covenant both before God and men bound her ſelfe to cleave to him only, to the end of both their lives, but now without regard of the love and benefit paſt, or of the Covenant of God, which bindeth ſo ſtrongly, ſhe breakes thus ſhamefully out, not only to the endangering of her owne ſoule, but of him or them alſo that are allured by her.

Verſ. 18. Verſ. 19. For her houſe inclineth to death, &c. None that goe unto her returne againe, or take hold of the paths of life. Whereby he ſheweth, how dangerous it is to goe to ſuch a Womans houſe, it is hard for him that doth ſo, to eſcape being intangled by her, and if he be, his caſe is deſperate, there being ſeldome or never any turning by repentance from this foule ſinne; a reaſon whereof is yeelded in Eccleſiaſtes; Whoſe heart is as nets, her hands as ſnares and bands. Eccleſ. 7. 26. Arborem who citeth many places of Scripture, forbidding and adjudging to death both corporeall and eternall Adulterers, and Adultereſſes, which are obvious to every one that readeth the Scriptures, cometh at length to theſe words; He that goeth unto her returneth not againe; ſaying, That the meaning is not, no one man that liveth in this foule ſinne ever repenteth, but that it is ſo rare a thing for an Whoremonger to turne, that none in compariſon of thoſe that live and dye herein turne. We read of one David, and of a Woman ſuch a ſinner, that came to Chriſt, and waſhed his feet with her teares, that repented, and was forgiven, but generally they that goe this way turne not, and ſo never attaine to life, but are ſhut out with Doggs and Witches to endure everlaſting torments. Many indeed ſay, it repents them when they are ready to dye, but then they leave not this ſinne, but it leaveth them, and ſo are not truly penitent; for Whore-mongers, although they wax old, and nature decayeth in them, yet ſhew ſtill the incontinency of their mindes by their delight in obſcene talking, and laſcivious behaviour, yet when Salomon ſaith, None returne, he meaneth, by his owne ſtrength, but by Gods grace they may, and if any one turneth from this or any other foule ſinne, it is by grace exciting and aſſiſting hereunto. Arbor. Revel. 22.

Jerome not ſeeing how this could be juſtified touching Adulterers, expounds it of Death, None that goeth unto her returneth: That is, into the Pit, for from thence there is no redemption, But it is plainly ſpoken of the ſtrange Woman, and cannot without violence doing to the text, be otherwiſe applyed. But herein lyeth a ſingular benefit of wiſdome ſought and attained, as it is further ſaid in Eccleſiaſtes, He that pleaſeth God ſhall eſcape from her, but the ſinner ſhall be taken by her. Eccleſ. 7. 26. Gen. 39. As we may ſee it exemplified in Joſeph, when this net and ſnare was by his Miſtreſſe laid for him; and to be delivered from this ſtrange Woman, will appeare to be no meane favour, if we conſider the great power that Luſt hath over thoſe that are mancipated thereunto, and how that an Adultereſſe or Whore is aptly called a ſtrange Woman for this, in that this ſinne abounded moſt amongſt the Heathen, there being a kinde of religion placed at, ſometimes in married womens and virgins proſtituting themſelves to other mens luſts; as at Feaſts, kept to the honour of Priapus and Venus, and the Heathen were ſtrangers, therefore alſo is the whoriſh woman in Iſrael called a ſtrange woman, and becauſe Whoredom eſtrangeth the heart from God more then any other ſinne, for having been once brought under the power of Venus, ſhe becomes thy god, and holds thee ſo faſt, that thou art for ever after eſtranged from the true God indeed: for which Venus is by the Heathen ſet forth as a Queene wearing a Crowne, and Plato calleth her for this, Agreſtem & furioſam dominam, An harſh and furious Lady. For Luſt dulleth and taketh away the ſences, as Galen noteth, and nothing is ſo prejudiciall to the underſtanding, ſo that inſtead of a reaſonable Creature a man is hereby made a bruit Beaſt, that hath no underſtanding, and doth like a beaſt that which is naturall, never conſidering the evils that his blinde affections carry him to: for which one ſaith, that the Venetians derive Venus from Ve, which in their tongue is a privative, ſignifying without, and νοῦς, a minde: and Euripides calleth her Aphrodiſia, from or without, and σοφίαν wiſdome. And therefore no vice in particular could more fitly be ſpoken of, as from which a man is by wiſdome delivered, then a ſtrange woman, or an whoriſh; and it is a good note of one alſo, that ſhe is called a ſtranger, becauſe ſuch were not permitted in Iſrael, the Law ſtrictly forbad it; There ſhall not be an Whore of the daughters of Iſrael, nor a Whore-keeper of the ſonnes of Iſrael; ſo that harlots lived not in Cities, but without in by places, where they might not be knowne but by ſome few that came at their lure.

Pauſanias. Plato de Repub. lib. 1.

To conclude, take the ſaying of St. Auguſt. Nothing I thinke doth ſo deject the minde of man as Womens flatteries, and the unlawfull touches of their bodies. And of Cyprian, Out of Coales ſparkles fly, ruſt breeds in Iron, and Aſpes poyſon the body, and a Woman poureth out the peſtilence of Luſt, ſometime by laughing, ſometime by flattering, and ſometime by ſinging.

Auguſt. Soliloq. l. 1. c. 10. Cyprian, De ſing. cleric.

Touching the next words, ver. 17. one who thinketh not only a woman to be meant in this place that hath an Husband, but alſo a ſingle woman, underſtands the firſt words here, Who forſaketh the guide of her youth, of her that liveth in her Fathers houſe, or is under other Governours to keep and looke to her then, when there is moſt danger of running into this ſinne; but ſhe that is laſcivious, notwithſtanding this vigilant care had over her, goeth away and playeth the Harlot, meeting elſewhere with her Mates to this end and purpoſe, at Markets, or Faires, or marriage Feaſts, as Dinah, Jacobs daughter with Shechem, and ſo ſhe is defiled, and becomes an Whore. And it is to be noted, that the word rendered guide, is אלף a Captaine of a thouſand, and implying, that it is a moſt hard thing to keep ſuch an one from running into this foule ſin, becauſe ſuch a Captaine with his men are employed about keeping of a Caſtle beſieged with enemies; ſo the father of ſuch, other governours, ſervants, and all are little enough to be imployed in keeping her chaſtity, and had need to uſe all vigilancy, that ſhe may not, deceiving her Guard, breake out notwithſtanding, and turne ſuch a ſtranger to the endangering both of her owne ſoule, and the ſoules of others alſo. By the Woman, that breakes the Covenant of God, all are agreed, that ſhe who is married is meant, breaking her faith ſo ſolemnly given at the time of her Marriage. Allegorically by the ſtrange Woman Lyra underſtandeth Idolatry, where-with as by a ſtrange woman men are bewitched, and drawne away from the true God to commit ſpirituall adultery, whereby they come to be in danger of inevitable deſtruction, and in ſo doing, ſhe that was before the Church of God, and his Spouſe, forſakes her guide and leader, by whom ſhe was ſafely kept, as by a ſtrong Garriſon; and breakes her Covenant, into which all the faithfull come at the imbracing of the true religion, in that to which ſhe was chiefly bound, viz. To have none other gods, and ſo of a Wife ſhe becommeth a ſtrange woman, and her houſe, that is the Congregation of which ſhe is, is the houſe of Death, and ſuch periſh, neither is there any poſſibility of coming againe out of this danger, and into the way of life, no more then for our firſt Parents having ſinned, and ſo being caſt out of Paradiſe, to returne againe and to take and eate of the Tree of Life.

And in Rome becauſe old harlots were not permitted openly, they harboured in caves of the earth, called Fornicæ, from whence the word Fornication cometh, and in this regard it is aptly ſaid here, Her houſe inclineth, or is below in a pit of the earth, as it were, where the dead are laid. And therefore it is added, They that goe unto her return not againe. In following the allegory of death, the Adulterer being like unto a man fallen into a deep pit, out of which there is no getting out againe no more then for him, that is laid into a ſepulchre, the place of the dead; according to this Chryſoſt. ſaith, It is as hard a matter to convert an Whoremonger, as it is to raiſe one out of the grave againe that is dead and buried. Neither doth he lay hold of the way of life; that is, either the life of grace, the corporeall life, and everlaſting life; for this ſinne deſtroyeth the very body, and cauſeth death betimes. Baſil compareth a woman to a load-ſtone drawing man unto her, as that doth iron, and he being drawne, cleaveth ſo faſt to her, that he cannot be againe ſeparated, but either by anointing with the bloud of a Goat, that is; of a ſin-offering, or by the juyce of an onyon; that is, the tears of contrition, becauſe the onyon bringeth teares from the eyes. So that to be delivered from this ſin, in which there is ſo much carnall pleaſure, there muſt be abundance of ſorrow, and abundant weeping, as in her that waſhed Chriſts feet with her tears, otherwiſe the foulneſſe hereof ſtill remaineth, neither the diſeaſe being healed, but ſtill remaining, nor his filth cleanſed.

Verſ. 20. That thou mayeſt walk in the way of good men, and in the paths of the righteous, Vulg. in a good way; and for paths, calles, which, as Iſidor ſaith, are ſheeps paths made by their hard hoves, they going one after another, and ſo they have their name accordingly. And this is a word moſt aptly ſetting forth paths of righteouſneſſe, which are ſtreight and narrow, for ſo is this way, which is the way of life; and the rather is this word uſed, becauſe as ſheep, if one beginneth to goe all the reſt follow: So one truly faithfull, is followed in all vertuous living by all others indued with the ſame ſpirit, as Abel in piety, Noah in righteouſneſſe, Abraham in faith, Joſeph in innocency, and David in zeale: Therefore he that is not moved by theſe examples, or the like, is not of the ſame ſpirit, and ſo never likely to come to the bleſſed end of the ſame way, the ſalvation of his ſoule, but of the broad way, death and damnation for ever more: For the rendring of the words, Heb. it is לְמַעַן; Therefore walk in the way of the good, or good men, and obſerve how the paths, &c. It is then a concluſion of all the diſcourſe going before, and the dehortations from evill wayes, whether of robbers, and murtherers, hereticks, or other wicked livers, or of adultery to be kept here-from; look at the examples of good and righteous men, and follow them, and by this means underſtanding ſhall have in thee the effect before ſpoken of, to keep thee from evill wayes. And why ſhouldeſt thou not be more moved by the example of Abraham Joſeph, David, Job, &c. then of all the whores and whoremongers, or other wicked perſons in the world? for they are ſheep, theſe wolves, or other ſavage beaſts, whom ſheep will not follow, but one of their owne kinde they will moſt readily, and flye away from theſe.

Verſ. 21. Verſ. 22. For the righteous ſhall dwell in the land, But the wicked ſhall be cut off. Here is a motive to follow the righteous, and not the wicked; thus we ſhall be eſtabliſhed in our poſſeſſions upon earth, and not through Gods judgements be waſted and decay in our eſtates, and ſo come to poverty, or to dye ignominiouſly, and not to live out halfe our dayes. And herein Salomon ſpeakes after the manner of the Old Teſtament, which is to promiſe to the righteous all worldly bleſſings, and to threaten the wicked with the contrary temporall judgements. But as the Fathers generally obſerve, when theſe things are ſpoken of to them, Everlaſting bleſſings are meant to the faithfull under the Goſpel, or together with theſe, thoſe alſo according to the Apoſtle, ſaying, Godlineſſe hath the promiſe of this life, and

of that which is to come. But as is further to be noted, that it is ſaid, The righteous ſhall dwell in the Land, and often in other places, they ſhall inherit it; whereby is intimated, That the righteous onely can truly be ſaid to have lands and worldly goods, as an inheritance, but the wicked not: For they are the children of God, whoſe all things are, and all his children be his heires, and ſo the earth and earthly things are their inheritance, as well as heaven. From whence it followeth, that they onely can have comfort of theſe things, as coming to them through God, whereas the wicked come to them by the devill, whom God permitteth to give them unto them, to ſome by wicked and unlawfull means of ſtealing and oppreſſing, falſe ſwearing, and deceit, ſome otherwiſe, as deſcending to them from their parents, or given them by other friends; but which way ſoever they come unto them, they are no inheritance coming from God, but from the devill their father, as Chriſt calleth him, and a further inheritance to come after, is his helliſh kingdome, together with the torments thereof for ever. So Chryſoſt. in his imperfect worke upon Matth. ſaith to the wicked, The devill hath given thee thoſe riches although they be not his, but God hath ſet them between two conditions, either to give them himſelfe, or that the devil may give them: for giving the devill power, he quitted not himſelfe of it; but when they are given by ſinne, or unto ſinne, they are given by the devill, when without ſinne, by God; upon theſe words of the devill to Chriſt, All theſe will I give thee, if thou wilt fall downe and worſhip me. And Gregory ſaith, Riches are the patrimony of the righteous; yet this is not ſo to be underſtood, as that it can hence be inferred, that wicked men have no right to theſe worldly things, and therefore the righteous may lawfully take them away; for not they onely have right to things which they enjoy, to whom they are given by their proper owner; but alſo they, to whom they are given by another by ſuch an owners allowance, for then they may in ſome ſort be ſaid to be given by him; and in this ſenſe it is ſaid, That God makes the Sunne to ſhine, and the raine to fall on the good and the bad; and God is ſaid to have given mount Seir to Eſau, and the Kingdome of Iſrael to Saul, and afterward to Jeroboam. And this ſhould make all wicked rich men to feare in the midſt of the affluence of worldly wealth, for who fears not to be made the devills heire? for he that inherits from him here, ſhall certainly inherit alſo with him hereafter. Let us then not onely flye the getting of worldly goods by wicked means, but flye all ſinne and wickedneſſe, which makes men no leſſe the devills children, and him their father, then theeves, robbers, and murtherers that take away the precious life of a man to get his treaſures.

MY ſon forget not my law, but let thy heart keep my commandements. And in his heart to keep his commandements, as before he put it for a condition, If thou wilt receive my words, and hide my commandements with thee, chap. 2. 1. whereby is intimated, that men are moſt hardly perſwaded to live in obedience to Gods Lawes, and not to be lead by their owne luſts, how beneficiall ſoever the one will be, and how pernicious ſoever the other. And therefore the Miniſters of the word of God have need often, and by all the arguments that may be to preſſe this to the people, to be willing to heare this againe and againe, as knowing their owne averſeneſſe by nature from all things that are before them, as the Vers. 2. For length of dayes, long life, and peace these shall adde unto thee: That he might the more inforce his Exhortation, he not content to have made such faire promises as he did before in other words, makes the same againe; for what is length of dayes, long life and peace, but dwelling in the land, and to remaine in it, as was said before, chap. 2. 21? For this is to continue long, and that in prosperity, and not be soone taken away, as many wicked persons are. Some by length of dayes, understand long living and prosperity here, by long life and peace, that in the world to come.

Vers. 3. Let not mercy and truth forsake thee, binde them about thy necke, &c. Having dehorted before from going with robbers and murtherers, chap. 1. 10. now contrariwise he exhorteth to truth and mercy; For he that is just and true, and hath in him the bowels of mercy and compassion, is so far from consorting with such, that for violent or fraudulent taking away of other mens goods and lives, hee giveth to those that need of his corne, and according to his power saveth the life of the innocent, and as chap. 1. 9. it is said, They shall be chains to thy necke, so here, Binde them about thy necke; hereby intimating, that Truth and Mercy are the most glorious ornaments of a man that can be, even as a gold chaine about his necke; and on the contrary side, lying, deceit, injustice, and hard heartednesse, as an iron hoop about the neck, or other part of the body, an abasement, as of a felon and capitall malefactor. And that we may avoid this, and be adorned with that, truth and mercy must be written in the heart, as in the next words, and not a shew made hereof onely, after the manner of vain-glorious hypocrites. Here, and v. 4. Muffet. are two vertues commended unto us, saith Muffet, Mercy and Truth, by mercy, love, and beneficence being meant, and by truth sincerity and uprightnesse; to be bound about the necke and written in the heart, by being alwayes thought upon, and worne with delight and pleasure: a like speech to which is used by Deut. 11. 8. Moses, Lay up these words in your hearts, binde them for a signe upon your hands and eyes: Then v. 4. follow two rewards, Thou shalt finde favour and good successe, in the eyes of God and man; that is, thou shalt prosper in all things through Gods blessing upon thy labours; and because men are apt to love the beneficent, and true dealing, thou shalt be well reputed amongst them, which two things, who doth not most earnestly desire, and decline the contrary, ill successe, and an ill name. To this effect the Apostle saith, Rom. 14. 18. He that in these things serveth Christ, pleaseth God and is acceptable to men: And by the word truth is also Arboreus. implyed faith in Christ, for both these, as Arboreus hath it, must be joyned together, that God may be pleased, as they are in this place: It will not availe to shew mercy to thy neighbour, and to deny Christ and his truth, or to imbrace the truth, and to shut thine eyes, and turne away from thy poore brother, a thing to be seriously thought upon by all Christians, because we are so ready, if we doe the one, Note. to neglect the other; if we be zealous for Christ, and his truth, to be without mercy and charity, or if charitable to take liberty to sinne, and unrighteousnesse; David joyned them both together, and upon this ground pleaded confidently for both, Psal. 40. 10. 11. I have not concealed thy loving kindnesse and truth from the great congregation, Let thy loving kindnesse and truth continually preserve me. Hereupon August. August. Wouldst thou heare of the mercy of God, go from thy sinnes, and he will forgive thee thy sinnes; wouldst thou heare of the truth of the Lord, hold righteousnesse, let it be crowned; for when thou dost thus, mercy is preached to thee, afterwards truth shall be shewed unto thee, Psal. 85. Mercy and Truth are also said to have met and kissed each other; they cannot be separated, neither will they. By Mercy and Truth Lyra understands mercy to the poore, truth towards all men; Hugo, mercy towards all men, truth towards himselfe; Beda, truth in speeches, mercy in deeds; Chrysost. following the Sept. hath it, Mercy and Faith, the one towards man, the other towards God; as the promise is of successe from God, and acceptation with man, and this is most probable; yet although this be principally meant by truth, it is also to be understood of truth in all our speeches and dealings with one another. And notable is the obſervation of Chryſoſtome upon this ſaying, Let them not forſake thee; not, doe not thou forſake them; for hereby is intimated, that we need them, and not they us, for which cauſe we muſt hold them faſt, and not once in any one caſe let them goe, becauſe they are as Fowles then that wil fly away, and we ſhal never get them more, but by daily uſe and familiarity they are cicurated, or tamed, ſo that they wil never leave us, as Baſil ſpeaketh; for hanging them about the neck, Chryſoſtome ſaith, The ſonnes of Nobles, when they are children, weare about their necks ſome jewel of gold, whereby they may be knowne to be ſuch, and for this reaſon they never leave it off, but weare it about them continually; and in like manner every Childe of God ſhould ſhew his Parentage, by doing that which pertaineth to mercy and truth daily. And in ſaying, Write them upon the table of thine heart, he meaneth, that they ſhould be moſt deare unto us, and beloved; as ſome have the Images of their deareſt friends in the forme of an heart, which they hang about their necks upon their breſts the ſeat of the heart. And touching mercy, the ſigne of Nobility, Gregory hath a notable ſaying, Nobility truly impoſeth this Law upon it ſelfe, that the truly noble thinke, that of duty they ought to give what of their owne accord they give, and that they doe nothing worthy Nobility, unleſſe they daily increaſe in benificence.

Againe, Chryſoſtome compareth Mercy and Truth unto a Queene, who when ſhe entereth in at the Court gate, none of the Porters dare inquire, Who art thou, or whence comeſt thou, but all ſtand reverently to receive her in, for ſhe is, ſay they, the Queene; ſo the mercifull and juſt dealing perſon paſſeth into the Court of Heaven, not only as a Noble perſon, but a Queene, ſo neare doth doing like unto God, make us unto God. The hanging alſo of theſe as a chaine about the necke, and placing them upon the heart ſerveth aptly to ſhew, that Mercy and Truth are then only acceptable unto God, when they come from the heart, affected with pity towards the miſerable, and hating falſhood, and loving the truth. And touching truth in particular, Auguſtine ſpeaking in the praiſe of Martyrs that ſuffered for the Truth, ſaith; The truth of Chriſtians is more faire then Helena of the Greeks, for our Martyrs have for this, fought more valiantly againſt Sodome, then thoſe Heroes for her againſt Troy.

Verſ. 5.

It cannot hence be inferred, as Lavater noteth, that we ſhould not goe from the Dictates or Decrees of the ancient Fathers in any thing, indeed in things wherein they concurre with the Word of God, this precept holds to them, but not wherein they ſpeake diverſly, becauſe if any man doth teach otherwiſe he is accurſed; it is againſt thoſe men who are wiſe in their owne conceit, and ſo become authors of Hereſies in the Church of God, and ſuch as are ſeduced by them. And againſt young perſons, who thinke they are wiſer then their Governours, and ſo deſpiſe their counſels and admonitions, and by this meanes run upon inevitable wickedneſſes and dangers. It is alſo againſt them that thinke they are ſo politick, that they can provide well enough for themſelves for the acquiring of God, and preſervation from dangers, as Muffet hath it; Arboreus by truſting in the Lord with all thy heart underſtands, for attaining of everlaſting ſalvation, which we can never doe of our ſelves, or cannot enter into the way that leadeth hereunto, that is, the keeping of Gods Commandements; yea, our wiſdome is ſo farre from attaining to this, as that it is enmity to God, and his wayes; and as for everlaſting ſalvation, we muſt truſt altogether in God, and not in our ſelves, ſo for worldly proviſion and preſervation in time of danger; for they that in all things truſt in God are ſafe, and bleſſed, but they that truſt in other things accurſed, Eſa. 57. Jer. 7. Pſal. 58. Pſal. 20. 8. I rather hold with the streame of Expositors, and to me it seemeth strange, that by saying, Leane not to thine owne understanding; he should meane, Although thou beest not able of thy selfe, because a great vice in many persons is here plainly taxed, namely that of selfe-conceitednesse and pride, with which who so laboureth, can never come to frame himselfe to holy obedience to Gods will, and the instructions of his Ministers. But contrariwise, he that is humble, and thinkes his owne understanding nothing, but that the Word of God is the fountaine of all wisdome, and therefore in all things lookes to this, and trusteth wholly hereunto, is in a good way of hearing the instructions of the Word, and profiting thereby. And according to this it is said, He that will be wise, must become a foole that he may be wise; That is, by having a mean conceite of his own understanding, that he may be wise with wisdome that cometh from God: As he must empty his purse full of Counters, that he may have it filled with Gold, and his Vessel full of Water, that would have it filled with Wine, and have his Table-book cleared of all unprofitable scriblings, that would have matter of learning written therein.

Note.

1. Cor. 3. 18

Basil. Basil compareth him that trusteth to his owne understanding, to a Ship, tossed by stormes upon the Sea, whereby the passenger is made stomack sick, and so to distaste going by Sea, and desirous to come to Land againe: In like manner the selfe-conceited by the strong blasts of temptations are made sicke of sinne, and having begun in the Spirit end in the flesh, saying for Heaven, they turne with Demas to the world, which is going from sea to land againe, the voyage being not finished, nor the treasure attained, for which he first set to sea; Macarius compareth him to one, that assayes to walke upon the sea, and takes not a ship, for what man soever doth so is soone drowned; so he must needs perish that goes upon his owne understanding, and is not carried by the Spirit as a gale of wind in the ship of the Church, the ground of true wisdome, as she is called, 1 Tim. 3. 15. The ground and pillar of truth.

Macar.

Basil, Hom. 6. cler. Againe, he takes another Similitude from a ship, to shew that mans understanding availeth not to the attaining of eternall life, but the Spirit of God must come and help hereunto; for, give me saith, he a ship well accommodated with sayles, ropes, cords, skilful Mariners, and all other things necessary for saile, yet if the wind bloweth not, the ship stands still, and moveth nor forward; no more doth he, that trusts to his owne understanding, or sufficiency of others to teach and informe him, towards the kingdome of Heaven, but only he that depends upon God, and his Spirit, for wisdome and grace, ver. 6. Acknowledge God in all thy wayes, and he shall direct thy paths.

Vers. 6.

Vers. 7. Be not wise in thine owne eyes, but feare the Lord, and depart from evil. This of acknowledging God in all our wayes, is by some understood, of thinking our selves alwayes to be in Gods presence; by others of ingenuously confessing, that if we be indued with any vertue, or be able to doe any thing laudably, it is from God, and not of our selves, as St. Paul saith, Not I, but the grace of God in me; both these Expositions are good, but the second is to be preferred, because it agreeth best with that which went before, ver. 5. and followeth after, ver. 7. And being thus understood, it further serves to confirme us in the way of humility before spoken of, as Ambrose teacheth by an elegant comparison taken from those that saile in a ship, when their sailes being hoysed up they are in danger, though a tempest arise, they hasten to pull them downe and so are preserved; so a man finding himselfe in danger, by conceiving well of his owne wit, must pull downe his stretched-out sails, and ascribe all his wel-doing to Gods grace, and nothing to himselfe. Or as Bees being abroad from the Hive, if the wind ariseth, take little stones in their mouthes, whereby some more weight is added to their light bodies, that they may not by the wind be carried hither and thither, but be the better able to get home to their Hive againe; So againſt pride, and ſelfe-conceitednesſe ariſing, we muſt ſeeke to keep our ſelves from being carried away hereby through a continuall acknowledging of our owne nothing, and Gods grace inabling us to all good. If any had rather follow the former Expoſition, then according to it we muſt meditate with David upon Gods being about all our paths and ways, to ſee and eſpy out our evil doings, that hereby as by a bit and bridle we may be curbed and kept in, from following our inordinate affections, and likewiſe whatſoever we doe in ſecret devotion or charity that hereby we may be prickt on as by a ſcourge on our ſides to all holy and vertuous actions. For that which followeth, ver. 7. Be not wiſe in thine owne eyes, the meaning according to Lyra, is, Aſcribe not ſo much wiſdome to thy ſelfe as to follow thy owne ſingular opinions, as if they were beſt, the common received tenets of the Church being neglected: for he that is thus wiſe in his owne eyes, is ſo full, that he hath no place in him for true wiſdome coming from Gods Word, and his holy and learned Doctors to enter. Some underſtand, Be not thine own Judge, but for wiſdome let others judge of thee, but the former beſt cohereth with the Premiſes, that we may not leane to our owne underſtanding, but acknowledge God the Father of lights, and the director of every good way; we muſt not thinke our ſelves wiſe, but fooliſh, as was ſaid before, and then only count our ſelves wiſe, when we feare God, and depart from evill, as here followeth. Againſt being wiſe in our owne eyes it is alſo ſpoken, Rom. 12. 16. and Jeremiah determineth them all to be fooliſh children, and without underſtanding, that are wiſe to doe evil, but not to doe good.

Pſal. 139. Note. Lyra. Cajeta. Iam. 1. 17. Ier. 4. 23.

Touching the Self-conceited, Seneca hath a notable ſaying, I thinke that many might come to wiſdome, if they thought not that they had already come unto it, for he that thinkes himſelfe wiſe, counts it a ſhame for him to learne any thing of others. Witty is the ſaying of Menedemus alledged by Plutarch, Some that goe to Athens think themſelves wiſe, and being there, lovers of wiſdome, but afterwards idiots or fooles, that is, through humility of minde: Therefore much more they that come into the Schoole of Chriſt, which is his Church, although they have thought themſelves wiſe, now they acknowledge their ignorance, that they may be capable of Divine learning. Woe ſaith Iſaiah, to them that are wiſe in their owne eyes; and immediatly after, Woe to them that are mighty to drinke wine As if there were ſome ſimilitude betwixt a Drunkard, and one that is wiſe in his owne conceit, therefore Ambroſe following this, ſaith; As a man that drinkes wine not mingled with water, is hereby made drunken, and ſo fooliſh; in like manner he that hath wit and underſtanding, but not mixed with humility, aſcribing nothing to God, but thinking himſelfe ſtrong and wiſe is a foole, all his knowledge is folly; But feare God, and depart from evill, this is the beſt remedy againſt ſelfe-conceitednesſe, for which Auguſtine compareth this feare to a Watch-man, that eſpyeth the enemy afarre off, and ſo is armed againſt him.

Macarius compareth him that feareth the Lord to thoſe that are in a ſhip, and enjoy a faire gale of wind, carrying them on the way that they would goe, but yet conſidering the variableneſſe of the weather at Sea, they are ſtill afraid, leaſt ſome contrary wind ariſing ſhould indanger them, and therefore they doe accordingly get all things ready if it ſhould ſo happen, to ſave themſelves and their ſhip; and thus if contrary winds ariſe, they yet goe on, and come ſafely to the end of their voyage; So he that feareth God, thinketh of the danger of temptations, and prepareth againſt them, and ſo is kept from ſinne, and conſequently from deſtruction. Macar.

It ſhall be health to thy navell, and marrow to thy bones; That is, as Hugo hath it, make thee of an healthful and ſtrong conſtitution in thy ſpiritual eſtate, like unto him that is in perfect health and ſtrength of body, not labouring with any diſeaſe; for thus perfect health is deſcribed by Job, His bowels are full of fat, and his bones of marrow. This is effected by the feare of God, ſaith Auguſtine, feare pricketh, but feare not, for then charity entereth and healeth the wound that feare made; as the Chirurgeon with a hot Iron ſeareth a putrified ſore in the body, whereby the wound ſeemeth greater for the preſent, but the corruption being let out, or waſted, the medicine applyed healeth, and now there is no griefe any more.

Theodor. Theodoret compareth the feare of God to a medicinall potion, which is bitter and unpleaſing indeed, but being kept in the ſtomach brings health to the whole body, if caſt up againe, it worketh no good unto it. So the feare of God, if it enters into the heart, and be not caſt up againe, makes a ſound and healthfull ſoule, eſpecially in reſpect of the wind of pride, wherewith he was before full blowne, and moſt dangerouſly ſwelled. The ſame Authour alſo compareth it unto Treacle, which is the remedy againſt poyſon to expell that, and to make the body ſound. And becauſe many men thinke themſelves ſound, for that they feele no pain, they have no trouble through any terrour falling upon them for ſinne, from which they think that they are juſtified, but this is through ſtupidity, not ſanity. Notable is the ſaying of Auguſt. againe in the ſame place, The health of the body is one thing, and the ſtupidity of the body another; the body in health, although free from diſeaſe, yet when it is touched, feeleth it, the ſtupidity feeles nothing, as immortality hath no feeling of paine, and therefore ſuch ſtupid perſons thinke themſelves immortall, but the health of him that grieves is nearer to immortality, then the ſtupidity of them that feels nothing, ſuch a man is not indued with immortality, but put off from ſenſe. He then that feareth God, is ſaid to have health, both for that it is hereby cauſed, and is here of a certaine ſigne, that ſoule is undoubtedly in health that thus feareth, but the ſtupid ſoule that is without feare, is ſicke, and never like to eſcape everlaſting death.

Note. But to come to the part ſpecially ſpoken of, It ſhall be health to thy navel; that is, thy belly or wombe, for there is the ſoules wombe as well as the bodies; for which cauſe ſpeaking of the faithfull ſoule, he ſaith, Thy navell is like to a round goblet, in which there wants no liquor; an healthfull wombe then is full and fruitfull, as it is ſaid of Abimelechs and his mens wives, when Abraham prayed that they were healed, which were ſhut up before; here is now conceiving and bringing forth of good fruits, whereas there was before barrenneſſe. According to this Theodoret citeth Euſeb. ſaying, The minde of the faithfull is like unto a womans wombe, for that receiving good ſeed from God, it doth undoubtedly bring forth all good fruits. And Cyrill, through thy feare (O Lord) we have been with childe, and brought forth the ſpirit wherewith we have been big upon the earth: Or by the Navell we may underſtand the inward parts, the conſcience, which through the feare of God is healed, and hath joy and peace, otherwiſe being in danger of wounding, as it is ſaid, A good conſcience is a continuall feaſt, but a wounded ſpirit who can beare. For the marrow, which it is ſaid to be to the bones, this is added to ſhew, how greatly a man is ſtrengthned by the feare of God to beare any burthen of ſufferings, as he that is at the beſt of his age: A man that feares not, but is bold to commit adultery, decayeth in his ſpina dorſi, the pith of his backe bone, and hath it ſo dryed, that he is made weake and cannot beare burthens as other men can, ſo both ſuch, and all others that feare not God, but dare goe on in ſinne, are made weak to the bearing of ſufferings, being ſoon tired herewith, and through impatience under them, have their backs broken, and dye miſerably: But he that feareth him, is ſtrong to beare all ſuch burthens to the end of the day, and then ſhall have his reward, the penny of everlaſting glory, as it is in the Parable of the labourers.

Theodor.

Matth. 20.

Arbor. Arboreus differing from the expoſition before going, ſaith, the Navell is a tender part, and the bones hard and ſtrong, aptly therefore ſetting forth the one our weakneſſes, which are hereby healed, the other our fears, which are made more compleat and perfect. Others he ſaith, by the Navell below, underſtand the ſenſitive parts of the ſoule, which are as the inferiour part thereof, and by the bones the intellectuall, the one inclining to ſinne ſhall be healed, and inclined to vertue; our affections of love and joy, and paſſions ſet againſt ſinne, viz. of anger, hatred, and indignation; the other inſtead of carnall wiſdome, ſhall be filled with ſpirituall and heavenly.

Lyra. Lyra by the Navell healing, underſtands the good diſpoſition of the ſoule in proſperity; ſperity, by the irrigation of the bones, conſtancy and patience in adverſity. for ſo he rendreth the laſt words, following the Vulg. Lat. But the Septuagint, It ſhall be health to thy body, and an healing to thy bones.

Honour the Lord with thy ſubſtance, and the firſt fruits of all thine increaſe. ſo ſhall thy barns be filled, &c. Having hitherto gone upon generals of fearing God, truſting in God, and humbling a mans ſelfe towards God, now he cometh in particular to a duty, whereby we may ſhew theſe graces, Honour God with thy ſubſtance; that is, pay freely and duly thy tythes and offerings, whether enjoyned, or of free-will, and thy firſt fruits; that is, not the meaneſt, but the chiefe, and the beſt, as Abel is ſaid to have brought of the firſtlings of his flocke, and the fat thereof: but Cain only to have brought of the fruit of the ground: For thus the people of God under the Law were commanded Exod. 13. chap. 34. 26. Levit. 27. and when they did not, they are challenged for robbing of God, and pronounced therefore accurſed, and as here, a promiſe of a plentiful increaſe is made to thoſe that thus honoured God, ſo there of a bleſſing poured out without meaſure. From the conſideration of this, that it is the firſt particular Precept given in this Book concerning the practicall part of wiſdome to honour God thus: Note that it is a prime duty, and chiefly to be done by every one that feareth God, and not to doe it, is not to eſchew evill, but contrariwiſe to commit a foule evill, over which Gods curſe hangeth, and ſo to goe contrary to the ſtreight charge before going, v. 7. Be not wiſe in thine owne eyes, but feare God, and eſchew evill, againſt all worldlings, that are ſo wiſe in their owne conceit, that they thinke it a good point of policie to pay as little Tythe as they can; yea it may be, none at all, nor any offerings of a free-will. And they hold that it is well ſpared which is kept backe this way, and a great loſſe to them and theirs, which is given. There are indeed many of our owne profeſſion, that give them occaſion thus to doe, by yeelding that not Tythes, but maintenance at large is due to Miniſters of the Goſpel, out of the benevolence of their hearers: but it is a marvell that they conſider not the ſaying, The labourer is worthy of his hire, which plainly implieth, not a benevolence, but pay due upon compoſition, the rule whereof is the word of God; and in this word it is ſaid, God hath ordained, that they which preach the Goſpell ſhould live of the Goſpell, as they that ſerved at the Altar lived of the Altar, and as he that feeds a flocke, lives of the flocke, which is commonly of ſet wages for his labour. Now we read in the word of an ordinance for the payment of Tythes, but not of any other, but one implying the ſame, Let him that is inſtructed make him that inſtructeth him partaker of all his goods: And how can this ſo well be done, as by giving as Abraham did, and Jacob vowed, the tythe of all.

Whereas it is objected, that the giving of tythes was an ordinance made for the Jewes onely by the hands of Moſes, and therefore concerneth not Chriſtians of other Nations under the Goſpell, the Miniſters whereof, as Paul, ſhould make the Goſpell free; and as our Lord ſaith, Having freely received, freely give.

Sol. The ordinance made by Moſes was not the firſt inſtitution of paying tythes, but an aſſignment of them to the Tribe of Levi, as the words Lev. 27. imply, All the tythe is the Lords, it is holy; and by the Lord for the time given to Levi, wherefore that Miniſtery being diſanulled, they ceaſe not to be holy ſtill to the Lord, and muſt alwayes goe that way, which he appointeth, viz. to the maintenance of his Miniſters, who ſerve him by preaching the Goſpell, as the Levites did at his Altar, to intimate paying of tythes to whom Melchiſedeck is brought in taking tythes of Abraham, the Father of all the faithfull, who was a type of Chriſt. For what can from hence be gathered, but that there is another beſides Levi, to whom tythe ought to be paid; that is, Chriſt, which is done, when to his Miniſters that repreſent him, as Ambaſſadours ſent out by him; For his bidding to give freely their inſtructions and miraculous operations, he gave not therein a rule to his Miniſters of all times, but onely in thoſe extraordinary, whilſt the Goſpell was planting, leſt through the Apoſtles taking, a ſcandall ſhould be given to the Nations amongſt whom they preached, hindering the progreſſe of the Goſpel, they thinking that they aimed more at their owne gaine, then the truths taking effect amongſt them; and this made Paul ſo carefull, forbearing to require maintenance, freely to diſpence the Goſpell amongſt them: yet leſt any man ſhould thinke that he did ſo, becauſe it was not lawfull for him to take, or require, he proveth at large, that he had power ſo to doe.

Now becauſe men in honouring God thus with their ſubſtance might feare, that in ſo doing they ſhould be much hindered, and have the leſſe for themſelves and children, it is added, So ſhall thy barns be filled with corne, &c. And on the contrary ſide Auguſt. ſpeaking of thoſe, that have their corne ſmitten with blaſting and mildew, who would not willingly pay their tythes, ſaith, Reckon now (O covetous wretch) nine parts are withdrawne from thee, becauſe thou wouldeſt not give the tenth; for this is Gods juſt cuſtome, if thou wilt not give the tenth to him, thou ſhalt be brought to the tenth, the nine being taken away. And Jerome upon the third of Malachy, becauſe ye would not pay your tenths, ye are brought to famine and penury through Gods curſe, and whilſt ye withdraw little things, ye loſe the fruitfulneſſe of your land, and all your abundance; And it is to be noted, that he ſaith with thy ſubſtance, therefore not anothers, that is, goods unjuſtly gotten; and not onely tythe, but almes alſo are here meant, by giving which to the poore he is honoured. Now beſides this argument to men, to pay tythes, there is a ſecond, in that he ſaith, Honour God: thou canſt not honour God, unleſſe thou doſt thus, whereas all things are made for him; and a third, becauſe I have ſaid before, Feare God and eſchew evill; he doth neither of theſe that holds back his dues.

Verſ. 11. My ſon, refuſe not the chaſtening of the Lord, &c. After the firſt, here followeth a ſecond particular Precept, patiently to endure affliction. It is, ſaith Auguſt. Gods phyſick given to cure the diſeaſe of the ſoule. Now there is no man but will ſubmit himſelfe to be ſometime in taking phyſicke; yea, and as the caſe requireth, many dayes, therefore ſubmit we likewiſe to take this phyſicke, and ſo long, as God appointeth. And he did not onely beare afflictions patiently, but alſo rejoyced in them: Yea, as Chryſoſt. ſaith, he ſo rejoyced and gloried therein, as that he gloried more in his ſufferings, then in the power given him to worke miracles; for he ſaith, God forbid, that I ſhould glory in any thing, but in my infirmities. This ſaying of the Wiſe-man is cited by the Apoſtle, Heb. 12. 9. and further amplified. And it is neceſſary to be thought upon, that we may not either impute our ſufferings to chance or fortune, or to the will of men, or malice of the devill, but looke up to God as moderating herein, for which it is called, The chaſtening of the Lord.

2 Cor. 12.

2. That we may not, through impatience murmure ſo much as in our hearts hereat, for ſhall not the Lord doe with his creatures as he pleaſeth?

3. That we may not being affected with rediouſneſſe, either ſeek to Wizards in ſickneſſe, or loſſes, or being brought to poverty, ſteale, lye, and deceive to get worldly things.

Verſ. 12. For the Lord chaſtiſeth whom he loveth, and delighteth in him as in his ſon. The father chaſtiſeth the ſon whom he loveth, and will make his heire, but if for his evill manners he diſ-inherits him, then he lets him goe without beſtowing any pains further in correcting him. The Goldſmith caſts his gold not yet purified into the fire to purifie it, becauſe he loveth it; and ſo the husbandman winnoweth his wheat, and pruneth his vine: In like manner the Lord dealeth in afflicting his children with them. It is true, wicked men, and reprobates alſo ſometimes ſuffer much in this world, as the Iſraelites ſinning after Joſhuah's departure, ſuffered grievous things by divers nations, and afterwards more and more, till they were rooted out of the land in the dayes of Hoſheah, Zedechiah, and of the Romans, who deſtroyed them, and their City; but their ſufferings are not corrections as of ſonnes, if they perſiſt ſtill in wickedneſſe, but tending to deſtruction, as of malefactors and enemies, their ſufferings here being fore-runners of their ſuffering the torments of hell for ever hereafter. But the children of God are judged in this world, that they may amend and not periſh with the world of wicked ones, even when they ſuffer to the loſſe of all as Job did, and David, who was expelled out of his Kingdome, but upon amendment reſtored againe; yea and being judged to death corporeall, as ſome in the Church of Corinth were, this is turned to ſuch as a ſuperſedeas to future everlaſting ju'gements.

1 Cor. 11. 34.

Happy

Happy is the man that findeth wiſdome, and that getteth underſtanding. Verſ. 13.
What wiſdome and underſtanding is, hath been ſhewed before upon chap. 1. viz. Divine knowledge and grace concurring together, which is faith in Chriſt in the heart, and the fruits hereof iſſuing forth in our ſpeeches and actions, when the one is gracious, and tending to the edification of the Hearers; the other juſt, temperate, ſober, merciful, loving, chaſte, holy, and humble, and good, and ſavouring of wiſdome every way, and not of folly or ignorance; wherefore it is ſaid both underſtanding and wiſdome: to underſtand and not to doe, being no wiſdome, and without underſtanding there being no poſſibility of doing; as for a tree to bring forth leaves and fruit without a living root, from which ſap may be conveyed to the body and boughs thereof, or as for a man to enter the gate of a narrow way being locked, without a key, for to a key is knowledge compared, where our Lord ſaith, Ye have taken away the key of knowledge. Luk. 11. 52. Chriſt alſo is ſet forth by Wiſdome, for which it followeth; She is a tree of Life to all that lay hold on her, and by wiſdome the Lord made the heavens, &c. Joh. 6. for who is the Tree of Life but Chriſt? the Manna of which whoſoever eateth ſhall never dye, but live eternally; and who was the Wiſdome whereby the heavens were made, but Chriſt? by whom all things were made, and without him nothing was made, that was made. Joh. 1. 2.

The Word of God alſo, and the preaching thereof is wiſdome, according to that, We preach Chriſt the power of God, and the wiſdome of God; 1 Cor. 1. 24. which yet before was ſaid to be a fooliſhneſſe to the Greekes, and a ſtumbling block to the Jewes; Verſe 23. That is, which preaching of Chriſt touching wiſdome thus underſtood, it is ſaid; Happy is the man that ſeekes wiſdome; and verſe fourteene he giveth a reaſon.

Her merchandiſe is better then the merchandiſe of ſilver, and the gaine thereof better then fine gold. Verſ. 14. Worldly men moſt earneſtly ſeeke and labour after worldly wealth, thinking this to be their wiſdome and happineſſe, of poore to become rich, and to have ſtore of gold and ſilver; and for theſe that ſeeke after wiſdome, how much ſoever hereof they attaine unto, they thinke them but poore and deſpicable, if they get not wealth alſo. But true wiſdome ſaith, That to ſeeke and get her, and to be travelling and trafficking for her, is the beſt of all traffickings; yea if one could by adventuring to goe beyond ſea, get Rubies, that be more precious then Gold, or any other moſt precious Stones, yet who ſo gets wiſdome gets a greater prize then he. And thus Bias, one of the ſeven Wiſe men ſhewed that he thought, when as the City, whereof he was, being yeelded to the enemy upon condition, that every one might carry out as much goods as he could, he went carrying nothing; and being demanded why he did not carry ſome of his beſt things as well as others, he anſwered, Omnia mea mecum porto, I carry all my goods with me: As making account, that his wiſdome and knowledge were the only goods that he eſteemed of.

To this purpoſe alſo tendeth the Parable of our Lord touching a Merchant, that ſought for Pearles, and at laſt lighting upon one moſt precious, he ſold all that he had and bought that Pearle, Matth. 13. for what was that Pearle but the wiſdome here ſpoken of? the knowledge and faith of Chriſt, in compariſon of which St. Paul counted all things as droſſe and dung; Phil. 3. 8. and faith is ſaid to be more precious then gold, 1 Pet. 1. 7. and poore Chriſtians are ſet forth as more excellent, then rich Heathens in all their goodly apparrel, and gold rings on their fingers, Jam. 2. 5. Note. O conſider this ye men of this world, that meaſure a mans worth by his wealth, and not by his wiſdome gotten by the Word of God, of which David ſaith, that he was hereby made wiſer then his teachers, then his enemies, Pſal. 119. 98, 99, 100. that ſleighted him for all this, and deſpiſed him; and then the ancient. Ye magnifie a rich man as a Demi-god, but debaſe a learned man that is poore, as unworthy to wipe his ſhooes, whereas he hath a Diamond upon his head of more worth, then all the treaſures of Craſus; 1 Tim. 5. 17. for which double honour is determined to him that labours in the Word, as implying greater excellency and worth in him, then in other, even of higheſt ranke and quality in this world, touching whom it is only ſaid, Honour to whom honour, Rom. 13. but he is worthy of double honour.

But it is to be noted, that this wiſdome ſo unparalleld by worldly riches, is to be ſought ſought by him that would get it, for it is ſaid, Bleſſed is the man that ſeeketh wiſdome, &c. and that theſe moſt precious Pearles are to be ſought, and how ſought James teacheth, ſaying, If any man wants wiſdome, let him aske it of God, who giveth liberally to all, and upbraideth no man, and it ſhall be given him; So did Salomon, that ſpeakes here, and by this meanes became ſo exceeding wiſe.

1 King. 3.

Now for the coherence of theſe words with the former it is thus; an exhortation being made, ver. 11, 12. to ſubmit to Gods chaſtiſements, as ſonnes to their loving Fathers; here it is both intimated, that he who doth ſo hath attained true wiſdome, for Παιδήματα to ſuch are μαθήματα, paſſions are inſtruction; and further taught what a happineſſe it is by any meanes to be made wiſe. To attaine which, as prayer is one meanes, ſo afflictions are another, they that are moſt indocible being hereby oft-times taught wiſdome to know the odiouſneſſe of their ſins, to loath and leave them, which they loved and doted upon before, and to goe to God by prayer to teach them what he would have them doe, and to inable them to live and doe accordingly, and to enlighten their underſtandings to ſee into, and underſtand the myſteries of the kingdome of Heaven. All which was exemplified unto us in Saul, turned from a Perſecutor to a Preacher, for he was ſmitten downe and ſtricken with blindneſſe, and hereby made to humble himſelfe, and ſubmiſſively to aske what the Lord would have him to doe, and then to fall to and continue in prayer, till Ananias came to him, and he had a full revelation from God of his Will, ſo farre forth as concerned him either for his owne ſalvation, or the inſtruction of others according to the Miniſteriall office, unto which he was thus called, as he toucheth, Gal. 1. 12. And being thus enlightned, how wiſe he was in all his proceedings afterwards, is in his Hiſtory abundantly declared.

Job 28. 13.

Job enquiring where Wiſdome might be found, ſaith, It is not to be found in the Land of the living; rendred by the vulg. In terra ſuaviter viventium, in the Land of them that live merrily, and without afflictions, but Hebr. it is, In the Land of the living; yet haply by living here, living at eaſe, and in proſperity, may be underſtood, for as much as men in afflictions are as it were alwayes dying, as the Apoſtle ſaith of himſelfe; By our rejoycing which I have in our Lord Jeſus I dye daily; and ſpeaking of all the faithfull then, We are counted all the day long as ſheep to the ſlaughter; and then the obſervation will be good from that place, and conſenting with our note here, that living in adverſity, and ſuffering afflictions is a great meanes of coming to wiſdome.

1 Cor. 15. 31.

Rom. 8.

Patian.

According to this Patianus hath a notable ſaying, Tribulation is a repertory of Divine things, and an Inventory of the knowledge of God; for the Merchandiſe hereof is ſaid to be better, then that of ſilver. Hereby is intimated, That they who are wiſe, having attained ſome wiſdome, deſire to encreaſe it, as he that hath gotten ſome worldly wealth to encreaſe that; as alſo that this Merchandiſe is more excellent, then to trafficke for things of greateſt price. From hence the Jeſuites of Collens gather, That Heaven is Venale, that is, gotten by a price; as if men were worthy for the good that they doe, as for a price paid, therefore to poſſeſſe everlaſting life. For the proving of which ſome of them alledge Clem. Alex. ſaying, Let it not irke you to labour, if ye would buy the moſt precious gem of Salvation for the treaſure of Charity and Faith, which is the juſt price thereof. And Baſil ſaying, We that goe in the way of the Goſpel are Merchants, by the works of the Commandements getting the poſſeſſion of heavenly things. And Auguſtin ſaith, I give thee counſel, how to gaine, learne to play the Merchant; thou praiſeſt the Merchant that ſelleth lead, and buyeth gold, but praiſeſt not him that gives money and buyes ſalvation. But this is not to be underſtood as properly, but figuratively ſpoken, although they ſaid thus, yet never any of them taught that ſalvation was attained by the merit of mens good workes, but through Gods gracious acceptation of them, that did good in Chriſt; for both the grace thus to doe comes from God, and the Crowne or reward beſtowed therefore, according to that famous ſaying of Auguſtine, God crowneth his owne gifts in us. For a juſt price, if we ſpeake properly hereof, the good that man doth, how great ſoever it is, cannot be, becauſe becauſe it is both imperfect, and holdeth no proportion with the good of ſalvation, this being little, that infinite.

Verſ. 16.

Length of dayes is in her right hand, in her left hand riches and honour: Having ſpoken in generall of the gaine in wiſdome, which is greater then that of fine gold, now he cometh more particularly to ſhew what this gaine is, 1. Long life, that is, A proſperous and comfortable life in this world, and in the world to come life everlaſting; whereas fooles and wicked men by their evil courſes come into many miſeries, and to untimely deaths here, and are for ever ſhut out from Life hereafter, and caſt into utter darkneſſe, where there is weeping, and wayling, and gnaſhing of teeth; ſome being cut off for robberies and murthers, ſome waſting their ſtrength and eſtates by incontinency, ſome drawing all through their throates by gluttony and drunkenneſſe, whereby they riding a while in a triumphant charriot of ſenſuall pleaſure, arrive ſhortly in the dungeon of Surfeits, and are there manacled with Palſies, fettered with Gouts, ſet upon the wrack by Pluriſies, and at laſt ſtrangled with Appoplexies; And the long life here promiſed is ſaid to be on Wiſdomes right hand, becauſe it is the chiefeſt of all bleſſings, and moſt deſired, there being nothing that man maketh ſo much account of as life, as appeareth by the ſaying of Satan touching Job; Skin for skin, and all that a man hath he will give for his life; And on her ~~right~~ hand riches and honour; That is, the beſt riches of grace, and honour of eſtimation before God and all good men; for gracious men are honourable, as it is ſaid of the Bereans, that they were more noble; yea, and as Lavater ſaith hereupon, Many wiſe and godly men have had great riches and glory in this world, as Salomon, that wrot this, and Joſeph, and Job after his great loſſes, and Abraham, David, &c. and if ſuch be poore, yet the little that they have, are better then great riches of the wicked, for the right which they have in Chriſt as the heires of God, to all things as hath been before ſaid. There cannot be two ſtronger motives to get wiſdome then theſe, to all men, for who doth not deſire long life, and riches, and honour? let us all then take this courſe to attaine them, and then we ſhall have honour indeed, and riches indeed, making us truly happy.

Note.

Some by long life and riches underſtand only temporall things, ſome only ſpirituall, and ſome by the former ſpirituall and eternal, by the latter temporal, but in both there is a reſpect had to both, as hath been ſaid; and Godlineſſe hath the promiſe of this life, and of that which is to come; under temporal good things, ſpiritual and eternal being figured out in the Old Teſtament, but plainly promiſed in the New.

Her wayes are wayes of pleaſantneſſe, all her paths are paths of peace. Here is another motive to get wiſdome; wouldſt thou goe in pleaſant wayes, and in peace and quietneſſe? the wayes of wiſdome are ſuch, through the delight that the godlily wiſe take in Gods Commandements, it is nothing tedious to walk therein, but delightful unto them, and when they doe ſo, there is inwardly in the Conſcience ſweet peace and joy, that paſſeth underſtanding; The way indeed is ſtraight at the entrance by reaſon of the fleſh, to which it ſeemeth a moſt hard thing to walke ſo regularly in all things, but once being entred it is a pleaſant way: On the contrary ſide, the way of vice is pleaſant at the firſt, but moſt bitter and ſoure afterwards. And for peace, it is both with God, Rom. 5. 1. for Being juſtified by faith we have peace with God, and with man, with whom the wiſe as much as in them lyeth, have peace, yea even with all men, and everlaſting peace and reſt in heaven, according to that of David, Marke the juſt and upright man, the end of that man is peace; which treble peace is otherwiſe commonly called internall, externall, and eternall in heaven. This way ſaith Chryſoſtome is pleaſant, as a way full of pleaſant objects, through the delight in looking on them makes a man paſſe on with pleaſure, ſo that he feeles not his journey; in like manner he that walketh in the way of wiſdome, hath ſuch pleaſant objects of glory in heaven preſented to the eye of his minde, that all the way which he goeth is pleaſant, and full of unſpeakeable delight

To this Hugo anſwereth well, That theſe wars tend to peace, and therefore are called paths of peace, becauſe peace and bleſſednesſe ſhall be for ever in the end to thoſe that walk in thoſe paths, and in the midſt of theſe wars there is peace with God, to be at peace with whom, is ſo great a comfort, that theſe conflicts are counted nothing, as he that hath peace with Giants and men, but is in warre with pigmies.

Verſ. 18. She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her. To proceed, in enumerating Muffet. no more particulars; here ſaith Muffet, is one comprehending all the good that can further be ſaid, get the fruit of wiſdome and live for ever; for this is to lay hold upon her, as if Adam could after his expulſion out of Paradiſe, have returned and taken and eaten of the Tree of life, he ſhould have lived for ever; unto which Gen 3. Salomon here alludeth, and John ſaying, He that overcometh ſhall eat of the
Rev. 2. 7. tree of life: this being nothing elſe but a phraſe ſetting forth his living for ever, with the hope and comfort whereof, he that is wiſe is now fed, as with the moſt delicate and deſirable fruit of a living and flouriſhing tree, that alwayes liveth and fructifieth, and never dyeth or intermitteth fructifying, as that tree Rev. 22. which bare fruit every month. From this tree of life our firſt parents were excluded by ſinning, and could not come to it any more, whereby they became ſubject to ſickneſſe, and paine, and death; but by Wiſdome acceſſe to this tree of life is againe re-
Rom. 5. covered, yet not to live alwayes in this world without dying, for ſinne and death overſpread all, but to live after a corporeall death an heavenly life for ever. And in ſaying Wiſdome is this tree of life, typified by that in the Garden of Eden, he
Joh. 11. meaneth Chriſt, who ſaith of himſelfe, I am the reſurrection and the life, and upon him he layeth hold that beleeveth by a true and lively faith, which being done, he is made unto us, Wiſdome, righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, and redemption.
1 Cor. 1. 30. Thus Auguſt. Jerom, Clemens Alex. and many others of the Fathers: but Lyra, Auguſt. Hieron. Lyra. by wiſdome underſtands grace in the heart, and life, whereby a man dying a bodily death, liveth in heaven for evermore, as if Adam had eaten of the tree of life, he ſhould have lived a very long time here, and then have been tranſlated by vertue hereof to everlaſting life. But thus he both teacheth a manifeſt errour, that eating of the tree of life, ſhould have made Adam and Evah onely long lived, for they lived long without eating thereof; and it is expreſly ſaid, Leaſt he take, and eat of the tree of life, and live for ever. And by this doctrine, everlaſting life is aſcribed to vertuous and godly living, whereas this is attained by Chriſt only, and Chriſt coming to dwell in the heart by faith, this practical wiſdome cometh alſo, and the grace of ſanctification, and finally glorification for ever and ever.

Verſ. 19. The Lord by wiſdome hath founded the earth. Here is ſet forth the excellency
Joh. 1. 2. of Wiſdome the more; he proceedeth to ſpeake further of that wiſdome, which is Muffet. the Tree of life, Chriſt who is the wiſdome of the Father, by whom the earth and heaven, and all things were ſo admirably wiſely made; If any man, ſaith Muffet, ſhall marvel, why in ſpeaking of wiſdome poſſeſſed by man, he paſſeth on to ſpeak of the wiſdome of God, hereby to commend it, he muſt know and conſider, that the wiſdome in man is the little ſtream, and that in God, or which is God, the fountaine; and when one hath ſhewed the ſtream, and ſet forth the praiſes thereof, in telling of the vertues thereof, it makes more yet for the commendation of ſuch a ſtream, to ſhew the fountaine or ſpring from whence it cometh, and the far more admirable effects of it; ſo after ſpeaking of the good that comes to man by his acquiſite wiſdome, to ſpeake of the chiefe things wrought by the Lord through his Ioh. 1. 16. wiſdome, from which as from a full fountaine we all receive. And of theſe, here are foure ſpoken of:

1. The laying of the foundation of the earth, which being ſo maſſy, and vaſt, and heavy, hangeth in the midſt of the world without any thing to ſupport it, but onely a divine vertue in the center thereof.

2. The eſtabliſhing of the heavens ſo many ſpheres ſo great ſo great a diſtance from the earth, and round about, one above another, and a ſecond above that, and a third, fourth, fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh, having each one his proper light; The 1. the Moon;

Moon; 2. The Star called Mercury; 3. That called Venus. 4. The Sunne; 5. Mars; 6. Jupiter; 7 Saturne. Above al which is alſo an eight ſphere containing innumerable fixed Starres, all ſending downe their influences upon the earth to diſtinguiſh times and ſeaſons, and to make it fruitfull or barren: Of this David ſpeaks in particular, ſaying, The heavens declare the glory of the Lord; and of both theſe great works, Paul ſaith, The inviſible power and wiſdome of God are ſeen by the works of Creation. And herein is wiſdome to be admired indeed, a frame made conſiſting of ſo many wheels of ſo great a circumference ſet to worke, and continuing in exact and orderly motion without variation of ſo many hundreds and thouſands of years, and theſe compoſed of nothing but waters, as the word שמים ſignifying waters there, ſheweth. For if we admire a watch made by the art of man for the rare workmanſhip and frame of the wheels, and their motions, how much more the wiſdome appearing in framing theſe ſo glorious ones, and their revolutions and effects? Pſal. 19. Rom. 1. 19.

3. His breaking open of the depths; That is, the bringing of waters out of rocky hil's, ſo wonderfully opening a paſſage for them, being of themſelves weake and unable to paſſe through. Verſ. 20.

4. Making the clouds to diſtill their dew, vapours being firſt exhaled from the earth into the aire, and then wiſely made to fall downe againe in raine and ſhowers to water the earth, and make it fruitfull. Some, ſaith Lavater, by his breaking open of the depths, underſtand that which was done at the Creation, in ſeparating the deep waters which covered the whole earth, breaking ſome of them away, as it were, and placing them above, and making the ſea of others. Some, that was done in Noah's time, when the foundations of the deep were broken up, and the world was drowned: but I prefer the former, becauſe it is more probable, that a continuall courſe of Gods providence is here pointed at, wiſely ordering all things from age to age. If it be demanded here, why Salomon having ſpoken of wiſdome in man proceedeth to ſpeake of it in God, Some anſwer, becauſe Verſ. 8. he had ſaid, That it ſhould be health to the navell, and marrow to the bones: And Verſ. 10. Thy barns ſhall be filled with corne, &c. And Verſ. 14. Long life is on her right hand, &c. Now therefore to make a demonſtration of theſe effects of wiſdome, he recounts farre greater effects of the wiſdome of God: It is then as if he had ſaid, Let it not ſeem ſtrange, that I have ſaid of the vertue in wiſdome to prolong thy life, and make thy eſtate proſperous, and thy body conſtantly healthfull; for by wiſdome the Lord hath founded the earth, and ſtabliſhed the heavens, therefore much more can he by it, doe all theſe things. Lavater. Cajetan.

2. Some, that men might be the more excited to the love and deſire of wiſdome; as if he had ſaid, I have ſpoken much in the praiſe of wiſdome, now heare more, and greater things done thereby, to be inflamed yet more with the love here of. Rodolph.

3. Some, that this is done further to confirme what he had before ſaid, v. 6. He will direct thee in all thy paths, keeping thee firme in the good way; for that he by wiſdome hath ſet firme both the earth and the heaven.

4. Some, that hereby he might prove wiſdome to be practicall, and not theoricall onely, becauſe he had before urged practice in honouring God with his ſubſtance, and bearing patiently afflictions. Without excluding any of theſe, I thinke, when I looke at the words immediately going before, which ſet forth, long life, riches and honour, and other great benefits coming by wiſdome, that theſe words are ſub-joyned to prove it a glory to a man to be wiſe, for that by wiſdome God hath ſo great glory in creating, and providently by his wiſdome ordering the great things of the world both in heaven and earth.

My ſon, let them not depart from thine eyes, keep ſound wiſdome, Vulg. ne effluant, and the word יגר ſignifieth either, being taken thus, it implieth ſlipperineſſe of memory in reſpect of wiſdome, againſt which we muſt have a continuall care. From hence to the end of verſ. 26. Salomon againe exhorteth to the love and deſire of wiſdome, propounding more benefits that will come hereby. And he ſaith, Let not wiſdome and underſtanding depart from thine eyes, whereby he meaneth Verſ. 21.

meaneth, that as that which we delight in, is by us made the object of our ſight continually, our eyes are never off it; ſo the eyes of our mindes ſhould alwaies be ſet upon wiſdome, we ſhould continually be meditating and ſtudying how to attaine it, and having gotten it, keep and hold it both in theory and practiſe, not doing fooliſhly in any thing to the end of our dayes. For the benefit that thus we ſhall be made partakers of,

Verſ. 22. Firſt, They ſhall be life to thy ſoule, and grace to thy neck; ver. 3. he had ſaid Binde them about thy necke, intimating the grace that is put upon a man by wiſdome, as by a gold chaine about his necke, as is expreſſed, chap. 1. 9. now therefore we are againe moved from hence to ſet our hearts upon this, and becauſe it is

Jam. 2. life to the ſoule; that is, according to ſome, the life of faith, whereby we live, as by a ſoule, ſtands herein, as James teacheth.

Verſ. 23. The ſecond benefit, ver. 23. Thou ſhalt walke in the way ſafely, and thy foote not ſtumble. We deſire to be ſafe in our travell, and in our lying downe to

Verſ. 24. reſt, in both theſe caſes it is ſhewed here; and ver. 24. that we ſhall be ſafe and Auguſt. out of danger: for as Auguſtine hath it, Stumbling blocks are not laid in the way but out of the way, therefore keep in the way of wiſdome, and keepe out of the danger hereof.

Chryſoſtome and Ambroſe compare the wayes of ſinne to mire and clay, in ſuch wayes ſtones are laid, and if we goe therein we ſhall ſtumble and fall, but keepe out of them and ſtumble not, but walke ſafely. When thou lyeſt downe thou ſhalt not be afraid, but thy ſleepe ſhall be ſweete. So David, both Pſal. 3. and 4. profeſſeth, That he would not be afraid in the midſt of many enemies, and that he would lay him downe and ſleep, and that the Lord would keepe him in ſafety. The wicked lye downe many times and cannot ſleep for the diſtraction of worldly cares, or feare of enemies, and if they ſleepe, fearefull dreames trouble them, by reaſon of the wickedneſſe which they have committed, and the evill con-

Job. 7. 14. ſcience in them. Job alſo ſaith, That he had fearefull dreames, and terrours in

Muffet. the night; but when it is thus with the righteous, it is either as other afflictions, for their chaſtiſement or triall of their faith, and patience, or hereby they are ſtirred up to prayer, or warned of things to come. That which is here ſaid, is ſpoken of the reſt and ſleep which men of wiſdome have in the midſt of greateſt worldly dangers, as if they were nothing affected there-with, through the confidence

Hugo. Lyra. which they have in God; ſo Peter being impriſoned ſlept ſecurely with the quaternion of Souldiers about him. Some underſtand ſleep here of the ſleep of death, becauſe death to the faithfull is as a ſweet and quiet ſleepe, but I reſt in the former.

Verſ. 25. The third benefit not to be afraid of ſuddaine feare, or the deſolation of the wicked when it cometh, N. Tran. renders it Be not afraid, but the vulg. Ne paveas, the Sept. and Cald. Thou ſhalt not be afraid; and for the next words, The forces or powers of the wicked coming upon thee; the word in Hebr. ſignifieth deſolation, but it is in effect all one; The man that hath wiſdome feareth not, for the innocency of his life, what the wicked can ſay or doe againſt him; if they make a depopulation in the Country, and bring all to ruine and deſolation, he knoweth that they can goe no further then God permits, and therefore he feares nothing; yea and for his part he knoweth, if deſtruction cometh upon his Country, he cannot be hurt thereby, for the Promiſe made, Pſal. 91. and the dealing of the Lord towards thoſe that mourne for abominations, ſo, that the deſolation ſhall be of

Ezek. 9. the wicked only, not of the wife; yet it cannot hence be gathered, that in a common deſtruction no wiſe man can be cut off, but that of ſuch, a remnant ſhall at all times be preſerved, and ſometimes all, as when ſo great multitudes of Jewes periſhed at the deſtruction of their City, the Chriſtians being called before to Pella were ſaved, and thoſe of them that are ſlaine bodily are not hurt thereby, for their

Revel. 7. Dan. 11. 33. robes are but thus waſhed, and made white with blood, they are waſhed, ſanctified, and purified, even when they are ſlaine.

Verſ. 26. Neither can it be otherwiſe then well with them, For the Lord (as is further ſaid) ver. 26. ſhall be thy confidence, and keep thy foote from being taken. The

wiſe

wiſe man that truſts in God, falleth not when he is ſlaine, as a beaſt, whoſe foote is taken in a ſnare to deſtruction, but his body falling, his ſoule is immediately carried by the Angels into Abrahams boſome, in being over-come he gets the victory and crowne through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh. 1 Cor. 15. 57

With-hold not good from them to whom it is due, when it is in thy power to doe it; the vulg. Forbid, or hold not him from doing good that is able, and if thou beeſt able, doe good. Expounded of doing good by way of charity, from which to hold any of his owne goods it is a great wickednesſe. And the Sept. more expreſly to the ſame purpoſe; Hold not good, or prohibit not beneficence from the poore; the word בעליו, the Owners thereof being rendred the poore, according to Chryſoſtome, becauſe to them the goods of the rich belong, as he ſaith; Why doſt thou labour in vaine (O rich man) in treaſuring up the goods of the poore? why haſt thou indignation at them asking, as if they asked thine, they aske their fathers goods, not thine, but committed to thee for their ſake, and not borne with thee. Give that which thou haſt received, and count this a gaine, that thou haſt received them; it is enough for thee that thou art deſtined to give, not to receive. But this reading is very improper, and not ſeconded by any other place of Scripture; and the Hebr. word here uſed ſetteth forth a Poſſeſſour, or Owner, not one that ſeeks any thing precarie. Moreover, giving Almes is called giving freely, not to him to whom it is due, which nevertheleſſe gives not the poor ſuch an hint of the rich mans goods, being theirs, as to open a gap to them, that when they cannot by begging get them, to take them either by force or ſtealth. The Tigur. With-hold not good from him, qui potis eſt; That is, who deſerveth well; ſo likewiſe Vatablus. Lavater underſtands it of beneficence to the poore, applying alſo the next words, ver. 28. to the ſame, give without delay, ſhew not thy ſelfe difficult, or hard to be intreated, being of ability. But he alſo expounds it of imparting the ſpirituall good of inſtruction; and ſo doth Arborens following the vulg. Doe both good thy ſelfe, and hinder not another in reſpect of ſpirituall things, as the Lawyers are by Chriſt charged not to enter into the Kingdome of heaven themſelves, and to hinder thoſe that would. He then breaks this Precept, either that prohibits others from preaching at any time, or doth it not himſelfe, becauſe thus the good of the ſoule, which might hereby be promoted, is hindered. or that holding his owne hand from charity to the poore, ſeekes to hold another mans alſo: or laſtly, from whom it cometh hardly, procraſtination being herein uſed, whereas in either of the goods doing before ſpoken of wee ſhould be prompt and ready.

Mat. 23.

Junius alſo is for beneficence to the poore, whoſe neceſſity makes them owners thereof; but Caietan and Muffet underſtand it of other mens goods in thy hands, either found by thee, or committed to thy truſt, or borrowed, or which thou oweſt. And this is beſt and moſt agreeable to the originall, wherein the word rendred him, is affixed to owners מבעליו and therefore cannot be read him, but it; That is, the good before ſpoken of, and ſo that word muſt be rendred altogether from the owners or maſters of it (as in N, Tr.) to whom of right it belongeth wherefore, as Muffet ſheweth, it is the ſame in effect with that of the Apoſtle, Owe nothing to any man but to love one another.

Junius.

Rom. 13.

And this precept he breaketh, who, being able, delayeth to pay that which is due from him to any other, although he denyeth not paiment; but it being demanded, he putteth him off from time to time: for Juſtice is not only to give to every one his due, but in due ſeaſon, becauſe it may otherwiſe prove detrimentall to him, although the full be afterwards paid, he being either forced for want of it to borrow, and pay uſe, or ſued at Law for what he oweth, and ſo damnified. For the order of proceeding here, Salomon having hitherto injoyned duties towards God, now proceedeth to duties towards man, of which this is the firſt; To be juſt in paying or reſtoring another mans goods unto him without delay; the ſecond, verſ. 29.

Note.

Verſ. 29. Deviſe not evill againſt thy neighbour, ſeeing he dwelleth ſecurely by thee. Muffet, Practice not evill againſt him that dwelleth peaceably by thee. Vulg. Ne moliaris in amicum malum, cum ille in te habeat fiduciam: The new Tranſlation is beſt, as being according to the Hebrew חרש, ſignifying ſilently or ſecretly to thinke, that is, to deviſe, and לבטח, is in ſafety or ſecurity; hereby the wickedneſſe of thoſe men is reproved, that inſtead of dealing juſtly, and as love requireth, are falſe-hearted towards their innocent neighbours or friends, who ſuſpect not their machinating of any miſchiefe againſt them, and accordingly deviſe how to circumvent, or to doe them miſchiefe.

It is more hainous by far to deviſe or practice evill againſt a friend or neighbour, with whom a man liveth lovingly in outward ſhew, then againſt an enemy or ſtranger, becauſe ſuch will beware of him, but he hath a confidence, becauſe he is his neare neighbour, with whom he converſeth friendly from time to time, and therefore not ſuſpected; Therefore David aggravateth Achitophels wicked practiſes againſt him from this, That he was his familiar friend, and imprecates himſelfe, if he had done the like to any man that lived in peace with him. And Maximus telleth of Antigonus, that in his ſacrifices to the gods, he uſed to pray for preſervation from his friends, and being asked why he did ſo; he anſwered, Becauſe that of his enemies he could beware, but not of them. Likewiſe Demonicus, we uſe to be affected leſſe with ſufferings at the hands of enemies, then of friends, for wee looke for them at their hands, but for the contrary at the hands of friends; and therefore if they be underhand injurious to us, this is moſt heynous and intolerable; therefore what greater ſore, ſaith Sophocles, can there be then an evill friend? and Xenophon, no man can hurt his enemy more, then by feigning to be his friend. As Clem. Alex. bringeth them in ſpeaking. The Sept. Deviſe not evill againſt thine enemy, leſt any man ſhould think that he doth well, if he plotteth nothing againſt him, that is his friend, although he doth ſo to his enemy, for Thou muſt doe good againſt evill, and if thy enemy hunger, give him meat.

Verſ. 30. Contend not with a man without cauſe, if he hath done thee no harme. Some take this as appendent to the former, having ſaid, He dwelleth ſecurely by thee; that is, doing no harm to thee whereby to deſerve thy plotting againſt him, therefore by this be moved to live peaceably with him, which thou canſt not, if he perceiveth thee underhand to be againſt him, meditating and conſulting how to do him miſchief; But it ſeemeth rather to be a new precept, preſcribing how we ſhould deal with any other, a ſtranger, and no neighbour, and neighbours alſo; be not contentious with any man. The Sept. for the next words hath, That he worke no evill againſt thee, for he that without cauſe contendeth with another, he makes him his enemy, and to plot evill againſt him.

Verſ. 31, 32. Envy thou not the oppreſſor, and learne none of his wayes, for the froward is abomination to the Lord, but his ſecret is with the righteous, Heb. it is the man of violence or oppreſſion; that is, look not upon ſuch a man, although he proſpereth and groweth great in this world, as if he were in an happy eſtate to be envied by the honeſt poor, who are far inferiour to him, neither applaud in thy mind the courſes that he hath taken to get wealth and preferment, to incline to take the ſame way alſo, for he is an abomination to the Lord, and ſo ſhalt thou be, if thou doſt likewiſe: and in the abominable, what is there to be ſeen that may occaſion envy, and not rather deteſtation in every childe of God? whereas he ſaith not, the oppreſſor, as before, but the froward or perverſe, the word נלוז here uſed is derived from לוז to decline, or go back, and ſo ſetteth forth that ſame with חמס violent, or oppreſſive, for he that oppreſſeth, declineth out of the way of juſtice. For the ſecret of the Lord is ſaid to be with the upright, the meaning is, he doth in ſecret communicate his Spirit unto them, and unſpeakable joy through that familiarity, into which he taketh them, ſo that when we pray, give almes, or faſt in ſecret, his countenance and acceptation is there with them, which ſhall another day be openly made known and rewarded.

water ſouldiers are vexed at this, the old comforted and erected, becauſe the proſperity of the wicked here, ſheweth the judgement to come hereafter, when they ſhall be puniſhed and abaſed, and the righteous rewarded and honoured, as Chryſoſt. ſpeaketh; yet ſome wicked men are judged here, and ſome righteous bleſſed exceedingly, that the threatnings and promiſes of God might not ſeem to be vaine; and on the other ſide, ſome wicked eſcape and proſper, and ſome righteous are in miſery, that the promiſe of Chriſts ſecond coming might not ſeem to be vain, there being ſo many of either ſort, that ſhould otherwiſe lye mingled together in their duſt, the one, that have ſo well deſerved deſtruction, never feeling any, and the other being fed with moſt faire promiſes, after all his labours, and death, never enjoying any ſuch thing. The Vulgar for oppreſſor or froward, hath illuſor, a ſcoffer, or mocker; the wicked proſpering being ſo called, becauſe for his proſperity he thinkes himſelfe happy, and derideth all thoſe that threaten him with Gods judgements. Chryſ. Hom. 8. in 2 Tim.

The curſe of the Lord is in the houſe of the wicked. Having begun to ſhew the evill condition of wicked oppreſſors, now he goeth on ſhewing, that as they are abominable to God, ſo they are curſed by him in themſelves, and children, and eſtates, being made by his judgements moſt miſerable; but contrariwiſe, it is with the righteous; and becauſe theſe wicked ones were alſo before called perverſe or ſcorners, or mockers, the Lord mocketh them, being thus abaſed, inſtead of pitying them, but to the lowly he giveth grace; where the paranomaſy made for elegancie ſake is to be noted, having called the oppreſſor לוֹץ now he calleth him לוּץ with little difference, but none in the Vulg. the word illuſor being uſed in both places; the Vulg. for the curſe of the Lord, v. 33. hath want, or poverty from the Lord, by Beda and Hugo expounded of the want of ſpirituall food, becauſe for ſinne a famine of the word is ſent, whereas contrariwiſe this great bleſſing of the word is in the habitation of the righteous, and ſo they make this cohere with the former words, which were not to envy oppreſſors; for although they flouriſh in temporall things, yet they are poore in ſpirituall. But Lyra and others better expound it of temporall judgements, bringing wicked oppreſſors downe to great poverty, although for a time they proſper, whereas the righteous, if for a time they be in poverty, and miſery, yet they ſhall enjoy a bleſſing aſſuredly. But the word מאר here uſed ſignifieth affecting with griefe or evill, maleficiens, and becauſe evill cometh from the curſe of God, it is rendred beſt curſing, and this curſing alwayes affixed to riches unjuſtly gotten, makes, that their eſtate is not ſuch as to be envied, but rather abhorred: For the Lords deluding deluders Auguſt. ſaith well, That ſuch men as by deluding, and deceiving others of their temporall goods inrich themſelves, are deluded themſelves, becauſe getting things temporal, they loſe the eternal, which are of far greater worth, for they win the world, and loſe their owne ſoules: And Ambroſe ſaith, God makes them like foxes, which whilſt they cunningly ſeek their prey, become a prey to thoſe that hunt after them, the deceiver ſhall be deceived by others. But as was ſaid before by ſcorners, proud and contemptuous perſons may be underſtood, that mocke at others in want and miſery; the time ſhall come, when they being abaſed, others ſhall deride and mocke at them to the increaſe of their miſery, to which effect, Auguſt. hath a notable ſaying, Bear him now laughing at thee, thou ſhalt deride him ſighing. The Sept. God reſiſteth the proud, and ſo it is alleadged Jam. 4.6. He is againſt them, and will bring them downe to this low and deſpicable eſtate, but he giveth grace to the humble; that is, makes them gracious with all men; whereupon Chryſoſt. it is not juſtice, not piety, nor almes-giving that ingratiates a man with God, but meekneſſe and humility; for who doth not eſteem and deſire the acquaintance of ſuch, although he never yet ſaw him, but heard of him onely. Moreover, the Lord indueth them with the graces of his Spirit unto ſalvation; for examples of the proud, we have Pharaoh, Nebuchadnezar, and Antiochus Epiphanes brought downe from the higheſt pitch of worldly glory, to the loweſt ebbe of miſery, of the meek and humble readily ſubmitting themſelves to obey God, Abraham, Jacob, Joſeph, David, and many more of divers times and ages. Verſ. 35. The wiſe ſhall inherit glory, but ſhame ſhall be the promotion of fools. Here is the laſt motive to ſtirre up to get wiſdome, and it is aptly annexed to that before going, v. 34. it being the very ſame in other words: for further explanation, the humble, who are the onely wiſe ones, ſhall have grace given them, and hereby be brought to glory, if not in this world, yet in that which is to come; but the worldling proud of his proſperity, ſhall thus be brought into contempt, and deriſion, ſhame, in reſpect of his being caſt downe, ſhall in fine be all his promotion, and it ſhall appeare what a fool he was in taking ſuch evill courſes; Auguſt. placeth the ſhame of the wicked proſpering, and being proud, even in this, That they are proud of their riches, or good parts, alledging that Pſ. 73. In their being lifted up, thou haſt caſt them down; for he ſaith not, after their lifting up, but in their lifting up, for to be ſo lifted up, is at the ſame inſtant to fall, which is further illuſtrated by Chryſ. thus, Seeſt thou a man that looks upon a peece of clay, as if it were gold, admiring and praiſing it, doth he not ſeem to thee a fool that may be greatly aſhamed? but he that looks upon it as clay or dirt, and makes none other account of it, is wiſe, as not thinking the more highly of himſelfe for abundance of it: So he that looks upon worldly wealth as precious, and upon himſelfe, now that he abounds therewith, as excellent above other men, is a very fool, and worthy to be crowned accordingly with a fools Cap to his ignominy, and greateſt ſhame; but contrariwiſe, he that thinks rightly of himſelfe, and theſe, is wiſe.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ. 1. Muffet. HEare, ye children, the inſtruction of a father, and attend to know underſtanding. This fourth Chapter according to Muffet, is a fourth Sermon, of Salomon, to ſtir up to get wiſdome with all the earneſtneſſe that may be, and he varyeth his word before uſed, My ſon, in the ſingular number, into a plurall ye children, wherein he ſpeaketh in his father Davids phraſe, who often ſpake thus to all the children of God, as Pſal. 34. Pſal. 113. &c. becauſe he now would remember, how he was by him inſtructed, as he doth v. 3. I was my fathers ſon, tender and onely beloved in the ſight of my mother. Heb. tender, and the onely one in the ſight of my mother. Some, ſaith Arboreus, becauſe he calleth himſelfe his mothers onely ſon, hold, that Bathſhebah had no more ſonnes but Salomon and that the three other, Samaa, Sabab and Nathan were the ſonnes of Uriah, Bathſhebahs former husband; but in ſaying her onely ſon, he meaneth not, that ſhe had no more by David, but that ſhe loved and tendered him above all, neglecting the other three in compariſon; for the Scripture is plaine, that ſhe bare foure ſonnes to David, whereof Salomon was the youngeſt. He alſo mentioneth three Expoſitions of theſe words.

Verſ. 3. Arbor. 1 Chron. 3. 5.

1. That Salomon was the moſt dearly beloved ſonne of David, and Bathſhebah his mother, and therefore by them both inſtructed and taught in the way of vertue moſt carefully.

2 Sam. 7. 14. 2. That when he ſaith, I was my fathers ſon, &c. It is meant of God his heavenly Father, as it was ſaid to David of him, He ſhall be my ſon, and I will be his Father; and the ſon of the Jewiſh Church moſt beloved.

Pſal. 2. Matth. 3. 3. That this is ſpoken in the perſon of Chriſt, who ſaith thus of God the Father, or rather God ſaith of him, Thou art my Sonne; and againe, This is my beloved Sonne, and he was the onely Sonne of his mother the Virgin Mary, but of all theſe he preferreth the firſt as the beſt. About the minority or ſeniority of Salomon, in reſpect of his other brethren, divers conjecture diverſly, ſome that he was the youngeſt, as he is named laſt; but ſome that he was the eldeſt of thoſe foure, and onely mentioned laſt, becauſe there was more to be ſaid of him, and that by this, The onely one of his mother, is meant her firſt-borne living, and that he was the eldeſt, they prove from that, which is ſaid after the death of the Infant begotten in adultery, David comforted his wife, and ſhe bare him a Sonne called

2 Sam. 12. Salomon.

Salomon. But in all this there is no weight to prove him the firſt, but there is much more in the order of reckoning up his Sons to prove him the youngeſt of the four, becauſe he is ſo reckoned not onely 1 Chron. 3. but alſo 2 Sam. 5. after his other Sonnes reckoned in order, firſt, ſecond, third, &c. Moreover, the young age of Salomon, when David his Father dyed, evinceth it, he being then but twelve or thirteen years of age; whereas that of 2 Sam 12. is urged, as if it were meant that Salomon was begotten the next after him that dyed: I anſwer, that the other three, and the begetting of them is in that place paſſed over, it being nothing pertinent to the hiſtory of that place to tell of them borne of her before Salomon, it being thought enough to reckon them up elſewhere, as had been done before, 2 Sam. 5. But then he went in to her, and comforted her, becauſe her comfort was greater of her bearing Salomon, then all the reſt, for ſo much as he was the Son promiſed that ſhould build the Lord an houſe. For Salomons ſaying, that he was tender; ſome thinke, that hereby was meant his young age, when his Father dyed, ſo that what inſtructions he had from him, he had then, yet being ſo young he laid them up in his heart, and forgat them not, and this he mentioneth now as a motive to ſtir other children up to doe likewiſe, by the inſtructions of wiſdome to hold them, and never to forget them, when more years come upon them. Some againe, that his dainty and delicate education was meant, able to faſcinate a youths minde ſo with pleaſure, as to make him uncapable of good inſtructions: yet he even in the midſt of all pleaſures of the Court, received and held his Fathers inſtructions moſt firmly, therefore let all other children doe likewiſe. Some alſo, becauſe he ſaith, that he was tender and young, that his rudeneſſe and ignorance was meant, even as it is with other children, too much cockered by their parents, yet by attending to his fathers and mothers inſtructions, he had now attained, through Gods grace, to be a miracle of wiſdome, and therefore there was no reaſon, why they ſhould deſpaire of coming to wiſdome alſo, but hope looking at his example, to be made wiſe. Laſtly, others, that in ſaying, he was tender, he meaneth docible, and eaſie to have good impreſſions by inſtructions made in his minde, as ſoft wax by ſetting a ſeale upon it: So Baſil and Ambroſe compare the docible to ſoft wax, ſuch as youth is, ſo that as the ſeale being ſet on, whilſt it is ſoft makes an impreſſion, but if it be not then done, it hardens, and then cannot be done; ſo in tender youth impreſſions may be made, but if that time be let ſlip, it will hardly be done afterwards. Of all theſe Expoſitions, I thinke none is to be rejected, except that of being delicately brought up; for of his education in a vertuous way great care was had, and Nathan the Prophet had the overſight thereof. The firſt of his being young whilſt his Father lived, but yet minding his inſtructions ever ſince, and tender, that is docible, and eaſie to have goood impreſſions made in him, are ad appoſitum, to ſhew the coherence of theſe words with the former, as being conſiderations very forcible to move all children and young ones, as they preferre Salomons glorious eſtate, to imitate him in their young and tender age, not to heare good inſtructions, without an heart affected therewith, like blocks, or ſtocks, or without care to remember them ever after. To this effect the Gloſſe ſaith, That there is nothing more apt to work upon the minde of a youth, then to ſet before him examples of youths that betimes gave their mindes to learne, and ſo proved famous being come to mans eſtate. For the inſtructions given by David to Salomon his ſonne; See 1 Chron. 28. 9, 10. But that being ſhort, is here ſet forth in more words.

Baſil. Ambroſ.

Note.

Let thy heart retaine my words, keep my commandements, and live. Get wiſdome, get underſtanding, forget it not, neither decline from the words of my mouth. This his exhortation to get wiſdome was made before, but becauſe young men eſpecially are ſo hard to be wrought upon by ſuch exhortations, he repeateth and inculcateth the ſame againe and againe, alledging the authority of his father David, a great Prophet. The word rendred get in this place, ſignifieth alſo to poſſeſſe, as the Vulg renders it, or to buy, as ſome others, which, I thinke, is rather to be followed, as moſt ſignificant, for thus we are taught to be at coſt for underſtanding, and not this way to be ſparing, that which we buy and purchaſe being ſo precious. We may buy other things, and yet have no profit hereby, but by wiſdome we ſhall have the greateſt profit in the world; we ſhall by wiſdome live, be ſafe and be promoted, as here is ſaid.

Lyra. Now we purchaſe wiſdome, ſaith Lyra, after King Salomon, when we are at coſt to maintaine a Maſter, or Teacher, by whoſe learned and grave inſtructions we may get learning according to God, which is the ſame with that which the Apoſtle teacheth, Gal. 6. 6.

To buy wiſdome alſo is to buy the Bible, and ſuch bookes as are written thereupon, and then not to ſpare for time in reading and ſtudying hereupon, which is alſo a price giving, becauſe time, eſpecially in thoſe that live upon their labour in pari is equivalent to money. But being at all this charge we muſt not forget what we read or heare, but ſet our hearts hereupon, and be affected accordingly, for which it is added, Forget it not, neither decline from the words of my mouth. And the charge here given is doubled, Get wiſdome, get underſtanding; implying, that to underſtand and not to doe, is no wiſdome, but folly.

Baſil. Hierom. Baſil and Jerome here note, that Davids principall care for his Sonne was, not that he might be rich, but wiſe, and intelligent; for this he imbraced him, as it were with the greateſt demonſtrations of love that might be, that he might win him hereunto; whereas other Parents are all in imbracing and kiſſing, and making much of their Children, without one word ſpeaking to this effect; but they are herein like unto the Ape, hugging her young one to the deſtruction thereof. True love to Children is to inſinuate into them, that they may be brought to be in love with wiſdome.

Note.

Verſ. 6. Forſake her not, and ſhe ſhall preſerve thee, love her, and ſhe ſhall keepe thee; the vulg. more ſignificantly, Ne dimittas, put her not away; as alluding to a mans putting away of his wife. For the moſt beloved wife of an husband is not more deare to him, then wiſdome muſt be to thee. He doth hereby intimate the neareſt conjunction with wiſdome that may be, to continue to the end of thy dayes: and good reaſon, if a good wife be ſo dearly beloved, that thou ſhouldeſt thus dearly love wiſdome; for whereas a man that hath taken a wife, muſt preſerve and keepe her; contrariwiſe, wiſdome will keep thee, and herein act the mans part towards thee, by ſaving thee from all dangers, ſo that thou ſhalt be ſufficiently provided for, and by meanes of her live comfortably all thy dayes; according to this Olympiodorus ſaith, Wiſdome is our wife to live together with us. And Auguſtine, Firſt, the Fleſh is our wife, and Wiſdome is our wife; as Abraham had two wives, Sarah and Hagar, but Hagar was ſubject, and kept under, but Sarah as Miſtris ruled and bare ſway; ſo we muſt keep the fleſh under, but hearken to wiſdome, Tanquam Domina.

Olymp. in Eccl. 9. Aug. in 1 Joh. tr. 2.

Verſ. 7. Wiſdome is the principall thing, therefore get wiſdome, and with all thy gettings get underſtanding. the vulg. The beginning of wiſdome, ſo doubtfully ſpoken, that it hath given occaſion to divers expoſitions, but Hebr. it is, ראשׁית חכמה, Wiſdome the head; and chap. 1. 7. the ſame word is uſed touching the feare of the Lord, and rendred beginning: but as there hath been ſhewed, it may alſo be underſtood, that it is the principall point of wiſdome, ſo here it is beſt rendred Wiſdome is the principall thing: and upon this ground a repetition of the former charge moſt aptly followeth. Therefore get wiſdome: and where the word ſignifying alſo to buy, and poſſeſſe is uſed, as ver. 5. implying not only an having of wiſdome, betwixt which, and buying, and poſſeſſing Plato makes this difference, He that buyeth and poſſeſſeth a Garment, or any thing, weareth or uſeth it as properly belonging to him, but he who hath it and is not poſſeſſour of it cannot ſo doe, but only lay it up; ſo he that hath wiſdome, but poſſeſſeth it not, never hath it as an habit, but only hath it by him without doing him any good.

Plato.

Now beſides the price given for wiſdome before ſpoken of, thou muſt by way of barter change away other things for it, ſinfull pleaſures, profits, love of the things of the world, pride in apparel, wrath, envie, intemperance, yea and thy worldly goods alſo by liberality to the poore, and as the caſe requireth, letting them goe to perſecutors, and thy life alſo; With all thy gettings get underſtanding;

ding; That is, count them not gettings whatsoever things they be that thou getteſt, unleſſe gotten together with wiſdome, otherwiſe thou getteſt only ſhadowes, and looſeſt the ſubſtance, as the dogge in the Fable.

Exalt her and ſhe ſhall promote thee, vulg. Arripe eam, & exaltabit te; but the word סלל ſignifieth exalt, or make an High-way, or Cauſie for her of earth, and ſmall ſtones elevated, as ſhewing hereby in how high eſteeme thou haſt her; as it is obſerved, that a man of old marrying a woman wealthy and well deſcended, brought her home in a Chariot, or on Horſe-back, the way being made for the purpoſe, but if ſhe were poore on foot, ſo that he continueth the Allegory of a wife ſtill, and the beſt and moſt worthy that may be. And he that thus exalts wiſdome ſhall not looſe his labour, but ſhall accordingly be promoted by her; the Hebr. word is, Shee ſhall lift thee up on high, being in one Hebrew gloſſe well ſet forth thus; Shee ſhall bring thee riding into heaven. Whereby is intimated the facility of coming thither to the wiſe. Verſ. 8.

But what is the way ſo elevated, for wiſdome to paſſe into the heart? one anſwereth well, a good Conſcience. Ambroſe ſaith, A Charriot compoſed of the foure Cardinall Vertues, being carried hereupon as upon foure wheeles; Baſil, A Charriot of two, the underſtanding, and the will. When thou ſhalt imbrace her; The law of Marriage requireth, that there ſhould be mutuall love and imbraces betwixt the Husband and Wife; ſo in ſaying, When thou imbraceſt wiſdome ſhee ſhall exalt thee, he intimateth, that this her exalting thee ſhall be as the moſt pleaſing and delightful imbraſing in the world, wherefore Auguſtine excellently ſeteth forth the embraces of wiſdome thus. Ambroſ. Baſil. Hugo, Serm. 246. De temp.

No pleaſantneſſe of wood, no purpled coloured flowers, no ornaments of coſtly apparell, no ſound of ſweeteſt wel-ſtringed Inſtruments, no imbraces of the greateſt beauty are comparable to the inſpiration, the ſweetneſſe, the foments, and imbraces of wiſdome. And the Sept. expreſſeth it by wiſdomes imbraces of thee, rendring it, Honour her and ſhe ſhall imbrace thee, of the armes where-with we imbrace wiſdome, Hugo ſaith well, That they are contemplation, and action; and hereunto we may adde, That her two armes where-with ſhe imbraceth us, are peace, and joy unſpeakeable. Hugo. Cardin.

Shee ſhall give to thy head an ornament of grace, a crowne of glory; That is, wiſdome ſhall be a grace to thee here, thy face being made hereby to ſhine, as he afterwards ſpeaketh, and hereby thou ſhalt be brought at laſt to a Crowne of glory in the Kingdome of Heaven, of which St. Paul ſpeaketh, ſaying, Henceforth is laid up for me a crowne of righteouſneſſe; thus Arboreus. Verſ. 9. Chap. 3. 22. Arbor. 2 Tim. 4. 8.

Some think that in the Crown here ſpoken of, David who is brought in thus, ſpeaking to his Sonne Salomon, alludeth to that which he was deſtined unto, viz. The Kingdome, urging him from hence to get wiſdome, becauſe that ſo he ſhould be in wonderfull grace amongſt his Subjects, that beauty where-with he was naturally indued being thus augmented, and he made more amiable in all mens eyes, and the Crowne of the Kingdome, with which he was crowned made farre more glorious.

Lyra thinkes the Crowne in the ſecond place ſpoken of, to be ſpoken of by way of explication of the firſt paſſage, Shee ſhall give an ornament of grace to thy head; That is, a Crowne of glory, which is the greateſt ornament of all others. And of a Crowne, ſome thinke he ſpeaketh in alluding to the cuſtome of old, to ſet Crownes upon the heads of wiſe men of Bayes, Ivie, or Myrtles. It is ſpoken to the ſame effect with it, chap. 1. 9. For the particular applying of it to Salomon, this is not ſo to be received, but if it ſhould be ſo great a grace to a King, much more to private perſons, making them herein like unto Kings: Wiſdome is hereby magnified above a Father, a King, who giveth his Crowne to his Son, but wiſdome a Crowne of glory. The vulg. for theſe words, Shall deliver a crowne of glory to thee, hath, Shall protect thee, and the word cometh of מגן a ſheild, but becauſe it ſignifyeth alſo to give, or deliver, it is in N. Tr. ſo rendred; but taking it according to the vulg. the ſence will be very good thus: Whereas a Crowne commonly is accompanied with dangers to thoſe that weare it, ſo that by Lyra.

meanes hereof some of them loose their lives by treasonable conspiracies, that given by wisdome shall not only be a crowne to make glorious, but also a shield to protect him that weareth it; so that he shall reigne in safety.

Lavater. And to this Lavater agreeth, following also the same reading; Verse. 10. Protect thee as a sheild; The yeares of thy life shall be many: Hebr. Of thy lives, implying the yeares of the naturall life, the life of grace, and of glory, as some gather, although some others understand it is of some one of these. See more of this, ch. 3. 16.

Verse. 12. When thou goest, thy steps shall not be streightned, &c. Here is another benefit of wisdome, of which see before, chap. 3. 17. 23. and how this way, said to be streight else-where, is here said to be large, and it is also large, because whereas wickednesse brings men to great streights in this life, the wise shall be kept out of them, as David saith, Thou hast set my feet in a large place, verse. 13. Psal. 17.

Verse. 13, 14, 15. charging not to let wisdome goe is the same with ver. 6. ver. 14, 15. he returneth againe to dehort from going in the wayes of the wicked, of which he gave warning at the first, chap. 1. 10. 11. &c. then he addeth a new, touching their eagernesse to doe evil.

Verse. 16. They cannot sleep except they have done mischiefe, their sleep is taken away, unlesse they cause some to fall. Herein they are like to Serpents, of which Pliny writeth, That they sleep not all the summer, whilst they are full of poyson, but in winter, this being spent, they sleep; so robbers and murtherers, whilst they have spent the poyson of mischievous intentions, which lurketh in their hearts, cannot sleep as other men doe in the night, yea the night is the time wherein they goe about these wickednesses; as they are led by the Devill, the prince of darkenesse; so they take the opportunity of the darke to act their wickednesses in. A strong motive to us to abhorre from consorting with them, because they that doe come under the worst Master in the world, who will not suffer them to sleepe at the time that nature requireth, but workes them in desperate services in the very night, not suffering them to sleep, or take their rest. Pliny. Note.

Verse. 18. Verse. 19. To confirme this further to be his meaning, he saith, ver. 18, 19. The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day, the way of the wicked is like darknesse, they stumble they know not at what.

Verse. 17. But before this, ver. 17. They eate the bread of wickednesse, and drinke the wine of violence, is not to be passed over in silence. Hugo expounds this of the holy Communion, which these wicked ones unworthily receiving, have it counted to them, not as Bread and Wine to salvation, but to damnation; but this is farre fetcht, both because they had no Communions then, and it is meant plainly of their getting their living by the wicked courses before spoken of. Hugo.

Augustine here notes, That they practised such wickednesse as a daily trade, or course of life, for saith he, A man sometimes eates flesh, sometime fish, sometime other things, but with all he eates bread from day to day; in saying therefore that they eate the bread of wickednesse, he meaneth, that they feed daily and continually upon mischievous practices, they being as it were meat and drinke unto them, so greatly doe they delight in them. Augustine. in Psal. 53.

Verse. 18. To come now to ver. 18. The path of the just is compared to the Sun, shining in the morning by some little glimmering light at the dawning of the day, but increasing, as the light of the day doth: whereby is shewed, that as a man that takes his rest in the night, riseth betimes in the morning to his work, is not idle when he is up, but although he cannot yet see perfectly to doe some workes, yet some he can doe, and doth them, but the light increasing; so that he seeth more perfectly, he now doth the most curious workes which he hath to doe, and perfects them; in like manner the just, according to the little light received at the first, worke and doe some things, but their grace and light after this, increaseth more and more, and then they doe all more perfectly. And yet the time shall come, when it shall be more perfect day-light unto them, by that day-light in the new Jerusalem that shall never have end. But on the contrary side, the way of the wicked is darknesse, and tendeth to utter darknesse for evermore, and in this way of darknesse they stumble unawares, as a man going in the darke, before they are aware of Verse. 19.

it, and fall into a pit never to come out againe. For even of the wicked few are ſenſible of the danger to which they are neare, till they come to be ſwallowed up hereby: They are as confident by repenting before they dye, as the thiefe upon the croſſe, to provide for their ſalvation, that they make no doubt of it at all. But let us take notice, that they are in the darke; and how can a ſhip in the darke ſee rocks and ſhelves to avoid them, and therefore come into, and keep in the way that is light, that ſo we may ſee all dangers towards us, and in time provide againſt, and not run upon them to unavoidable deſtruction, and to this end turn from wickedneſſe to righteouſneſſe, as out of a dark, into a light way. Note.

Some there are that expound the perfect day-light, of profiting ſo in knowledge and grace in this life, as to come in time to perfection herein, but the perfect day-light, is moſt commonly underſtood of that knowledge, whereby we ſhall know, as we are knowne, which is not till the end of this life. According to this Gregory ſaith, the good deſires of the juſt are the beginning of the day, when they are joyned with light of underſtanding ariſing within, and growing in knowledge and grace from time to time, the increaſe of the day-light which is in the end of this life, cometh to be perfect day. And Chryſoſt. ſpeaking upon the morning, after morning at the Creation, ſaith, When a man by repentance turneth from ſinne, it is morning to him, then the light beginneth to ſhine. The light, we may truly ſay of Gods countenance, bringing true joy and comfort, which is increaſed as the light of the day in this world, and becomes perfect day-light, when this life is ended. The Apoſtle Peter ſeemeth to make two mornings, where he ſaith, Till the day dawn, and the day-ſtar ariſe in your hearts; the firſt, as Gregory hath it, of the preaching of the Goſpel, for then the day beginneth where it was night before; the ſecond, of knowledge and grace wrought in the heart, the firſt being the dawning of the day, the ſecond the riſing of the day-ſtar in our hearts. And for the way of the wicked, it is to be noted, that he ſaith not, It is darke, but darkneſſe in the abſtract; that is, darke added to darke, as Auguſt. ſpeaketh of ſinners, that will not confeſſe their ſinnes, ſaying, To live in ſinne, is to live in darkneſſe; but when one that doth ſo, confeſſeth not his ſinnes, his darkneſſe is now increaſed, darkneſſe is powred out upon darkneſſe, and ſuch a mans way is darkneſſe indeed, palpable darkneſſe.

My ſonne attend unto my words, Let them not depart from thine eyes. Chearfull attention in hearers, ſaith Chryſoſt. ſtirreth up the Teacher, and bringeth unto him great plenty of ſentences, ſo as nothing doth more. For the eyes, ſome thinke the eyes of the minde onely to be meant, others better, both the eyes of the mind and body alſo, the one being imployed in reading, and by this means the other in daily meditation; of looking into the law of perfect liberty ſee Jam. 1. 25. and this he doth, that is a diligent reader of the word, touching which, as James hath a compariſon taken from a Looking glaſſe, wherein a man beholdeth his naturall face, is by Plutarch compared to the ſeeing of a mans ſelfe in the eye of another; for ſo ſaith hee, doth the man that readeth other mens bookes, he may therein behold himſelfe, and what the iſſue of his doings is like to be. For this Chryſoſt. greatly commendeth the eyes not being of the holy Scriptures, which he indeed commendeth not onely to perſons ſequeſtred from the world, but even to worldly men, and to thoſe that are full of other imployments alſo; for he ſaith, Thou wilt ſay, O man of the world, I have great buſineſſes of the world to look after, I cannot ſtand ſo much to look upon the Scriptures, let them doe that who are profeſſed ſtudents: What ſayeſt thou, O man? the more full of worldly imployments, the more need to read the Scriptures, that hereby as by a skilfull governour of a ſhip, ſitting at the ſterne continually, thy ſhip may be guided aright in the midſt of the waves of worldly buſineſſes, and at laſt come ſafe to the haven where thou wouldeſt be. Again, in commending to us the reading of the Scriptures, he compareth them to a meadow, and a garden, ſaying, Whatſoever delight is in both theſe, is much more in reading of the Scriptures, there flowers may be gathered, here the flowers of ſentences more ſweet and excellently coloured; there the flowers growing ſoon fade againe, here they remaine immarceſſible alwayes; there is the ſinging of the graſhop-per, here the ſweet heavenly harmony of the Prophets and Evangeliſts; there the ſouth wind blowing, things flouriſh that grow, here the Spirit blowing keepeth all things green continually; there an hedge of thorns fenceth about to keep out beaſts, here Gods all powerfull providence; there alſo if herbs be good for neceſſary uſes, they hold but in the Summer, here both Summer and Winter that may be gathered which is onely neceſſary, as Chriſt ſaid to Martha, both herbs alwayes green and growing, and fruit with the heavineſſe thereof weighing downe the trees. Ambroſe compareth the daily reading of the word to anointing of the limbs, a thing much uſed of old by Champions when they were to come into the place of trying Maſteries; No man, ſaith he, dares come to try his ſtrength againſt an adverſary in this place, but he that hath often uſed to enter theſe liſts, and therefore hath often anointed his limbs with oyl, but being uſed to theſe things, he comes in without fear; ſo he that is frequent in reading the Scriptures, needs not to feare to encounter with the temptations of the adverſary, but otherwiſe he is no way able to make oppoſition againſt them.

Ambroſ. in Pſ. 119. Lect. 12

Verſ. 23. Keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it come the iſſues of life. The word rendred, Keep, ſignifieth to keep, as they that watch in the night, Wardſmen: As a man, that knoweth that theeves will come, watcheth that night that they may not break through into his houſe and ſteale, and kill, as they will doe, if a diligent watch be not kept: So a man muſt moſt carefully watch over his heart to prevent the danger that he ſhall otherwiſe lye open to. Pliny writeth of the Dragon, that he hath in his head a ſtone in the forme of an heart, which men uſe to get by ſtrewing ſome water upon his head, that hath vertue to make him ſleep ſoundly, and then coming upon him they cut out this ſtone, not being otherwiſe to be had, but the Dragon being found ſleeping; So our adverſary the Devill ſeeks to finde us aſleep, and not keeping a watch over our hearts, and then, and not otherwiſe, he cuts them as it were out, which is the thing he deſireth, and then we periſh.

Pliny.

Now the heart is kept, when a man keeps a good conſcience in all things; for ſo as Remigius ſaith, A man doth, as it were, lay up a clean thing in a ſafe place, and this is done, when it is kept from all defilement of ſinne. And Auguſt. ſhewing further the keeping of the heart, ſaith, it is by giving it to God, as it is ſaid, My ſon give me thy heart; And how is this done, but by opening to God, and ſhutting it againſt the world? Now the heart hath two doores, as a two-leaved doore, deſire and feare; theſe are ſhut againſt the world, when our deſires are not ſet upon worldly things, neither doe we feare man, and opened to God, when we deſire the Kingdome of God, and feare hell fire. Againe, the ſame Auguſt. in another place ſheweth another way to keep the heart upon theſe words, To binde their Nobles with chains, and their Kings with fetters of iron; ſaying, Who are theſe Kings, but evill luſts, and affections, ruling, and reigning as Kings in mens hearts and lives? theſe even in Kings and Nobles are bound as with fetters, when through feare they are kept from following their evill luſts, and going in their evill wayes of Idolatry and Tyranny, and goe in the way of Chriſtianity, and they are bound as with chains of iron, whilſt they for feare doe thus, but let them doe ſo for love, and then they become chaines of gold. Bernard ſpeaking of keeping the heart, inſiſts upon a word ſetting forth a watch ſet in the night in all the parts thereof, which are called Watches, and are foure, and theſe ſaith Origen, ſet forth the foure parts of mans life, childhood, youth, mans eſtate, and old age, in all which the heart is kept, when one flyeth the vices of every one of theſe, ignorance in childhood, wildneſſe in youth, licentiouſneſſe to doe evill in mans eſtate, and covetouſneſſe in old age: And this is the watching of ſervants againſt the coming of their Maſter commended unto us by our Lord, Matth. 24. And a hint of this touching every watch of the night is given in the Hebrew מכל משמיר above, or more then any watch, watch thine heart, for out of it are the iſſues of life; that is, if the heart be thus diligently kept, there is life, and all things that bring to life and ſalvation: For the heart, as Hippocrates teacheth, hath in it two little receptacles, according to Pliny 3. if with Hippocrates we hold two, theſe are the love of God, and of our neighbour, which are in an heart thus kept, if with Pliny 3. they are faith, hope, and charity, and theſe theſe are ſaid to be the iſſues of life, becauſe life ſhall undoubtedly follow for evermore to all thoſe that are indued with theſe.

Lavater takes this charge of watching the heart, as alluding to the watch kept about a Caſtle or City in time of war, that the enemy may be kept out, intimating that ſuch is our caſe as long as we live in this world, and therefore we have need alwayes to keep this watch with all diligence. Thy body ſaith One, is thy Caſtle: but more truly we may ſay, thy heart is thy Caſtle thus to be kept; The Arms wherewith we muſt keep this Caſtle againſt our enemies, the Fleſh, the World, and Devill, are the Armour of Chaſtity againſt the Fleſh, the ſhield of Liberality againſt the World, and the helmet of Charity againſt the Devill; For the iſſues thereof are life: As the heart naturall is to the naturall body the firſt thing living, and the laſt dying, ſo that other parts being hurt or decayed a man liveth ſtil as long as his heart is kept unhurt, but if it be decayed, the whole body decayeth accordingly and dyeth: So the heart ſpiritually underſtood, as here, if it liveth, and be ſafe, the whole ſpiritual man is ſafe, although ſome members be diſeaſed, but if it be corrupted, as it is, when there are evil thoughts in the heart of adultry, murther, theft, &c. the whole man is defiled, and there is certaine danger to the life for ever. A care then of this is above all things to be taken, that no evill lurke therein, but that thou beeſt ſincere and upright in all things, although thou laboureſt with infirmities in other parts; yet as a man, having life in his heart, is grieved at the wounds or ſores, or tumors cauſing paine, or deformity in his members, and endeavoureth by all means that he can, to have them healed, and that with ſpeed; ſo the ſpirituall man grieveth for his imperfections, tumors, or ſcars, or wounds made by ſinne upon any of his members; his tongue, if he hath therewith lyed, blaſphemed, curſed, or talked corruptly; his eyes if they have been libidinous, or covetous; his eares, if they have been deafe to heare good counſell, but open to evill; his head, if that hath been made giddy by dimneſſe; his hands tainted with taking bribes, or practiſing any oppreſſion or wrong; his feet, if he hath therewith gone into vaine and wicked company; or his body, if he hath defiled it by whoredome, or laſcivious imbraces. And he not onely ſorroweth, but endeavoureth with all good care to be in every of them healed; if there be any man that doth not, but beareth himſelfe upon this, that he hath a good heart, he deceiveth himſelfe if he thinketh that he is ſound and well within; for certainly, his heart, wherein the life of the inner man ſtandeth, is dying, or dead, otherwiſe it were impoſſible, that he ſhould thus neglect the reſtitution of health to his members.

Note.

Put from thee a froward mouth, and perverſe lips. Heb. the perverſeneſſe of the mouth, and the pravity of the lips. After a charge given to keep the heart, here followeth another to keep the tongue, which commonly bewrayeth the heart, and ſheweth whether it be kept ſo diligently as hath been ſaid, or no, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh, and as the common Proverb is Lingua eſt index mentis, the tongue is the bewrayer of the minde. By a froward tongue or the frowardneſſe of the tongue, Some underſtand the tongue of another, that cometh to thee with tales againſt thy neighbour, as if it were meant, have no familiarity with ſuch, keep them far from thee, as dangerous perſons to ſtir up contention betwixt neighbour and neighbour. But more truly and generally his tongue is meant, that is bidden before to keep his heart, and in this verſe his tongue from detraction by ſlandering or backbiting, and his lips from curſing, railing, mocking, and all bitter and corrupt ſpeaking, and therefore to expreſſe two ſorts of evils in a mans ſpeaking he ſaith, The tongue of frowardneſſe, and the lips of pravity: How hard a leſſon this is to be learned, S. Jam. teacheth, ſhewing that when all other things are ſubdued by the skill of man, yet of this he can finde no remedy; as Arbor. obſerveth, that there is a remedy againſt the poyſon of any creature, but againſt the poyſon of an evill tongue none; and herein alſo the evill tongue of a man exceeds all other the moſt poyſonous creatures that be in the world, for one Serpent hurteth not another with its poyſon, but one man doth hurt another with his tongue: And the hurt of an evill tongue is ſo great, as that by taking away a mans good name, hereby he doth him more hurt, then if he hanged him up, ſeeing that according to the the Proverb, an evill name is worſe then an hanging. And if it be a deriding or inſulting tongue over a man in miſery, it is to bring him to the extremity of miſery, for which Plutarch calleth this extremam improbitatis lineam, the uttermoſt line of diſhoneſty. Lavater from the obſervation of the fence about the tongue, two two-leaved doors, as it were, of our lips and teeth, noteth, how carefull we ſhould be to ſpeak nothing corrupt or evill, and what cautelouſneſſe we ſhould uſe in bringing our words forth, and not ſuffer the tongue to run before the wit, as many doe. As alſo in regard of this, that it is a ſingular gift by God given unto man above other creatures, to be able by ſpeaking to utter his minde, and therefore take wee heed, that wee no way abuſe this gift, but uſe it aright to Gods glory.

Plutarch. in Apothեg. Lavater.

Note.

// Verſ. 25. Let thine eyes look right on, and thine eye-lids ſtreight before thee. Next unto the tongue, he concludeth the inſtructions of his father David with that, which he chargeth him touching his eyes, which was not to looke any way, but right forth, that he might goe ſtreight on with his feet in the way of Gods commandements, without declining to the right hand, or to the left, as is further declared, verſ. 26. and 27. by a ſpeech taken from Deut. 5. 38. Now he looketh right on, that caſteth not his eye upon any unlawfull object, another mans wife to luſt after her, another mans proſperous eſtate to envy him therefore, another mans beaſt, ſervant, houſe, or land, gold, or ſilver, or any other deſirable thing to covet that; another mans fame or eſtimation to detract from that, wherein eſpecially this rightly followeth that before going, againſt a perverſe tongue. He alſo looketh aright, that being a Judge as Davids ſon Salomon was to be, is without reſpect of perſons in judging, and looketh onely at the equity and righteouſneſſe of the cauſe brought before him, contemning, for any favour to one more then another, or for bribes, to goe an haires breadth from the way of truth in any ſentence giving. Laſtly, a mans eyes looke right on, when he doth nothing, but having firſt conſidered it, and the way and meanes to effect it; for he that neglects, ſaith Gregory, to fore-ſee by conſideration what he doth, extendeth his ſteps, but ſhutteth his eyes, he makes a journey by going forward, but doth not by fore-ſeeing goe before himſelfe, and therefore he falleth the ſooner, becauſe he attendeth not by the eyes of counſell, where to ſet the foot of his operation; For as a man that goeth a journey beholds the way firſt with his eyes, and then goeth it with his feet; ſo a wiſe man conſidereth the way whereby he may effect what he intendeth, and then goeth that way, not caſting his eyes hither and thither, but warily looking to the ſaid way, that he may not take another inſtead thereof.

Gregor. Paſt. p. 3

Baſil. Baſil underſtanding it as ſpoken of the eyes beholding right things, ſaith, As a man by fixing his eyes upon green herbs, or things, hath his ſight refreſhed, but being ſet upon the diſeaſed, he is in danger to be infected with the ſame diſeaſe; ſo he that ſetteth his eyes upon the beauty of an Whore is infected, but he that looketh upon the wiſe, uttering inſtructions of Wiſdome, is made wiſe to his exceeding great comfort. And againe, one having ſet his eyes upon beauty, which he ſhould not, an impreſſion is hereby made in his heart, as in wax by a ſeale, ſo that although the object bee gone, this impreſſe worketh ſtill, and illudes the minde by images.

Verſ. 26. Ponder the path of thy feet, let all thy wayes be eſtabliſhed: Having ſeen the right way with thine eyes, let thy feet be directed accordingly, as a man that weigheth things in ballances, equally poyſing as it were thy ſteps, that thou mayeſt in all things walke orderly, and keepe an equall pace, not ſometime being too quicke through prepoſterous zeale, and ſometimes too ſlow through lukewarmneſſe.

Verſ. 27. Turn not to the right hand, or the left, but keep thy foot from evill. Here by right hand, 1. Some underſtand proſperity, by the left hand adverſity, ſaying he turneth to the right hand, that is puffed up by the one, and he to the left, that is caſt down by the other: 2. Some, friends and enemies, ſaying, He declineth to the right, that is led by favour or affection to his friend, to doe injuſtice for his ſake, and he to the left that for hatred to one, that is his enemy, doth it. 3. Some, by the right hand underſtand ſtand good workes, by the left evil; ſaying, He turneth to the right, that having done good is puffed up, and taketh the praiſe to himſelfe; he to the left that doth evil. 4. Auguſtine hath another, By turning to the right hand underſtand, him that ſaith, He hath no ſinne; to the left, him that is ſet upon all wickedneſſe, without any feare of puniſhment. 5. Beda alſo hath another; To turne to the right is to be wiſer then it becomes a man to be, That is, above that which is written, to the left, to be fooliſh and ignorant, not regarding knowledge. Laſtly, ſome ſay, that to turne to the right is the ſame with that, Eccleſ. 7. 16. Be not wiſe over much, nor over fooliſh; That is, as is by and by expounded, Over righteous, or over wicked; and over righteous is he, that propounds more rules of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe then God hath propounded; and he over wicked that abridgeth them, and makes them fewer; both which the Phariſees did, they propounded more in their traditions, and abridged them in their gloſſes upon ſundry Commandements commemorated, Matth. 5. 22. 28. 33. And after the Phariſees the Papiſts doe, for they alſo propound unwritten traditions, and abridge that precept touching the Lords Supper, Drinke ye all of this, as if there were no ſuch Scripture; Unleſſe ye drinke the bloud of the Sonne of Man, ye have no life in you. To reckon up no more here, although they have many.

CHAP. V.

MY Sonne, attend to my wiſdome, and bow thine eares to my underſtanding; Here Salomon begins another Oration, or Sermon, eſpecially tending to make incontinency and fleſhly luſts odious unto us; and in ſaying, Attend, and then, bow thine eares, he meaneth, Attend both with the bodily eare and the minde, as inſtructions moſt deſireable to all thoſe that would be wiſe. That thy lips may keep knowledge; That thou mayeſt be ready when temptation cometh to any incontinent action, to ſay with Joſeph, Shall I doe this evill and ſinne againſt God? thus Muffet; and it is meant alſo, that thou mayeſt have nothing in thy mouth, but tending to continency and againſt whoredome, for this wickedneſſe beginneth firſt in the words of thy mouth, but he that keepeth knowledge in his lips, keeps himſelfe by refraining from obſcene ſpeeches, and uttering words of diſtaſte of this abomination, from the very firſt degree or beginning hereof; ſo Lavater; And from hence we learne, that it is neceſſary, as to get knowledge, ſo to be ready when need requireth, to utter that which may be a fence to our ſelves and others againſt ſinne, and to turne here-from, eſpecially from the way that the whoriſh woman would bring us into.

Verſ. 1. Muffet. Lavater. Note.

Some, by thy lips keeping knowledge underſtand ſilence, whereby as in the Schoole of Pythagoras knowledge is kept in, till that by ſerious meditation and ſtudy more is attained, as theſe words joyned to the former, that thou mayeſt regard diſcretion, imply, being in the vulgar Latine rendred, That thou mayeſt keepe cogitations; and Hebr. To keepe cogitations; That is, by ſerious meditating upon my inſtructions, imprinting them in thy minde, which being done, thy lips, that is, thy ſpeeches ſhall alſo be conformable to the ſame. And in ſaying before, that by keeping knowledge in our lips, uttering it is meant, there is no contradiction, for it is not meant of uttering, till by ſerious meditation attained. But keeping knowledge in our lips, indeed implyeth keeping, and ſhewing it only, and not vanity and folly by looſe and corrupt talking.

For the lips of a ſtrange woman drop as the Honey-combe, and her mouth is ſmoother then oyle. Having made his exordium in the former words, now he cometh to the Argument of this Chapter, which is to give warning againſt the allurements of Harlots; and in doing this, firſt he ſheweth, how alluring they are by the ſhew of all pleaſure and joy that they ſhall have, who conſent unto them; Secondly, that within a while all this ſweetneſſe ſhall be turned into bitterneſſe. The ſweetneſſe of Honey, and the vertue of Oyle, the one to the taſte, the other to the limbes and ſinewes by ſuppleing them, doe much affect and draw mens mindes to them, if we conſider what uſe they made of Oyle anciently for the purpoſe aforeſaid; now both theſe, or ſomething like both theſe, is in the mouth of the Harlot, her words ſeeme to be ſo ſweet, and ſuch good in the imbracing of her, that if a man be not wiſe, to diſcerne whether the preſent pleaſure offered tendeth, he ſhall not be able to withſtand her temptations.

to

Verſ. 4. But wiſdome telleth him, that Her end is bitter like worm-wood, ſharpe as a two-edged ſword. Thus the ſeeming ſweetneſſe that is in following fleſhly luſts, and ſatisfying them, is in a ſhort time turned into the greateſt bitterneſſe, and the ſanative vertue, as of Oyle to the limbes, into a ſharp ſword, cutting, wounding, and killing without remedy, the ſilly deceived lecherous young man. But to return to each Word in particular, moſt ſignificant is this ſaying; Her lips drop as the Honey-combe, for hereby are denoted two things;

1 That the pleaſure of an Harlot is to be looked upon but as an Hony-combe taken out of the Hive, and dropping, which dropping indeed is ſweet to him that licks it in for the preſent, but the Hony in a ſhort time is dropped all out, and then what remaineth but a little harſh unſavoury Wax, that hath no ſweet taſte any more?

2 That the pleaſure of an Harlot is yet more momentary, viz. no longer laſting then the ſweetneſſe of Hony in the palate of the mouth, whilſt it is going downe.

Againe, in comparing her mouth to Oyle, if it be conſidered, that a young man, or any carnall man by reaſon of the luſt in him is as fire, he implyeth the great danger that is in conſorting with her, even as when Oyle and Fire come together. Some by her lips and mouth here, underſtand her ſweet ſinging, where-with her lovers are taken, becauſe it is propheſied of Tyre, that ſhe ſhould ſing as an Harlot; which implyeth this to have been the cuſtome of Harlots, by ſinging to inchant their Paramours; but if ſhe ſingeth not, but frameth her ſpeeches ſuch a way as may be apt to allure, it is all one. Some expound it of her kiſſes, it may beſt be underſtood of all, both her ſinging, ſpeaking, and kiſſing.

The Allegory. The Fathers moſt generally expound this Allegorically of humane wiſdome, which hath her inticing words, according to the Apoſtle, who ſaith, Not with the inticing words of mans eloquence; and this wiſdome indeed may well be ſet forth by an Harlots bewitching the ſimple by her pleaſing ſpeeches, againſt beleeving the Goſpel, to the deſtruction of their ſoules; For the end of this ſinfull pleaſure being bitter like Worm-wood, it is commonly obſerved, that ſweet things being eaten are turned into bitterneſſe; and therefore in alluding to this, it may be taken as thus ſpoken: but by bitter like Worm-wood here, as in other places, that which is deadly poyſonous is meant, and ſo the ſweet ſpeeches, ſinging, and kiſſes of the Harlot are ſoone turned into deadly poyſon. But the Phiſitians, as one noteth, have found out, that vinegar is a meanes to qualifie the bitterneſſe of Worm-wood, and to make it ſweet; ſo bitter ſorrow for this ſweet ſinne takes away the bitterneſſe thereof againe, that a man is not now any more indangered hereby, as by poyſon. And to a two-edged ſharp ſword is an Harlot compared, becauſe by her, both the body is wounded as it were, and conſumed to death, and the ſoule alſo.

Verſ. 5. Her feet goe downe to death, her ſteps take hold on hell; That is, by going in the way that luſt brings thee into, nothing elſe can be expected, but death and damnation for ever; So Gal. 5. 19. having ſhewed, that Fornication and Adultery are fruits of the fleſh, he ſaith, They that doe ſuch things ſhall never enter into the kingdome of heaven; And Col. 3. 5. For which things ſake the wrath of God comes upon the Children of diſobedience. For the more full underſtanding of this, looke back to chap. 2. 18, 19. where the like ſayings to this and that, ver. 6. have been already opened.

Verſ. 6. Leſt thou ſhouldſt ponder the path of life; or that thou mayeſt not thinke of going in the path of life, which by following Harlots is ſo obſcured to the eye of thy minde, that thou canſt never ſee to turne into it, and ſo thou canſt not be ſaved but, but periſh everlaſtingly, as ch. 2. 19. it is ſaid, None that goe to her returne againe, neither take hold of the paths of life; as one that goeth downe into a darke pit, cannot ſee the way to come out againe, but as the Egyptians, plagued with three dayes darkeneſſe, did none of them, nor could remove out of their places; ſo cannot he that goeth into an Whore-houſe, there is no thinking for him that he will not be ſo intangled, but that he will come away againe, when he liſteth, as many ſuch wicked ones doe; and the Philoſopher going unto a Whore ſometime, ſaid, I will poſſeſſe her, ſhe ſhall not poſſeſſe me; but this wickedneſſe will poſſeſſe thee, and hold thee to the deſtruction both of thy ſoule and body when thou thinkeſt in the end to returne to life, it being ſaid to thee, and to all ſuch as thou art, Depart ye workers of iniquity, I know you not. Note. Mat. 7. 23.

Remove thy way farre from her, and come not nigh the doore of her houſe. Verſ. 8. Even as a man that would avoyd the infection of the Plague, he muſt this, more dangerous, and to this end keep farre off, and not come nigh her doore, for he that will not evil doe, muſt doe nought that belongs thereto. So Muſſet, who noteth in this and the former verſe two meanes of being kept from the danger of this ſinne, 1. Verſ. 7. To be a diligent hearkener to the Word of God. 2. Here, not to come neare an whores houſe. Then he addeth the reaſon, ver. 9. Muſſet.

Leaſt thou give thy honour to others, and thy yeares to the cruell.

1. By going to whores thy comlineſſe and credit are loſt, wherein thy honour lyeth, and now thou art counted baſe, and vile, and looked upon with loathing.

2. If thou committeſt Adultery with another mans wife, thou art in danger of being cut off by her Husbands rage through jealouſie; if it be to one, a Siſter, by her Brothers, as Shechem by the brethren of Dinah. Gen. 34.

3. Verſ. 10. Leaſt ſtrangers be filled with thy labours, and thy riches be in another mans houſe; For he that goeth to whores, ſpends like the Prodigall his patrimony upon them, yea, and if he hath by his labour gotten ſomewhat, it goeth thus away for a little vaine and ſinfull pleaſure.

4. Leaſt thou mourne at the laſt, and ſay, &c. ver. 11. This ſinne will bring thee to miſery in the greateſt meaſure, for which thou ſhalt mourne, but have no remedy, when thy fleſh and body are conſumed. Here he ſheweth one cauſe that the Adulterer ſhall have to mourne, viz. for the waſting of his body and ſtrength, by diſeaſes coming through his incontinency; and ver. 14. he ſheweth another; I was almoſt in the midſt of the congregation in all evill; That is, ſaith Arboreus, This makes me ſorrow the more, becauſe I was carried away almoſt to all manner of wickedneſſe in the midſt of the Church; That is, of Doctors and Teachers, by whom I had admonitions to fly wickedneſſe, given me from time to time, ſo that I cannot for the extenuating of my ſinnes ſay, that I was ignorant, or knew not, how great and dangerous an evil this was. And this the Whoremonger is brought in ſpeaking, his fleſh and body being conſumed, and he now in a weak eſtate, and ready to dye, as was ſaid before, ver. 11. and he now upon this crying out againſt himſelfe, that he was ſo deſperately ungracious, as not to hearken to the inſtructions of his teachers; which ſhould be a warning to all wicked perſons more to regard holy inſtructions, to be kept hereby from miſery coming by ſinne, by being turned there from before it be too late. And hereby is intimated, that this doth not a little aggravate the ſins of Chriſtians, that they live under meanes of holy and zealous teaching, as the wickedneſſe of Chorazin, Bethſaida, and Capernaum are aggravated, Matth. 11. and chap. 12. and of the Jewes in generall, John 3. 16. Joh. 15. 22. Arbor. Note. Note.

Touching the two words here uſed, Congregation, and Aſſembly, or Church, Arboreus ſaith, That one did ſet forth the Synedrion, or Congregation of the ſeventy, the other the aſſembly of all the faithfull, to pray, and heare the Word in the publick places conſecrated for this purpoſe. But to ſay ſomething more of all things in particular, from ver. 8. Remove thy way farre off from her; That is, fly from her, as Joſeph did from his Miſtris. This, as Auguſtine ſaith ſpeaking upon that, 1 Cor. 6. 18. Fly fornication, is a kinde of ſuffering Martyrdome;

For although theſe, ſaith he, be times of peace, yet they are times of ſuffering martyrdome, for he that flyeth fornication, is a Martyr, his members upon earth are thus mortified, and by the Spirit he mortifieth the fleſh, and ſhall live, and be crowned with glory. He that thus flyeth, fighteth no leſſe valiantly, then he that fighteth in the face of the enemy, and therefore it is no ſhame, but a praiſe; for the honour by adultery given to another, this is by the diſgrace which a man thus doth to himſelfe; according to which Cyprian ſaith, An Harlot bringeth a man to manifold deſtructions, by infinite diſgraces, and they are called infinite, becauſe the diſgrace thus coming, is never amongſt men wome away againe to his dying day; for the next words, thy yeares to the cruell: Some hereby underſtand the woman, that is an harlot, of whom Chryſoſt. ſaith, That ſhe is of all beaſts the moſt cruell, in inveighing againſt Herodias for asking John Baptiſts head; for the next words, v. 10. Strangers being filled with thy wealth, the Vulg. with thy ſtrength, is likewiſe Heb. wealth is meant, becauſe that herein lyeth a mans ſtrength, or might, as the word is alſo uſed, Hoſ. 7. Job 30. Eſa. 3.

Chryſoſt. To expreſſe the conſumption of a mans wealth upon harlots, calleth them the quickſands, and rocks of Patrimonies, which Fulgentius further proſecuting, ſaith, That the Poets feigne Scylla one of the great Rocks of the ſea to have been an Harlot, that caſting her ſelfe into the ſea, was turned into a moſt dangerous Rocke, ſplitting and drowning the ſhips that are beaten upon her; ſo very great and rich ſhips of Patrimonies are daſhed in peeces, and periſh. For the words v. 11. And thou mourne at the laſt, the word בהמותה properly ſignifieth to roare, and in uſing it he alludeth to a Lion being ready to ſtarve for hunger, and roaring out therefore, ſo that the extream poverty, to which the Whoremonger is brought in the end, is hereby denoted, And thy fleſh and body be conſumed; For as Phyſitians note, the braine thus waſted, and the ſpina dorſi, the moiſture in the nerves, the backe is weakned, the eyes made dim, the belly pained, the reines, the teeth, the loines, the heart, the liver, the breaſt, the bladder, and the feet, according to Galen, Hippocrates, Avicen, Cornel. Celſus, and divers others. Laſtly, for the words v. 14. I was almoſt in all evill in the midſt of the congregation. Some by evill underſtanding ſinne, as hath been ſaid before; by the congregation, will have the company of evill perſons meant; ſome, as if he ſaid, I was a publickly noted ſinner. Others, by evill underſtanding the Devill, ſay, I was amongſt the devills of hell, as it were, although I lived amongſt men. Laſtly, others by evill underſtanding miſery, I was in all miſery, whereinto my inordinate life brought me; and for the word almoſt, they underſtand it of a ſhort time; as if he had ſaid, I was ſoone brought to all manner of miſery, which arrideth mee moſt, but for the evill here ſpoken of, wee may beſt underſtand ſinne and miſery; and from the expoſition of the Congregation, I thinke it not good to recede from the firſt.

Drinke waters out of thine owne ceſterne, and running waters out of thine owne well. Here after a ſerious charge given againſt whoredome, a remedy is preſcribed, by being fully ſatisfied with a mans owne wife, whom he hath ſingularly once choſen, and vowed forſaking all others to cleave onely to her. As he that hath a Well of his owne, which as he hath profeſſed, ſeemed to him the beſt and moſt delectable of all others, cares not for going out to fetch water to drinke elſewhere, becauſe his owne is beſt; ſo he that hath a wife ſhould be ſo delighted in her love, as to be fully ſatisfied herewith at all times as long as ſhe liveth, ſetting light by all other women in compariſon of her; ſee ſomewhat like this. Eccl. 9. 9. and the Poet Ovid ſeemeth to have taken that which he writeth from hence. That thirſt wherewith thou burneſt, thou muſt fill here we yeeld, that thou mayeſt drinke out of the midſt of the river, and enjoy thy owne wench alwayes without the controle of any man. In theſe words is a manifeſt allowance of Matrimony, as a remedy againſt whoredome, ſo 1 Cor. 7. 1. Heb. 13. 4. being reſtrained to ſome, but extended to all men that have not the gift of continency.

And Cyprian writing of chaſtity, and aſcribing to the unmarried the firſt degree thereof, yeeldeth that the ſecond is of the married, when every man keeps him to his his owne wife, and every woman to her owne husband. So that it is Antichriſtian to inhibit Clergy-men from marriage, and deviliſh, as may be gathered from 1 *Tim.*4.1.3. For the ſetting forth of a wife by the ſimilitude of waters, Lavater ſaith, that heathen writers doe the like, as Heſiod. ſaying, A man goeth not over a river, but having firſt powred out his prayers to the gods: whereby Johan. Grammat. underſtandeth, that it is meant of a wife, with whom a man muſt not, may not come together, but prayers being firſt offered up to God for the ſanctifying of the marriage: Plutarch ſaith, that anciently at marriages they uſed water and fire, the one to ſignifie the fervent heat of the deſire both of the man to the woman, and of the woman to the man, the other to ſignifie their coming together in marriage to be a means, as by water, of quenching this fire. There is the like in a man drawn after whores, and in the whore, for there is alſo fervent heat of luſt, but there is not the like effect of water, for hereby the fire is ſo far from being allayed as that it burneth the more, as water caſt upon brimſtone on fire, it burneth the more, according to which Auguſt. ſpeaking of it ſaith, Their luſt is brimſtone, it burneth very much, and cannot be extinguiſhed, Eſa. 51.1. it is ſaid, Looke to the hole of the pit from whence ye were digged; where the word rendred pit is מקבה, and בקבה ſignifieth a woman, ſo that a woman, if we looke to the denomination of her name is not unaptly ſet forth by a Pit or Well of water; or as Chryſoſt. noteth, to a Ciſterne into which no water cometh but from above, ſo Sarah ſpoken of by this name was not fruitfull, but by the ſingular bleſſing of God coming downe from heaven, and hereby any wife is made as a Ciſterne of running waters, or a Well iſſuing out by children, as followeth Verſ. 16.

Let thy fountaine be diſperſed abroad, and rivers of water in the ſtreets; which is ſpoken of children brought forth and well educated, and ſo coming forth, afterwards being profitable members of the Commonwealth, of whom others have joy, as they that dwell in hot and dry places, of ſprings of water coming out. And that when it is thus, it is by Gods bleſſing as is ſhewed, v.18. But it is to be noted, that here are two words uſed בור rendred Ciſterne, and באר a Well, intimating that through the bleſſing of God, the wife, who is as a Ciſterne without water, is made a Well full of water, and iſſuing out from generation, to generation into multitudes, as God pleaſeth, and we may ſee in Abrahams wife Sarah, whoſe childrens children increaſed ſo mightily both in Ægypt and afterwards: Whereas ſome by Ciſterne here underſtand worldly goods, as if the charge given were to make uſe of a mans owne, and not either by oppreſſion, or theft, or deceit, to take other mens, it is not to the purpoſe here, the argument in hand being nothing tending to this, but to commend continency, and to make a man out of love with ſinfull luſts after harlots. But whereas others by this Ciſterne, or Well underſtand the Spirit of God ſpeaking in his word, and by the ſe waters good and true inſtructions drawne from thence, whereunto every faithfull ſoule hath a thirſting deſire: I cannot, but approve of this, as a fit and profitable allegoricall interpretation: According to this then, drinke waters out of thine owne Ciſterne, is, as if he had ſaid, Drink not in puddy and venemous inſtructions out of the muddy ditches and ponds of hereticks that derive them from their owne addle braines, truſt not every ſpirit to be lead hereby, but out of the cleare fountaine of the Scriptures, which God hath given thee, and his Spirit ſpeaking therein for thy guide. Gregor. Thou that art a Preacher, having a fountaine of waters, which from thee flow forth to others, drinke thereof thy ſelfe, teach thy ſelfe firſt, and then teach thy congregation, and then doe thy waters come forth rightly into the ſtreets, and are diſperſed as followeth, v.16. If this allegory from waters to the Scriptures be followed, by the harlot likewiſe the hereticall Synagogue is to be underſtood, and all things ſpoken before touching her accordingly to be applied, as they may well be.

Verſ. 17. Let them be thine, and thine onely, &c. Here ſome go on again, as before, expounding this of worldly goods, as if a man were hereby warned not to communicate them to others, either Bauds or Whores; but others underſtand them of a mans wife, as if direction were given to keep a vigilant eye over her, that ſhe may have no ſtarting hole left whereby to goe aſide to others, that ſo the children which ſhee bringeth forth, may freely be thine owne; ſome, of a mans ſo keeping him to his owne wife being vertuous, as that hee may not by conſorting with an harlot bee neceſſitated to bring up and provide for children begotten of her, as well as for his owne, which may indeed bee the children of another man, as well as his, wee may take it both theſe laſt wayes, and ſo wee ſhall have the full meaning.

Verſ. 18. Let thy fountaine be bleſſed, and rejoyce with the wife of thy youth. Here the imparative may be taken for the future, as amongſt the Heb. it is the ſecond future, thy fountaine, that is, thy wife then ſhall be bleſſed by being made fruitfull, as Pſal. 127. where having ſpoken of the bleſſing upon one that feareth God, it is ſaid further to ſhew wherein this bleſſing ſhould lye, Thy wife ſhall be as a fruitfull vine, and thou ſhalt rejoyce in the wife of thy youth; that is, thou living in chaſte wedlocke with her, the joy and pleaſure which thou haſt in her, ſhall continue even when ſhe is old, and thou alſo, as if ſhe and thou were both ſtill young, ſuch difference ſhall there be betwixt keeping thee to her onely, and going after a harlot, the one being old, thou ſhalt loath, as by whom thy health and wealth being waſted, but ſtill alwayes love the other, as by whom rather both have been preſerved, as Gallen teacheth, That Venery moderately uſed with a mans owne wife, doth availe to the preſervation of the health and ſtrength of the body, to ſet forth which Pauſanias, that the Spartans had a Picture of Venus married with this ſuperſcription, ἀμοσογηρα deferring old age, as meaning that marriage doth not haſten, but deferre old age, ſo that man married be wiſe to moderate, and not to follow his luſts.

Verſ. 9. Let her be as the loving hinde, and pleaſant roe, &c. As the Bucke is taken with the love of the Hinde ſo, as that leaving the reſt of the herd of Deere, he followeth her from place to place, ſo let thy wife be to thee: Thus Muffet and Lavater, either as the Hinde for her great love to her young, and the Roe for the love thereof to the damme; or as great men love the fleſh of theſe beaſts, and extraordinarily delight in keeping them: I preferre the firſt, underſtanding both by the Hinde and the Roe, the ſame female of the Bucke, becauſe it is Heb. a feminine, and not the love betwixt the damme, and the young, can be thought a fit ſimilitude to ſet forth the love that ſhould be betwixt a man and his wife, but betwixt the male and the female. And amongſt all other creatures, it is taken from the Bucke, and the Hinde his female, becauſe the Bucke is obſerved to be moſt ardently ſet upon his love, and is moſt impatient of any corrivall. Some looking at the docibility of the Hinde, and how eaſily ſhee may be tamed being young, thinke this to be reſpected here, as implying alſo the tractability of a good wife, being eaſily brought to conforme her ſelfe to the manners of her husband, and this he muſt endeavour to doe betimes, whilſt ſhe is young, it being vaine to attempt it afterwards, as to make an Hinde tame, that is now paſt an hinnula, as the Roe is in that called: For her breaſts delighting thee alwayes, hereby is meant the imbraces of her, Vulg. Let them inebriate thee; that is, fill thee ſo, as wine or ſtrong drinke, wherein one delighteth ſo as not to deſire any other, and this muſt be alwayes to the end of her life, and not onely whilſt ſhe is young and beautifull. And therefore it ſtands a man in hand when he taketh a wife to thinke upon this, that he may not be lead by wealth, or blinde affection to beauty, but make the feare of the Lord his loadſtone, which will not draw for a time but alwayes retain the ſame vertue to hold the thing touched herewith, and the iron together.

Muffet, Lavater.

And

And why wilt thou (my Sonne) be raviſht with a ſtrange woman? Here Salomon laboureth yet further in diſſwading from intanglement with an harlot, from this conſideration, That every mans wayes are before the eyes of the Lord, and he pondereth all his paths, as Pſal. 139. So that if any one ſhall flatter himſelfe, thinking that it ſhall not be knowne, he will goe ſo ſecretly to worke, he ſhall be herein deceived, for nothing that he doth can be hidden from God; and when he ſeeth ſuch abominations, he doth not preſently paſſe them over, but pondereth them; That is, weigheth the foulneſſe of the fact, as a Judge, before whom Caſes come, and Malefactors, and ſo giveth ſentence againſt all the wicked, the officers imployed to apprehend them being their owne ſins, of which he ſaith, ver. 22. That they ſhall lay hold upon him as Serjeants, or Bayliffes, to Arreſt him, and carry him to priſon, and as a Jaylor binding him there, as it were with cords and fetters, and ſo keeping him faſt till the day of Judgement; as it is ſaid of the evill Angels, that they are kept in chaines of darkneſſe till then.

For the eyes of God beholding wickedneſſe committed in ſecret, ſee Syracides, c. 23. and Seneca, and Bernard exhorting laſcivious perſons to thinke upon Cato, or Latius, or ſome other grave Senatour beholding them, and if this would ſtrike a feare into them, to thinke upon Gods preſence will doe it much more. Hereby the Heathen uſed to diſſwade and terrifie from ſinne, by ſaying, The gods behold and ſee thee, as Heſiod. Tertullian compareth an Adulterer going in the darke to his Whore to an Oſtridge, which hath a great body, but if his head be hidden in buſhes he is ſecure, thinking becauſe he ſeeth no body, that no body can ſee him; The like doth the Doterell in England, for his ſins laying hold upon him, and binding him as cords, one ſaith well; That not only the guiltineſſe of ſinne is as cords to his conſcience, which lookes upon the ſinner as bound, like a priſoner, being ready to come in againſt him when God will, to charge him there-with; but the ſins themſelves are as cords, or fetters, binding the ſinner that delighteth herein, and will not be warned, ſo faſt, that he cannot get looſe there-from any more, till that hereby he be yeelded up to death without remedy; wherefore Iſaiah compareth ſinnes to cords, and Cart-ropes, ſaying, Woe to them that draw on iniquity with Cart-ropes, &c. And againe, Leſt your bands, That is, the bands of your ſinnes be made ſtrong by your continuing in ſin againſt all admonitions. For the laſt words, He ſhall dye, &c. they follow moſt aptly after theſe promiſes, being taken, as if he had ſaid; He thinketh haply to come out of theſe cords when he will, as having a long time yet to live, but this his imagination deceiveth him at the laſt, death bodily preventeth him, and ſo departing without repentance he dyeth un-inſtructed, and after the bodily, immediatly followeth the death of the ſoule for evermore. To expreſſe which truſt of his to a longer life, the Sept. hath it; He is caſt downe out of the multitude of his life; the life of which he thought that there had been many dayes to come, failes him before he is aware of it, and ſo he periſheth. And thus ſhall it be with all that perſiſt in ſinne againſt inſtruction, upon hope to live to repent afterwards.

CHAP.

CHAP. VI.

THis Chapter containeth many good inſtructions, and warnings againſt divers Sins, and againſt Adultery alſo, which hath been ſo much inveighed againſt before; And,

Verſ. 1, 2.

Firſt, He giveth warning againſt Surety-ſhip, whereby many men unadviſedly run a great hazzard to their worldly eſtate, and ſometimes to their utter undoing, in ver. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. wherein both warning is given here againſt, and direction what to doe in caſe that a man be thus intangled, viz. To ſeeke with all diligence by all meanes to be delivered againe; as the timorous Roe, or young Hinde, or the Bird in a Net, who being in ſuch danger take no reſt, till they be againe at liberty; no more ſhould a Surety, but partly by importuning his friend, for whom he is Surety, to keep touch, and to pay the Debt, that he may not be damnified, and partly by intreating the Creditor to ſpare him, and to exact his Debt of the Debtor. If it be demanded here, whether all Surety-ſhip be not forbidden? I anſwer no, but circumſpection herein is preſcribed, that a man may not be taken hereby, as it were in a Net, for Paul was Surety to Philemon for Oneſimus; and the Wiſe man ſaith, An honeſt man is ſurety for his neighbour, but an impudent man leaveth him; And yet, ver. 19. he ſaith, A wicked man falleth into Surety-ſhip; as if it were by a Judgement upon him, that any man becommeth a Surety: but the ſcope of all is to ſhew, 1. That Surety-ſhip for any man may have danger in it, and therefore is generally to be taken heed of by thoſe that would live comfortably in the world, of which it was laſt ſpoken, chap. 5. ſhewing that to this end he muſt keep conſtant to his owne Wife, and not be allured by Harlots.

Eccl. 29. Verſ. 14. Verſ. 19.

Now aptly followeth another Charge againſt Surety-ſhip, the which will otherwiſe interrupt the joy of the Married, when a man muſt either pay anothers Debt to his great hinderance, or goe to priſon; therefore hence comes the Proverb, Sponde, noxa propè, Be Surety, and hurt is neare. For the goods of this world are uncertaine, ſo that he who hath wealth now, and where withall to ſatisfie his Creditor, may ſoone become ſo poore, as not to be able to doe it, and then the Surety is lookt after; It is therefore here meant, that a man ſhould not undertake, 1. For ſuch as by evill courſes bring themſelves to poverty. 2. When for an honeſt man, not to engage himſelfe very deep, to be ſure, not beyond his owne preſent ability; ſo that although he be forced to pay, yet he may have where withall to live ſtill. For thus to help a poore man that is in diſtreſſe, by being in Debt, through the hard-heartedneſſe of the Creditor, is to doe a great act of charity; and rich men are to be incouraged to undertake, and if need be to pay alſo in this caſe; but if otherwiſe thou haſt inconſiderately undertaken, know that thou art in danger, and therefore doe as hath been ſaid before, and ſeeking to the Creditor for mercy, humble thy ſelfe, and be not ſtout, ſo ſhalt thou come off with the leſſe loſſe, which becauſe ſome Sureties will not doe, they are forced to ſuffer all extremity.

Beda. Greg. Paſt. p. 3. The Allegory.

Chryſoſt.

Beda, Gregory, Chryſoſtome, Tho. Aquin. and Bernard, by the Surety here, allegorically underſtand the Paſtor, who taking a charge of ſoules upon him undertaketh for them, ſo that he had need to be very carefull, leſt any periſhing now through his neglect, or default, God, who is yet a friend, touch not being kept with him, become a Stranger, and accordingly proceed againſt him with rigour, according to Bernard, who ſaith, God is a friend in thy undertaking, but a ſtranger in calling thee to an account. And Gregory, To be Surety for thy friend, is to put the danger of another mans ſoule upon thy converſation, for before thou beganneſt to be a Preacher unto him, thou wert free, now by thy owne words thou art bound, becauſe he that ſpeakes good words to others is firſt bound to keep them himſelfe, and if he doth not, he is intangled; and it is juſt with God to exact ſo much good of thee, as thou haſt commanded and required of others. And Chryſoſtome ſaith, The Rector muſt give account of all men, women, and children com-committed to him, wherefore he bringeth ſo great a ſine upon his head, that I marvell how any Rector can be ſaved: but this is ſpoken more to terrifie, and to ſtirre up to circumſpection, then to determine; for ſo it were enough to diſcourage any man from this office, and ſo to make the people Paſtorleſſe; whereas St. Paul incourageth hereunto, ſaying, He that deſireth the office of a Biſhop, deſireth a worthy worke. 1 Tim. 3.

Goe to the Piſmire thou ſluggard, and conſider her wayes, and learne wiſdome. Having given a charge againſt one great evil, namely Surety-ſhip, tending ſo much to the prejudice of the married in reſpect of thriving; now he giveth warning againſt another, and that is Idleneſſe; and he propoundeth the little Ant for an example of induſtry and providence, as if he had ſaid; If the examples of holy men, and their increaſe in worldly wealth by induſtry, and the decree of God, that man ſhould get his bread with the ſweat of his browes, will not move thee, yet be moved in conſidering the induſtry, wit, and providence of this little Creature, of which Pliny writeth; That with often paſſing and repaſſing, they weare tracks even in Rocks. And Ariſtotle, That they gather up and carry Corne ſhed being upon the ground, greater then themſelves, and when they have brought it to their harbour, they divide it, that it may not grow againe, and ſo be made unuſefull for them, and being thus divided by gnawing it aſunder, they obſerve faire dayes to lay it out into the Sunne to dry, that it may not grow muſty. Verſ. 6. Pliny. Ariſtotle.

To theſe Piſmires we are ſent, (becauſe of them many things may, and ought to be learned, and we need not to goe farre to ſee them and their doings;

1. We may learne by their wearing the very way where they goe, although ſtony hard, through often going, ſo as that furrowes be as it were made therein; That nothing is ſo difficult, but by labour we may overcome. Note.

2. By their keeping to one track, one following after another, to keep all of us to the ſame way and ſtreight path of vertue, and never to goe out of it.

3. If they having no King nor Leader doe thus, much more the people living under Teachers, and Leaders, ought to doe ſo, and being deſtitute of ſuch at any time, not yet to deſiſt; and that every one, as there is none of them but travelleth, and laboureth thus, all the time that they can labour.

Thus Chryſoſtome, Ambroſe, and Baſil apply this Similitude, praiſing from hence induſtry, and providence in our worldly Callings; but Auguſtine not only ſo, but alſo applying it ſpiritually, ſaith, We ſhould learne of the Piſmire in the ſummer of our proſperity, whilſt we enjoy the meanes, to gather graines of conſolation into the cloſets of our breaſts, hiding them there againſt the winter of adverſity, and then we ſhall have in ſecret within us where-with to be ſupported, and not pine and famiſh for want of ſpirituall repaſt. Chryſoſt. Ambroſ. Auguſt. The Allegory.

Baſil, and Cyril, by the graines to be gathered, underſtand Almes, which are laid up in Heaven, the benefit whereof they ſhall have that are charitable when the time cometh, that will be more terrible to the uncharitable, then any hardeſt winter. Clemens Alexand. ſaith, That the Heathen Poets thought it nothing derogatory from Jupiter, to tell, That he turned himſelfe into the likeneſſe of a Piſmire; and of Endimidoſa begat the Myrmidons: hereupon ſome liken Chriſt to this little Creature, ſaying, That to him we are myſtically ſent to learne, and doe as our duty requireth; For as the Piſmire conſiſteth of two parts, like Globules joyned together in the midſt; ſo Chriſt of two Natures; and as the hinder part is as it were dragged upon the earth after the fore part, but that is more erect, ſo Chriſts Humanity by his Divinity; Thus divers wits make divers applications: but I reſt in the former, only let me adde one thing more out of Jerome; That Piſmires, when one amongſt them is dead, carry it forth orderly and bury it. Baſil. Cyril. Alexand. Cl. Alex. Hierom.

And one Antizoes further ſaith, That in doing this none but black appeare, if any red or yellow chanceth to come amongſt them, they fall upon it and teare it in peeces. Whither theſe things be true or no, Penes authores fides eſto. The ſcope of this place is by the example of the Piſmire to ſtirre men and women up to labour, and to fly idleneſſe. 2. To doe this in time. 3. To be provident for time to come, keeping ſome-what, as we ſay, for a blacke winter.

Touching

Touching labour and industry; For labouring in our callings, not only the holy Scriptures condemne the idle and slothfull, and streightly forbid this sinne, but also men led onely by the light of nature, as Lavater sheweth. Draco the Lawgiver of the Athenians, adjudged the idle, and such as would not worke, to dye. The Areopagites also punished the idle, and suffered none amongst them, but such as being from time to time examined could shew that they had a trade of life wherein they laboured to get their living; and the Massilians did the like: And good reason, because of idlenesse come many foule and grosse sinnes, fleshly uncleannesse, as was proved even in David, according to that saying, Otia si tollas, periere Cupidinis arcus.

Lavater.

2 Sam. 11.

The bow of Cupid cannot wound,
But where idlenesse doth abound.

2. Theft, lying, fraud, and deceit: for he that is in want, will rather steal, or cousen, or cheat, then starve, and he that liveth in idlenesse cannot but want, as it followeth v. 11

Vers. 11. Thy poverty comes as one that travelleth, and thy want as an armed man.

3. All sinne, that the devill by his suggestions shall attempt to draw a man to, because idlenesse is his advantage, continuall labour keeps off his assaults, as Jerom sheweth well, saying, Pray, and when thou art weary of praying, read, and after reading labour, be alwayes doing something that is good, that the devill coming, and not finding thee idle, may not be able to fasten any temptation upon thee.

Hieron Epist.

4. Besides the sinnes caused by idlenesse to the hurt of the soule, much evill also cometh hereby to the body, and the outward state, of one of which is expressly spoken v. 11. as hath been already noted; and another is, that the body is hereby corrupted, and so a foundation of sicknesse and death is laid, according to another saying,

Ovid. Cernis ut ignavum corrumpunt otia corpus, ut capiunt vitium, ni moveantur, aquæ.

Bodies by sloth doe much corrupt, and rot,
As water standing still, that runneth not.

2. For providence and saving that which a man hath gotten, the Pismire doth so, and likewise the Bee, which the Sept. Tr. bringeth in here also: and as August. noteth, Christ himself had a bag, wherein the money brought in unto him was kept to be afterwards laid out, as need should require; so also 1 Tim. 5. 8. whereas he saith, Care not for to morrow, and consider the foules of the aire which have no storehouses, &c. His meaning is, not to beat downe lawfull providence, and frugall keeping the remainder of a mans goods for afterwards, but distracting cares, as the word μεριμνα signifieth, when one is anxiously sollicitous about the meanes of living afterwards, being distrustfull of Gods providing for him, whereby a man greatly wrongeth his providence, which is over lesser things, and therefore much more over him, as made after his owne image; for Joseph is set forth for an example of that providence before spoken of, and it is plainly commended to us in the Pismire, who provideth her meat in Summer against Winter; yet it is a false collection, which Adimantus the Manichean made from hence, for the justification of covetous hoarding up of worldly treasures, against which August. writeth, confuting him by this, That the charge given here, is spiritually to be understood, as hath been said before, but this, saith he, Adimantus not understanding, inferreth hereupon, that the Scripture is contrary to it selfe, that of Christ to this of Salomon; but the best reconciliation of these places hath been already shewed.

Aug. cont. Adimant. c. 24.

For the third, that time must be taken whilst it is, to do that which a man hath to do either for body or soul: to this tendeth the saying, Whilst years and strength suffer, take paines, old age will soon come on, and then thou canst not; and again, Time is hairy on the forehead, and so to be laid hold upon, but bald behinde, so that if thou dost not now labour, afterwards it will be too late. He then, that will doe wisely must both in youth labour, that he may have wherwithall to live when he is old, and having gotten something, not to fall from his diligence and providence to live idlely and prodigally, but using the like industry and providence as long as he is able to his lives end. And in youth he must remember his Creator, beginning as Josiah and Timothy, betimes to feare God. Esau coming for his fathers blessing too late lost it, and many shall strive to enter in and shall not be able, if the Master of the house hath shut to his doores, and be gone to bed. If the Ant or Bee should not labour the former part of the yeare, but deferre going out to seeke proviſion to live upon till the coming on of Winter, they muſt needs ſtarve then, and dye; ſo he that in the time of his youth and ſtrength, gathereth not for his ſoule, at the approach of death, ſhall be deſtitute of that whereby he ſhould live for ever, and ſo be ſhut out, as the fooliſh Virgins, that went then to get oyle in their lamps, but all in vaine. Note.

And touching labouring in youth, and providing even in reſpect of theſe worldly things, for afterwards; there be certaine conſiderations, which may make any man ſo to doe, as namely either that he may then by ſome infirmity be diſabled, or by ſickneſſe, which may continue long upon him, or his Trade, or courſe of life, may fail him; or laſtly, times of ſcarcity may come, wherein it will not ſuffice, which he ſhall be able to get at that time to maintaine him, therefore let every one, whilſt he is young, and hath ſtrength, uſe the induſtry and providence before ſpoken of, as alſo that he may be the better able to beare the charges of wife and children, which may haply alſo then be much greater, and let none waſtefully ſpend what by labour, or otherwiſe they have gotten, leſt miſery betide them in the end, when they ſhall have moſt need of this worlds goods. But let no man on the other ſide, that is addicted to the gathering of worldly goods, take advantage hence, to ſay, That if he, like the Piſmire, give himſelfe wholly to follow the world, and gather, none can blame him, although as ſome others, he goeth not ſo much to Sermons, or ſpends no time in prayer, and reading of the word. For although all diligence in the works of our callings onely be commended to us here, and nothing be ſaid expreſly of any induſtry likewiſe to be uſed to get ſpirituall riches, yet both ch. 3. and 4. we are firſt and chiefly exhorted hereunto under the name of wiſdome, and he is converſant about the chiefe merchandiſe of the world, in getting that which is better then gold, and moſt precious ſtones, that laboureth to get wiſdome into his heart, and this is the true feare of God, as is taught, Job 28. 28.

A naughty perſon, a wicked man walketh with a froward mouth, Heb. A man of Belial; That is, who caſteth off the yoke, that lives licentiouſly. Having ſtirred up to diligence by the example of the Piſmire, and threatned poverty and want to the idle, now moſt aptly he ſubjoyneth an invective againſt ſuch licentious ones, as, ſay the Wiſe-man what he can, will live ſtill in idleneſſe and ſenſuality, and ſo being brought to poverty, are bold to runne into all manner of ſinne. Verſ. 12.

1. Froward ſpeeches, that is, ſuch as are prohibited in the word of God, oaths, curſes, perjuries, blaſphemies, railings, corrupt and filth communication, prophane, and vaine talke of all ſorts; for froward ſpeeches are contrary to right, and thoſe are right which be according to the rule of righteouſneſſe, the word of God, wherefore they are froward that be contrary.

2. When the wicked are ſo curbed, that they durſt not ſpeak with their mouths, then they ſpeake with their feet, winke with their eyes, teach with their fingers; that is, by all theſe their members they make what ſignes they can to ſhew the malignity of their hearts. Verſ. 13.

3. If neither by outward ſignes they dare expreſſe themſelves, yet they are of evill and perverſe hearts, and although the evill thoughts here breake not out, yet they defile a man.

4. They make contention, and machinate miſchiefe at all times; that is, they are ſtudying how to circumvent, and to doe miſchiefe to the righteous without ceaſing night and day, both whilſt theſe righteous perſons live, and when they are dead, as experience hath often taught. And for contention ſtirring up, this is verified in their ſtirring up of wars betwixt thoſe of the ſame Nation, and for the rooting out of the faithfull, and it is a blacke brand of men moſt corrupt in heart, that they practice and deviſe the making of contention betwixt one neighbour, and another continually. Verſ. 14. Matth. 15. 19.

Laſtly, for all this he ſheweth what ſhall come unto them, Deſtruction ſhall ſuddenly come unto them; this ſhall be the end of all licentious livers, neither ſhall any of them ever be delivered again. ing, ſith the word Apoſtate doth imply one that hath formerly imbraced the truth, but now is fallen from it.

Gregor. Beda. Bernard. Lyra.

About ſpeaking with his feet, teaching with his fingers, &c. I finde divers Expoſitions made by divers; Gregory, whom Beda followeth, and Bernard expound it onely in generall, that he ſheweth by the inordinate motion of all theſe parts of the body, the great wickedneſſe, either pride, or incontinency, or diſſimulation that is in him. Lyra, he winketh with his eyes, that is, upon the whoriſh woman in complying with her. He teareth with his feet, for ſo the Vulg. renders it, Heb. it is מוּלֵל ſignifying cutting off, but he expounds it of wearing evill and filthy wayes by often going in them, as foot-paths are worn: He ſpeaketh with his finger, by putting it out proudly ſhewing what he would have done, but without diſcretion or choice. But the word rendred ſpeaking is מורה teaching, as in N. Tran. But Cajetan.

Cajetan, He winkes with his eye, thus diſſembling to him, whom he meaneth to hurt, but ſhewing his mind to his complices; He tears with his feet, when by ſtamping, herewith he ſheweth that he would have them, againſt whom, brought under his feet; He ſpeaks with his fingers, he arrogateth ſo much knowledge to himſelf as to be able to point at the meaning with his finger, moſt exactly determining touching any thing. So that according to Cajet. three vices are here denoted out.

Winking with eyes.

1. Diſſimulation; 2. Cruelty; 3. Pride, and ſelfe-conceitednesſe. Some expound all this of diſſimulation onely. Laſtly, ſome by winking with the eyes ſay, that divers things are ſet forth; 1. Fearfulneſſe, for ſuch as Pliny noteth, winke much. 2. Fooliſhneſſe, for the fooliſh doe likewiſe. 3. Diſſimulation, for which conniving is commonly uſed for diſſembling. 4. Laſciviouſneſſe and pride, as Eſa 3. the proud daughters of Jeruſalem are ſaid to walk with haughty eyes, and ſtretched out necks, tinkling with their feet. 5. Deriſion in way of indignation, and hatred, as Pſal. 35. They hated mee without a cauſe, and winked with their eyes 6. Aſſentation or flattery. Againe, by ſpeaking or tearing with the feet, is ſet forth either an applauſe given to that which is ſpoken by another, ſo Cicero; or according to the uſe at this day, a diſlike by ſtamping with the feet, ſhewed.

Speaking with feet.

Cicero de Orator.

2. Giving a ſigne with the foot by one wicked mans ſecretly treading upon the foot of another. 3. Stately and pompous going forth. Laſtly, teaching with the fingers is either ſhewing by the lifting up of the hand a conſent, or in way of ſcorne, or deriſion, or by ſignes giving the fingers what one would have done. Many wayes then, whereby the wicked expreſſe the great wickedneſſe that is in them, are here ſet forth, when they doe not plainly utter any thing with their tongues, but hereby it is ſhewed, that even theſe inordinate motions of the members coming from an evill heart, are abominable before God, and the wicked ſhall bee judged therefore.

Eſa. 5. 8.

Note.

Arbor.

Arboreus, keeping to Vulg. Tranſlation an apoſtate, ſaith, That an hereticall teacher, who is fallen from the true faith, is here ſet forth in his colours, He winks with his eyes, by looking diſdainfully, tears with his feet, by proudly ſetting his ſteps in a compoſed manner, and ſpeaks with his fingers, petulantly ſtretching them in acting his part, as if he went beyond all others: yet all pointing with the finger, is not here condemned, nor all beckning with the hand, or ſtretching the hands out in teaching: for John the Baptiſt pointed out Chriſt with the finger, ſaying, Behold the Lamb of God, and Paul beckned with the hand to procure ſilence, whilſt he ſpake, and the Lord ſaith, I have ſtretched out my hands all the day long to a ſtiff-necked and gain-ſaying people.

Verſ. 16, 17, 18, 19.

Six things doth the Lord hate, the ſeventh is an abomination to him, a proud looke, a lying tongue, hands that ſhed innocent blond, an heart deviſing wicked imaginations, feet that run to miſchief, a falſe witneſſe, and him that ſoweth diſcord amongſt brethren. Touching pride, this is firſt named, becauſe it was the firſt ſinne, againſt which the wrath of God was provoked both by the Angels that fell, and by Adam and Evah, and ſtill God deſpiſeth, and is ready to pull downe all that be proud, and hath done it from time to time, as Pharaoh. Sennacharib, Nebuchadnezzar, and Herod, with many more. And for the coherence of theſe words with the former, it is to be noted, that he beginneth with haughty eyes, and

Jam. 4. 6. Eſa. 2.

then goeth to the hands, that ſhed innocent bloud, and after this to the feet, that run to every evill way, as before he had taxed theſe three members for the wickedneſſes hereby expreſſed: From whence it ſeemeth moſt probable (whatſoever conjectures have been before delivered) that haughty eyes are the winking eyes there ſpoken of, the feet tearing, ſuch as goe to evill, the fingers or hands ſpeaking or teaching, are the hands ſhedding bloud; for thus as by a lively voice with his hands the murtherer ſpeaketh and teacheth, how deſperately wicked and ſinfull he is, although he ſaith nothing. And ſo he fitly reſumeth the ſame argument againe after the laying open of ſuch wicked perſons, and what remedileſſe deſtruction they ſhould come to, here ſhewing how odious they are to God, ſo that none other end can be expected by them; and as he there cenſured the froward tongue, and the heart machinating evill cogitations alſo; ſo here the lying tongue, and the falſe witneſſe, ſpeaking lyes with his tongue to the doing of greateſt miſchiefe, are mentioned as two other of the ſix things hated by the Lord, and then ſuch an heart.

Laſtly, as there he is ſaid to make diſſention, ſo here, to make it amongſt brethren, and this ſeventh, as an abomination, the Lords ſoule is ſaid in ſpeciall to abhor, for this is the Heb: expreſſion, and ſo the Vulg. renders it, wherein yet a ſoule is but improperly aſcribed to him, nothing elſe being hereby meant, but as in New Tranſlation, to him, and it is ſo ſpoken, becauſe men uſe commonly ſo to ſpeak, when they would ſhew the greateſt deteſtation of any thing.

Next unto the haughty eyes, followeth a lying tongue; the firſt God hateth, becauſe ſo diametrically oppoſite unto him: for man to be elate is in effect to equalize himſelfe to God, who onely is high and excellent, and expects that all men ſhould look lowly before him, as if a ſubject ſhould ſet him up a throne by his Kings throne, as proud Lucifer is accuſed to have done. Eſa. 14. 12.

The ſecond God hateth, becauſe man being his creature, and made after Gods image, is by lying made like the devill. Joh. 8 44.

3. Hands that ſhed innocent bloud, for this is a breach of the firſt expreſſe Law of God given after the Floud, He that ſheddeth the bloud of man, by man ſhall his bloud be ſhed, and the reaſon is rendred, For after the image of God made he him. God tenders his image as his glory, for ſo man is ſaid to be the image and glory of God: kill a man then and ſtrike at Gods glory, and deſtroy that; therefore moſt hainous muſt this needs bee, yet not all ſhedding of mans bloud, but of the innocent. But of killing ſee more upon Command. 6. in my Catechiſme. Gen 9. 1 Cor. 11.

4. The heart deviſing evill, if thou breakeſt not out into murther, yet if thy heart be bent to cruelty through the hatred that is in thee, and thou ſtudieſt how to be revenged upon him, whom thou hateſt, as all the malicious doe, God hateth thee for this, for he ſeeth into the heart, and this hatred, and theſe malicious plottings are murther before him, although they never come into act, for which it is ſaid, He that hates his brother is a murther. A point to be conſidered by them, that account their thoughts as no ſinnes, ſo that they never doe, as they in their mindes deviſe, yet this toucheth not thoſe, that have evill thoughts come into their mindes, for which they are humbled, and whereof they heartily repent; For God doth not hate, but pardon ſuch, and to this he labours to bring us all by declaring how he hateth the very imaginations of the heart, if they be evill. 1 Joh. 3. 12. Note.

5. The feet that runne to miſchiefe, for this commonly followeth after miſchievous imaginations in the minde, to goe to this or that evill, to commit adultery, fornication, theft, idolatry, or any other, as going to Wizards, or Witches in time of ſickneſſe or loſſe: So that under this, all other foule ſinnes are comprehended, beſides thoſe before and after named. There needs not then any queſtion to be moved here, as Lavater doth, whether theſe be all the groſſeſt ſinnes that are, and anſwereth no, but theſe are ſpecified, becauſe by worldly men not accounted ſo great, which cannot hold, becauſe no ſinne is even amongſt ſuch counted greater then murther, and falſe witneſſing. But this Query is prevented, if thy feet running to miſchief, or to evill, as רעה ſignifieth, we underſtand any other notorious wickedneſſe, as hath been ſaid. Lavater.

6. A falſe witneſſe, that ſpeaketh lyes, this is an higher degree of ſinne, then bare lying, as tending to the overthrowing and undoing of men! ſo that a Common-wealth is by falſe Witneſſes over-thrown, and the well being of any State; for which, falſe Witneſſes are by God adjudged to beare the ſame puniſhment, that he ſhould have done againſt whom they came, to the loſſe of goods, life, or liberty; for in witneſſing before thoſe, to whom the power of Judicature is committed, falſe VVitneſſes doe not only lye, but ſweare falſly, againſt which Gods

Zech. 5. curſe as a great flying book is prepared.

7 The ſower of diſſention amongſt brethren; That is, the Tale-bearer, and Back-biter, the evil counſellour ſtirring up the Prince againſt his Subjects, or them againſt him; the husband againſt the wife, Parents againſt their children, the wife, children, or ſervants, againſt husband, father, or maſter; one kinſman, or friend, or neighbour againſt another; for the word Brethren is not to be reſtrained to thoſe that come of the ſame parents, but to be extended to the whole Church, or Nation, where the truth is imbraced, as Abraham ſaid to Lot, We
Gen. 13. 8. are brethren; and the Kings ſubjects are ſaid to be his brethren, Deut. 17. See alſo, Matth. 23. 8. 1 Joh. 3. Matth. 18. &c. the Tale-bearer then, that by telling to one what another ſaid of or againſt him, ſoweth the ſeed of diſſention, and is of all other ſinners an abomination to the Lord, and ſo are all incendiaries to ſtrife and warre, by counſelling, commanding, or compelling thereunto; for ſowing diſſention any way is a ſowing of the ſeed of bloud-ſhed, and that not of a few, but many times of thouſands, ſo that ſuch are greater ſinners then the ſhedder of the bloud of one, or two, of which it was ſpoken before; yea, if a man be but a Levit. 19. 16. Tale-bearer, he is ſaid to ſtand againſt the bloud of his neighbour. But it is to be noted, that he ſaith not contention amongſt any, but brethren; for otherwiſe Chriſt ſowed diſſention, when by his coming the Father was againſt the Sonne, and the Sonne againſt the Father, the Mother againſt the Daughter, &c. It is therefore Note. to be underſtood, that there are ſome with whom we are not to have peace, as the Iſraelites might not with the Canaanites; That is, Apoſtates, that fall away from the truth, ſometime received and held in the Church of God, when the greateſt light ſhined therein, as did in the Apoſtles dayes; and diſſention with ſuch is not here taxed, or in any other place, but rather commended and required, as Jud. Epiſt. where he writeth to Chriſtians to contend for the Faith; and touch-

Revel. 19. which ſhe hath done in ſhedding the bloud of the Saints: and the Word of God riding out upon a white Horſe, and Armies of God following after, kill and ſlay abundantly.

Exod. 32. The Levites alſo are called to goe with their ſwords among Apoſtate Brethren, that had ſo foulley ſinned with the golden Calfe, and to kill and ſlay them, without ſparing their neareſt Kinſmen, and are therefore afterwards bleſſed. See alſo Deut. 33. Deut. 13. Wherefore the Papiſts cannot juſtly object againſt us, the Miniſters of the reformed Religion, That we are ſowers of diſſention, becauſe by our teaching ſo great a breach is made in the Church, and ſo much fighting and bloud-ſhed hath followed hereupon, for the foundation of this diſſention was long agoe laid by their Apoſtaſie from the Truth to ſo many groſſe errours, whereof there is no ground in the Apoſtles writings; for they to whomſoever theſe are diſcovered, are bound to quit themſelves from them, whatſoever followeth thereupon, and for ſo doing cannot be counted ſowers of the diſſentions that follow, but they that ſeeke by force to reduce them to their vomit againe. Yet I cannot juſtifie thoſe of our Religion, that being Subjects have ſought by taking up Armes to purchaſe themſelves the liberty of profeſſing it, as our brethren in France at the firſt did, whereby occaſion of much Civil Warre and bloud-ſhed was given, which could not be ſuppreſſed againe in forty years, neither could they ever prevaile to bring it to be the Religion of the Kingdome, but when moſt, to have it only tolerated.

But our Fore-fathers of England patiently waiting upon God, when they were perſecuted in the time of Queene Mary, were ſoone delivered from her tyranny, and were bleſſed with a glorious Queene of their owne profeſſion, who ſetled it for the Religion of the Kingdome, that of Popery being no more ſo much as tolerated here. For that was a way to which the French were tranſported by prepoſterous zeale, and not according to the rule at firſt given by our Lord, With patience poſſeſſe your ſoules; and followed by a cloud of Witneſſes for three hundred yeares together, whilſt heathen Perſecutions laſted, there being none in all that time that ſought by force of Armes to obtaine this liberty, but by patient laying downe their Lives: And ſo God in his good time bleſſed them with an Emperour, that did the like in all the Romane Monarchy, that Queene Elizabeth did here in England. But we, ſince after more then eighty yeares enjoyment of the Goſpel, and withall of proſperity and peace unparalleld in any age, have ſtirred up diſſention amongſt our ſelves, entering into Warres, and that not as they in France, but Proteſtants againſt Proteſtants: Thus, whilſt we pretended a more thorow and glorious Reformation, bringing in a Babel-like confuſion, and aſperſing our Religion, alwayes hitherto unſpotted with the foule crimes of Diſloyalty, bloud-ſhed, and rapines. The Lord open our eyes yet at length, that we may ſee into our errours, and there may be an healing of our ſins and miſeries.

My Son, keep thy Fathers commandements, and forſake not the Law of thy Mother. Verſ. 20.

Salomon having, chap. 5. given a charge againſt the foule ſinne of Adultery, and Fornication, and diſſwaded here-from by conſidering the miſery and want that Whoremongers fall into through Gods juſt Judgement upon them; and in the former part of this chapter againſt Surety-ſhip and idleneſſe, and the evill courſes that idle perſons coming to want take into, all which make greatly againſt the happineſſe of the married in this life; now he returnes to the ſame theame againſt Adultery againe, and proſecutes it to the end of this chapter; and in this verſe, and ver. 21, 22, 23, 24. as one that enters upon an Argument of great moment.

He againe makes a Preface, as chap. 5. 1. and as chap. 1. 8. to move the more, he propounds it not only as his command, but of his mother alſo; and as chap. 3. 17. and 4. 10. 12. So here he ſheweth againe, how ſafe he ſhall be, that applieth his heart to walke ſo wiſely, as his commandements teach, upon which I will ſay no more here, but referre the Reader to that which hath been already ſaid upon thoſe places.

Luſt not after her beauty, &c. Verſ. 25.

The whoriſh woman brings a man to a morſell of bread. Verſ. 26.

After the Preface, the Commandement followeth, and becauſe the Harlot by her beauty inſnareth men, and ſpecially by her wanton alluring eye, a waming is given here-againſt, which is inforced with divers reaſons. 1. Becauſe the fruit of Adultery or Whoredome is poverty: for although ſome Adultereſſes allure men by gifts, which they give moſt ſhameleſly to them, yet moſt commonly when they have taken a man with the ſnare of their beauty, they draw rich gifts from them, and thus in time they are waſted in their eſtates, and impoveriſhed and brought ſo low, that they want even bread, as the Prodigall did.

Thus Cajetan, who diſtinguiſheth alſo the words of this verſe, applying the firſt to an Harlot by trade or profeſſion, A Whore brings a man to a morſell of bread, the laſt to a wife of another man, an Adultereſſe, A woman hunts for the Precious life of a man, or as the word ſignifieth, his ſoule; although ſhe takes nothing, yet by her he looſeth much more then an Whores hire, his life, if the Law be proſecuted againſt him, becauſe the puniſhment of Adultery is death, and his ſoule for ever, of which our Lord ſaith; What ſhall it profit a man to win the whole world, and to looſe his ſoule? Cajeta.

Notable upon this is the ſaying of Auguſtine, O how great iniquity is this Adultery, how great a perverſneſſe! the ſoule redeemed by the precious bloud of Chriſt, is thus for the pleaſure of an houre given to the Devill, a thing much to be lamented and bewailed, when that which delighteth is ſoone gone, that which tormenteth, remaineth without end. Auguſt. Lib. de honeſt. mulier.

This expoſition of a man being brought to a morſell of bread by an Harlot is generally followed, and agreeth beſt to the Hebr. עַד כִּכַּר לֶחֶם, but the vulg. renders it, The price of an Harlot is ſcarce one bread; expounded commonly by ſuch as follow that reading of a little matter, that is given to her, but withall the ſoule is hazzar le l, which is farre more precious; and to approve this, they bring for example, Judah giving a Kid to his Daughter-in-Law Thamar, in the habite of an Whore, to lye with her, which was in thoſe dayes a thing of ſmall value. And the Athenians made a Law, that a ſmall gift only ſhould be given her, as Suidas ſaith. And thus Auguſtine underſtanding this place ſaith, turning it yet to another ſence, The pleaſure of whoredome is no more, but as of a peece of bread, which a man being hungry eates greedily with delight, but it is ſoone done and digeſted, and then he is hungry againe, but the loſſe ſuſtained is unſpeakeable and everlaſting, namely, the loſſe of the ſoule. Some by this bread underſtand, that which is by Hunters given to a wild Beaſt, ſo made, as that the Beaſt eating it, is caſt into a ſleep, and ſo eaſily taken.

This laſt ſeemeth to me the beſt, and the Hebr. will beare it being thus rendred, word for word; By reaſon of the whoriſh woman, even a cruſt of bread, a woman hunts after the precious ſoule of a man; That is, offering, or giving only a peece of bread, as it were, as the cunning Hunter dealeth by the Beaſt, when ſhee yeeldeth the uſe of her body to him, ſhe taketh and deſtroyeth his ſoule; the pleaſure that he thus hath, being no more then that of a peece of bread to the hungry for the preſent, but of as evill conſequence, as the bread confected purpoſely by the Hunter, being eaten by the beaſt. The Reader may follow either this, or the firſt expoſition, for it agreeth well either way, but if the firſt be followed, here are two evils coming by Adultery, and Whoredome, the one extreame poverty, the other the loſſe of the ſoule, enough to prevaile with any man to make him fly this foule ſinne, and not to be taken with the Harlots beauty: touching which, heare therefore what Chryſoſtome ſaith; When thou ſeeſt a faire woman looking with a pleaſant countenance upon thee, pull off her skin, and then thou ſhalt ſee all the vileneſſe of her elegancy; dwell not upon the outward aſpect, but pierce in thy cogitation into her inner parts, and what ſhalt thou ſee there, but bones, veines, and ſinews? And againe, thus having ſeene her beauty outwardly, and her deformity inwardly, thou wilt ſay, that the fineneſſe of her body is nothing elſe but a ſepulcher plaiſtered and whited over, but full of filthineſſe within.

Chryſoſt.

Againe, looke not upon a womans beauty, for that ſoone paſſeth away, but woundeth, and the wound hereby made paſſeth not away, but remaineth and ſlayeth, even as an Hart wounded by the dart of the Hunter, although he eſcapeth away, yet he dyeth of his wound. And Ambroſe ſaith, The eye of the Harlot is the ſnare of the Lover, in alluding to that, womans hunting after a mans ſoule.

Doe but think then (O man full of luſt) that when beauty appeares, a Net is ſpread for thee, as by a Fowler before a Bird a Net is ſpread; and ſeeing this, be not more fooliſh then the ſilly Bird, before whom the Net is ſpread in vaine if it be ſeene, for then ſhe flyeth away, and keepes afarre off, as was ſaid before, chap. 1. 17.

Verſ. 27. Lavater. Can a man take fire in his boſome, and his cloathes not be burnt? Can he goe upon coales, and his feete not be burnt? Becauſe, as Lavater hath it, ſome are not moved by that which hath been ſaid, but harden themſelves to the committing of this ſinne, upon this ground, That whatſoever affections by ſeeing are ſtirred up in them, yet they ſhall goe no further, but they will keep them within their owne breaſts, and ſo they ſhall never hurt them.

Againſt this a Compariſon is here taken from Fire, as if he had ſaid; The eyeing of beauty in a woman, is like unto the opening of the boſome to take in fire, or treading with the feete upon fire, but neither of theſe can a man doe without burning; no more can he fix his eyes upon beauty, or with his affections, which are the feete of his minde, goe as it were hereupon, but the fire of luſt, by this meanes kindled, will burne within him, and hurt and bring him to much paine and loſſe afterwards, if the burning proveth not unquenchable, and utterly deſtructive. And if beholding alone hath this dangerous effect, much more kiſſing and wanton dalliance, for which chambering and wantonneſſe are cenſured, as fruits of the fleſh, excluding out of the Kingdome of heaven.

Note.

Gal. 5. 19.

Nilus following this compariſon taken from Fire, ſaith, She is more dangerous then he, fire, becauſe if a man feeles himſelfe burne by fire, he goeth from it, and is pained, but from this fire burning he goeth not, but comes nearer, inſtead of paine, feeling nothing but delight, till that he be deſtroyed hereby.

Auguſt. Fire doth little hurt if it be ſhaken off ſo ſoone as it flyeth upon us, but if delay be made before this be done, it burneth; ſo ſeeing beauty hurteth not, but fixing the eye upon her eyes cannot poſſibly be without burning, the heart is now bewitched with the eye by the eye. And he diſtinguiſheth betwixt fire here ſpoken of in the boſome, and fiery coales, upon which one goeth with his feet; the fire in the boſome is ſome beautifull woman, a ſtranger of the better ſort beheld with pleaſure; the burning coales under the feete ſet forth a Maid-ſervant, with luſt towards whom by too much familiarity thou mayeſt alſo be taken and burned, although ſhe be of an inferiour condition, as it were, under thy feet. Some expound it of a blemiſh thus gotten, that is not worne away againe; ſome hence condemne not only fixing the eye, but the ſlighteſt converſing with her that may be, as he that with his bare feete goeth upon burning coales, cannot be without all hurt hereby, make what haſt he can to get off. And becauſe the Garment burning is ſpoken of, Baſil noteth, That it is dangerous to meddle with a woman, although a garment be between thee and her, for luſt is ſtirred up even by the touch of her garment, verſ. 29.

So he that goeth in to his neighbours wife, who ſo toucheth her ſhall not be innocent; That is, as he that goeth upon burning coales cannot but be hurt, ſo he that goeth in unto his neigl bours wife, that is by lying with her he is hurt, as it were by fire in his boſome, and if he doth not ſo, but only toucheth, or wantonly kiſſeth her, he ſhall not eſcape without all hurt: God counts not him that goeth but thus farre as an innocent man, he is even by this blemiſhed before him, although carnall men count this as nothing; a good leſſon for wanton men, that will be kiſſing and hugging of any woman that cometh in their way; hereby let them learne to leave this ſinfull cuſtome, as making them guilty before God, as well as Adultery, though not ſo greatly.

There is alſo according to ſome, another thing intimated in ſaying, Fire in his boſome; that is, the luſtfull perſon may thinke that his wickedneſſe ſhall be kept ſecret, but that is impoſſible as for him, that hath fire in his boſome, to conceale it, for it will burne his garments, and ſo cauſe a ſmell, whereby it ſhall be perceived; ſo ſuch foule ſinnes will come out.

Here finally a compariſon is made betwixt a thiefe and an adulterer, He is not deſpiſed that ſtealeth to ſatisfie his hunger, &c. His puniſhment that ſtealeth indeed is great, although he be miſerably poore, for if he be found, and hath not wherewith to make reſtitution, by the Law of God he was to be ſold for a ſervant, and ſo reſtitution was to be made, but the adulterer by the ſame Law was to dye, and the whoriſh womans husband, whom he had defiled, he might be ſure, would proſecute the Law againſt him to the uttermoſt, and not be pacified, although he would give him great gifts, yea all that he hath, becauſe he hath robbed him of his chiefeſt treaſure, for which he cannot make him amends whatſoever he doth. Chryſoſt. ſaith, that adultery is not onely greater then theft, but then Idolatry, becauſe the adultreſſe is to be put away, but the idolatreſſe to dwell ſtill with her husband, if ſhe will; ſome others affirme it to be greater then any other evill committed againſt man, except Treaſon againſt the Prince, ſo greater then perjury, becauſe bringing more detriment to the Commonwealth. But to hold to the compariſon made by Salomon, as moſt apt, becauſe both theft, and adultery are acted in ſecret, both are great wrongs, and as hunger putteth on to the one, ſo an evill appetite to the other, a queſtion ariſeth here, becauſe he ſaith, That he ſhall reſtore ſevenfold, and another, becauſe it is added, And give all his ſubſtance; for in the Law four-fold, or five-fold is the greateſt reſtitution appointed, and in ſome caſe but twofold. Some ſay, that in other Nations a ſevenfold reſtitution was required, but this is onely conjecturall; Some that two and five are put together to make ſeven, if part of the thing ſtolne remaineth alive, and part be gone, for the one two-fold reſtitution being made, for the other five-fold; Some by ſevenfold underſtand a perfect fect and full reſtitution, becauſe the number of ſeven, is a number of perfection: and this doe I prefer as moſt probable. For the other queſtion And is ſometimes in Hebrew put for Or, and ſo it is meant, or give all his ſubſtance, whereby it ſeemeth, that if a thiefe had any worldly goods, although not ſufficient to countervaile the worth of that which was ſtolne twice or foure times over, yet the man robbed muſt accept of theſe as a ſatisfaction, but if he had not, then he was to be ſold, and with his price reſtitution to be made, becauſe Exod. 22. it is ordained that he ſhould be ſold, here in caſe he hath not enough to ſatisfie for the thing ſtolne, that hee ſhould give all his ſubſtance. But why is it ſaid, The thiefe is not deſpiſed in the caſe here put? and in Vulg. Latine, It is no great fault; Is there any neceſſity that diſpenſeth with Gods Law, Thou ſhalt not ſteale? Stealing by whomſoever, is condemned for ſo great a ſinne, as that whoſoever doth it, ſhall not inherit the Kingdome of heaven. A poore man therefore howſoever put to it, for food or raiment, or other neceſſaries, ought rather to periſh bodily, then by ſtealing to hazard his ſoul: It is ſo far from being a little ſin as that it is ſometime linked with the foul ſin of adultery, Thou ſaweſt a thiefe, and didſt runne with him, and tookeſt part with the adulterer, and a charge is given againſt it, as well under the New Teſtament, as under the Old. Let him that ſtole, ſteale no more, but worke with his hands the thing that is good. The ſcope therefore of this place is not to extenuate this ſinne, that any man in want may be bold to commit it, but to aggravate the ſinne of adultery, as farre more heinous. The thiefe is infamous, and all honeſt men are averſe from ſuch as will ſteale, and from having to doe with them, but the poor man who is juſt and true, they eſteem well of, though he be very poore, and are ready to be helpfull to him, as there is good reaſon, becauſe he liveth by precept, being induſtrious and painfull in his calling, and not waſting what he getteth by running to any exceſſe of riot, as others doe, and ſo either by idleneſſe or drunkenneſſe, come to be cloathed with rags and to be ready to ſtarve through hunger; for ſuch feare not God, and therefore are none of his poore members, neither doth any good ſpoken of the poore pertaine to them, as that they receive the Goſpel, and are rich in faith, for theſe are the priviledges onely of the poore that worke, and abhor from all ſtealing and injuſtice. Wherefore David declaring to what poore he did good, ſaith, To the Saints, and ſuch as excell in vertue, and Chriſt in rewarding the charitable, praiſeth not the feeding or giving drinke to any, but his poore members, but giving to them he praiſeth and rewardeth, which ſhould make us to order our charity with this diſcretion, as David ſaith of the righteous, He diſtributeth and giveth to the poore, he ordereth his wayes with diſcretion. We ought indeed to do good to all, but eſpecially to thoſe of the houſhold of faith, yea to enemies when they hunger; but this is to be done more ſparingly to prevent periſhing through want onely, not to maintain them in their idle wayes, but reproving them therefore that they may ceaſe from a vagabond and idle life, and ſo the evills that follow by maintaining ſuch may be prevented, and not daily increaſed as now they are.

But to returne to that, for which ſtealing is here ſpoken of by way of compariſon, extenuating this ſinne thus, doth no more juſtifie him that ſteales for neceſſity, then the condemning of the Jewes, in compariſon of the Sodomites, juſtified them. The abomination of adultery appeareth hereby to be the greater, becauſe the adulterer doth more vilely then the thiefe; 1. For that neceſſity inforceth the one, but there is no neceſſity to inforce the other, but either he hath a wife of his owne, to whom he may goe in for the neceſſity of his nature, or if he hath not, he may take one. 2. Such a thiefe ſteales but a little bread or cloath, but the adulterer ſtealeth away the heart of another mans wife, which is more to him then all worldly wealth, yea he robbeth his family of credit, his children being by this meanes counted baſtards, and of his inheritance, and goods which goe to ſtrangers, yea and of his goods alſo, that by his whoriſh wife are given unto him, and in his abſence ſpent upon him. 3. The thiefe ſtealing brandeth not the party from whom with a note of diſgrace by this fact, but the adulterer doth the husband of ſuch a wife he undergoeth the odious name of a Cuckld, a Baud to his wife, if he ſuffereth this wrong, wrong, and ſeeks not to bring the Adulterer to condigne puniſhment, and his wife turned an harlot alſo. The conſideration of this, ſhould make Adulterers aſhamed, and not being guilty of ſo foule an evill, lift up their heads, as worthy ſtill to be well accounted of; for the thiefe, whom thou ſo much deſpiſeſt is nothing ſo wicked and vile, as thou Adulterer art. And therefore great is the imperfection in our Lawes, whereby a poore thiefe is hanged, but the Adulterer goeth unpuniſhed; whereas the Law of God is onely for reſtitution, unleſſe in caſe of breaking into an houſe in the night, but for ſtoning the adulterous to death And amongſt the heathen, lead onely by the light of nature, death hath alſo been the puniſhment. The Saxons who of old inhabited this land, ſtrangled the Adultereſſe being taken, and then burnt her body with fire, and hanged the Adulterer over a flaming fire, burning him by degrees, till he died. as Boniface Archbiſhop of Moguntz writeth in his Epiſtle to a King in this land, who being a Chriſtian lived in Adultery. Julius Capitolinus writeth of Opilius Macrinus an Emperour, that he cauſed the bodies of the Adulterer, and the Whore to bee joyned together, and ſo burnt with fire. Aurelianus cauſed the Adulterers legs to be bound to the boughs of two trees bent together, and then violently being lifted up again, his body was torne aſunder. And the Julian Law amongſt the Romans puniſhed Adultery with death by cutting off the head. Laſtly, the Turkes ſtones Adulterers to death. Amongſt many people that be Chriſtian, it is not now ſo, but the Adulterous goe ſcot-free, onely being put to a little penance, and this ſeemeth to have been grounded upon John 8. where to the woman, taken in Adultery, Chriſt ſaith, when he had asked her, Hath no man condemned thee? and ſhe anſwered, No man, Lord: Neither doe I condemne thee. But it is to be noted, that hee ſaith not thus, but after he heard that no man paſſed ſentence againſt her, hereby intimating, that he would not interrupt the courſe of the Law, but if according to it, ſhe had been proceeded againſt, he would not have releated her, but ſhe being brought to be judged by him, and condemned to dye, he did no more in effect, but put off from him the Judicatory office, as he did alſo Luke 12. the time now not being for him to judge, but to convert, and forgive, and ſave; make up therefore the defects of your Lawes, ye Law-givers in reſpect of Adultery, and pull downe their exceſſe againſt theft without violence, remembring him, that hath ſaid, Not one jot or title of the Law ſhall paſſe, till all be fulfilled; For what are the penalties annexed to Gods Laws, but parts thereof? Lavater conjectureth, that connivency and lenity towards the Adulterous ſprang firſt from the forced ſingle life of Prieſts, with whom it would have gone hardly for their incontinency, if this Law had ſtill been kept up.

But for ſo much as we are ſeparated from that ſuperſtition, let the Law returne, in Gods name, to the ancient courſe againe, without which we cannot be altogether, but onely almoſt good Chriſtians, yea good Naturaliſts, or truly rationall: For the revenge, which he ſaith, the man wronged will take in this caſe, it is conceived, that this is not meant of ſlaying the Adulterer immediately with his owne hands, but by proſecuting the Law againſt him, becauſe private revenge is forbidden, and this were the way to ſend him hence without repentance, and ſo into everlaſting deſtruction; yet the Law favoureth a man wronged in this caſe ſo farre, that it ſuffereth him to goe unpuniſhed, if through extreme impatience at ſo great an indignity, he being tranſported with jealouſie, ſlayeth the Adulterer taken in the act. And hereof Caſſiodor yeeldeth this reaſon, it is naturall in other living creatures to be inraged at wrongs done them in this kinde in their females as in the Hart being at deadly feud with another Hart about the Doe, the Ram puſhing with his horne with all his might in the like caſe, and the Horſe and Bull likewiſe; yet it cannot be ſaid, it is no ſinne in him that thus revengeth his owne wrong for the reaſons before going, and therefore every man is rather to be exhorted to refraine himſelfe, and commit it to publike judicature.

CHAP. VII.

HEre Salomon after another Preface, made not much unlike the former, giveth his Sonne to underſtand what the qualities of the whoriſh woman are, ~~and~~ and how fairely ſpoken ſhe is, ſo that he that is not well inſtructed, and by wiſdome, and ſerious conſideration reſolved againſt this ſinne, cannot eſcape ſnaring by her; And laſtly, to what miſeries young men are brought by being allured by her.

Verſ. 2. Muffet. In ſaying, ver. 2. Keep mine inſtructions as the apple of thine eye, he intimateth, ſaith Muffet, that inſtruction, inlightning the underſtanding, is like unto the ſight of the eye, and therefore of it we ought to be as careſull, that no hurt commeth to it, as doth by ſinne. He that receives not inſtruction is without the apple of his eye, and therefore although he hath eyes he ſeeth not; and having received inſtruction, but not regarding to doe accordingly in eſchewing ſinne, he hurteth it, and is in danger of having the ſight thereof put out againe. In ſaying, Call underſtanding thy brother, and wiſdome thy ſiſter, that a man ought to be moſt familiar and well acquainted with wiſdome, neither ſhould it be as a ſtranger to him, but co-habiting, and converſing with him continually, as it is when he is much in reading, hearing, and meditating upon the Word of God.

Note.

Verſ. 4.

Lavater. There is nothing, ſaith Lavater, that we love ſo dearly as the apple of our eye, and therefore a compariſon is often borrowed from hence, to expreſſe the greateſt love that can be, as Pſal. 17. Keep me as the apple of an eye, Zec. 2. He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine eye; and Andromache in Euripides calleth her Sonne, the eye of her life.

Baſil. For the keeping of the apple of the eye Baſil obſerveth, 1. That the eye hath a brow hanging over it ſet with haires; and 2. As it hath an upper brow, or lid, ſo it hath a neather, to keep it ſafe from any thing that might hurt it; and 3. By the prominency or hanging over of the upper eye-brow, the eye being placed more inward, it ſeeth directly on afarre of; And laſtly, That eye-brow keeps the ſweat which through labour ariſeth upon the fore-head, from running into the eye to hurt it. So there ought to be in us, if we would keep inſtruction as the apple of our eye, 1. A purpoſe of heart to live according to it in all things, and from this purpoſe frequent prayings, and ejaculations as haires upon the brow ſhould ſpring up daily, that our eye may be the better fenced; that is, we may the better put in execution what we piouſly intend. 2. A neather eye-lid ready as occaſion ſerveth to cloſe with the upper, that there may be no vacant place for any thing to come in and hurt the eye; as it is with the Lions eye, who becauſe he hath no neather eye-lid hath his eyes continually open to danger: and this neather eye-lid is the renewing of the ſame godly purpoſe of keeping the Commandement every day, as Ignatius applyeth it, ſaying, Then the two eye-lids cloſe to ſave the eye, when this purpoſe is in us in the morning, and againe at noone. 3. An eye-brow of a right intention to direct our purpoſes of living according to inſtruction to the due end; that is, not for the praiſe of men, but that God may be glorified, he being bleſſed for our charity by the poore, and his grace acknowledged by all about us to be of great power to keep us, that are by nature corrupt as well as others, in ſo good and perfect a way. 4. An eye-brow keeping the ſweat of worldly labour from running into our eyes, which is, When although in the ſweat of our faces we get our living here, and by great paines-taking increaſe in worldly goods, our hearts yet are not taken with the love hereof, as we are injoyned; but this is kept off and let run downe to our feet, through the contempt wherein we have the things of this world, in compariſon of heavenly things, as Paul accounted all things as droſſe, and dung in this regard. Some number foure, ſome five membranes by nature placed about the eye, or the apple thereof, or tunicles: 1. That called ſpecularis, becauſe it is lightſome. 2. Reticularis, becauſe it is inter-woven with arteries like a net, called rete. 3. Uvea, like the leaſe of a vine about the grape which is, uva. 4. Cornea, Horney becauſe it reſembleth an horne. 5. Agnata, whereby whereby the ſight is kept together from flying about: and they apply them, ſome by comparing them to the five bookes of Moſes, by the diligent peruſing whereof the eye of the minde is well furniſhed, and fenced, to the keeping of all good inſtruction, as Galatinus ſaith the Jewes apply them, and as Auguſtine: Some, to underſtanding, memory, will, practiſe, and good intention; but for as much as the eye doth rather conſiſt of theſe, I hold me to the firſt. Galatin. Auguſt. De monamach Davidis.

At the window of my houſe I looked through my caſement; Here Salomon having made way by his Preface to renew his admonition againſt being inſnared with the inticing allurements of Harlots, proceedeth not, as before, by giving warning, but by way of parable relating how one foole was taken, makes the deeper impreſſion in the minde of the Hearer, to make him take heed of being catcht in like manner, becauſe examples move more then precepts. Verſ. 6

In ſaying, That he lookt out at his window, where he might heare, and ſee, and not be ſeene, he teacheth it to be a good policy in Magiſtrates, ſometimes to looke, and pry into the manners of the people, when they know not of it, that diſcerning them they may know the better how to provide for a Reformation; and likewiſe for Miniſters, who are ſet to be Watch-men, that they may know which way they are indangered by the common enemy, ſinne, to admoniſh them thereof, as Ezekiel was ſhewed, to this end, the abominations committed by the Children of Iſrael in ſecret, after that God had appointed him to be their VVatch-man; for they will not doe in the open preſence of ſuch, that which they are bold to doe, when they thinke themſelves to be out of their ſight; yet they know that no wickedneſſe can be acted ſo ſecretly but God ſeeth it, with whom the darkneſſe and the light are all one, and who is ever, though concealed, about all our wayes, and all our paths." In this parable, firſt is the deſcription of a fooliſh man impetuouſly carryed by his Luſt towards an Whore-houſe in the night. 2. Of an whoriſh woman. 3. Of his being taken by her, and the miſchiefe redounding to him thereby. Note. Ezek. 8. Ezek. 3. Pſal. 139.

For the firſt, The night is ordained for man to take his reſt and ſleep in, after his labour and travell in the day: it is therefore a perverting of the courſe of nature when there is no neceſſity, to walke abroad in the night, and none, but wicked and evil-minded perſons, doe ſo. Therefore the night is by Ovid numbred amongſt the things that are dangerous temptations, ſaying, The Night, Wine, and Luſt perſwade nothing moderable, this takes away ſhame, Wine and Luſt feare. And the Apoſtle ſaith They that are drunken, are drunken in the night, 1 Theſſ. 5 And the Thiefe digs through in the night the place by him marked in the day. For his going towards a corner of the Harlots houſe, hereby a warning is given againſt coming neare ſuch places, as a man that would not be infected with the Plague, comes not neare to a Peſt-houſe. Verſ. 9. Ovid, Nox, & Amor Vinumq; nihil moderabile ſuadent illa pudore vacua, Liber Amorq; metu.

For the deſcription of the Harlot; A woman met him with the attire of an Harlot, and ſubtile in heart, ſhe is loud and ſtubborne, and her feet abide not in the houſe. The vulg. Prepared to catch ſoules pratling, and wandering, Lavater, With open ſignes of whoredome her heart was hidden, Hebr. the ornament of an harlot, an heart kept cloſe, By the firſt of which the Harlots curious dreſſing of her ſelfe, painting her face, curling her haire, or wearing it ſo, as that ſhe may moſt ſtirre up Luſt in the beholder, and putting on coſtly apparrell, leaving neck, breaſt, and armes naked is meant; for thus ſhe ſheweth the immodeſty of her minde, and caſteth out her net as it were to catch ſoules, as the vulgar hath it, looking more at the ſence then at the words; A thing to be conſidered by Gentle-women, and other young women, yea and ſome old alſo, that they may cover their nakedneſſe, and flee ſuch vaine curioſities, that they may not ſo much as have any appearance of evil in their outward habit or dreſſe, as it is commanded, where it is ſaid, Abſtaine from all appearance of evill, but aray themſelves with modeſty and meekneſſe, as women fearing God did of old. By the heart kept cloſe, R. Joſeph rendring it, deſtitutum, for cuſtoditum, ſaith, an heart deſtitute of vertue is meant; but I rather aſſent to them, who expound it of her heart ſet to inſnare fooliſh young men, as her Luſt moveth her, making ſhew of nothing but love to them, when Verſ. 10. Verſ. 11, 1 Pet. 3. R. Joſeph. Vatablus.

when as the event of yeelding to her allurements will be ſad and miſerable in the end; ſhe propounds nothing but pleaſure and delight that they ſhall have, but in her heart ſhe knoweth, that her Husbands jealouſie and rage will be thus ſtirred up to take revenge upon them, touching whom ſhe ſeekes to make them ſecure. R. Levi ben Gerſon, by the heart bound, as he rendreth it, underſtands the breaſt bound about with coſtly apparrel, but the parts upward naked.

Rodolph. Not much unlike to this Rodolph. ſaith, That they make themſelves fine about the breaſt, and herein much glory, or they lace them here cloſe, that by the ſwelling of their bodies no loſſe of their virginities may appeare, or wearing their garments looſe like women downward, they are begirt upward as a man, all modeſty of a woman being put off, and the impudencie of a man put on; but Vatabl. and moſt are for the firſt: let the Reader follow which he pleaſeth. For her much pratling and gadding abroad, which follow next, theſe are evil ſignes of levity, and therefore to be avoyded. That it ſtands not with the modeſty of a woman to ſpeake in the Congregation, Paul teacheth, and both pratling and going abroad much is taxed in young widowes; and Dinah is ſet forth for example, that women may learne to keep at home, as Paul alſo exhorteth. The Ancients do ſhew painted Venus in the ſhell of an Hand-maid, as having her houſe ſtill over her head.

Verſ. 22.

Here are two Compariſons, 1. To an Oxe, or as ſome have it, a Bull following a Cow, as ſome butchers uſe to draw him the more willingly to the place of execution by driving a Cow before, which I muſt needs ſay agreeth moſt aptly to the libidinous mans following the Whore, thinking to have pleaſure, but it is turned to his deſtruction, ſometimes of the body, but alwayes of the ſoule. Some conceive an alluſion to be made to the drawing of an Oxe with a rope to the place of ſlaughter, as if the great force that is in the Harlots actions and words were denoted, like a rope forcibly drawing the Oxe.

2 To a foole bound to be puniſhed, or corrected, for the word עכס ſignifieth fetters, as well as ſtocks; and ſometime it is put for a bell in a fooles cap, whereby he may be knowne, which is to him delightfull, but notifying him to the world to be a foole, to his great diſgrace: and if it be thus underſtood, it may be rendred thus, As a bell is the erudition of a foole; ſo that he comes both to deſtruction and ſhame, as a naturall foole, that hath no wit, who is drawne by an Harlots inticements.

Verſ. 23. Till a dart ſtrike through his Liver, as a Bird haſteth to the ſnare, and knoweth not that it is laid for his life. Here are two Compariſons more to ſet forth ſuch a foole, as is drawne by an Harlot:

1. From an Hart wounded and ſlaine by the Huntſ-man, when in following his female, after whom he is moſt earneſtly carryed, he ſhooteth him; For the Huntſman, they ſay, makes a noiſe like the Doe to the Hart, which being heard he is drawne neare to the place of his ſtanding, and ſuddenly ſtricken. But this ſtriking is by ſome expounded of Luſt, which woundeth, as an arrow or dart, the Liver, the ſeate of love, of which wound he dyeth afterwards without remedy, unleſſe as ſome ſay, ſay he eateth ſome of the hearb called Virginale: ſo the wounded by Cupids dart, unleſſe he repenteth and turnes chaſte for ever after: By ſome, of his being ſuddenly ſtricken by the womans husband in his rage of jealouſie, being taken with her; it may be underſtood of both.

The ſecond compariſon is taken from a bird flying to the ſnare, which is to be underſtood in a place, where corne onely is ſeen, and the ſnare hidden, ſo that the bird haſtens thither being drawne by the corne, but whilſt he is well pleaſed with feeding, the ſnare takes him, and he dyeth: So the Adulterer ſeeth nothing in the caſe before put, but good cheare and pleaſure to ſatisfie his luſt, but ſuddenly, he is inſnared and deſtroyed.

The Parable being ended, Salomon now commeth hereupon to dehort againe from whoredome, renewing his reaſon, taken from the danger of death incurred by him, that will not be diſſwaded, uſed before, Chap.5.5. Onely he further ſaith here, that by ſuch women, the ſtrongeſt men have been overcome, that no man may preſume upon his ſtrength to keep himſelfe from this danger, but having ſuch examples before his eyes, beware that he cometh not neare an harlot. Beware ſaith Jerom, of abiding in the ſame roome, for thou art not ſtronger then Sampſon, nor holier then David, nor wiſer then Salomon, who were all overcome by women; yea a woman cauſed the caſting of Adam out of Paradiſe, whereupon this diſtich is made, Adam, Samſonem, Petrum, Davidem, Salomonem Decepit mulier, quis modo tutus erit? where Peter is brought in, becauſe even Biſhops, and chiefe Biſhops, pretending Peters ſpirit and authority, have beene overcome by women. Heare for this Cyprian, How great, and what manner of Biſhops and Clericks, and Lay-men, after confeſſions and victories gotten againſt perſecuters, and ſignes and wonders ſhewed every where, have beene knowne with theſe to ſuffer ſhipwracke.

To intimate this diverſity of men here ſpoken to the word אִישִׁים is uſed in the firſt place, and the word אָדָם in the ſecond ſignifying earth, as the firſt men of quality lifted up ſomewhat higher by their wealth and honour in this world; this alſo Chryſoſtome and Auguſt. who together with the reſt of the Fathers, generally underſtand Chriſt by wiſdome here ſpeaking;

Verſ. 5, 6. Hear yee ſimple ones, the opening of my mouth ſhall be of right things. Here becauſe amongſt the common and meaner ſort of people, there be many ſimple, and of leſſe capacity then others, Chriſt is brought in ſpeaking to them, to ſhew that none are ſo weak in reſpect of their naturall parts, but by Chriſts teaching they were made to underſtand, yea and to underſtand that, which they that had more wit and learning did not, as he ſaith, I thank thee (O Father) that thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe, and revealed them to babes: that is, babes in underſtanding. The Jeſuits apply this, which is ſpoken, not onely to Chriſt, but alſo to the Virgin Mary, which ſome of them labour to make good, but in vain; neither can any meere creature be thus ſpoken of without deifying it, and ſo committing Idolatry; to let this paſſe as a fruit of their ſuperſtition. Plaine and eaſie to the ſpirituall man, who diſcerneth all things. 6. Beneficiall, as gold and precious ſtones for the purchaſing of inheritances here, for the attaining of the heavenly inheritance hereafter. 7. Sweet and delightfull, as it is alſo ſaid, Pſal. 19. as the hony comb; and all this is to be underſtood as ſpoken in oppoſition to the deceitfull, inticing, flattering, and in the end bitter-proving words of the harlot ſpoken of Chap. 7.

Lyra, Rodolph. Lyra for the excellent things here ſet forth, underſtandeth hereby great and weighty matters, as hath beene ſaid, Rodolphus things profitable and tending to informe touching good manners. But they are called excellent, as Auguſt. ſheweth, becauſe none but weighty matters were by Chriſt ſet forth, whereas in the old Teſtament Precepts were given of leſſer matters, carnall ſacrifices and rites, which were but as ſhadows fit for the Church in the infancy, theſe greater, and of more moment, for heires come to full age, theſe being but ſhadows, little light, but all things here made plaine, which pertaine to ſalvation: For the next words, My Auguſt. in Luc. 1. 15. de Catechiz. rud. c. 4. Verſ. 7. mouth ſhall ſpeake truth, and wickedneſſe is the abomination of my lips. The laſt are by one inverted thus, The wicked hath my lips in abomination, or My lips are an abomination to the wicked; for it is, שפתתי רשע תועבת and being thus rendred, the meaning is, Although I ſpeake nothing but the truth, the wicked will hate me therefore, as was verified touching Chriſt in the hatred of the Phariſees ſtirred up againſt him, when he ſpake truly againſt their wickedneſſe.

Verſ. 8. The next words alſo, All my ſpeeches are right, ſhew he is free from all hypocriſie and diſſimulation, which was the ſinne wherewith they were groſly tainted.

Verſ. 12. I wiſdome, dwell with prudence, or ſubtilty, and finde out knowledge of witty inventions: The Vulg. better, of cogitations, Heb. מזמות evill cogitations, or abominations. Here after the praiſe of wiſdome, it is ſhewed where ſhe dwelleth, if any man deſireth to finde her out, and to poſſeſſe himſelfe of her, and ſo of the ineſtimable treaſure and pleaſure before ſpoken of, She dwelleth in the prudent, that is, ſuch as have ſharpneſſe of wit and underſtanding to pry into the wily fetches of enemies, that they may not through ſimplicity be overtaken herewith. For then doth a man attaine to the knowledge of evill cogitations in the mindes of the wicked againſt them, when they truſt not to every ſhew or appearance of well meaning, but as he is innocent like a dove, ſo he is wiſe as a ſerpent. Matth. 10.16. And that eſpecially to diſcerne the ſtratagems of our great adverſary the Devil, that craftily ſeekes the deſtruction of our ſoules, and the wily inventions of his curſed inſtruments tempting him to evill: for an inſtance of one ſort of which, the woman ſpoken of Chap. 7. is put. Here is, according to the moſt proper meaning of thoſe words alſo, meant wit and ſubtilty, to diſcerne ſnares of faire ſhews, and ſpeeches laid for the righteous to bring them into the danger of deſtruction here; we are indeed ſimple, before that Chriſt comes by his Spirit to dwell in our hearts, but then this prudence entreth into us, whereby wee know beſt what to doe to be preſerved in time of temptation for the ſafety both of our ſoules and bodies; and this is not attained to without inſtruction, and hereby knowledge of the word and will of God; ignorant perſons then, that care not for divine knowledge, have not this wiſdome dwelling in them, and ſo are in continuall danger to be circumvented to their deſtruction. Theſe words may alſo bee applyed to Chriſt in reſpect of his diſcerning the thoughts of mens hearts to cenſure and judge them therefore, as he is often ſaid to have done. Note.

The feare of the Lord hateth evill, pride, and arroganty, and the evill way, the froward mouth doe I hate. Verſ. 13. Having hitherto ſpoken in the name of Wiſdome, now he changeth the word, and ſpeakes in the name of the Feare of God, which Chap. 1.7. is ſaid to be the beginning of wiſdome, and Job 28.28. Wiſdome; it is the mother of wiſdome, then bringing her forth in whomſoever ſhee is, and hereby it may be knowne in whom ſhee is, viz. in him or her that hateth evill: this is the effect of the noble filial feare, it makes one like unto God, who is ſaid to hate evill alſo, Chap. 6.16. Six evills eſpecially being there enumerated, yea ſeven, as here are three anſwerable to them.

1. Pride and haughtineſſe of ſpirit.

2. The evill way, which is as much in effect as there is ſaid, The hands that ſhed innocent bloud, and the feet that runne to miſchief, which the heart before deviſed and meditated upon, and this by being iterated againe and again, becomes a beaten path or way.

3. The froward mouth, which is as much in effect as the lying tongue, the falſe witneſſe ſpeaking lyes, and the ſower of diſſention: And theſe are ſummarily all greateſt evils comprehending all others under them, neither can hee juſtly count himſelfe to be one that hath the feare of God in him, that hateth not all theſe, and out of an hatred of them, eſcheweth them continually, and not onely out of a ſlaviſh feare of judgements, of which before, Chap. 1.7. according to a remarkable diſtich.

Counſell is mine, and ſound wiſdome, Heb. Counſell is mine and ſubſtance Verſ. 14. the Vulg. Equity, but the word is תשׁוּה ſubſtance or eſſence: and this moſt aptly agreeth to Chriſt, as verſ. 12. 13. I wiſdome dwell with prudence to finde out, &c. That is, have prudence cohabiting with me, ſo that no evill cogitations are hid from me; I alſo hate pride, and evill wayes, and tongues, as he abundantly ſhewes by his invectives often made againſt the proud Phariſees, and their evill wayes and ſpeeches. For the counſell here ſpoken of, Chriſt alſo is called the Counſellor by Eſay, and ſaid to have the Spirit of counſell and underſtanding upon him; For his being Eſſence, he ſaith, Before Abraham was I am, and for his power, Heb. 1.2. Upholding all things by the word of his power. Eſa. 9.7. Eſa. 11.1. Joh. 8.

By me Kings reigne, and Princes decree juſtice. Verſ. 15. As Wiſdome, that is, Chriſt aſcribeth to himſelfe foure things, Verſ. 14. Counſell, eſſence, or ſubſtance, underſtanding, and ſtrength, ſo here, and verſ. 16. are foure ſorts of Rulers, and men in authority mentioned, as coming to theſe high and eminent places by him, 1 Kings, who are the ſupream, who have none upon earth above them, but God alone.

2. Princes,

2. Princes called רוזנים a word coming of רזה to understand, and therefore most probably the Counsellours to Kings are hereby meant, who advise the King, and counsell him, that he may make just and righteous Lawes, and they in whose power, together with the King, it is to make Lawes.

3. שריעם rendred also Princes, which is a generall name for all chiefe men in a State, who are set up in high place to rule over others, as if one should say, principall men; but specially the word is put for chiefe Captaines, or Generals of Armies.

Rom. 13. 4. נדיבים Spontanei, Liberates, Magnificias, in N. Tr. Nobles; From whence we may rightly gather, that all these are the Ordinances of God, as Paul calleth the higher Powers, and therefore not to be resisted or divided, the one thus banding against the other, or any of them annulled. For if they, being the orders of a Kingdome set up by God, are put downe, confusion is brought in, which is not without much calamity to any Kingdome, and he that is the Author of these Orders, and the gifts sutable to them, will not long suffer it, or the Authors thereof, how potent soever they be, to goe unpunished: unlesse in case of necessity, the Supreame allowing to the Subordinate no power together with him, but seeking their extirpation, and the bringing in of a new way of Government absolutely Anarchicall, prejudiciall to his Subjects states, and lives, not suffering them to comply with him, as the King of Spaine did by the Lords of the Low Countries, whereby they were inforced to arme against him, and to cast him off, and his Posterity to this day. But this doth not justifie any other Nation doing the like, unlesse the case be in all things alike.

For the coherence of these words with the former, it is this; Christ, the wisdome of the Father having declared foure excellencies to be in him, Counsell, Essence, Understanding, and Fortitude; now sheweth, that according to one of these he giveth Essence to Kings, according to another, Counsel to Counsellours of State, according to another, Fortitude to Generals of Armies, and according to another, Understanding to Nobles, and Judges of the earth, to doe justice to all men, and being thus qualified by his speciall providence sets them up, that by meanes of their Government, the people living under them may enjoy peace, their goods, estates, lives, and prosperity, which otherwise would be daily hazzarded. But it

Quest. may be demanded here, how Kings reigne by Christ, who never was himselfe but a titular King, only he had a spirituall Kingdome over the faithful; 1. Subjecting them unto him by turning them to the faith, and then ruling and reigning in their hearts by his Spirit.

Vers. 2. Ans. Although he did not exercise a Kingly power, and said, That his kingdome was not of this world, yet as God is King of all the Kingdoms of the world, so the man Christ by vertue of his union with the God-head, is King of all Kingdoms, for which he is prophesied of as of a King, that should have given unto him the Heathen for his inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession. His Kingdome yet, as he said, was not of this world, because he did not take worldly royalty and majesty upon him, yet the power over all was in him, as he

Mat. 28. 18. said; All power is given unto me in heaven, and in earth, and therefore the Kings of the earth reigne by him, or his appointing them to their Kingdome, and for him, as Vice-royes and Deputies, which should make them to have a great care in all things to reigne according to his will; if any doe not, but are wicked and tyrannicall, yet they are to be accounted Deputies by him appointed, and their Subjects ought to beare their evil manners, waiting till God will be pleased either to 1 Tim. 2. unto themselves damnation. They have only prayers to fly unto, according to that of Saint Paul, Let prayers be made for Kings, and for those in Authority, that we may live a peaceable and quiet life, in all godlinesse and honesty under them.

August. in Hos. 3. Et patientia justorum probetur, & peccatum impiorum puniatur. If Kings be evil, saith Augustine, we must not say, that it is just with God to set them up, for he doth it, that the patience of the righteous may be proved, and the sinne of the wicked punished. By the power given to the Devil Job was tryed, that he might appeare to be juſt; and Peter was tempted, that he might not preſume of himſelfe; Paul was buffeted, that he might not extoll himſelfe; and Judas condemned, that he might not hang himſelfe. Some by Kings underſtand Apoſtles, by Princes Miniſters of the Goſpel, that both teach and write, by Nobles, all the reſt of the Miniſtry; ſome, Spirituall perſons of all ſorts, that reigne, and get the dominion over their luſts.

I love them that love me, and they that ſeeke me early ſhall finde me. Having ſhewed where wiſdome dwelleth, now he further declareth how it may be attained; there muſt firſt be a love, and earneſt deſire hereof wrought in the heart, and then this rich poſſeſſion ſhal be injoyed; the love of wiſdome makes it eaſie, but if the love hereof be wanting, it ſhal be an harſh and hard thing. And this is the cauſe why ſo many are averſe from living in the feare of God, preferring to follow their owne Luſts, and thinking it a bondage to live in ſtrict obedience to Gods Lawes, they love it not, but hate it; and why doe they not love it? becauſe they neither ſee, nor know the excellency of it; feare God, thinke they, and bid adieu to all pleaſure, to profit, and to honour in the world, and ſo have no joy of a mans life; for who live ſo melancholly, ſo poorely, and are ſo much deſpiſed as they? Verſ. 17. Note.

Againſt all this, Wiſdome here telleth us of riches incomparable, and honour, that ſhall be to them that feare God, and then what life for joy and comfort, can be comparable to a life led in the feare of God? of which ſee before, Chap. 3. 14, 15, 16, 17. But it is to be noted, that he who loveth wiſdome ſeeketh her early, he is none of thoſe that put off a godly care of turning from his ſins till afterwards, but in the prime of his age, and firſt in the morning every day he ſeeketh it, by praying for it, waiting diligently at the poſts of Wiſdomes gate, ver. 34. That is, upon the Miniſtery of the Word, whereby faith and grace to feare God is attained; and this of loving wiſdome is ſubjoyned after that, which is ſaid of Kings and Princes, for whom wiſdome is moſt neceſſary of all other ſorts of men, for the well managing of the great and weighty affaires committed to them; and to intimate, that to them eſpecially the love of wiſdome is commended for this end. It is ſaid, verſ. 20. I lead in the way of righteouſneſſe, and in the pathes of judgement, which are afterwards ſaid to be eſtabliſhers of the throne. Verſ. 18, 19, 20, 21.

The Lord poſſeſſed me in the beginning of his way, before his workes of old. From hence to ver. 32. Wiſdome commends her ſelfe to us from her antiquity, and working together with God, in making all the parts of the world, and alwayes ſince their Creation governing them, and keeping them in ſo good order; which alſo moſt aptly agreeth to the matter in hand, the praiſe of wiſdome being here ſpecially entred upon for their ſake, who are Kings, Princes, and Judges of the world; for what King will not eſteeme of, and love that which the moſt wiſe Architect of the whole world, and Lord and Governour thereof eſteemed of as the moſt excellent poſſeſſion, and uſed in all his workes of Creation, and doth daily uſe in his governing the world? But it is to be underſtood, that having hitherto commended this Wiſdome, his Sonne, in the created effects hereof, which are in men fearing God; now he proceedeth to ſubſtantiall and uncreated Wiſdome, which is Chriſt co-eternall with the Father, and co-equall. And it is ſaid, The Lord bleſſed me in the beginning of his wayes; That is, in his beginning to create the world, and all things therein. The Sonne was with the Father from all Eternity indeed, but then he poſſeſſed him as it were, when by and with him he acted, and did theſe great workes, making this his moſt excellent poſſeſſion knowne to men, who are ignorant of what he did before: and it were a preſumptuous wickedneſſe for any man to enquire what, becauſe it is not revealed, but kept ſecret, and ſo belongs not to us, but to the Lord only: for that this ſubſtantiall Wiſdome was not only firſt then when the world was created, but before from all eternity appeareth herein, He ſaith, Before the earth was made, from everlaſting, ver. 23. wherefore the Sept. tr. which hath for poſſeſſed, created me in the beginning, is to be taken heed of, as from whence the Manichees tooke occaſion to teach, That Chriſt the Sonne of God was a Creature, from which this context doth utterly abhorre. Verſ. 22. Deut. 29. 19.

horre. The same then is here taught, that is, Joh. 1. In the beginning was the Word, and this Word was with God, and this Word was God; not a Creature of God, but Co-essentiall, and Co-eternall, and by it all things were made; And Revel. 1. 8. The Alpha and Omega, which is, was, and is to come, even the Almighty.

And Augustine and other Ancients not condemning the Sept. tr. expound it of Christs Humanity; but how this could be said to have been created in the beginning, which was not, till foure thousand yeares after, I see not, unlesse his creating be understood of his decree to Create, and then that which followeth, ver. 23.

Vers. 23. I was set up from everlasting, is applyed to his Divinity; the word is by some rendred, I was anointed from everlasting, but נסכ signifieth neither set up, nor anointed, but covered or concealed, by R. Abrah. rendred I had the principality; so likewise by Jerome, by the word covered best agreeth, Christ the Sonne of God, as touching his Incarnation and Passion to follow; for our Redemption was concealed, and covered from the knowledge of men of old, as being not declared but obscurely, and by types and figures. God indeed from eternity decreed this, for which he is said to be the Lambe of God slaine from the beginning of the world, but before the time of the Creation altogether concealed, and began then first to be revealed, when our first Parents having sinned, it was said to the Serpent, He shall breake thine head, and thou shalt bruise his heele.

Gen. 3. 14.

Vers. 27. When he prepared the heavens I was there. Wisdome having hitherto shewed her antiquity, here proceedeth to shew her workes of Creation of Heaven and earth, and the deep waters, which are all with infinite wisdome made, placed and ordered in the best manner, together with clouds, as bottels holding the water, where-with the earth is watered at Gods good pleasure from time to time, and made fruitful. Then was I by him, as one brought up with him, I was daily his delight, &c. Here the deare love betwixt the Father and the Son is set forth, as it was afterwards said, when the Heavens were opened upon Jesus, This is my beloved Sonne in whom I am well pleased. It is therefore here spoken as of a tender-hearted Father, bringing up his Sonne with great delight and pleasure-raking in him; as Machirn the Sonne of Manasseh is said to have been brought up upon Josephs knees; which commendeth infinitely the love of God to us, in that he spared not his Sonne, so greatly beloved, to be a ransome for us, that we might not perish, but have everlasting life. And this his love towards man is expressed, vers. 31. Rejoycing in the habitable parts of the earth, and my delights were in the sonnes of men; for herein he prophesieth of his Incarnation, or taking flesh, that he might be our Redeemer and Saviour, washing his Church by his bloud, that she might be glorious, an holy Spouse unto him, and without blame; for what is this, but unparaleld love and delight in the sons of men?

Vers. 32. Now therefore hearken to me (O yee children) blessed are they that keep my wayes; upon the premises now Wisdome cometh to exhort to hearken to all that she shall say throughout the rest of this booke following: for who would not hearken to Gods darling so long dwelling in him, and working with him, and out of his love to Man-kinde making himselfe like unto poore mortall man, and suffering for them to deliver them, and by suffering attaining such experience of our sufferings and sympathie herein, that if we suffer walking in his wayes, he is alwayes at hand to provide against our suffering above that, which we are not able to beare, and making our very sufferings easie and comfortable? And to that end we may hearken, as is required, we must be daily at The gates of wisdome, and waite at the posts of her doore.

Vers. 34.

By the Posts and Gates the Doctors of the Church are generally understood, who are like unto Janus, from whom Janua a Gate hath the name, having two faces, one to looke unto God by prayer, study, and meditation, to receive from him learning divine, fit for their doctrinall Function, and another to looke upon the infirmities of the common people, to apply themselves to speake so, as that they may come to understanding and reformation of life accordingly. And it is alluded to the Gates of the Temple built by Salomon, and the two pillars of brasse,

Jachin

Jachin and Boaz ſtanding there, becauſe to the doore of the Tabernacle or Temple, not into them might the people come, from the Prieſts lips to receive knowledge. All diligence according to Caietan, in coming hither, is here commended, as of a man that comes daily to the Court ſeeking preferment, a begger to the doore waiting there for almes, or a woer to his Loves chamber door, there he may obtaine her love and marry her. It is not then a little ſeeking by fits and girds, that will make men wiſe to ſalvation, but continuall and daily ſeeking is neceſſary for this: Sometime frequenting Sermons, ſometime reading their books written to inlighten in the knowledge of the holy Scriptures, and ſometime getting into their company by asking queſtions, and moving doubts, ſeeking to draw from them more knowledge as the Queen of the South did by Salomon, and the Apoſtles by Chriſt. Caietan. Note.

And to ſtir up all men the more thus to doe, he concludeth, Who ſo findeth me, findeth life, he that ſinneth againſt me, wrongeth his owne ſoule, he that hateth me, loveth death. Heb. for life is lives, that is, a ſpirituall life, to which hee cometh ſo ſoon as he is converted at the voice of Wiſdome, being before dead in ſinnes and treſpaſſes. 2. Everlaſting life, which ſhall undoubtedly follow after this. 3. Life and comfort alſo in this world prolonged to many years, for which it was before ſaid, On her right hand is long life, on her left, riches, and honour, who ſo ſinneth againſt me, &c. that is, not regarding, but hating to live according to my precepts following, which is called an hating to be reformed, of which ſinne all notorious wicked livers are guilty, although they ſay that they deſire to live better, for they doe but herein diſſemble, they doe in their hearts love ſinne, and hate vertue, and by conſequence they love death, which is the wages of ſinne, which ſhall certainly be paid unto them. CHAP. IX.

VVIſdome hath builded her houſe, ſhe hath hewne out her ſeven pillars. Becauſe Chap. 7. he had ſpoken of the harlot that prepared a feaſt, by telling of which, ſhe ſought to draw, and drew the fooliſh young man to her houſe to his deſtruction; he now in oppoſition hereunto, telleth of the feaſt which Wiſdome maketh and inviteth all unto, that would avoid deſtruction, and attaine everlaſting life; ſo that no man, unleſſe he be moſt ſtupid, as an Aſſe, and void of all underſtanding, but will, conſidering the end of the feaſt of the one, and of the other; flye going to the harlots houſe, and death it ſelfe, and hell, and with all earneſtneſſe of deſire come to Wiſdomes houſe, as to the entrance of heaven, and everlaſting life. Verſ. 1.

The houſe, which Wiſdome, that is Chriſt, is ſaid to have built, is the Church or Congregation of the faithfull, called the Houſe and Church of the living God, the ground and pillar of truth: A curious fabricke or frame of truth, moſt probably is meant by this houſe in this place, and the Church of God is called his houſe, becauſe the truth is hereby ſupported, and borne up as by a pillar, for which it is alſo ſaid to be the pillar of truth; not that the truth alwayes dependeth upon the moſt viſible Church, for ſometime the Church is as a woman fled into, and hid in the wilderneſſe, and a company of corrupt men, who are in many fundamentals gone from the truth, lift up their heads for ſome articles of the Chriſtian faith held ſtill, as the Catholick Church of God, as is this day, and long hath beene done in the greateſt and moſt populous Kingdomes of Europe; the Church of Rome challenging to be this houſe, and condemning all others as hereticks and ſchiſmaticks, who have been therefore, and are ſtill compelled in many places to lurke in ſecret. For as it was in the dayes of Elijah, ſo it may be in theſe our dayes, as then the ſeven thouſand that were the true Church were hidden, and the Prophet himſelf knew not where they were, and the reſt being the far greater number that were of Ahabs and Jezabels religion went for the Church; ſo now in many Countries they of the Reformed Religion, which be the true Church, are 1 Tim. 3. 15. Rev. 12.

hid and the Roman Catholicks, notwithstanding their many grosse Idolatries, beare themselves as the Church, and because the Church, as having that priviledge inseparably annexed to them, such as cannot erre, and therefore are the ground and pillar of truth, although in that Church nothing be lesse held up then the truth; many grosse errours instead thereof being stiffly maintained; wherefore the house built by Wisdome, is the goodly frame of truth, without mixture of errours in faith, or divine worship; and of this pure truth the pillars are here said to be seven, and these doe constituere Ecclesiam constitute the Church of God, for which it is worth the while to inquire what they be; Some say, the manifold gifts and graces of the Spirit, as Chrysostome set forth by the number of seven, because this is the number of perfection, both Esa. 11. 1. where seven are named, and Rev. 1. where the seven Spirits of God are spoken of. Some all particular Churches of the world, which make the Catholicke, or Universall, because seven Churches are mentioned, Rev. 1. for all. Some the seven Sacraments, but without all colour of probability, Gal. 2. Peter, James, and John are called pillars, because maine upholders of the truth of the Gospel, from whence we may gather, that as they, so others of the same order, even all the holy Apostles were pillars, and to them we may take the Prophets, consonant to whose, their teaching was in all things, for which they are together spoken of as the foundation of this building, Christ himselfe being the chiefe corner stone.

Eph. 2. 20.

They were indeed many more then seven, but thus called, because this, as hath been already said, is the number of perfection, the number whereby all holy reckonings went of old; the seventh day must be the Sabbath, at the end of seven weekes the feast of Pentecost, and the end of seven times seven yeares, the Jubilee, seven Priests, with seven Trumpets of Rams hornes compasse Jerico, seven dayes, and the walls thereof fall downe, besides the seven graces and seven Spirits before spoke of, wherewith these pillars were indued. And these pillars Wisdome is said to have hewed out, in alluding to his choosing and fitting them for their high and weighty calling with gifts and graces to discharge it. The whole scope of this place is to stir us up to come to the house of Wisdome, and to the feast here prepared, and not by any allurements to be drawn to the house of the Harlot; and this is done, when we imbrace and cleave to the truth taught and set forth by the Prophets and Apostles, and follow their doctrine and example in all things, and not our owne carnall lusts. He that doth otherwise, goeth to an house, which is the way to hell, and goeth down to the chambers of death; but Wisdomes house is strongly borne up, as by pillars enough, so that the gates of hell cannot prevaile against it, and hath a faire and high standing, as a City set upon an hill, which cannot be moved; so that come hither, and be safe against all enemies, though never so potent, for ever. But let none mistake this City, concluding for the visibility and outward flourishing estate of any Church, this is it, but seriously consider whether all truth, and onely the truth be taught and maintained there, and judge thereof accordingly. For this was the rule by which they went in the primitive times, when there was no visible face of a Church in all the time of persecution, beginning at the death of Christ, and from thence full three hundred yeares to the dayes of Constantine the Great. Besides this exposition of the Church being the House here spoken of, and the Prophets and Apostles the pillars, and the faithfull Doctors of the Church successively, which is most commonly followed by the Fathers, there are other expositions, as of the Hebrews, who by this house understand the Temple, and by the pillars, the pillars thereof, and by the feast the sacrifices.

4 Athanasius by this house understands the just mans soule, and the seven Pillars supporting are by Bonaventure found, Jam. 3. to be chastity, peace, modesty, teachablenesse, consenting to the good, full of mercy, and judging without dissimulation, for such is the wisdome that is from above said to be, but the two last in N. Tr. without partiality, without hypocrisie Athanas. Jam. 3. 17.

Shee hath killed her beasts, Hebr. her killing, mingled her wine; All that is spoken Allegorically, it being hereby shewed, That they who come to wisdomes house, shall finde a table there fully furnished; that is, Be satisfied with Spirituall food, as well as if they had filled their bodies with all good cheare and wine, that is commonly at Feasts, of one of which, a most abominable one, he hath spoken before, chap. 7. Not much unlike to Wisdome thus preparing and inviting, speakes our Lord of himselfe in Parables, under the name of a King, Matth. 22. where the Reader may see what is meant by these things; and the Maidens here said to be sent out, are there said to be servants, Christs Ministers. Vers. 2.

Lyra understanding it of the Lords Supper acknowledgeth, That anciently as Bread, so Wine was given to all at the Lords Supper, but now for feare of spilling the Wine, Bread only; and some, because the Wine is said to be mingled, inferre, that in the Lords Supper it ought so to be, but the word מסכה signifieth as well pouring out, as mingling, and a word from the same root signifieth a drink-offering, and therefore here is no ground for that Tenet, which is yet so generally held in the Church of Rome. Lyra. Ciprian.

Shee cryeth in the highest places; That is, when her voyce may best be heard, for which, Pulpits out of which we preach, are set up on high, as in the dayes of Ezra, and hereby is declared the farre and wide piercing sound of the Gospell preached, for which the sound is said to have gone through all Lands. And who are invited to this feast? Simple ones, and such as want understanding. Which was notably fulfilled, when the mysteries of the Gospel were revealed to babes in understanding, the wise having them hid from them; That is, the Scribes and Pharisees, and Expounders of the Law, and the noble and great ones of the Land. yea, unlesse one be a foole and simple in himselfe, he cannot be made wise thus. Such hungry ones are filled with good things, as the blessed Virgin Mary saith, but the rich in wisdome and understanding, who thinke highly of themselves, are sent empty from this feast away. See also, 1 Cor. 1. 20. Not many wise or noble, God hath chosen. Vers. 3. Rom. 10. 18. Vers. 4. 1 Cor. 3. 18.

And herein the Lord is contrary to the Philosopher, who being about to set forth his Ethicks would have no simple ones to come to his teaching, but either intelligent or apt to learne. Wherefore let none be discouraged for their naturall weakenesse, if they be willing; that is all which the Lord requires, that they may be Guests at Wisdomes Table, and feed, and be filled here to everlasting life, and as Note.

to a feaſt, and that moſt ſumptuous and compleat muſt we goe to, holy Exerciſes; the want of which conſideration is the cauſe of ſo great a neglect in many, who come to Church, as to a Houſe of Correction, or truantly Scholars to School, being moſt glad when they have liberty to returne home againe, or to their ſinfull pleaſures; or as the Iſraelites, who having been long fed with Manna, which at the firſt they thought moſt delicate food, when they had been long uſed to it day after day, loathed it.

Lavater.

The vulg. verſ. 3. for theſe words, Shee hath cryed from the high places of the City, hath it, that they might call to the tower, and the walls of the City; That is, ſaith Lavater, as ſome expound it, to heavenlineſſe of minde, the heart being lifted up on high, when a man cometh to this ſpirituall feaſt; Some, that the houſe, to which they are called, is as a tower on high, in which Captaines uſed to give their Souldiers ſome repaſt of good meat and wine, that thence they deſcending againe might goe into the Battel with more courage; ſo wiſdome dealeth by thoſe, whom ſhe inviteth, feeds them with Spirituall food, thus filling their hearts with more courage to ſpirituall encounters.

These things I grant are true, and very uſefull for ſuch as are going to holy exerciſes, eſpecially the firſt; but the words in Hebr. will not beare this expoſition, and therefore ſome, that hold to that reading, ſay, that ſhe calleth her maidens to this Tower, that ſpeaking from aloft they might be the further heard, and ſo they come to the ſame in effect, which I ſaid before.

Eccleſ. 12. 1.

Touching the ſimple ones, and deſtitute of underſtanding, or as it is Hebr. of an heart, Hereby moſt probably two ſorts are ſet forth; 1. Of young ones 2. Of ſuch as have yeares enough, but are weake in underſtanding; for the will of the Lord is, that children ſhould come to this holy Feaſt, as well as men of yeares, for which cauſe children are often ſpoken to before.

Verſ. 7.

He that reproveth a ſcorner, gets himſelfe ſhame. Having hitherto in the name of Wiſdome invited to her feaſt, now he ſheweth, who ſhall not come in hither, viz. the proud and ſcornfull, or any wicked perſon bent to goe on in his ſins, how effectually ſoever he be diſſwaded there-from, yet ſuch are brought in alſo; for both good and bad are ſaid to have been brought in, Matth. 22. but no good doth redound to the ſoules of ſuch; neither hath wiſdome any credit, but a blemiſh by their meanes, through their living, and coming into her houſe or congregation.

Gregor. Moral.. Clem. Alex.

But how doth he get himſelfe a blot, that reproveth a ſcorner? Gregory anſwereth well, by the ſcorners retorting upon him the vices objected, where-with he is charged, yea and more to his diſgrace amongſt many Hearers; and Clemens Alexandrin. expreſſeth this well by the ſimilitude of a Looking-glaſſe, upon which a man full of ſores and blemiſhes upon his face looking, the like appeare in the Glaſſe; ſo the ſcorner makes his reprover ſeeme as vitious as he. Here betweene the ſcorner and the wicked is this difference, the ſcorner is one that hath ſome knowledge, but for this he thinketh himſelfe wiſer then his Teacher, and ſo mocketh at what he ſaith, and contemneth it; the wicked is one that ſinneth not out of weakneſſe, but maliciouſneſſe, theſe two being oppoſed to the two before ſpoken of, young ones, and weake in underſtanding like children, although of mens yeares, and ſo through weakneſſe and ignorance ſinning, but upon better information ready to reforme.

Auguſt. De Doct. Chriſt. Moxes doctoris profectus auditoris.

And a blot ſaith Auguſtine he getteth to himſelfe that laboureth, by reproving and laying open the ſinnes of ſuch, becauſe the profiting of the Hearer is the reward of the Teacher; but he that laboureth for a reward, and knoweth that he ſhall have none, cannot eſcape unblemiſhed with folly.

Verſ. 8.

Reprove not a ſcorner leaſt he hate thee, reprove a wiſe man, and he will love thee. This is added, to ſhew that we are not only to forbeare inſtructing and reproving ſcorners, leaſt by ſo doing we get a blot, but leaſt for our good will we be requited with hatred. But muſt we therefore let ſcorners goe unreproved altogether, doth not love binde us without regard to the harme that will redound unto us to doe our dutie? and what is this but to reprove ſinne in whomſoever, and ſpe-

cially the teacher, who is as a watchman and shall be in perill of losing his life for his life, if he giveth not every sinner warning. Ezek. 3.

Sol. Some answer, that there is another way of reproving, although a man saith nothing, and that is by doing so, as that he may be ashamed: Some that although his hatred by reproofe procured, be spoken of, and a blot to the reprover, yet this is not the onely thing for which he must forbeare, but lest he being reproved adde unto his sinne, by being more exasperated to the increase of sinne in him, and consequently of damnation, which is illustrated by divers comparisons: As a muddy place being stirred stinkes the more, and fire burnes the more ardently, and a mad man rages the more he is opposed; so the scorner. Paulinus. Pacianus.

2. As a soule, having divers sorts of egges under her, by sitting upon them produceth divers sorts of young ones, some good, some bad, as the egges are; so it is with those, that are under the reproofe of a teacher, if they be docible and tractable, they come out reformed, if scorners, more increased in sinne. Plutarch.

3. As a graine of wheat cast into the ground, if the ground be good, comes up with increase, but if it be bad, it degenerates into darnell, or other soile; so instruction and reproofe, as he is, upon whom it lighteth. Basil.

4 As the Persian Apple, which according to Pliny, is wholesome and good growing in some soyl, but in some other present death, as poyson if it be eaten; so reproofe. Hugo Card.

5. As a Pearle being put into vinegar, and dissolved, eats sharpe like vinegar, but in hony, sweet like hony; so reproofe.

But it is not necessary to yeeld, that a man ought not to reprove a scorner, as if it were here altogether forbidden: for Elisha reproved and cursed the children of Bethel, and Elijah, by mocking the Prophets of Baal, reproved and incensed them, and Christ the Scribes and Pharisees, that much desired it: whereby their hatred was the more stirred up against him.

This is therefore spoken rather in way of concluding upon the premises, Vers. 7. as if he had said, Sith it is so, that he who reproves a scorner, reapeth shame, therefore in reproving such like, look not for any good successe, reprove him not expectation, that thy reproofe should work him to good, but from the wise before called simple, because as children easie to be drawn to good, thou mayest well expect that thy reproofs should doe good: yet that thou mayest not make thy selfe guilty of the scorners sinne by thy silence, hold not thy peace; onely let him know to his greater terrour, that he hath no part nor portion in this feast of Wisdome, consisting of instructions, reproofs, and consolations, but the docible and teachable, whom they count simple, but God counts them wise; for that which is said, Matth. 7. which seems not to differ from this, Cast not your pearls before swine, &c. See my Exposition upon that place. Note, that by a mans love or hatred of his reprover, one is knowne of what condition he is, whether wise, or a foolish scorner, and consequently whether the word bee to him the savour of life to life, or of death to death. He that, Pharisee-like, becomes the more malicious against his teacher, the more he is reproved, to him the word is to death and condemnation, but to such, as David-like, love him it is to life and salvation.

And why should not any sinner love his reprover, that herein doth the greatest act of love towards him that can be, thou art to appeare before the great Judge of all the world, and if thou appearest blemished woe will be unto thee, for he sits to adjudge all the spotted and blemished to hell fire: Oh what a good office then doth he unto thee, that seeks to doe away thy blemishes of sinne against that time? And how much art thou bound to love him therefore, as the Corinthians Paul, who in his sharpe reproving of them, sought nothing but to present them, as a pure virgin, to Christ, not having spot or wrinkle. And thus Gregory professeth, that hee should dearly love him, that would deale thus by him before his appearing at the Tribunal of that most strict Judge. Greg. in Epist.

If thou beest wise, thou art wise for thy selfe, if a scorner, thou alone shalt suffer. Having made a short repetition againe of things before said touching Wisdome, and the benefits hereof, Vers. 9. 10. 11. now he concludeth therefore that Wisdome in exhorting to vertue, and to turn from sinne, aimeth not at any emolu- Vers. 12.

emolument or profit of her owne, but at the good of others, to whom ſhe directs her precepts, and the keeping of them from miſeries, which otherwiſe they ſhall inevitably ſuffer; thus Caietan: but Jerom ſaith, onely that we are here exhorted to be wiſe from the conſideration of the benefits, that we our ſelves by this meanes ſhall reap, and dehorted from ſcorning and hating reproofe from the conſideration of the miſeries that ſuch ſhall ſuffer.

Caietan. Hieron.

I rather prefer the former, becauſe it addeth ſomewhat the more weight to the propoſition, and prevents an objection that might be made of Wiſdomes ſeeking her ſelfe. But when he ſaith, Thou art wiſe for thy ſelfe, it is not ſo to be underſtood, as if the benefit coming in by wiſdome ſhould not be imparted to others, for he that is inſtructed, ought to make him that inſtructs him, and formes this wiſdome in him, partaker of all his goods, and to give almes to the poore, but theſe things alſo redound to his owne good, Gods bleſſing being hereby the more procured both in this world, and in the world to come. How great a motive this is of being wiſe for a mans ſelfe, to ſtir up hereunto is ſhewed even by naturall reaſon in Plautus, where an husbandman is brought in animating his ſon chearfully to doe his works of husbandry thus, Thou ploweſt, harroweſt, ſoweſt and reapeſt for thy ſelfe, to thee ſhall this labour bring in joy. But be a ſcorner and thou alone ſhalt ſuffer; this ſhall turne to miſery to thee, and herein thou ſhalt be alone, having none to comfort thee, or to beare a part with thee, all other wicked perſons having each one enough to beare of his owne burthen, as every one ſhall do: yet this is not ſo to be underſtood, but that for the wickedneſſe of one, many may ſuffer in this world, as all the hoſt of Iſrael for one Achan, all Jeroboams poſterity, and all Ahabs, for Jeroboams and Ahabs ſins, the family of Ely for Hophni and Phinees: See alſo *Jer.*23.10. *Hoſ.*4.1. where mourning is threatned to the whole land for oaths, and adulteries, &c. although all were not ſuch. The meaning then is, thou alone ſhalt ſuffer eternally in hell fire, and not any other with thee for thy ſins.

Gal.6.6. Mal.3.8. 2 Cor.8. Matth.25. Matth.10. Plautus. Gal.6.

A fooliſh woman is clamorous, ſhe is ſimple, and knoweth nothing. Here after Wiſdomes feaſt, and invitation, and the good and benefit ſhewed which cometh by wiſdome, as a woman for all parts of excellency moſt worthy for my ſoule to deſire to joyne in marriage withall, he repeateth ſomething ſaid before of the whoriſh woman, Chap.7. that the amiableneſſe and beneficialneſſe of the one, and the tumultuouſneſſe, and evill qualities, and impudency of the other, and the unſpeakable miſchiefes following a mans being allured by her being together looked upon, a love and earneſt deſire to the one may be wrought in us, and as great a loathing of the other, making it impoſſible for her to faſten any alluring temptations upon any young man, although never ſo full of fleſhly luſts. And that which is here ſpoken of an whoriſh woman may well alſo be myſtically underſtood, as ſpoken againſt any arch-hereticke, or ſeducer to Idolatry. She is tumultuous, as the word ſignifieth.

Veſ. 13.

Lavater is altogether for a myſticall underſtanding, ſaying, That this woman ſetteth forth Antichriſt, although according to the opinion of ſome, Philoſophy oppoſite to Chriſtianity is hereby ſet forth, or hereſie, or idolatry, as is ſaid before. But he ſaith, that he tooke it from John Huſſe, that Antichriſt is meant, who is contrary to Chriſt, before ſet forth under the name of wiſdome. And this Antichriſt he ſaith, is the Pope of Rome, unto whom all things here ſpoken touching this fooliſh woman, doe moſt notably agree: For who hath ſtirred up ſo great tumults and troubles in the world, as the Pope, perſecuting with fire and ſword all ſuch as oppoſe his pride and ambition, whereby he exalts himſelfe above all, not only other Paſtors and Biſhops of the Church, but alſo over Kings and Emperours, whereby he hath filled the world with war and trouble.

Lavater.

If it be demanded, if a man be meant, why is he ſet forth by a woman?

Anſw. A man ſo ſitteth in that Seat, that it hath alſo ſome time been ſupplyed by a woman, Pope Joane diſguiſing her ſelfe, and by putting on mans apparrell, making the world beleeve that ſhe was a man, calling her ſelfe alſo by the name of

John

John, untill that her bringing forth of a Baſtard, as ſhe went in Proceſſion, diſcovere her deceit, in remembrance whereof, as Sleidan ſaith in his Commentaries, they have a cuſtome ever ſince, when a new Pope is choſen to feele him, being ſet in an hollow Chaire, the party that doth it being asked, Utrum habeat teſticulos. Shee is ſimple, and knoweth nothing, if this be applyed to the Pope, it may ſeeme not to agree at all, for who is crafty and ſubtile, if he and his inſtruments be not? but ſo is an whoriſh woman, wiſe to doe evil, but without underſtanding, to doe good, as the Prophet ſpeaketh. Ierem. 4. 22.

In like manner he is ſimple in reſpect of the good, ſaving, and ſound knowledge that cometh from wiſdome before ſpoken of; for who but a ſimple man would for worldly honour and profit looſe his owne ſoule? as he doth, ſeeing he that exalts himſelfe ſhal be brought low; who but a ſimple one would buſie himſelfe about toyes and bables, matters of greateſt weight being neglected? as he doth in ſtanding for Baby-like Images, bowing, and crouching to a dead peece of Bread, and carrying it about in pomp to ſick perſons, to quench Fires, to aſſwage the ſwelling of Waters, as ſome of them have done moſt ridiculouſly. Who but a ſimple one would truſt to Holy-water, and Croſſing, as having vertue to fence from the Divel? which Silveſt. 2. once proved that they could not doe, when notwithſtanding his croſſing of himſelfe in a black day of Thunder and Lightning, the Devil fetcht him away: Not to inſiſt upon more particulars.

But ſimple ones, and ſuch as were without underſtanding, are before commended as the Gueſts invited by Wiſdome, and the ſame the Gueſts of the fooliſh woman alſo; Sol. of ſimple ones, and men voyd of underſtanding there are two ſorts, the one of ſuch as either be weake of capacity, and judgement, either for their youth, or defect of naturall parts, yet not wedded to their ſimplicity, but ready to receive inſtruction, when it cometh, or being intelligent deny their owne wiſdome, ſeeming to themſelves ſimple, becauſe not capable by naturall reaſon of Divine Miſteries. The other ſort are either weake of underſtanding, and ignorant in reſpect of Divine knowledge, being yet ſo wel pleaſed here-with, as that they care not for Divine, but deſpiſe it, as the Dung-hil Cock the Pearle; or having underſtanding, ſo wel conceited of themſelves, that they thinke they know more then any other can teach them, and ſo goe on fooliſhly in ſinne or errour, rejecting all admonitions and ratiocinations to the contrary. To the ſimple ones of the firſt ſort Wiſdome calleth, and they come to her feaſt, but the fooliſh woman to the ſecond, and prevailes with them, Shee ſitteth on a ſeat at the doore of her houſe, in the high places of the City. Verſ. 14. This alſo moſt fitly agreeth to the Pope, who calleth his Epiſcopall place his Seat, and teacheth ſitting in his Chaire, and the doore is a place, where one may ſee Paſſengers, and be ſeene of them; therefore this Whore is ſaid to ſit in the doore, becauſe the Pope ſheweth himſelfe publickly at ſome times, bleſſing the People coming together to ſee him, thus alluring many, and he ſends abroad his Indulgences or Pardons, which are moſt pleaſing to fleſh and bloud, as importing, that for a little money a man may have pardon and deliverance from all his ſinnes, where-with what ſimple body is not eaſily taken, and ſo made to come in unto him, and to imbrace his Superſtition, thus running to the ſinne of Spirituall whoredome; and this ſeat is in the high places of the City of Rome, a fit deſcription of the Seate of this Whore of Babilon, ſtanding formerly upon ſeven high Hills or places, as is ſaid, Revel. 17.

To call Paſſengers, who goe right on their wayes. Verſ. 15. This alſo moſt aptly agreeth to the Pope, who corrupted the Church being before in a right way, publiſhing and cauſing himſelfe to be publiſhed, the Head of the Church, and of infallible judgement, which men beleeving, what would they not after this readily beleeve that ſhould come from him and his party, eſpecially being convened in Counſel? and then taught to be the Catholicke Church repreſentative, that cannot erre, both the Doctrine of Purgatory, the piety of praying for the dead to be thence delivered, and in calling upon Saints departed, worſhipping Images, &c.

Who ſo is ſimple, let him turne in hither, and to the man voyd of underſtanding, Verſ. 16.

ding ſtolne waters are ſweet. Neither doth this diſagree, for as Wiſdome hath her feaſt, which refreſheth and ſuſtaineth life; ſo the Pope, in ſpeaking of Waters and Bread, pretendeth the ſame bread and water of Life; for he maketh men beleeve, that no life or Salvation is to be attained out of his Church, but here is Bread conſecrated, and ſo made Chriſts very fleſh by Tranſubſtantiation, of which he that eateth hath everlaſting life; And this is called hidden bread, becauſe the people are made to beleeve, that it is Chriſts very fleſh, although hidden under the forme of bread, and in this fleſh lyeth hid bloud; ſo that he who receiveth it, receiveth his other part alſo, his bloud conducing likewiſe to Salvation. And ſtolne water, or drinke, this is called, becauſe they that ſteale, hide the goods ſtolne, therefore ſtolne and hid are Synonyma's here, one further expreſſing what is meant by the other. And if by waters we alſo underſtand the conſolations of the Scriptures, his Doctrines are pretended to be the very Scriptures of God, becauſe according to the ſence thereof, which it is not in the power of any private perſon, but of the Church to give; they are ſaid to be ſtolne, becauſe in the text ſtolne away from the people, by being kept in an unknowne and hidden tongue. and Bibles in a knowne tongue are taken away, they being thus robbed of the Truth indeed; ſo that he, that wil have any of the Scriptures, muſt have it from his Prieſts lips being corrupted by running through their pudly braines. And ſweet theſe waters are called, becauſe pleaſing to mans nature, the maine part of his Religion conſiſting in vaine and pompous Ceremonies, and Doctrines pleaſing to nature, of which he that is a Propugnatour, is bleſſed and happy, whatſoever his life be.

And the ſimple are wel ſaid to have been bidden come in hither, and ſuch as are voyd of underſtanding, becauſe the moſt ignorant are the beſt Catholicks, beleeving as the Church beleeves, although they know not what this is, is the Popes moſt commended religion, a maxime whereof is, Ignorance is the Mother of devotion.

Verſ. 17. But he knoweth not that the dead are there, and her gueſts in the depth of hell; That is, theſe ſimple perſons by ſpecious pretexts of Antiquity, and Univerſality, and ſucceſſion for ſo many hundreths of yeares, and viſibility, being deceived, thinke them bleſſed that are Papiſts, and conſtantly continue in the Popes way of ſuperſtition, when as poore ſoules they are utterly deceived, for bleſſing, they and ſuch as they are, being in the way of curſing, and for life attaining by ſuch bread, in the way of death; and for being comforted by this deceitfull feaſt, in the way of being tormented in Hel for evermore, as it is ſaid of the Beaſt in Revel. that ſhe is caſt in, and the ſmoake of her torment aſcendeth for ever; and ſuch as is her reward, muſt all looke for, that follow her. If it be demanded, Are all damned then that be Papiſts, and if ſo, what is become of our Anceſtors?

Note. See my Catechiſm upon that Article of the Church.

I anſwer, It is to be hoped that many of them, although they outwardly conformed to the Church of Rome, yet they had ſome perceivance of the vanity of the Popes Religion, to which yet they were inforced by the higher Powers, and grieved to ſee thoſe ſuperſtitious Rites then uſed, and in their hearts derided them, ſome alſo having ſo much courage in all times as to cry out againſt them, and againſt the Pope as Antichriſt. Such as were not thus ill-affected towards them, but had, or have at this day a complacency in them, and preferre adhering to them; I ſee not but that this text muſt needs be verified touching them, The dead are there, and her gueſts in the depth of hell.

Others repenting of their errours, and ignorances in common, although they knew not wherein they ſtood, might have pardon; for the word uſed to ſet forth Antichriſt, it is בסיל, ſignifieth according to R. Salomon, fooliſh, and rich, and truſting in his riches: which may wel be applyed alſo to the Pope, becauſe he by ſo many wayes and meanes rakes together wealth in abundance. and as confident that he is for this happy, he fareth moſt deliciouſly, as that foole, Luke 12. that tooke care for nothing, but about living at eaſe, eating and drinking and being merry; as Paul 4th. in ſpeciall did, who being before a poore Fryer, and then upon the Stoole, at which he ſate daily, and ate bread, and dranke water he wrot: Panis & aqua vita, Bread and water, a bleſſed life; but being made a Pope, he exceeded exceeded in good cheare every day, and then changed his Poſie; Aqua & panis vita canis, Water and bread a doggs life.

Whereas ſhe is ſaid to be ſimple, the word rendred ſimple ſignifieth either one eaſie to be deceived, or deceitfull, apt to deceive others; wherefore the vulgar hath it, Plena illecebris, full of deceits, for ſimple; both which, as hath been ſhewed, agree to the Pope, he is fooliſh and ſimple, becauſe deceived by the Devil, who through pride and covetouſneſſe tempts him to many fooliſh things; and to make theſe ſeeme to come from God, he and his adherents have many devices of feigned miracles, and ſome coming from the dead, and declaring the truth of his Tenets.

Other Expoſitors generally, are ſome for a fooliſh, who are properly underſtood here; ſome for pleaſure, that inticeth as an Harlot; ſome for the wiſdome of this world, which is ſo contrary to Divine wiſdome; or if by wiſdome before ſpoken of, honeſtly be underſtood, for the fooliſh woman, diſhoneſtly here. And ſo they apply all things following accordingly. I ſubſcribe to Lavater, and therefore forbeare to proſecute other interpretations, as agreeing better to chap. 7. Cajetan. Beda. Hugo. Auguſt.

CHAP. X.

A Wiſe Sonne makes a glad Father, but a fooliſh Son is an heavineſſe of his Mother. Salomon having ſpoken hitherto by way of Preface, as the Hebrewes ſay, ſtirring up to get wiſdome, by declaring the excellency hereof, and the benefit in divers reſpects, intermingling alſo ſome precepts of wiſdome, now he entreth upon the body of his Inſtructions, or Proverbs before intimated, or promiſed, for which a new title is prefixed here; The Proverbs of Salomon, as if he had ſaid, Now to come to the body of them, take this for the firſt. A wiſe Sonne, &c. And he worthily beginneth with this of a wiſe Sonne, becauſe to his Sonne, and to all others by the name of children he hath hitherto directed his Exhortations, and he moveth him to affect wiſdome ſo much hitherto commended to him from this, that joy ſhall hereby come to his Father, but otherwiſe heavineſſe to his Mother; if therefore thou loveſt thy Parents be wiſe, and be not a foole to follow fleſhly delights, as ſenſuall perſons doe. Verſ. 1. Proverbs 1.

But why ſhall the Father be glad, and the Mother heavy, and not both be like affected at their ſonnes wiſdome or folly? Some ſay, this is ſpoken with reſpect to that which the man or the woman is moſt apt unto, the man to rejoyce, when there is cauſe, and the woman to grieve moſt; which laſt was verified in Rebecca the mother of Jacob, and Eſau; for when Eſau had taken a ſtranger to wife, and not of the kindred, ſhe ſaid, If Jacob doth ſo, what good will my life doe unto me? And of Jacob it is ſaid, He had ſo great joy of Joſephs proſperity, and honour in Ægypt, that his ſpirit, before drooping, renewed. Gen. 27. 46.

Some, becauſe the Father is the chiefe meanes under God of his ſonnes being wiſe, becauſe he is more ſevere in reproving and correcting him, whereby iniquity is driven away; but the Mother more indulgent and cockering, whereby the childe is many times corrupted, and therefore ſhe, as the cauſe, hath moſt griefe for this, the Father moſt joy for that, as the effect of his Diſcipline; and this pleaſeth me beſt, although there be ſome alſo that yeeld another reaſon, viz. The mans going more abroad, to ſee in what view and credit his ſonne liveth for his wiſdome, to rejoyce his heart, but the woman keeping at home ſeeth it not ſo much; but if he be fooliſh, this is ſhewed moſt towards her to her griefe, who is alwayes in the houſe with him, and whom, for her weakneſſe, he is moſt apt to deſpiſe. Rodolph.

Laſtly, the ſonne for the moſt part is like the Mother, as the common ſaying is, Partus ſequitur ventrem, therefore the mother conceiving, that the fault will be laid chiefly upon her, grieveth moſt, as having the viciouſneſſe in her ſelfe thus the more laid open; to ſay nothing of the mothers knowing him to be her owne ſonne, but the father only thinkes him to be ſo, as Menander ſpeaketh; Who is a wiſe Menander.

a wiſe ſonne in ſpirit. Reſp. We ſhall not need to enquire the premiſes, Chap. 1. &c. conſidered. There is alſo other wiſdome, of which it is ſaid that Aholiab and Bezaleel, had the Spirit of wiſdome to worke in braſſe, and likewiſe wiſdome to worke in any Trade, or in any Art. The ſonne therefore, that is skilfull and wiſe in any Art, or Trade, or place, or calling to doe the workes thereof, if he hath the feare of God, withall, is a wiſe ſonne here ſpoken of: And he is a joy to his father, becauſe he is the more eſteemed for his ſonne, and ſo is his whole family, and the greater good for liveli-hood may hence redound unto him in his old age, as Jacob and all his family fared the better for wiſe Joſeph. Note. It is alſo a joy to him, becauſe that when he dyeth, he ſhall ſtill live in his ſonne. Therefore parents beſtow good education upon your children, let them be taught and inſtructed betimes, bring them not up in idleneſſe, or in any evill way, let them betimes learne ſome Trade, or Art, to which each one is moſt apt, and when need is, let not reproofe and correction be wanting, and let not mothers, who are ſo tender over their children, that they cannot indure to correct them themſelves, be grieved at their being corrected by others, tutors, or governours; eſpecially ſuffer not theft, deceit, lying, gaming, or company-keeping in them: uſe them to duties of devotion, and by no meanes let them ſee an evill example in you that are their parents, but altogether good, knowing that by example they are kept off from good as it were, with both hands, if it be evill, and pulled by precept, but with a little finger.

It is a great overſight in Parents to be altogether intent to gather worldly goods for their children, but for their good education, to have little care, when as riches are fading, and ſoone ſpent away, and are oft-times a meanes to corrupt thy ſonne, and to deſtroy him both in ſoule and body; and it is a great provocation of God to make them in his judgement to be ſo, to ſeeke ſo earneſtly and ſolely after them, but much more if they be gotten with an ill conſcience, as commonly they are by men ſo worldly minded.

Verſ. 2. Prov. 2. And therefore to take our mindes off from this, and to make them more intent to give our children education, it followeth, The riches of iniquity profit nothing, but righteouſneſſe delivereth from death. As if he had ſaid, Ye parents may by drudging, and making your children drudge, intend nothing elſe but to get riches, but this ſhall not profit you or them finally; If yee could leave them thouſands, all were too little to deliver them from death, or to make them live the Pſal. 49. longer in this world, or the more happily: but breed them up in the feare of God, and in the way of vertue, and then ye take a courſe indeed to ſave them from death, that they may live a bleſſed life here, and afterwards in heaven for ever, and not come into that place of torment; Of all the gods, ſaith one, none but will take a gift, except death, but he will take none, nor have any altar built to him, therefore riches are vaine to ſave life, when death cometh to ſtrike.

How righteouſneſſe delivereth from death, it may well be conceived, becauſe underſtand it of death bodily, and it is verified, becauſe the wicked thiefe and robber commonly ſuffereth death, but the juſt and righteous man, no man will harme: Or underſtand it of death everlaſting, when he, that by any wicked meanes getteth Eccl. 7. 20. worldly goods, ſhall after ſuffering here, or if he eſcapeth, hang in hell hereafter; the righteous, who liveth in the feare of God, is free from this danger, not becauſe he is ſo righteous that God can have nothing againſt him, for no man is righteous and ſinneth not, but becauſe God accepteth of him in Chriſt for perfectly righteous, and ſo he is delivered.

If it be ſaid, ſo an unjuſt dealer, that getteth goods unrighteouſly, if he repenteth, ſhall be delivered from death, as the thiefe upon the Croſſe beleeving in Chriſt, and therefore what profit more in righteouſneſſe, if hereby we underſtand righteous dealing, touching delivering from eternall deſtruction, then in unrighteouſneſſe?

Anſw. Very much, becauſe, the juſt dealing man is alwayes in the way of life, and out of the danger of that death, being a beleever, but the wicked is in continuall danger; and it is a rare thing for him to be delivered, if ever he be, it being the caſe of ſo few, that amongſt all the unrighteous dealers that we read of in the booke booke of God; there was but onely one who repented not till his death that was saved, and that was the thiefe before named.

Againe, he that getteth riches unrighteously is further from salvation, then other notorious sinners be, because their sin is not remitted, unlesse restitution of that, which they have taken away, be made; and where is there a man that Zaccheus-like doth this? For the title here given to riches, he calleth them, Riches of iniquity, and so doth Christ, saying, Make you friends of the riches of iniquity.

1. Because most men get them by unjust and unlawfull meanes.

2. Their hearts are taken up with their rejoycing more in them, then in God and his grace, and trusting in them.

3. They are carried on with an unsatiable desire of getting them, the more they have, being the more covetous. Crescit amor nummi quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.

4. Turning even servants unto them, which they should make to serve them, toyling without measure or end, vexing their mindes with worldly cares, sorrowing extreamly for worldly losses, pinching their very bellies, and denying necessaries to themselves. Imperat aut servit collecta pecunia cuique.

5. Hardening their hearts against the cryes of the poore, all which are iniquities and every where condemned in the word of God. The first, 1 Joh. 2.15. Prov. 3. 30. Matth 4.13. 2 Cor. 7.10. Matth. 5.25. 2 Cor. 8. and 9. Riches also are turned into gods, Math. 6. 24 Col. 3.5. Omnipotency to save from evill is ascribed unto them when they are trusted in, and eternity, when it is thought that they shall continue ever. Psal. 62.10.

But how can it be said, They profit nothing, when as herewith we purchase food and raiment, faire houses, servants, honours, and power above other men? Psal. 49.

Sol. All these things have an end, at the least when death cometh, but then what profit is there in them? yea, if then the soule be lost, how great is the damage coming by them? For what shall it profit a man to win the world, and lose his owne soule? as he doth, whose riches are riches of iniquity, any of the wayes before spoken of. He yet, whose riches are Gods blessings, turneth them to his profit, by giving to the poore, he lendeth to the Lord, he putteth out his talent to usury, as it is in the parable to his owne finall great gaine; for feeding the hungry, &c. hee shall heare in the end the Judge inviting him, and saying, Come ye blessed of my Father into the Kingdome prepared for you. He exerciseth hospitality with Abraham and Lot, and so sometimes receiveth Angels, and divers other wayes he doth good, and so layeth to himselfe a good foundation, and a treasure in heaven, which never fadeth, neither can be taken away. And if this be the case of such as have the riches of iniquity, as was before said, who would not rather by good breeding sow the seeds of grace in his children, then by hooke and crooke gather wealth for them? Let the example of an heathen woman Cornelia, a Roman Lady make you ashamed of this; who, when she had another Lady Campana with her, who shewed her many precious jewels, and much rich stuffe, and desired to see hers, she having two sonnes, that then came from Schoole, the two Scipioes, that were afterwards so famous, said, These are my ornaments, meaning to get them inriched with knowledge and vertue was the wealth that she chiefly laboured to inrich them withall. It is true, sometime let parents take what care they can about their childrens education, yet some of them will degenerate, but then they shall have this comfort, that this comes not to passe through their default, and so they shall have comfort to God-ward, the comfort of a good conscience testifying that they have faithfully discharged their duty, as Abraham towards Ishmael, and Isaac towards Esau, although the one proved a wilde man, and the other prophane: For they must consider, that Gods decree shall stand, whether to election or reprobation for reasons best knowne to himselfe, Who will have mercy on whom he will have mercy, and harden whom he will, as the potter doth by his vessels. Matth. 25. 1 Tim. 5.17. Note. Hæc sunt ornamenta mea. Rom. 9.

The Lord will not suffer the soule of the righteous to famish, but he casteth away the substance of the wicked. This most aptly followeth the former, righteousnesse delivereth from death, and riches profit not. For it might bee demanded, Vers. 3. Prov. 3.

manded, if riches profit not, then they will doe us no good, when famine and ſcarcity cometh; but they doe, as experience teacheth, they that have them buy them food and live, but they that have not, are famiſhed and dye. To this he ſaith, the righteous, be he rich or poore, ſhall not famiſh, God will never ſuffer it, but the riches of the wicked, to which they truſt at ſuch times, ſhall faile them, the famine laying hold upon, and conſuming them, notwithſtanding their wealth. The Vulg. for ſubſtance which הון properly ſignifieth, hath inſidias impiorum ſubvertet, expounded by ſome, will bring to nought the lyings in wait of the wicked againſt him to rob and ſpoyle him of his goods alſo, and to ſignifie pravities, or lyings in wait, the word is alſo commonly drawn; but then I conceive rather, that it is meant of goods by wicked meanes gotten by tranſgreſſors, whereby they may ſeeme to be ſo well provided, that they need never to feare any want, but that how ſcarce ſoever the times be, they ſhall have enough; but God will herein croſſe them, and doth many times, by caſualties of fire, or other loſſes bringing them to poverty, and ſo they are famiſhed, but the righteous, although poor, and having little, never. They may, as

2 Cor. 11. 27. ſome obſerve, be in hunger and thirſt, as Paul ſaith of himſelfe, In hunger often, and in famine; and the Worthies, of whom a Catalogue is made, Heb. 11. are

Baſil. ſaid of them to have been deſtitute. but this, as Baſil ſaith, hath been but as Faulkeners deale by their Hawkes, keeping them hungry to make them flye the more earneſtly after their prey, ſo to make them to be the more elevated in their mindes

Pſal. 34. to things above. But by famine ſuch ſhall never periſh, although the very Lions do, as we may ſee in the example of Elijah, when a great famine was in Iſrael, God wrought miracles rather then he ſhould want, and the children of Iſrael had bread given them from heaven all the time that they were in a barren wilderneſſe, and waters were made to come out of a rocke to give them drinke. Some there are, that by the famine, here ſpoken of, underſtand a diſeaſe called, Caninus appetitus, which is, when a man being well fed, is ſtill hungry, and never ſatisfied, which is a great miſery: Some of a ſpirituall famine: but the plaine meaning is, as hath beene already ſaid. And the ſoule is here put for the perſon, as it is commonly in many other places of Scripture. See the like of the righteous being preſerved in time of famine, Pſal. 33. Pſal. 37. and of Gods care to provide for them by divers compariſons, Matth. 6. And this would be well fixed in our mindes, that wee

Note. may neither deſpaire in times of ſcarcity, and want, nor flye to ſinfull meanes for the ſuſtentation of our bodies, to hazard our ſoules by ſtealing, robbing or murthering, as many have done, mothers not ſparing their owne children, and killing

2 King. 7. and making meat of them, as in the ſiege of Samaria, and the laſt ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Romans.

Now Salomon having given this comfort to the righteous, of being preſerved in time of famine, herein verifying that which was before ſaid, Righteouſneſſe delivereth from death, for famine brings death; he to prevent ſuch thoughts as might ariſe hereupon, If it be ſo, that the righteous ſhall not be famiſhed, whatſoever hard times come, then what need hath he to labour, and work? ſubjoyneth

Verſ. 4. Verſe 4. He becometh poore, that dealeth with a ſlack hand, but the hand of the

Prov. 4. diligent maketh rich; Heb. for ſlacke hand, or remiſſe, as the Vulg. hath it. Heb. is רמוה deceitfull, the deceitfull hand makes poore, but the hand of the ſtrong, that is, to labour, rich. A man muſt not be idle when he is able to worke, diſſembling ſome impotency, for then he may well feare to be poore and famiſhed,

2 Theſſ. 3. 10. for he that will not worke, muſt not eat: Yet if any be truly unable through ſickneſſe, or lameneſſe, or any unavoidable caſualty befalling him, he cometh not within the compaſſe of this cenſure, and is to be pitied.

Beda. Beda giveth a ſpirituall ſenſe of theſe words thus, The nigardly hand ſhut up when it ſhould be opened to charity, makes poore and deſtitute of all comfort in the world to come, but the hand of the liberall in giving and diſtributing of theſe worldly goods, brings them in abundance of heavenly riches. And one in favour of this expoſition, makes this Animadverſion upon the word hand, twice mentioned in this Verſe, the word in Hebrew yet varied; firſt here is כף bowing, ſetting forth the palme buckled together, aptly demonſtrating faſt, and cloſe holding of his worldly goods, goods, next here is יד from ידד to extend, demonſtrating one that is liberall; but I rather hold with them that underſtand it literally; and the ſame Animadverſions upon the word ſignifying hand varied will agree thus very well: for how more aptly can an idle perſon be ſet forth, then by a ſhut and buckled hand, not opened to take any inſtrument to worke withall, or a diligent and laborious perſon, then by an hand ſtretched out? Lavater. Cajetan. Rodolph.

Here is alſo another thing to be noted from the word רא poverty here uſed, that the ſame word ſignifieth alſo poyſon; for this ſheweth, that poverty coming by idleneſſe is, as it were a poyſonous poverty, accompanied with the poyſon of of many evils, eſpecially ſtealing, and ſwearing, and for-ſwearing, as may be gathered from chap. 30. Give me not poverty leaſt I ſteale, and take thy Name in vaine. Sometimes alſo ſuch fall into the horrible ſinne of Murther, and then Poverty proveth as poyſon, killing thoſe that take it; idleneſſe alſo, bringing poverty and want unto death, is as the poyſon of the creature called Torpedo, of which Plin writeth. That if it caſts out the poyſon upon the ſharpeſt Speare it is blunted, if upon the feet of the ſwifteſt Goer, he ſtands ſtill, and can goe no further, but languiſheth and dyeth; in alluding to which, idleneſſe is called Torpor; for even ſo hereby from cuſtome comes a ſecond nature, or habit of idleneſſe, corrupting the body as poyſon, till that going over all parts it be deſtroyed hereby, according to the ſaying before alledged upon chap. 6. 6. Hereby then we may ſee what juſt cauſe there is, as in our Law is provided, to proceed againſt idle Vagrants, by ſending them home chaſtiſed, as Malefactors; for they cannot follow this courſe of life, but withall trade in other ſinnes alſo, tending greatly to the deſtruction of the Common-wealth; and therefore they that releeve them, inſtead of being charitable, are enemies to the Country, for nouriſhing up a generation of Vipers, to the ſpoyling and deſtroying of many through the poyſon aforeſaid, growing in them in their idle way of living. Note. Note.

He that gathereth in ſummer is a wiſe ſonne, but he that ſleepeth in harveſt a ſonne of ſhame. As hitherto from the beginning of the Chapter each verſe hath been ſhewed to co-here with the verſe before going, ſo this; for next to the laborious hand making rich, what could more aptly follow, then to ſpeake of labouring, and gathering in the fruits of the earth in ſummer, and ſpecially in harveſt? He had ſaid before, ver. 1. A wiſe ſonne makes a glad father, now he telleth one property of ſuch, he gathereth in ſummer; he takes time whilſt he may to provide as for the Body, ſo for the Soule; in ſummer properly underſtood for the body, being diligent to get in the fruits of the earth, knowing well, that in winter it wil be too late, and in the ſummer of his ſtrength, as is Metaphorically to be underſtood for his ſoul, being as diligent to gather and get up Spirituall fruits, of which ſee the number of nine, Gal. 5. 22. The fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace, meekneſſe, temperance, &c. and not deferre this till the winter of old age, or death, when they are not to be got; no more then Oyle by the fooliſh Virgins in the night of the Bridegroomes coming; wherefore he is a moſt fooliſh ſonne, that may be aſhamed, that ſleepeth now in ſinne, but thinketh to turne and get grace then, he may ſleepe forth on for any good that he may hope to attaine unto, when that time cometh. Beda applyeth this to a Preacher gathering in an harveſt of ſoules by converting to the faith; and unto the harveſt is the Church to be gathered under the Goſpel, compared. Matth. 9. Pray the Lord of the harveſt to ſend forth Labourers into his harveſt; And alſo Joh. 4. Others have ſowne, and yee reap. Verſ. 5. Prov. 5. Note. Matth. 25. Beda.

Bleſſings are upon the head of the juſt, but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked. Having ſhewed the great difference betwixt the righteous, who is alſo charitable, and the wicked, intent only to gather riches, ver. 2. 3. and commended honeſt induſtry and labour. ver. 4. 5. now he addeth more touching the righteous in this; and ver. 7. Bleſſings ſhall be upon the head of the righteous. and the memory of the juſt ſhall be bleſſed; That is, the poore ſhall God bleſſe for him, who have been relieved by him, and pray for him, that God would bleſſe him, and when he is departed out of this life, a bleſſed remembrance of him ſhall be left behind Verſ. 6. Pſal. 34. 16. Job 23. Eſa. 26.

behind amongſt men, with whom his fame ſhall live when he is dead, which is no ſmall bleſſing, ſeeing a good name is as a precious oyntment, and many ſhall ſtill bleſſe, and praiſe God for him, and by making a remembrance of him, and his vertues, ſtirre up others to the imitation thereof, as James doth to patience in adverſity, by the example of Job, who dyed long before, and Paul to faith, and through faith to be in a comfortable expectation of the future glory, deſpiſing, in regard of this, the tranſitory things of this life, by the example of Abraham and Moſes, &c.

Iam. 5. Heb. 11.

And conformably to theſe Leaders doe the Miniſters of Gods Word in theſe dayes, who by ſetting forth the due praiſes of the juſt at their funeralls, ſet as it were an edge upon other mens deſires to imitate and follow them in all good things; to which purpoſe examples are of great force; and therefore for their Preacher at this time to paſſe all the good that was in them over in ſilence, is, both to deny them their due, and wilfully to neglect a ſpeciall meanes of whetting on others to an holy emulation of them, and ſo of taking all advantages to further the worke of grace in them, which who ſo doth, acquitteth not himſelfe well in his Miniſteriall office, in that he ſpeakes not the word in due ſeaſon, which is commended to be like apples of gold with pictures of ſilver. It is true, which is commonly ſaid, Vertue liveth after funeralls, but this it doth not, if it be not ſpoken of, and publiſhed; the tongues of men, and ſpecially of publicke men are the meanes, whereby it is made ſo to doe, next unto the monuments of charity, and other good deeds, which they leave behind them: for what is it to bleſſe but bene dicere to ſpeake well, and to bleſſe the memory of a man, but to ſpeake well of the well deſerving, when they are dead? but in ſeeking to make the memory of the juſt after their death bleſſed, we muſt take heed, that to curry favour with the friends of the wicked deceaſed, we communicate not our praiſes to them, but to the really juſt, and herein exceed not the truth neither, leaſt whilſt we ſeeke either of theſe wayes to make the memory of the dead bleſſed, we bring upon our ſelves the curſe of the imputation of baſe and palpable flattery.

Vivit poſt funera virtus.

Hitherto matter of incouragement to the righteous: now for the wicked he ſaith on the contrary ſide, Violence ſhall cover his memory, and his name ſhall rot; the vulgar, for violence hath, iniquity ſhall cover, as the word חמס ſignifieth, or lying, where by mouth the face is meant, or the whole head in oppoſition to the head of the juſt ſpoken of before; and in both places it may be taken for the whole man, bleſſing ſhal be upon the righteous, but curſing, the puniſhment of his ſinne upon the wicked, for iniquity is here put for the puniſhment of iniquity; Cajetan alone contrary to all others gives this expoſition, Bleſsing is in the head of the juſt, he meditateth how to bleſſe, and bleſſeth with his mouth, but wicked ſpeeches fill and cover the mouth of the wicked, from which curſing and bitterneſſe floweth, as water from a Well being covered with plenty thereof; the former ſence agreeth beſt, and therefore is rather to be followed, becauſe it agreeth beſt with the argument in hand, as hath been before ſhewed, only it may further be added, the juſt ſhall have the bleſsing of worldly wealth, and weare it, as a crowne upon his head, becauſe gotten by honeſt labour, and induſtry in a lawfull calling: but the wicked getting their goods by ſtealth, robbery, and wrong, ſhall have their mouthes covered at the laſt by this their iniquity, coming to ſhamefull ends; or underſtanding by the wicked idle perſons, and ſuch as ſleep in harveſt, The meaning is, they ſhal have little worldly wealth to ſet them forth, but contrariwiſe live in poverty, and baſeneſſe, ſtanding in ſilence, as it were with their mouthes covered, when their betters being in preſence ſhall ſpeake.

Cajetan.

Touching the rotting of their name, when the memory of the righteous is precious, it is a metaphoricall ſpeech taken from a Tree, which for a time groweth greene, and flouriſheth, but at length rottenneſſe takes it; ſo the wicked may for a time flouriſh, and have a great name, but at length they are cut off, and as their bodies rot in the Grave, ſo doth their name, as it was with Nebuchadnezar, and other Tyrants, the names of none are ſo rotten and ſtinking now as their names, how-ever glorious they were for a time in this world; but the righteous

Patriarchs, Prophets, and Apoſtles, although many of them were deſpiſed, and perſecuted in the time of their living here, yet ſince their death are highly and honourably accounted of amongſt the faithfull in all Countries, and Nations throughout the world. Lavater.

Of this even Heathens took notice, Propertius ſaith to this effect; Antiquity feigns all things greater after death, a greater name comes into mens mouthes after their Funeralls. And if any Martyrs be not remembred by name, yet their names are written in Heaven, and that is the greateſt bleſſing of all; thus Lavater. Propert. Eleg. 3. Omnia poſt obitum fingit majora vetuſtas, majus ab exequiis nomen ad ora venit.

The wiſe in heart will receive commandement, but a prating ſoole ſhall fall, Hebr. A ſoole by his lips ſhall fall, or in his lips. Here the wiſe-hearted is oppoſed to one that is raſh to ſpeake, and ſo many times looſeth his friend by his inconſiderate ſpeeches of him, or to him, and ſometimes ſuffereth for his licentiouſneſſe in ſpeaking, or through a multitude of words becomes guilty of ſinne, as it is after ſaid. Verſ. 8. Prov. 7.

The commandements here ſpoken of are his Parents commandements often before mentioned, ſo that ſtill ſome reference is herein had to verſ. 1. touching a wiſe ſonne; the word יִלָּבֵשׁ here uſed ſignifieth not only to fall, or to be beaten, or puniſhed, but alſo to halt, ſtumble, and make haſte, upon which laſt R. Hamanuel going ſaith, That hereby he is meant, that before he hath well learned that which pertaineth to Divine knowledge, takes upon him to teach others, he through his haſtineſſe uttereth things erroneous, and unſound, and weake, and ſo halteth, and goeth not on ſtreightly, as a Teacher ſhould doe, and by this meanes he falleth from the Orthodox truth, and makes others to fall with him; of ſuch Gregory Nazianzen ſaith well; He is not a Painter that doth not firſt temper divers Colours well, and delineate Figures; but into the Chaire men come without any labour or paines taken before, like the Giants of whom the Poets write, making themſelves holy Teachers in a day, and wiſe men, that have yet learned no wiſdome, neither doe they bring any thing conducing to it, but only their wills. R. Himanuel. Nazia. de laude Baſilii.

Touching which Fable of the Giants made in a day, the Poets feigne, That Jupiter tooke Lernean teeth and ſowed them in the ground, which in one day came up into Giants, ready armed with ſwords and ſpeares, and other Armes unto the battell. Againſt this raſhneſſe and haſtineſſe to ſpeake, ſee Jam. 1. 19. Let every one be ſwift to heare, ſlow to ſpeake.

And the ſame Greg. Nazianz further ſaith, To teach others before a man hath well learned himſelfe, is in dolio diſcere, That is, to learne in a great Veſſell, by which as a Proverb then in uſe is meant, to doe as a Potter beginning with the forming of a great Veſſel, before that he hath well learned the Potters Art, whereas ſuch commonly begin with making little pannes and pots firſt, not adventuring upon this, as the chiefe worke of that Trade, to which moſt skill is required, till afterwards.

Some expound this of falling at ſome precepts uttered, at which the foole is offended, as that rich young man, that came to Chriſt to know what he ſhould doe to be ſaved; but when he heard of ſelling all, and giving to the poore, he was offended; whereas the wiſe in heart receiveth all Commandements, applying himſelfe to one as well as to another to doe it, and then the word lips, which is without any prepoſition, muſt not be read with the word foole, but with the word fall, and not be underſtood of the fooles lips, but of his, that giveth the commandements. Cajetan.

Againe, ſome rendring the word halt expound it thus; The foole is fickle and inconſtant, ſometimes holding one thing, which hath been taught, and ſometimes going from this, and holding another, as the Apoſtle ſaith, being carried about with every wind of doctrine; and Elijah to Iſrael, How long halt yee betwixt two opinions? we may follow any or all of theſe, becauſe the word uſed comprehends them all, and the Hebr. text leaveth us to our liberty to joyne lips, either to foole or fall, only becauſe in the former part of this verſe it is ſaid, The wiſe in heart receives commandement: it anſwereth beſt hereunto if to foole we joyne lips, 1 King. 18.

the foole in lips falleth; that is, the haſty to ſpeake, he in whom the tongue runneth before the wit.

Verſ. 9. Prov. 8. He that walketh uprightly walketh ſurely, but he that perverteth his wayes ſhall be knowne. If the laſt words of verſe 8. be rendred fall, there is ſome coherence of theſe words with them thus; although the foole, who is ſo ready to ſpeake, falls, and diſgraceth himſelfe, by his words bewraying his folly, yet the righteous falleth not, as he goeth, but walketh ſurely, but he thus perverting his wayes by his unſeaſonable ſpeaking, when he ſhould be ſilent, is knowne to bee a foole, and void of that wiſdome, which hath been ſo much before commended unto him. But it is commonly held that a fooliſh prater is not ſo much taxed here, but the deceitfull and cunning diſſembler. He that walketh uprightly, uſing no diſſimulation, is ſure never to be taken to ſuffer as an evill doer, for nothing that is evill can be diſcovered in him, who knoweth himſelfe cleare from all fraud, being the ſame indeed that he is in ſhew, and outward appearance, but he that perverteth his wayes ſhall be knowne, the deceitfull perſon making a faire ſhew, but having contrary thoughts and intentions in his heart ſhall be found out in his deceit, and by all men, to his diſgrace knowne at length what he is, and dealt with accordingly.

Greg. mag. To this effect, Gregory ſaith, There is nothing that a ſimple and plaine-dealing man feareth from others, for his ſimplicity or ſingleneſſe is a kind of art unto him, neither can he be ſuſpected, or ſo much as this way ſuffer, for that which he remembreth not, that he hath done; but contrari-wiſe, a wicked deceitfull man is alwayes in labour, becauſe he both ſtudieth how he may circumvent others, and feareth, that being in his ſubtile practices found out, others may doe hurt unto him. And in particular, touching a deceitfull man, ſaith Athanaſ. Athanaſius, he is like unto one, that takes up a Serpent to throw at another, he is more bitten and hurt, then he at whom he throweth it.

Verſ. 10. Prov. 9. He that winkes with his eye cauſeth ſorrow, but a prating foole ſhall fall. Here the laſt words are the ſame with thoſe of Verſe 8. and therefore expounded already; and for winking with the eye, ſee before Chap. 6. 13. but how the winking eye cauſeth ſorrow, and how to this the fall of a prating foole is oppoſed, is here to be ſhewed; Clem. Alex. ſaith, that the adulterous eye is the winking eye Clem. Alex. here meant, which being firſt caſt upon a woman, and by this ſigne made, the adultery begun, the man that doth ſo, beginneth his owne ſorrow, for that much ſorrow ſhall be to ſuch, hath beene often ſhewed before.

To expreſſe this, Sardanapalus that laſcivious Aſſyrian King was painted, lying and looking with his eyes towards the beautifull faces of harlots ſet before him. Chryſoſtome expounds it of ſorrow cauſed in a mans wife, by his wanton looking Chryſ. upon other women through, having jealouſie in her heart therefore; or in an husband when this is done by his wife: For hence, ſaith he, ariſeth ſo great griefe, as that if all griefes for worldly things were put together, this is equivalent, if not greater then they all. Beda taking it for winking by way of deriſion, ſaith ſuch a Beda. man cauſeth ſorrow, becauſe he that is thus derided, vexeth, and is pierced as if he were cut in his fleſh thereby, and to intimate this, the word rendred winketh, ſignifieth alſo cutteth. The Septuagint Tranſlation hath it, He that winkes with his eyes through deceit, congregates ſorrow as to men, but he that faithfully reproveth procures peace, which being taken for a Commentary upon this Verſe, ſheweth, that a deceitfull heart covered over with a winking eye, or an eye conniving at other mens groſſe ſinnes, is the winking eye, that cauſeth ſorrow, here meant, for the fathers winking at his childs ſinnes, or the maſter at his ſchollers or ſervants, and not reproving them, or one fellow, brother, or friend at the ſinnes of another, is a permitting of them, till ſinne groweth to an height, and judgements cauſing much ſorrow come therefore; for the next words, but or and, for ſo it is Heb. The foole by lips ſhall fall, if the expoſition laſt given be received, the ſenſe will be plaine thus, the foole affected with the words coming from the lips of the flatterers, who winke upon him, as delighting out of a diſſembling heart in that which he doth, whereby, and by theſe words ſpoken to the ſame effect, he is incouraged couraged to goe on in his evill wayes, ſhall in the end have a great fall, and be ruined, and undone hereby; and then the ſcope of this place is altogether to ſhew the hurt, which crafty flatterers doe, and to whom, that no man may be ſuch a foole, but learne to be wiſer, then to be taken with their words and winkings, as ſome are, not caring to heare any other ſpeaking, or to conſort with others, from whom they may heare ſomething, of which they have need for their reformation. But let all ſuch know, that if they doe thus, their fall is coming, and they ſhall not eſcape to be moved, no more, to delight in theſe ſoothing and carnall companions, but as David did, In the Saints and the excellent. Note.

The mouth of a righteous man is a well of life, but violence covereth the mouth of the wicked. The latter words here are the ſame with verſe 6. and therefore already expounded. Verſ. 11. Prov. 10.

For the former, Lyra and Hugo, underſtand hereby the mouth of him that confeſſeth all his ſinnes: for as waters flowing from a Well, come from the moſt inward and hidden parts of the earth; ſo the mouth truly confeſſing all his ſinnes, bringeth them forth from the greateſt ſecreſie, wherein they have beene acted, and from the ſecret parts of his heart, where evill thoughts harbour, although never breaking out into act, and the mouth thus confeſſing is a Well of life, becauſe pardon and life is thus attained, For he that confeſſeth and forſakes his ſinnes ſhall have mercy, but the mouth of the wicked covereth iniquity; for ſo the Vulgar renders it, which Lyra followeth, and ſaith, contrary to the righteous mans mouth is the wicked mans, for when as the one ingeniouſly confeſſeth all his ſinnes, the other hideth and covereth them cloſe, according to the fore-going words of the place before alleadged, He that hideth his ſinnes, ſhall not proſper: But this ſeemeth to me but a forced expoſition, followed onely by thoſe that ſtand for auricular confeſſion. Lyra, Hugo. Prov. 28. 13.

There is therefore another expoſition of Lavater, underſtanding the mouth of godly Miniſters, or Judges, the one, by their inſtructions and exhortations flowing out waters of life, of which who ſo drinketh hath them continually induring to eternal life; the other, by giving ſentence of life and abſolution for the innocent; but for the condemnation of the wicked, whereby others are made to be ware, and forſaking wickedneſſe, the way of death, by vertuous living, to come into the way of life. Lavater. Ioh. 4.

And for the words following, The mouth of the wicked covereth iniquity, for ſo Lavater alſo readeth it, and the Hebrew will beare it; this is ſpoken to ſhew, that as the godly are exerciſed in good ſpeeches, which may miniſter grace to the hearers (not without uttering ſomething in way of humbling themſelves for their ſins, to put their hearers on the more, and that they may finde the more favour at Gods hands, as Paul Rom. 7.) ſo the wicked mans mouth, and the words that come there-from, are to cover ſin, either denying or extenuating the evill that they have done, as King Saul, who ſaid to Samuel, that he had done, as God commanded him, or covering their evill intentions in ſpeaking thoſe faire, whom they deſire to circumvent, as the Phariſees and Herodians dealt by Chriſt, when they ſaid, We know that thou art a juſt man, and ſpeakeſt the truth, not fearing any man, ſhall we pay tribute to Cæſar or not? And Herod bad the Wiſe-men come againe, and bring him word where Chriſt was borne, that he might come to worſhip him, thus covering his bloody intent to kill him. Thus Lavater, whereunto we may adde, that the mouth of the wicked covereth iniquity alſo by juſtifying others that commit iniquity, againſt which a woe is denounced, Woe to them that juſtifie the wicked, and condemne the righteous, as the falſe Prophets did. Eph. 4. 28. 1 Sam. 15. Matth. 22. Eſa. 5.

Laſtly, becauſe the Septuagint render the words, A veine of life is in the hand of the righteous, Some expound it of acknowledging, becauſe, by this coming from the liberality of his hand, many have their lives ſaved.

This is followed by Chryſoſtome, and ſome others, ſaying, that the ſimilitude holds well betwixt a fountaine of living water, and the liberall mans hand, becauſe as this is alwayes in running, and ceaſeth not, either in Winter or Summer, ſo doth not a mercifull man ceaſe giving at any time; and as a fountaine by running continually hath the water thereof kept the ſweeter, whereas ſtanding ſtill water corrupteth Chryſoſt.

rupteth, ſo the goods of the mercifull are ſanctified by their giving, according to that, Give almes of that which ye have, and all things ſhall be cleane unto you. Mark. 11. 44

Verſ. 12. Prov. 11.

Hatred ſtirreth up ſtrife, but love covereth all ſinnes. Becauſe he ſpake Verſe 11. of covering iniquity, for which he taxed the wicked, now he teacheth, that there is a covering of ſinne that comes from love, whereby the righteous, and ſuch, as are indued with a ſpirit of love, cover ſinnes, which is commendable, yea an inſeparable property of ſuch.

And what covering of ſinne this is, we may gather from the Propoſition propoſed, and oppoſed hereunto, Hatred ſtirs up ſtrife; they are then all ſuch ſinnes onely, as are committed againſt us, whereat we are offended, or other ſinnes which are not ſo great and groſſe, but leſſer ſinnes, which are incident to us all, whilſt we live in this world. For great ſinnes, Murther, Adultery, Fornication, Theft, Blaſphemy, Perjury, common ſwearing by the holy name of God, or drunkenneſſe commonly practiſed, with the like, we muſt not cover, or conceale; or Idolatry, or Atheiſme, for he that doth, makes himſelfe guilty; and into this Catalogue cometh alſo Witchcraft, and having familiar ſpirits, and ſeeking to them, and pernicious lying, and prophaneneſſe; for againſt all theſe the Lord hath enacted ſevere puniſhments by men to be executed; and when ſuch have beene tolerated, and not proceeded againſt, God hath beene ſo highly offended, as that he hath threatned, and judged thoſe that have let them eſcape, as contracting guilt thus unto themſelves; as Ahab, for Benhadad the blaſphemous King of Syria, let goe in peace, and Eli for his adulterous, and ſacrilegious ſonnes, and the Angel of the Church of Thyatira is threatned for ſuffering that woman Jezabel there; which ſheweth alſo, that Hereſie is as ſpirituall Adultery, and therefore not to be connived at, but with all vehemency oppoſed till it be rooted out. 1 King. 20. 36. 1 Sam. 1. Rev. 2. 20.

Moreover, Saul was charged to have done fooliſhly in ſparing Agag, the King of Amalek, and therefore had his Kingdome rent away from him; wherefore groſſe ſinnes are not to be covered, but proceeded againſt: But for leſſer ſinnes, love covereth them all, for ſo it is commanded, Gal. 6. Beare you one anothers burthen, and ſo fulfill the Law of Chriſt; and what theſe burthens be, the words before going declare, If any be faln by infirmity, yee that are ſpirituall, reſtore ſuch in the ſpirit of meekneſſe: they are the infirmities of nature, againſt which we continually ſtrive, but cannot maſter, and altogether ſubdue, whilſt we carry the fleſh about with us; ſuch is raſh anger, and evill ſpeeches uttered in anger, leſſer oaths and lyes, things done or ſpoken againſt us, which are not of any great moment, or which may in love be tolerably interpreted, ſome deceitfulneſſe in dealing, idleneſſe, neglect, &c. for to this effect the Apoſtle ſaith, Love ſuffereth all things, beleeveth all things, and thinketh no evill; yet even leſſer ſinnes are not ſo to be covered, as not to be reproved, for the leaſt ſinne is cenſured, Matth. 5. 19. and we muſt endeavour, as was ſaid before, to reſtore the faine through infirmity, and then are they covered by love, when meekly and gently we ſeeke to reclaime here-from, and not ſharply and uncharitably either divulge them to others to their diſgrace, or tell them of them in an upbraiding manner, or before others, but firſt alone, as our Lord hath preſcribed. Neither are all wrongs done to us ſo to bee paſſed over, as not to ſeeke recompence there-for, but ſo as not to revenge our ſelves, or to right our owne wrongs by our owne power, but by the higher powers, who beare not the ſword in vaine; and not to doe thus neither, but upon weighty, and urgent occaſions, when we have to doe with unreaſonable minded men, and when with ſuch, not putting yet all love away towards them, but in proceeding againſt them according to Law, ſeeking more their reformation, then their ruine. 1 Sam 15. Rom. 7. 1 Cor. 13. Matth. 18. Rom. 13.

And the like rule is to be followed in oppoſing the moſt notoriouſly wicked, although we contend againſt them to death, as their crime may deſerve, yet not to do it in hatred, but out of love to their ſouls, ſeeking their ſalvation, and that they may be forgiven: and therefore not as glad of the occaſion of bringing them to their condign puniſhment, as being their enemies, but grieving that they ſhould be ſo vile, vile, as to bring ſuch Judgements upon themſelves. The Sept. for ſinnes, which love covereth, have contentions, but both Peter and James, alledging this ſaying, have it ſinnes. 1 Pet. 4. 8. Jam. 5. 18.

The expoſition hitherto made, I have for the ſubſtance thereof taken out of Lavater, and Lyra, and it is true: for as Auguſtine ſaith. If thou hateſt thy Brother, and ſo ſpeakeſt unto him, ſtrife will enſue, for hatred both aggravateth all things done or ſaid unreaſonably, and is rugged and harſh in language, ſo that whatſoever ſinnes he telleth another of, that hateth him, there is no expectation of doing him good, but that enmity and contention ſhould be the more ſtirred up; but ſpeake in love unto him, and ſay what thou wilt, the iſſue will be good. But whereas the expoſition before going takes in both ſinnes in generall, and thoſe committed by one man againſt another; ſome reſtraine that which is here ſaid, only to ſinnes committed by one man againſt another, and make this to be the meaning, when any occaſion of ſtrife falleth out betwixt man and man; he that hath love in him handles the matter ſo, that he ſuppreſſeth, and keeps it from breaking out, as a thing covered, and covered ſo, as a Phyſitian covereth a ſoare with a Plaiſter, to heale it, and to make the cure ſo perfect, as that not ſo much as a ſcarre is left appearing; but he, in whom there is hatred, is very contentious, aggravating every ſmall matter without meaſure, and recounts things done of old to encreaſe it the more, as the word יערר ſtirres up, intimateth; ſo we look to the word יעור ſignifying, to ſtirre up from ſleepe, for hereby is ſhewed, That old unkindneſſes, which have ſlept long, are wakened up againe by ſuch, as have hatred in their hearts, it appearing hereby that they were never dead, and quite forgotten, as they are with thoſe, that are indued with love. Lavater. Lyra. Auguſt. in Gal. Quicquid lacerato animo dixeris puienti eſt impetus non charitas corrigentis, dilige & dic quod voles. &c. Rhodolph. Hugo Car.

This of making things worſe, and faults greater by the malicious, is notably ſet forth by Greg. Nazianz. thus: as the earth, which is ſeene by the ſound to ſtand ſtill, but to the diſeaſed by the vertigo or turning ſickneſſe to turne round, ſo when as he that hath love ſeeth nothing, but peace and quietneſſe, the malicious, by reaſon of the diſeaſe of malice in them, ſee all things turning ſo, his paſſion repreſenting them to him, like himſelfe, as that to him there ſeemes matter enough of quarrelling and extreame falling out; or as the diſtance between two Pillars ſeemeth greater to him that is nearer, then to thoſe that are further of; ſo he that is apt to contention, lookes more nearly into things done, and thus the difference is greater, every word and circumſtance ſeeming to him to adde to the offence; whereas the loving over-looke theſe, and ſo the cauſe of diſſention ſeemes ſo little, that he paſſeth it over as nothing, or ſome little diſtaſte only thereof being ſhewed. Gregor. Nazia. orat. de pace.

In the lips of him that hath underſtanding wiſdome is found, but a rod is for the back of him that is voyd of underſtanding. Wiſdome is like unto a treaſure; for, as hath been before ſaid, this is ſo great a treaſure, that gold and precious Stones are not comparable to it: Now becauſe treaſures are hidden in the ground, and wiſdome in the heart, for which, places are marked where they lye, that a man may the more readily finde them; ſo there is an outward marke of wiſdome, and that is, the wiſe ſpeeches that come from the lips of ſuch a man, for hereby it may be knowne, that wiſdome is there within the heart, as by ſtripes upon the backe; That is, the markes ſtill remaining of them, that ſuch an one is without an heart, as the Hebrew word ſignifieth, and the vulgar renders it, deſtituti corde. Verſ. 13. Prov. 12.

But what lips or words are they that ſhew a wiſe heart within? Anſ. Uncorrupt words, and ſharp againſt ſinne, which tend altogether to the reforming of mens manners, and wherein there is no falſhood, errour, or flattery; no obſcenity, ſcurrility, or fooliſh jeaſting, which comes from men of a baſe, and degenerate mind. As that they ſay of old, a treaſure hid in the ground was ſometime marked by Char-coale, which being put into the ground is incorruptible, or peices of Glaſſe, which are ſo likewiſe, and ſharp and cutting to him that goeth upon them with his bare feete. As for the rod, which is for the fooles back, the meaning is alſo, he is not taught by words, though never ſo wiſe, but by ſtripes and ſufferings; yea the words words of his lips, and the acts of his hands are such, as that they procure unto him many stripes. But against that, which was before said of the man of understanding, the next words may seeme to make, ver. 14.

Vers. 14. Wise men lay up knowledge, but the mouth of the foolish is neare destruction. For if knowledge be laid up by the wise, it is hidden, and therefore not to be found in his lips. Lavater to this saith well, they are said to lay up knowledge;

Lavater.

First because, they make no ostentation of it, as they that have little in them commonly doe, according to the Proverb, The emptiest vessell makes the greatest sound.

2. They bring not forth their knowledge at all times, or before all persons; for there is a time to hold ones peace, as well as to speake; and some are swine, before whom some pearles of precious speeches are not to be cast. It is not meant, that the wise so lay up knowledge, as that they utter none of it with their lips; for what use were there of a treasure so lying hid, or of wisdome thus concealed? thy knowledge is nothing, unlesse it be uttered, that others hereby may be made to know also; and as by word, so by writing, there being otherwise great danger of much of thy knowledge, being at length buried, before that thy lips can come to utter it, as some learned men have beene hereby forced to anticipate the time of uttering themselves by writing, because they could not in their publike exercises go on fast enough in delivering what they had profitably studied.

Scire tuum nihil est, nisi te scire hoc sciat alter.

And for this wee have warrant both by precept, Hab. 2. and example not onely of Apostles, and Prophets, and Evangelists, from whom we have the Text written, but also of Expositors, both Rabbins and Christian Doctors, who to the great benefit of the Church, have greatly laboured this way in all times and ages, without helpe from whom, how little should we have knowne in comparison of what wee now doe? although I deny not but that Priest acquitteth himselfe well, whose lips preserve knowledge, yet hee better, who doth it both by lips and penne.

Mal. 2. 7.

These words are so farre from contradicting those of vers. 13. that they are rather a reason of them. In men of knowledge, wisdome may well be said to bee found, as flowing from their lips, because that by much and long study and labour, they have gotten and laid it up before they utter it, and this sheweth them to bee wise; if any man should aske, by reason of the words spoken before, Wisdome is found in the lips of men of knowledge, Who are these men of knowledge? It is answered here, such as lay up knowledge, first study to inable themselves to teach, and not such, as before any store laid up rashly, adventure upon this office, for such are neare to destruction or contrition by meanes of their mouths, speaking things that they know not at a venture, which hath sometimes caused, to many, much trouble, so that they have been even marred, as a broken earthen vessell, from which the word contrition is taken.

Note.

They also who speake all that they know are likewise here taxed, when they doe it without consideration of time, place, and persons before whom. For as Socrates saith, The knowledge of many things is a meanes either of much good or hurt to many men, of good to him that useth it rightly, but of hurt to him that speakes any thing before any man.

Socrates.

To conclude, the sense is, hereby it is knowne who hath wisdome, viz. he that gathers and layeth it up in his heart, till he seeth a fit time to utter it; but he is a fool, and by his owne mouth is in danger to suffer, that either teacheth before he is stocked with knowledge, or that can keepe nothing which he knoweth, of how ill consequence soever it may be to him, or his friends, being by his mouth revealed.

Vers. 15. The rich mans wealth is his strong City, the destruction of the poore is their poverty. The Vulgar, The feare of the poore. This is by some understood of rich men using their riches to charity, for then their riches procure them the strong City, the New-Jerusalem, for as by gifts a City is yeelded into the hands of him that giveth them, although so strong that he cannot otherwise get it, so by almes to the poore such friends are made, that they receive the rich givers into these heavenly heavenly habitations; but the poore who have not wherewithall thus to attaine this City, are for the attaining thereof, subjected to many terrours and feares through sufferings which they indure, that they may come to this glory. By some, the rich mans wealth defends him as a strong City, whatsoever is by men here attempted against him, he being by his wealth able to defend himselfe, and therefore he feares not what his worst enemies can doe against him: a good purse will defend him by friends, which he can make hereby against them all, but poverty may well make a man fearfull, because the poore lye open to danger by all that are mightier then they. And this is here spoken, because he had before commended diligence, and gathering in Summer; for this is an incouragement to a man thus to doe, to hear that thus he shall get him a strong City, as it were, wherein hee may dwell safely. Rodolph.

Others will have this to be the meaning, his riches are thought by him to be as his strong City, and therefore he trusteth in them, which is dangerous to his soule; and the poore man feareth want, and is uncomfortable and ready to murmure, and to be discontented at his estate, which is as dangerous, because some are thus driven to wicked courses of stealing and lying, or other evill wayes to get worldly goods. And according to this Exposition, two extreams are here set forth, and hereby the moderate estate is commended, as also Prov. 3. in expresse words. Touching the first of these Expositions, it is onely Allegoricall; for the second, it seemeth to mee most genuine, for the reason rendred; and because the next words Verse 16. seeme to be added for the confirmation of it, thus understood; The labour of the righteous tendeth to life, but the fruit of the wicked to sinne; and Verse 17. He is in the way of life that keepeth instruction, and he that refuseth reproofe, erreth; as if he had said, Well is the rich mans wealth said to be his strong City, defending him, and preserving him alive, for it is so to the righteous, who by honest labour and paines-taking, through Gods blessing is made rich, both for the reason before given: And if we take it in the Allegoricall sense also, because with his riches exercising much charity, he makes him friends to be received into life, when this fraile life shall be ended. Hugo Cardin. Vers. 16. Vers. 17.

And with this the next words are most consonant, He is in the way of life that keepeth instruction; this being one instruction to labour, that he may have wherewithall to give to the needy, as the Apostle also commandeth, saying, Let him that hath stolne steale no more, but worke with his hands the thing that is good, that he may have to give to him that needeth. Eph. 4. 28.

Touching the next words opposed, The fruit of the wicked is sinne, and consequently death, it is meant, that which he hath is spent in a sinfull way, by whoring and drunkennesse, and this is because he abhorreth from instruction, whereby he might be brought into the right way, and so persisteth in his erring herefrom, till that destruction cometh, and there will be no remedy, according to the last words, He that refuseth reproofe, erreth.

Touching the third Exposition, because the words following have no coherence with it, I thinke it not pertinent to this place.

Now for the words of Verse 16. The labour of the righteous tendeth to life, &c. This, saith Cajetan, is to be understood of agri-culture, not of other trades of life, in which gaine cometh not in so righteously, but by much fraud and deceit; for of all men, husbandmen, that till the ground, and tend sheep and other cattell get their wealth the most inoffensively. Their labour therefore, who when they have gotten, spend it well in charity and hospitality, tendeth to life, but even amongst these, there are some whose fruits thus coming in are spent in sinne, as was before said, or to sinne being covetously hoorded up, till the rust takes them, as Jam. 5. 1. they having no heart to doe good therewith. Vers. 16. Cajetan.

This should make Trades-men carefull to manage their affaires rightly, in all things walking by the rule of justice and equity, because there is so much danger otherwise of getting a curse together with their worldly wealth, wherein they can hardly exceed so much as they doe, but by making bold to goe for gaine from the foresaid rule. Note.

And

And husbandmen alſo are to take heed, that their innocent courſe of life be not turned to ſinne againſt that which hath been already ſaid in commending the righteous, and the courſe taken by them, and condemning the wicked, and their ſinfull courſes.

Hugo, Arbor. For the life here ſpoken of, to which the labour of the juſt is ſaid to tend, ſome hereby underſtanding eternall life, as we alſo doe, ſay, that it merits life, when wealth thus gotten is ſpent in charity; but for ſo much as when we have done all that is commanded, we muſt ſay we are unprofitable ſervants; how can they be juſtified, that ſay we have merited? It tends therefore to life, but it is of grace and not of works, that we are ſaved.

Luk. 17. 10.

Lavater. Some expound the word life of this life thus, The righteous labour onely, that they may get things neceſſary, and live in a moderate condition in this world, being well content thus to doe, but the wicked is not ſatisfied, unleſſe he hath his fruits coming in in abundance, not onely to maintaine life, but pride and prodigality alſo, or to feed their covetous mindes, which are ſo much delighted in having abundance.

And to this agreeth the tenour of the Scriptures, which exhort us, If we have food and raiment to be content, and ſhew the evill eſtate of thoſe that get and gather, that they may eat and drinke and be merry all their dayes after, in the Parable of the rich foole, whoſe grounds brought forth in abundance. And to this ſhould I ſubſcribe, but that the next words, wherein life is alſo again ſpoken of, muſt needs be underſtood of eternall life.

Luk. 12.

Verſ. 17. He that keepeth inſtruction is in the way of life, but he that refuſeth, erreth from this way, and ſo is in the way of death; for it is not to be doubted, but that by life here, and verſe 16. the ſame life is meant, and therefore by labour that tends to life, muſt be meant the labour to get not ſo much out of a covetous minde of having, but joyned with a godly intention of exerciſing charity, the iſſue whereof ſhall be life everlaſting.

Verſ. 18. He that hideth hatred with lying lips, and that uttereth ſlander, is a foole; that is, the baſe flatterer, who before a mans face ſpeaketh him faire, as if hee thought well of him, and loved him, but behind his backe to others ſpeakes ill of him, is a foole, the reaſon whereof Plutarch rendreth, ſaying, that he ſeeketh teſtimony from him, whoſe credit by his backbiting he weakneth, which none but a foole would doe. But the Hebrew plainly ſetteth forth two ſorts of men here taxed, the one of thoſe that hate a man, yet they hide this under the vaile of faire ſpeeches; the other of thoſe that utter themſelves by ſlandering, and of ſuch it is ſaid, that he is a foole, thus Lavater and Muſſet, who renders it, He that is a man of deceitfull lips hideth hatred, but he that uttereth reproach, is a foole; and the Hebrew נבל is reproach or detraction, and therefore it is not neceſſary to expound it by ſlander, and ſo here one and the ſame man is not taxed, as was ſaid before out of Hugo, but two ſorts; the ſecret hater diſſembling his hatred by his faire ſpeeches, he is branded by this, that he is a lyar, and the foule-mouthed railer, who plainly ſheweth his malicious minde by reproachful ſpeeches, wherein yet he ſheweth himſelfe to thoſe that heare him, a foole, becauſe that being blinded with wrath in his reaſon, he uttereth many words which are fooliſh and ridiculous.

Verſ. 18. Prov. 13. Hugo. Plutarch. Lavater. Muſſet.

And of this the next words yeeld a reaſon, Sinne is not wanting in a multitude of words, and if not ſinne, then not folly, and by conſequence, he that uttereth railing ſpeeches, as impudent reproachers commonly doe, muſt needs be a foole.

Verſ. 19.

Here then are three vices of the tongue cenſured together; 1. The flatterers lying to cover his malice. 2. The reproachfull words of the railer. 3. The multiloquy of thoſe, that delight in prating.

And then immediately after follow three things touching the tongue that are commended. 1. Taciturnity, He that refraines his lips, is wiſe. 2. Gracious ſpeaking, The tongue of the juſt is as choice ſilver. 3. Good inſtructions, The lips of the righteous feed many. That againſt the vices of the tongue being ſpoken, that one might take heed of them, and of a malicious heart, from whence they come, for he whoſe heart is tainted with malice, whether he ſpeaketh faire'y, or reproachfully, ſinneth; this of the vertues of the tongue, that we may ſtudy either to ſpeake ſo from time to time, or hold our peace. Note.

For multi-loquia, or many words, herein is ſinne, becauſe ſome of them muſt needs be idle, and of idle words we muſt give account at the day of Judgement; yet a man may ſpeake many words, and none of them idle, as he doth, that ſpeakes no more then is neceſſary for the argument in hand. Matth. 12.

And againe, a man may ſpeake few words, and yet idle, if they be not to the purpoſe, as Auguſtine ſaith, becauſe they are more then ſhould be ſpoken, and therefore the many words alſo here taxed. Philemon Syracuſ. a Greeke Commedian ſaith, Thinke him that ſaith nothing to the purpoſe long, although he ſpeakes but two words; but thinke not him long that ſpeakes well, although in many words, and a long time. Auguſt.

And Ambroſe comparing ſpeaking to the running of water ſaith, Binde thy ſpeech together, that it flow not over, or be luxuriant; he that ſinnes by much ſpeaking, let him recollect himſelfe, and be more reſtrained, and keep himſelfe within the bankes: the river over-flowing ſoone gathereth dirt. Ambr. l. 1: De officiis.

Now for that which is oppoſed hereunto, He that refraines his lips, is wiſe; a foole, it is ſaid elſewhere, when he holds his peace ſeemeth wiſe: but by refraining his lips is not meant holding his peace ſimply, but when he ſhould, and ſpeaking when he ſhould, but not more then he ſhould. To know to hold ones peace is harder then to knew to ſpeake, for many know how to ſpeake well, but not when to refraine from ſpeaking, ſaith Ambroſe, and therefore he is very wiſe that doth; for the next words, ver. 20. the words of the wiſe are ſaid to be like choyſe ſilver;

1. For the ſhining brightneſſe thereof, which is, when he fulfilleth indeed what he ſpeakes well in word, according to that, Let your light ſo ſhine before men, that they may ſee your good workes, &c. Mat. 5. 16.

2. In the ſweet ſound thereof, the wiſe ſpeaking makes a ſound, as a ſilver Trumpet, to ſet forth which, the Lord appointed Moſes of old to make two trumpets of ſilver, for Aaron and his ſonnes to ſound withall, to call the Congregation together, to rejoyce mens hearts, for the Jubilee hereby declared, when every man returned to his inheritance, and for Gods preſence and help hereby in warre obtained, and their ſacrifices at new Moones the more accepted. And to the ſound of a trumpet is Preaching compared, whereby the Apoſtle ſaith, If the trumpet makes an unperfect ſound, how ſhall men prepare to the battell? And againe, Their ſound is gone out into all lands, ſpeaking of the Goſpell preaching; and the Prophet Eſay is bidden, Cry aloud, lift up thy voyce, as a trumpet; For the ſame end Aaron had his bels, to make a ſound alſo, when he went into the holy place. Numb. 10. 1. Levit. 25. Numb. 6. 20 1 Cor. 14. Rom. 10. Eſa. 58.

3 Like to pure ſilver in the trueneſſe thereof, being proved in the fire, or by a Touch-ſtone, it appeares to be good ſilver, and not baſer mettall or mixed; ſo the words of the wiſe being tryed, are found to be right, yea, as by the ſound of it, a man may know it to be pure, and right, and not counterfeit; ſo wiſe mens words and doctrines are known to be true, and that there is no errour in them, or deceit. So Clemens Alexand. By the ſound a wiſe man knoweth gold and ſilver, but by the words and looke of a friend it is hard to know, whether he be ſo or no; yet the words of a wiſe man are alwayes found to be true, and in this reſpect eſpecially if it be underſtood thus ſpoken, it well anſwereth to the words before going, verſe 18. He that hides hatred is a lyar with his lips; to him the wiſe is contrary, he in his words is like pure ſilver, there is herein truth altogether, and no lying: and to the words here following, The heart of the wicked is little worth; That is, being tryed, it is found no ſilver, but baſe metall, pretended by Mounte-bankes to be ſilver; for ſuch are all falſe-hearted men at length found to be, howſoever they for a time hide their malicious hearts by their faire ſpeeches. Clem. Alex. Strom.

4 The words of the wiſe are like unto ſilver, for the preciouſneſſe thereof, he ſpeakes but ſeldome, and often refraines from ſpeaking, but when he doth ſpeake, the words that come from him are precious; whereas on the other ſide, a fooliſh wicked man, that is full of words, to little purpoſe, ſheweth hereby, that his heart is ſuch alſo, little worth, and ſo he is baſe and lightly accounted of by God, and all good men, wherefore thou that art given to much babling, loving to heare thy ſelfe ſpeake, and not another, take notice hereby of thy vanity, and repent; bee ſparing of ſpeech, and ſo come into the way of the wiſe, that thy words, when thou doſt ſpeake upon due pre-meditation, may not be lightly accounted of to thy diſgrace, but attended to as precious, and of great value. And according to this acception of theſe words, they are conſonant to thoſe, Pſal. 12. The words of God are as ſilver purified in the fire ſeven times.

Note.

Verſ. 21. For the next words, ver. 21. The lips of the righteous feed many, but fooles dye for want of wiſdome, The Cald. hath it, pacifie many; as if the meaning were, by their wiſe and gentle ſpeeches they make many friends, betwixt whom before there was contention; but the Hebr. is, as hath been ſaid, to which we muſt attend, and then the meaning is, they feed them with good inſtructions in their ſoules, who were before empty, and ready for want of ſuch food to periſh, but now they are fed to eternall life, when they receive them into good and honeſt hearts, beleeving, and doing accordingly. For this is the food, of which the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh, ſaying, Hoe, he that thirſteth, let him come to the waters, let him buy wine and milke, &c. But fooles, who will not thus receive their inſtructions are like unto thoſe, that refuſe to take any food, and ſo are ſtarved, and dye. Hebr. for want of an heart, the ſeat of wiſdome being put ſynechdochically for wiſdome it ſelfe.

Iſa. 55.

Verſ. 22. Prov. 14. The bleſsing of the Lord it maketh rich, and he addeth no ſorrow with it. Worldly men, who are ſet upon gathering riches, thinke that by their owne induſtry and providence they can inrich themſelves, and therefore without any regard had, either to ſerve God, or to juſt and righteous dealing, they give themſelves wholly to gather goods, by hooke or crooke; but it is here declared, that all men may take notice of it, that it is not in mans power to get riches, but it is Gods bleſſing, as is alſo taught, Pſal. 127. and Deut. 8. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Pſal. 113, &c. and this Homer, an Heathen, acknowledged God, who ſaid, Jupiter diſtributes them unto men, and he addeth no ſorrow with it; That is, when riches are a bleſſing, they neither fade ſoone againe, as when they are ill gotten to make the poſſeſſours of them ſorrowfull; neither are their mindes, that have them troubled in thinking by what oppreſſions, lying, forſwearing, couzening, or ſtealing, they have gotten them, or in what danger they are of the Law therefore, or of hanging in Hell; for the juſt by honeſt labour, being through Gods bleſſing inriched, is free from all theſe thoughts and cares, which accompany goods ill gotten in whomſoever, and if they looſe them not againe, or through the deſperateneſſe of their mindes are without ſuch cares, or troubles, yet both the curſe of God is with them, making them to waſt, and melt away from their Heires, according to the ſaying, Of ill gotten goods ſcarce the third Heire hath joy. See Zechar. 5. and in thus getting the world they looſe their ſoules, which is the greateſt ſorrow of all, ten thouſand times more being loſt then gotten.

De male quæſtis vix gaudet tertius hæres.

Note.

The conſideration of this bleſſing ſhould ſtirre us all up to charity, which procureth it, and make the Anabaptiſticall ſort aſhamed of their tenet, that all things ſhould be common, as Lavater noteth; for if it were ſo, how could any particular man be rich?

Pſal. 112.

Lavater.

But there is another expoſition of ſome upon this word, it maketh rich, and he addeth no ſorrow with it; That the poore having no worldly wealth, are rich, through Gods bleſſing upon them, whoſe bleſſed ones they are, when for his ſake they leave all, and follow Chriſt; and herein ſtand their riches, for of them it is ſaid, Bleſſed are yee poore; and ſell all and give to the poore, and follow me, and then thou ſhalt have riches in heaven. And of the poore it is ſaid, rich in faith; But this expoſition is forced, for although ſuch poore having nothing, yet have all things; things; the ſcope of this place is not to commend theſe riches, but riches in this world properly underſtood, with the promiſe of which the righteous were every where fed and incouraged in their wayes, under the Old Teſtament, the ſpirituall riches of the poore being deferred to be ſpoken of, till Chriſt ſhould come and declare them, and this being properly underſtood doth beſt agree with ver. 3. 4. before going, that none who are induſtrious, and gather in ſummer, might thinke that hereby their riches come in, but by Gods bleſsing, to give him the praiſe.

Matth. 5. Matth. 19. Iames 2. 5. 1 Cor. 3. 21.

It is a ſport to a foole to doe miſchiefe, but a man of underſtanding hath wiſdome. Heb. and wiſdome to the man of underſtanding; that is, is a delight, for as the wicked thinke it no better ſport, then to be acting wickedneſſe by wanton dalliance, adultery, fornication, quaffing and drinking, jeſting, and mocking at others, and making rimes upon them, eſpecially ſuch as are moſt religious, and making merry with ſtolne goods: ſo the wiſe, that feare God on the contrary ſide, take ſuch a delight in wiſdome, as that they thinke they are never ſo well, as when in reading the word, hearing, ſtudying, preaching, and doing the things hereby required. Verſ. 23. Prov. 15.

The fear of the wicked it ſhall come upon them, but the deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted. As the whirlewind paſſeth, ſo is the wicked no more, but the righteous is an everlaſting foundation. This of the fear of the wicked is by Lavater underſtood two wayes; Firſt, of that which they feare will come, and therefore ſeeke by wicked means to prevent it, as Pharaoh fearing, that the Hebrews might grow too mighty for the Egyptians which would be dangerous, ſought therefore to prevent it by deſtroying their male-children; Saul fearing that David would get the Kingdome from him and his poſterity, ſought by ſlaying him to prevent it. And David fearing, that his adultery with the wife of Uriah would come to light, and ſo he ſhould be ſhamed, ſought by making him away to prevent that. But none of them could keep the evills, which they feared, from coming upon them, as their Hiſtories do declare. Verſ. 24. Verſ. 25. Prov. 16. Lavater.

2. Of the judgements of God threatned againſt them in this world and in the world to come, with the feare whereof they are ſometimes taken, as Ahab and Judas were, and before them Cain and Saul. For the words oppoſed, The deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted, what they pray and hope for ſhal in the end come to paſſe in reſpect of the maine, that is ſalvation. And for deliverance from dangers, a ſupply of food convenient, and other neceſſaries for this life, proſperity and ſucceſſe in their undertaking, reſtitution of health in time of ſickneſſe, victory over enemies, &c. They ſhall have their deſires alſo, becauſe they are not deſired, but ſo far forth, as may be to Gods glory, and their owne ſpirituall good, being willing, if it may conduce more to theſe ends, to be without any wordly thing, which they crave, as the Apoſtles ſhewed, when being beaten they praiſed God, and rejoyced, and Paul in particular, 2 Cor. 11. Rom. 8. and all the faithfull generally, Rom. 5. 1. He that doth not pray for temporall things, with theſe conditions, is no righteous perſon, for all ſuch pray, Thy will be done, not my will or deſire, as Chriſt our Lord, whoſe example we muſt follow. For ſometimes it is better to have our deſires denied for the exerciſe of our faith, and the increaſe of our patience and the weaning of us from the love of the world, and to make us more willing to depart hence when God calleth us, and for the increaſe of our future glory. When their deſires are for theſe ends not granted, it is but as if God ſhould deny copper, or tinne, and give gold or ſilver, deny pence, and give pounds, deny a cottage, and give a Palace. Note. Act. 4. Rom. 5. 2 Cor. 4. 17.

It is alſo ſaid, The deſire of the righteous ſhall be granted, to make them to perſevere in praying, and not to give over becauſe they are not preſently heard, as is taught in the example of the widow importuning the unjuſt Judge; for although we pray and yet ſpeed not, we may afterwards in Gods good time. Luke 18.

Laſtly, the righteous ſometime deſire to have a man or men deſperately and incorrigibly wicked to be ſpared, which to do, were againſt juſtice, and ſo derogatory from Gods glory, therefore in ſuch a caſe, he hath declared ſometimes, that although Noah, Job, and Daniel were amongſt ſuch, they ſhould ſave neither ſonne, nor daughter, Ezek. 14.

but onely their owne ſoules. In the next words he ſheweth, how th at which the wicked feare, that is, deſtruction cometh upon them, viz. as a whirle-winde, a moſt violent tempeſt ſuddenly carrying him away, ſo that if any man looks for him, he is no more to be ſeene; as alſo the Pſalmiſt teacheth, But the righteous ſtands firmly, although winds blow, and waters flow, he is as Mount Zion, that can never be removed, yea the gates of hell cannot prevaile againſt him, that is built upon a rocke. The wicked and the righteous both indeed are alike carried away when a tempeſt of adverſity cometh in reſpect of bodily deſtruction, but in reſpect of ſpirituall, there is this difference;

Pſal. 37. 10. Mat. 7. 27. Pſal. 125. Mat. 16. 16.

1. The wicked making an outward profeſſion onely, is ſoone blowne away for feare of perſecution, but the juſt ſtandeth undauntedly to the truth.

2. The wicked being taken out of this world by ſudden death, or in a common judgement, hath no more being in the next world, to be where, is perfect bleſſednesſe, but the juſt is onely tranſlated, he ſtandeth ſtill as a ſure foundation, if not in the houſe of God upon earth, yet in heaven he is, as a pillar that ſhal never goe out, as the Spirit wrote by John to the Church of Philadelphia. Some by the wicked like a tempeſt, underſtand him to be ſuch againſt the righteous, for his violent perſecuting of him, but this is ſoone over, and the juſt ſtand ſtill, and are not removed.

Revel. 3. 12.

For the former words, verſ. 24. The feare of the wicked ſhall come upon them; one thinkes this to co-here with the words before going thus, he ſaid there, It is a ſport to a foole to doe miſchiefe; but here, feare ſhall come upon him, That is, although for the preſent he is full of mirth, and is delighted in doing evill, yet this ſhall not hold long, but his feare ſhall come upon him; That is, the feare and terrour which God will ſtrike into him after this, to the wounding of his Conſcience intolerably; But againſt this, that of the Preacher ſeemeth to make, where he ſaith, Becauſe ſentence is not preſently executed againſt evil doers, they have no feare of God in them.

Eccleſ. 8. 13.

Arbor. Arboreus anſwereth, It is true, for a time they are without all feare, but the time ſhall come, when they ſhall be ſtricken with great feare, as many that have deſpaired have been, and then after that come the Judgements feared, as Belſhazzar was firſt put into a great feare by the Hand-writing upon the wall, and then his judgement followed the ſame night.

Verſ. 26. Prov. 17. Muffet. As vinegar to the teeth, and ſmoake to the eyes, ſo is the ſluggard to them that ſend him. Upon this, Muffet briefly thus, As vinegar maketh the teeth to ake, and ſmoake the eyes to ſmart, ſo ſlothfulneſſe vexeth a man that imployeth ſuch, either upon an errand, or in any worke.

Lavater. Lavater applyeth it to Embaſſadours, Preachers, or Captaines, by all which much woe and miſchief cometh to Church and Common-wealth, if they be ſlothfull in doing that about which they are ſent; Cajetan diſlikes the rendring of the חמץ vinegar, becauſe it is good for the teeth, and contrari-wiſe ſweet things hurt, and corrupt the teeth, therefore he renders it bitter.

Cajetan.

The Sept. for vinegar hath ſoure grapes, and for ſlow meſſengers ſending, ſinne to him that uſeth it, as if the ſame were here affirmed, that is ſpoken by way of parable, Ezek. 18. The fathers have eaten ſoure grapes, and the childrens teeth are ſet on edge; but becauſe this is altogether differing from the Hebrew, I paſſe it over, although Auguſtine following it ſaith, That by ſinne a mans teeth are ſo ſet on edge, as it were, that as teeth being ſet on edge cannot eate good meat, ſo he that feeds upon ſinne, cannot feed upon righteouſneſſe, which he doth, that is ſo taken up here-with, that it is meat and drinke unto him, to be thus doing the will of God, as Chriſt ſaid to his Diſciples, My meat is to doe the will of him that ſent me.

Auguſt. Note. John 4.

Some expound theſe words of the great hurt, that a ſlow meſſenger doth to the man that ſendeth him, hindring him from doing, to his detriment, becauſe he keeps him in ſuſpence, ſo as that he cannot take time whi ſt time ſerves; as the teeth being ſtupified by vinegar for a time cannot feed, and the eyes by meanes of ſmoake cannot ſee to goe right, or wrong; and therefore ſloathfull meſſengers are here by hereby ſtirred up to be more diligent, as they would not perplex and trouble their maſters.

And they that are ſent to preach, above all others muſt not be ſloathfull and idle, but inſtant, preaching in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon, leaſt by their negligence the teeth of the ſoules of the people be ſtupified, from eating that which is good, and neceſſary to ſuſtaine the life thereof, and their eyes, as in a ſmoake of ignorance, be kept from ſeeing which way to goe to come to the Kingdome of Heaven. Note. 2 Tim. 4. 1.

The feare of the Lord prolongeth dayes, but the yeares of the wicked ſhall be ſhortned. Of the former part of this verſe ſee before, upon chap. 3. and of the wicked and bloud-thirſty the Pſalmiſt ſaith, they ſhall not live out halfe their dayes. And although they live many yeares, yet they live not long, yea they live not at all, becauſe their life is a death, and ſuch only live as are righteous. Verſ. 27. Eccl. 8. 11, 12. Epheſ. 2.

The hope of the righteous ſhall be gladneſſe, but the expectation of the wicked ſhall periſh. Here by hope underſtand the thing hoped for; That is, eternall life, this ſhall come at the laſt without faile, and fill him with joy, for ever-more; and in regard of this he hath joy in this world, even in tribulation, which he hopeth ſhall then be abundantly recompenced with happineſſe, and herein his hope hath a contrary effect to the hope of worldlings, to whom hope deferred is a great diſcomfort; but although the attaining of this happineſſe be deferred, it cauſeth joy alwayes, as the Apoſtle exhorteth, Rejoyce alwayes in the Lord, againe, I ſay rejoyce; and, the fruit of the Spirit is joy. But the wicked, although they have the ſame hope, yet without any certaine ground ſhall never attaine that which they hope for, but their expectation ſhal altogether faile them; for joy, they at the laſt having ſorrow, and calamity, and deſtruction for ever; when it ſhall not be according to mens hope of faith, but according to their deeds. Verſ. 28. Prov. 18. Phil. 4. 4. Gal. 5. 22. Rom. 2. 7.

The way of the Lord is ſtrength to the upright, but deſtruction ſhall be to the workers of iniquity. Lavater for deſtruction, hath Pavor, feare, and expounds it thus, The way that is ſound, and profitable doctrine, gathered out of the Word, and imbraced, is a ſtrengthening to the godly Hearer, againſt ſinne, and Sathan, and ſuch as would ſeduce to errour; but to the wicked it is a terrour, and therefore he cannot abide it; as they write of a man bitten with a mad Dogge, that if he be brought to water, waſhing, or rather drinking, which may cure him, a great feare, and horrour hereat ariſeth in him; even ſo he that is bitten, and infected, as it were by the Serpent ſinne, abhorres from, and hath a feare ariſing in him, at ſound teaching; as Felix, hearing Paul ſpeake of judgement to come, and righteouſneſſe, trembled, and bade him goe his way for that time, for to waters, is doctrine often compared, Joh. 4. Joh. 7. 37. &c. Verſ. 29. Prov. 19. Lavater. Act. 24. 25.

The vulgar alſo, and Symmachus render it feare, pavor, and being thus underſtood, the ſence already given is very good, or if it be taken as ſpoken of the way of the Lord walked in, a good conſcience being kept in all things, for this brings fortitude and courage, as is after ſaid, the righteous is bold as a Lion, but the wicked is full of feare; he feareth at the ſhaking of a leafe.

The righteous ſhall never be removed, but the wicked ſhall not inherit the earth. He had ſaid before, ver. 25. The juſt is as an everlaſting foundation, but the wicked paſſing away as a whirle-wind. To the ſame effect here, unleſſe with Lavater we take this as ſpoken of his unmoveableneſſe from the truth by ſeducement, flattery, or feare, and then it co-hereth with ver. 29. where the way of the Lord is ſaid to be a ſtrength unto him; for this is here ſhewed, to be not only in reſpect of the inner man, but alſo in reſpect of ſtable and permanent dwelling, and keeping his inheritance in that Land, and typically in the heavenly Canaan; contrary to whom the wicked ſhall be, that from an inward hatred hath a feare, and ſo an averſneſſe from ſound doctrine ariſing in him, he ſhall for this either be impoveriſhed, and ſo forced to ſell his Inheritance, or goe into Captivity, or finally be kept out from inheriting the new earth, and heaven, of which Peter ſpeaketh, and Paul, in the example of the Bond-womans ſonne caſt out, that the Free-womans ſonne only might inherit. Verſ. 30. Lavater. 2 Pet. 3. 13. Gal. 4.

The mouth of the juſt bringeth forth wiſdome, but the froward tongue ſhall be Verſ. 31.

Verſ. 32. Prov. 10. be cut out. The lips of the juſt know what is acceptable, but the mouth of the wicked ſpeakes frowardneſſe, Hebr. The mouth of the wicked perverſneſſes, or pervertings. Muffet renders it, The mouth of the righteous ſhall finde favour, but the mouth of the wicked the reward of frowardneſſe; but the Verb ידעון ſignifieth, ſhall know, but to finde is to know experimentally, and the next word רצון is bene placitum, well pleaſing, and therefore is not amiſſe rendred favour. The meaning is, the ſpeeches of the juſt are ſo good and gracious, milde, true, and humble, that much good will come hereof; but thoſe of the wicked ſo vile, and corrupt, that, like a rotten member, ſuch a tongue ſhall at laſt be cut out, as is alſo ſaid, Pſal. 12.

Lavater. Lavater for Wiſdome hath the fruit of wiſdome, thus making the mouth, as a tree, the mouth of the juſt as a good tree, and the mouth of the wicked as a corrupt tree, which is good for nothing, but to be cut downe, and caſt into the fire. And this fruitfulneſſe of the juſt mans tongue in good, is further ſet forth, verſ. 3. to be that which knoweth to ſpeake things well pleaſing to God, and the tongue of the wicked to ſpeake perverſly; for which there is good reaſon, that it ſhould be cut out, and he, in whoſe head it is, as a rotten tree cut downe and caſt into fire. And this metaphor of fructifying taken from a tree doth moſt aptly ſet forth the words uttered by the wiſe, becauſe it implyeth;

The word יגיח ſignifieth properly, ſhall fructifie.

Firſt, That they are mature, by meditation being growne to ſuch perfection, that the full time is come to ſhake the tree, and gather the fruit.

Secondly, That they are ſweet, as fruit full ripe commonly is, and not ſharp or ſoure.

Note. Thirdly, Sound, not corrupt, or rotten, or worm-eaten, and ſo falling from the tree, as obſcene words are. And ſuch are words that be wiſe and well ſtudied, not coming from wrath or malice, but from a minde indued with love, not from a foule, but cleane and pure heart, being therefore grave, modeſt, and profitable.

Laſtly, Not from a minde blinded with errour, or ignorance, but inlightned through the knowledge of the truth. The vulgar, for fructifieth hath parturiet, ſhall bring forth, implying,

1. Maturity as before, and perfection, that the childe is come to, ſo that hereby is noted a ſufficient time that he hath been ſtudying, before that he begineth to teach, that which is brought forth by others being an abortive, or dead childe.

2. Paine and ſorrow, as a woman bringeth forth her childe, ſo the Teacher being in paine, till he ſeeth that formed in his Auditors, which he preacheth, as Paul to the Galat. ſaith, My little children, of whom I travell againe in birth, till Chriſt be formed in you. Gal. 4. 19.

3. A longing deſire, as women with childe have, to ſuch things as they love; in like manner the Teacher deſireth to feed, and fill himſelfe with ſuch knowledge, as being vented may conduce to the bringing forth of the childe alive.

4. A good will to be delivered, and not through the love of idleneſſe to keep in his knowledge, or unwillingneſſe to take paines to utter it.

Note. Other Tranſlations there are, as of the Sept. The mouth of the juſt diſtilleth knowledge; implying, both his leaſurely uttering of it a little at once, and not pouring it out, by delivering many things at one time, having reſpect to the people, who are as a bottle with a narrow mouth, into which he that wil put any liquor of worth, poureth it in drop after drop, as the Prophet ſaith, Line unto line, here a little, and there a little; and implying alſo more within to be poured out againe afterwards, from time to time. And another tranſlation, ſhall propagate wiſdome; but theſe, that I be not too tedious, ſhall ſuffice. For ver. 32. Some underſtand it of the candid meaning of the righteous in his ſpeaking, and of the fraudulent hiding of his meaning in the wicked, but others better of the acceptableneſſe of the juſt mans ſpeeches both to God, and to all good men, and their being diſpleaſed at the words of the wicked as perverſe and froward. CHAP.

CHAP. XI.

HEre Salomon beginneth with falſe and true dealing in weights, which is to be extended alſo to meaſures, as Levit. 19. 35. to which this hath reference, and therefore the Expoſition may be ſeene there. Some myſtically by the falſe ballance underſtand the judgement wherein a man weigheth things ſpirituall and temporall together, which is as a falſe and deceitfull ballance, when temporall weigh equally with, or overpoiſe ſpirituall. Some, free-will, which is as a deceitfull ballance, when fleſhly luſt weigheth downe right reaſon. Some, the fleſh which weigheth more downe to ſinne, then the Spirit to righteouſneſſe. Some, love weighing God and man one againſt another, or God and the world, when it is more to man, or to our ſelves then to God, it is deceitfull and abominable, much more when to the pleaſures or profits of the world. Some, by the perfect weight underſtand the word of God, whereby things being weighed may be found juſtly; but otherwiſe it is a falſe and deceitfull way of trying the truth, if it be not weighed with the ballance of the Sanctuary, but by the verdict of men. Laſtly, ſome take the deceitfull ballance for all injuſtice, one kinde of unjuſt dealing being put for all. Verſ. 1. Hugo Card. Clemens Alex. Hieron.

When pride cometh, then cometh ſhame, but with the lowly is wiſdome. The Vulg. Where there is pride there is contumely, being expounded by ſome of contumelious ſpeeches, which the proud are ready to utter, if they be any way provoked, but the humble, although he be provoked, refraineth himſelfe and ſpeakes wiſely. But the word is ſhame or ignominy, and the meaning is plaine, the proud man, who aimeth at glory and eſtimation, inſtead thereof ſhall have ſhame and contempt amongſt men, being for this accounted a proud fool, but he that humbleth himſelf, wiſe, as indeed he is, becauſe this is the right way to come into eſtimation both with God and men. For the humble ſaith Lavater, both have the Spirit of grace promiſed them, and it is often ſeene by experience, that a man of mean birth and quality, bearing a lowly minde accordingly, by ſtudy attaineth to great learning and wiſdome. Verſ. 2. Lavater. Jam. 4. 6.

The integrity of the upright ſhall guide them, but the perverſneſſe of tranſgreſſours ſhall deſtroy them; that is, through the grace and bleſſing of God, which alwayes accompanieth uprightneſſe of heart, ſuch ſhall be guided and kept, ſo as that they ſhall not fall into ſnares by crafty wicked men laid for them, and ſo, as that they ſhall doe for the beſt in all things, but contrariwiſe, ſuch as are deceitfull, and plot ſubtilty to doe miſchiefe, the deſtruction which they thought to bring others to, ſhall befall themſelves, as it is alſo ſaid in the Pſalmes, and hath been often proved true by experience.

For the next words, Verſe 4. ſee before Chap. 10. 2. and Verſe 5. is the ſame in effect with Verſe 3. and Verſe 6. explaines the meaning of both, The righteouſneſſe of the righteous ſhall deliver them, but tranſgreſſours are taken in their owne wickedneſſe; ſo that betwixt theſe Verſes there is ſome coherence thus, having ſhewed the ſafe eſtate of the upright, and how the wily wicked to their owne deſtruction plot miſchiefe; Verſe 4. he ſheweth, that he may happily flatter himſelfe thinking by his wit to gather wealth, and ſo he ſhall be furniſhed to keepe off danger that may be towards him, but he ſhall herein be deceived, for riches ſo gotten ſhall not profit him, as he expecteth. Then Verſe 5. 6. he more fully ſheweth the meaning of that which he had ſaid Verſe 3. Verſ. 4, 5, 6.

When the wicked man dyeth his hope periſheth. This alſo hath reference to ver. 4. For what was his hope or expectation but by means of his wealth to ſave himſelf from the danger of death, therefore death coming, this periſheth, and ſo here is an end of all the joy, that he thought to have, as it happened to that fooliſh rich man Luk. 12. who when he was meditating upon living at eaſe, eating, drinking, and being merry, had his ſoul fetched away the ſame night. This is alſo expounded by ſome of his expectation and hope of ſalvation; for whilſt he liveth he hopeth as well as Verſ. 7.

the righteous, but when death cometh, he is altogether diſappointed for ſalvation, coming into damnation.

Verſ. 8. The righteous indeed, who hath ſuffered much in this world, then cometh out of all trouble when he dyeth, but the wicked mans troubles and ſufferings then come and continue world without end; ſo that when it is ſaid, The wicked cometh in his ſtead, nothing elſe is meant, but that as the righteous hath had his turne of ſuffering for a moment here, ſo the wicked ſhall have their turne hereafter for evermore, their proſperity in this world, being then turning into miſery, as the juſt mans miſery into everlaſting felicity.

Hugo Car. But beſides this Hugo hath another, He ſhall come in his ſtead; that is, for his harſh uſage of the righteous, when the time of his deliverance, by God appointed, cometh, he ſhall ſurely ſuffer therefore: and ſome put another, the righteous ſhall be delivered from the evill, which the wicked man thought to bring upon him, and by the ſame evill he himſelfe ſhall ſuffer, as Haman did, Mordecai being delivered, and Daniels accuſers, he being delivered out of the Lions den; and ſo theſe words are a more explication of thoſe Verſe 6. Tranſgreſſors taken in their owne ſinne.

Verſ. 9. An hypocrite with his mouth deſtroyeth his neighbour, but through knowledge ſhall the juſt be delivered; that is, ſaith Muffet, one hypocrite or counterfeit Saint deſtroyeth another by ſeducing him to errour, but the righteous, ſeeing into the erroneouſneſſe of his way, is kept from being drawne away by his deceitfull ſophiſtry: a ſaying to be noted now eſpecially, there being more hypocrites then ever, that doe thus deſtroy, that we may not like fooles be ſeduced by them, but like men of knowledge, ſtand faſt in the truth which we have received, and therefore get knowledge, the want whereof endangereth a man in this reſpect, according to the ſaying of our Lord, Yee erre, not knowing the Scriptures, and of Hoſea, My people periſh for want of knowledge, or are deſtroyed. And Lavater following the ſame, inſtanceth in Monkes, and Fryers, who by their ſeeming holy ſpeeches, having the Church, the Councels and Fathers in their mouths, and teares often in their eyes, ſeduce many to their deſtruction; but the juſt well verſed in the Scriptures, bringing that which they ſay hereunto, are nothing moved by them. Some by the diſſembler here underſtand the flatterer, whom one compareth to an empty ſepulchre, which one erected to the memory of ſuch a man, ſuperſcribing his name upon, but if he looke within, it is empty, and there is no man lying there; ſo the diſſembling flatterer hath not him in his heart, to whom he ſpeakes ſo faire, and by this meanes puffes him up in pride to his deſtruction, but the juſt hath ſo much knowledge as to diſcerne him, and ſo eſcapeth being taken by his deluſions.

Matth. 22. Hoſ. 4. 6.

Lavater.

Verſ. 10. Verſ. 11. When it goeth well with the righteous, the City rejoyceth, when the wicked periſh, there is ſhouting. By the bleſſing of the upright the City is exalted, but it is overthrowne by the mouth of the wicked. Much good having been hitherto promiſed to the righteous, and evill threatned to the wicked; now it is ſhewed, what good redoundeth to the City or Towne, where the righteous dwelleth by meanes of them, and contrariwiſe, what evill by the wicked, and therefore the joy that is for the promotion of the one, and the extirpation of the other; that all men may be ſtirred up to righteouſneſſe, and to flye wickedneſſe, and to love and ſeek the preferment of the one, and the ſuppreſſing and cutting off of the other, becauſe he is a right friend indeed to the State, but the other a cruell enemy, working the overthrow thereof.

Note.

Lavater. Lavater moveth a queſtion here, whether it be juſtifiable to rejoyce at the deſtruction of the wicked? and anſwereth, if ſuch joy ariſeth from carnall affections, it is evill, but when it is for Gods juſtice being glorified, it is good; that is, when out of an hatred of that perſon, as by whom he or his friends have ſuffered, hee rejoyceth, it is evill; ſo when for the juſtice of God taking place in a City, both finding out and ſtirring up in the Magiſtrate ſuch zeale for juſtice, as to execute ſuch, whereby others may be made to feare to doe the like, and Gods judgements may bee kept off, of which otherwiſe there is danger, it is good. And if he that is the the chiefe Magiſtrate be cut off for his intolerable tyranny, there is joy alſo, ſo that it be by the hand of God, but not of his owne ſubjects, becauſe this cannot be, and they that doe it be blameleſſe, as David ſaith. 1 Sam. 26.9.

And therefore let no man blame this Kingdome for not rejoycing, but being rather generally ſorrowfull for this done amongſt us; had he beene as great a Tyrant as ſome have cryed him up for, but much more when this doubted, and there be ſome grounds to thinke contrariwiſe, that he had the good Spirit in an extraordinary meaſure in him, as appeared ſpecially at his death, and by his divine meditations coming forth after, raviſhing all men that read them, unleſſe fore-ſtalled by prejudice through the exceſſe of malice. For the ſhouting through joy for the periſhing of the wicked, by Solons Law, it was appointed when the righteous dyed, and went to the buriall, there ſhould ſome goe along with him ſinging his praiſes aloud with joy, as conceiving that he was now preferred to a better life: but when the wicked, ſinging out aloud his vices, and ſhewing all joy, that he was taken from them, by whom they ſuffered much, or were endangered, which laſt part of it touching the wicked may not amiſſe be applied here, when they periſh men ſhout for joy. And if the like were now done, it would much availe to ſtirre up to righteouſneſſe, and to ſtop the courſe of ſinne. For the next words, By the bleſſing of the righteous the City is exalted &c. the meaning is, that for the righteous the City ſhould rejoyce, there is good reaſon, becauſe that by their prayers for a bleſſing upon it it comes to be in a flouriſhing and proſperous condition, and the judgements that their ſins might pull downe upon them are kept away; As it was with Iſrael in the time of Moſes, he prayed, and Iſrael prevailed, he prayed again, and they were ſpared from deſtruction; Samuel prayed, and the Philiſtines their deadly enemies were deſtroyed; Eliſha prayed, and was the Chariots of Iſrael, and the Horſemen thereof, becauſe Chariots and Horſemen of fire came then about him, being a guard to him, and the place where hee was; Eliiah prayed, and the raine fell after a drought of three yeares and an halfe, and ſo did ſundry other moſt pious men. Exod. 17. Exod. 32. 2 Sam. 7. 2 King 6. 1 King. 19.

But by the mouth of the wicked, the City is overthrowne; that is, by their curſing, blaſpheming, and common ſwearing, as its threatned, Jer. 23.10. The land ſhall mourne for oaths, and Hoſ. 4.2. By ſwearing and lying they breake out, therefore the land ſhall mourne. Some yet by the bleſſing of the righteous underſtand their bleſſed doings in beating downe ſinne, adminiſtring juſtice, and advancing piety and vertue; for where theſe things are done, the bleſſing of God is procured, and ſo the City is in proſperity; but by the mouth of the wicked, that is, their evill ruling, it is overthrowne, for the mouth is oft-times put for the empire or rule, as Joſh. 1. 1 King. 13. If we underſtand it either way, we ſhall not erre, or putting both together the ſenſe will be more full. Therefore we had need to pray for Kings and other Rulers that they may be upright, and that the wicked may not be preferred, and if any be in place, that God would either reforme, or remove them, as being apparently in the way of bringing the Nation to ruine. Note. 1 Tim. 2.

He that is void of wiſdome deſpiſeth his neighbour, but a man of underſtanding holdeth his peace. This Verſe is not without ſome coherence with the former, for having there ſaid, The wicked by his mouth overthroweth the City; now he addeth, that ſuch a man is void of underſtanding, becauſe he raſhly and unadviſedly uttereth opprobrious ſpeeches againſt his neighbour, if by his ill language againſt him, he being provoked, or by any other offence; whereas he ſhould rather wiſely forbeare, and be ſilent, thus ſeeking to make him aſhamed, whereas by retorting the like or worſe words againe, he makes himſelfe like an Eccho, as Baſil teacheth; and what is that ſaith Homer? but a fooliſh image, and a voice without a minde, one ſaying, thou art a foole, and the other replying, thou art a foole, &c. wilt thou imitate him whom thou hateſt, and make thy ſelf like a looking-glaſſe to repreſent his ugly forme, at which thou art ſo angry? O how ridiculous a thing is this! Verſ. 12. Baſil. Homer. Quid eſt præter ſtultam imaginem, & ſine mente vocem; As one renders it in Latine.

Again, in caſe of offence otherwiſe committed againſt thee to fal upon thy neighbor, pre-

preſently before others to make him deſpicable, is the part of a foole, that knoweth not the rule given by our Lord, which ever indeed hath been the rule of the wiſe and loving, before others in this caſe at the firſt to be ſilent, yet afterwards having him alone to tell him of his ſin, except the offence be openly given, for in this caſe the rule of the Apoſtle is to be followed. Him that ſins openly, rebuke openly, that others may feare.

Lavater.

Lavater expounds this of the rich mans deſpiſing the poore, the high borne the meane, the well-favoured and more wity, and right and ſtreight, the deformed, the crooked, or ſuch as want wit. This ſheweth a man void of wiſdome, becauſe he that is wiſe conſidereth, that God made them both, and hath not made him ſo, that hee ſhould be proud and contemptuous, as the Apoſtle alſo teacheth, ſaying,

1 Cor. 4 7.

Who maketh thee to differ, or what haſt thou that thou haſt not received &c? but paſſe over the imperfections or blemiſhes of others in ſilence, meditating upon Gods ſingular goodneſſe towards him, in that he hath not made him ſo to glorifie him, and not to magnifie himſelfe the more, and diſdaine others.

Verſ. 13.

A Tale-bearer revealeth ſecrets, but he that is of a faithfull ſpirit concealeth the matter. Againſt Tale-bearing there is a Law, Levit. 19. 16. This the Pack-horſes of Satan, as Muffet well calleth them, Tale-bearers regard not, but being given much to prating, they will tell any thing which they know or heare of their neighbours to their diſgrace, and to the ſtirring up of ſtriſe, although oft-times they carry themſelves towards them as friends, and ſo come to have their very ſecrets revealed unto them.

Muffet.

Againſt ſuch a warning is given here, that we might beware of them, and not make any prating body our boſome friend, or ſuch as are addicted to ſpeake diſgracefully of others according to Verſe 12. for if thou doſt, he will not ſticke by diſcloſing thy ſecrets to diſgrace thee alſo, when he hath gotten a convenient time; but let him be thy friend, and ſo uſe him, that is of few words, and delights not in publiſhing other mens infirmities, but hides them rather, what hee can: yet it is not to be underſtood, that all telling of things ill ſpoken or done by others, is this ſinne of Tale-bearing; for it may be againſt another mans life or eſtate, or good name that is ſpoken or done, or againſt the Commonwealth: to reveale it in ſuch caſes therefore is no Tale-bearing, but revealing that which wee are bound to reveale for the preventing of miſchiefe, or the puniſhing of heynous crimes committed; or children may ſpeake or doe wickedly, and not regard thee admoniſhing them thereof, in this caſe to tell their father, is but to doe as Joſeph did, that told his father Jacob of the evill ſpeeches of his brethren.

Note.

Verſ. 14.

Where no counſell is, the people fall, but in a multitude of counſellours there is ſafety. Here a mixt government is commended as conducing moſt to the ſafety of a Nation; that is, when the King hath many Counſellours, and acteth not in governing or making Laws but by their advice, for let the Counſellours be never ſo wiſe, if their counſell be not followed, it is of none availe to keep the Kingdome in ſafety. The Vulgar Where no Governour is: the word is מחבלת of a plurall ſignification, either Cogitations, Counſellours, or Gubernacles, where there be none of theſe, it is ill for the people. The word therefore implieth both a Governour, under whom many more are ſubſtituted, and Counſellours, by whoſe counſell all things are ordered; for one ſupreme, of whom S. Peter ſpeaketh, is neceſſary, as a Generall in an Army, who if he be taken away, the whole Army, ſaith Chryſoſtome, is delivered into the hands of their enemies; as a Governour in a ſhip, or as a corner ſtone holding two walls together, for take this away and the building goeth to ruine, take the Governour out of the ſhip, and it is wrecked; ſo in a Nation if the King be taken away, all things are ſubverted and overthrowne.

1 Pet. 2. 13. Chryſ. Hom. 34 in Heb.

For Counſellours, Gregory Nazianzen ſaith, It is the Art of Arts to governe a body of men being ſo divers, as if one beaſt were compoſed of many, ſome tame, ſome wilde, ſome living upon one thing, ſome upon another, ſome delighted in one ſound, ſome in another, for ſo is a body of people being of divers mindes, and ſome abhorring from that wherewith others are pleaſed. How then ſhall a Prince doe in this caſe, he being but one, cannot apply himſelfe to all ſo divers one from another another to cicurate and bring them all into a peaceable and quiet eſtate to live together in unity, and therefore it is neceſſary for him to have divers Counſellours, by meanes of whom he may doe this great worke, which of himſelfe he can never doe. The word here uſed, which is rendred Counſels cometh of חבל funis, a rope, ſuch as whereby the ſailes of a ſhip are hoiſed up or ſpread or contracted, or the ſides of a ſhip being weake, bound together and ſtrengthned, and hereby counſels are ſet forth to ſhew the neceſſity thereof, that a people being held together hereby, may not fall by being divided, and ſo one part becoming the deſtruction of the other. Lavater.

Of this againſt ſurety-ſhip, ſee before Chap. 6. 1. Verſe 16. A gracious woman retaineth honour and ſtrong riches. By gracious woman here, a vertuous woman is to be underſtood, and not the beautifull onely, who is gracious in the eyes of fleſh and bloud, but the vertuous ſhe ſhall be praiſed, Prov. 31. For the next clauſe, by ſtrong men, ſuch as be induſtrious in their callings are beſt underſtood; for as it is an honour to a woman to be gracious, that is, to feare God, to be modeſt, ſober, and humble, ſo it is to a man to have wealth well gotten by honeſt labour and paines-taking; whereas this ſentence conſiſteth but of two parts compared together, the Septuagint render it ſo, as that it is a double compariſon of contraries. Verſ. 15, 16.

2. The ſlothfull are indigent of riches, but the ſtrong leane upon riches. Some by the ſtrong retaining riches, underſtand ſuch men as are not moved ſo much by the grace in a woman to take her to wife, as by riches; ſhe retaines honour indeed, as looked upon with reverence for the grace that is in her, yet let me have the riches of this world, ſaith the man, that is ſtrong in his deſires for the world: but thus it ſhould not be, for vertue ſhould firſt, and chiefly be the load-ſtone of our affections. Some, as the gracious woman is an honour to her husband and family, ſo a man ſtrong, induſtrious, and provident, is by getting and holding wealth, whereby his family is raiſed, and comes to honour. Laſtly, ſome thinke the comelineſſe and beauty of a woman, and the wealth gotten by an induſtrious man to be here compared together. I rather by grace, underſtand chaſtity, modeſty, and other graces before named, and by the ſtrong man the righteous and valiant, the laborious and induſtrious through Gods bleſſing attaining to, and retaining wealth and honour, that is, holding and enjoying it being thus gotten to him, and his, as a ſetled inheritance, and not as wicked mens riches that ſoon vaniſh. Lavater. Cajetan.

The mercifull man doth good to his owne ſoule, but the cruell troubleth his owne fleſh; that is, in giving almes to others he benefits himſelfe, or in exerciſing any other acts of mercy, for ſo ones ſoule is ſometimes put for ones ſelfe. And it may well be ſaid ſo, becauſe through Gods bleſſing, that which he doth in way of charity, ſhall be abundantly recompenced to him in this life, and with everlaſting felicity in the life to come; contrariwiſe the cruel man, that is, the oppreſſor and unmercifull, brings the curſes of God down upon himſelf, whereby his ill gotten goods are conſumed, he from wealth and honour oft-times falleth into poverty and baſeneſſe; and finally comes to ſo low an ebbe of miſery, that he either wants neceſſaries for his body, or as being hated of all men, he is adjudged to death, and then ſurely hee troubleth his owne fleſh, as it hath beene with many that have beene promoted to high places and offices, wherein they have oppreſſed many moſt notoriouſly, being therefore after a while by Gods juſt judgement brought downe faſter then ever they roſe, and cut off as they have been well worthy, beſides the trouble coming upon them for their very uncharitableneſſe at the laſt day, when it ſhall be ſaid, Goe ye curſed into everlaſting fire, for I was hungry and ye fed me not, &c. But becauſe ſometimes neighbours are called our owne fleſh, as Eſa. 58. Bring the poore wandring into thy houſe, and deſpiſe not thine owne fleſh; ſometime kinsfolke and children are thus called, and ſometime a mans wife, and his owne body; there are that expound theſe words otherwayes, either thus, he doth good to his owne ſoule, that is, his brother, who is one with him, as God made one man Verſ. 17. Math. 25.

only at the firſt, hereby to intimate, that in him we are all one; but contrariwiſe, the cruell man troubleth himſelfe, becauſe by his oppreſsion he troubleth his brother, and hindereth, and impoveriſheth him. Or thus, the mercifull man doth good to himſelfe, in doing good to his kindred, which are of his fleſh and bloud; but the cruell is a trouble to them, through his uncharitableneſſe, deceiving them of their expectation, which was, that he being rich and they poore, he would doe ſome-what for them.

Lavater. Lavater, who renders it, He that doth good defrauds his owne ſoule, giveth this ſence, that doth good to his kindred, but nothing for the poore in generall, prevents himſelfe of a reward in Heaven, but the word גמל, although it ſignifieth alſo ablactare, yet cannot with any good ſence be ſo rendred here, but to doe good, it being moſt ſtrange to ſay, That a mercifull man defrauds his owne ſoule. Or thus, He doth good to his owne children, by ſpending ſo, as that he waſteth not all, as riotous and prodigall perſons, for ſuch, as moſt cruell, trouble them who are their owne fleſh, in that they doe not afford, or leave them any thing to maintaine them; or they are cruell, and trouble their children, their owne fleſh, ſaith Lavater, that thruſt their ſonnes or daughters into Monaſteries, there forcing them to live a ſingle life, which they have not the gift to doe, in blind obedience to their Governours, whatſoever it be that they command them, they bring them into a perplexed and troubled condition often by this meanes, and are Authors to them of much ſinne. for which they ſhall anſwer another day.

This of Kinsfolk underſtood by his owne fleſh, the vulgar goeth upon, Qui crudelis etiam propinquos abjicit; if it be underſtood of a mans wife, the ſence is, He that is mercifull doth good to his wife, loving and cheriſhing her, as he is commanded; but the cruell man is the cauſe of much trouble to her, by his miſuſage, or miſerableneſſe towards her, not allowing her things convenient.

Laſtly, If of a mans owne body, hereby it appeareth who is a mercifull man, and who a cruell, he that doth not by himſelfe as he ought, but pincheth his owne body, or over-toyleth himſelfe to get worldly wealth, is cruell, and it is not to be expected, but that he ſhould be ſo to others; but he that doth good to himſelfe, it is more probable, that he will be ready to doe good to others in their neceſſity. This is followed by Lavater, adding, That he then is cruell that whips, or otherwiſe doth hurt to his owne body, as the ſuperſtitious Papiſts doe.

Auguſt. De civit. cap. 27. lib. 22. The firſt way is the moſt genuine of all theſe, yet the Proverb I grant, may be extended to all the reſt alſo, according to that expoſition of a mans ſelfe, or body; Auguſtine ſeemeth to have taken it, where he ſaith, He that will doe almes worthy his ſins, muſt begin with his owne body, for it is an unworthy thing, that he ſhould not doe to himſelfe what he doth to his neighbour; or, how can he that is a malignant to himſelfe, doe good to another?

Baſil. And Baſil ſaith, This parſimony and cruelty to a mans ſelfe is deteſtable baſeneſſe, and covetouſneſſe, and this he commonly falleth into, that is not mercifull to others, he that beſtoweth not his goods upon others, moſt commonly denyeth neceſſaries to himſelfe.

Verſ. 18. The wicked worketh a deceitfull worke, but to him that ſoweth righteouſneſſe, ſhall be a ſure reward. The vulgar hath it, The wicked doth an unſtable worke; but Hebr. it is a worke of lying ושקר, unto which there is an elegant paranomaſie anſwering in the next clauſe, where שכר with the change of a letter, and of a prick from the right horne of ש to the left, ſignifying reward, is uſed. Theſe words agree not with thoſe, ver. 17. if by the wicked we underſtand the cruell man, who by oppreſſion getteth, and by hardening his heart againſt doing acts of mercy, keepeth his worldly goods, and by the righteous the charitable and liberall; for the one thinkes, that he workes well for himſelfe, and his family, by getting Goods any way to make it great, but his worke ſhall in the end prove a deceitfull and lying worke to him, and his, when both his Goods thus gotten ſhall melt away, and he at his death finde, that he hath but thus purchaſed for himſelfe a place of utter darkneſſe and miſery: the other contrari-wiſe by exerciſing charity, ſoweth good ſeed in good ground, that will never deceive the Husband-man; and and although it lyeth for a time covered in the ground, yet it ſhall at length come up, and he ſhall reap a plentifull increaſe, and this ſhall be his reward undoubtedly.

Thus Lyra, and others, who ſaith, That the mercifull man hath many Patrons with God, the poore whom he releiveth; but the oppreſſour none, but all againſt him; yet this compariſon doth not ſo well illuſtrate it, as that of ſowing, which is the word uſed in the text. Lyra, Hugo Card. Dionyſ.

Baſil ſaith, That a charitable man in giving Almes, is likened to him that ſoweth ſeed in the ground, becauſe as that is loſt, and corrupted before it comes up; ſo that which is given, ſeemes to be loſt by him that giveth it, and to become as a corrupt unprofitable thing unto him, but in the end cometh ſure increaſe thereof. Baſil.

For the next words, ver. 19. As righteouſneſſe tendeth to life, ſo he that purſueth evill, to his owne death. They co-here alſo with the former, of righteouſneſſe ſowing, and the lying worke of wickedneſſe; for as there, ſo here that righteouſneſſe and wickedneſſe are meant, which are otherwiſe called charity, and cruelty in oppreſſion, and hard-heartedneſſe towards the diſtreſſed; wherefore it is meant, if thou wouldeſt know, how he that ſoweth righteouſneſſe, in this ſence, ſhall have a ſure reward; here it is anſwered, his reward ſhall be life for evermore; or how the worke of the wicked is lying, he in his eager purſuit of worldly gaine, by hooke and crooke thinkes hereby to get life, having now wherewith-all to live, and maintaine himſelfe and his for ever, but he ſhall be foulely deceived, he doth but purſue this wicked gaine to his owne death, and undoing for ever. And it is to be noted, that he calleth ſome riches evill, namely the riches gotten by wicked, cruell, hard-hearted, unconſcionable men, they, and ſuch as they are, may call them goods, but they are indeed evils; as one well ſaith, The goods of this world are good to the good, but evils to the evill. Verſ. 19. Note. Bona hujus mundi ſunt bonis bona, malis mala.

They that are of a froward heart are an abomination to the Lord, but ſuch as are upright in the way are his delight. Here by a froward heart is to be underſtood a deceitfull heart, or elſe the upright next ſpoken of were not ſo fitly oppoſed unto him. Auguſtine ſcanning theſe words, why the man of a double deceitfull heart ſhould be an abomination to God, ſaith, That he is a monſter among men, and is, as it were, double bodied, and therefore cannot but be abhorred by him. Verſ. 20. Auguſt.

Another ſaith, That man is the Image of God, and in God there is no deceit, or diſſimulation, therefore he cannot abide to ſee his Image thus falſly made, and ſo derogatory to his dignity, but the upright pleaſe him, as his right and true Image indeed. Rodolph.

Though hand joyne in hand, the wicked ſhall not be unpuniſhed, but the ſeed of the righteous ſhall be delivered. Lavater having brought many expoſitions upon this place, as the word יד hath divers ſignifications, at laſt concludeth with this, That by hand joyning with hand, is meant the aſſociating of wicked men together, by joyning hands, and making covenants, to ſtand one to another in an evill courſe; but if they doe ſo, this ſhall be ſo farre from ſaving them, that it ſhall turne to their deſtruction. But beſides this he alſo ſaith, that clapping of hands, in token of applauſe of things wickedly done, is meant; they that doe wickedly, notwithſtanding the approbation of Sycophants, and their praiſing of their ungodly and cruell facts, ſhall ſurely be puniſhed in their kinde, and if it be a bloudy fact, their bloud ſhall goe for the bloud by them ſhed, be they never ſo potent. Lavater. Verſ. 21.

Againe, by hand joyning in hand, or with hand, prayer may be underſtood, which is made by lifting up, and joyning a mans hands together, and then the meaning is, although the wicked pray they ſhall be puniſhed, this ſhall not keep Gods Judgements off, for the Lord will not heare them. Eſa. 1. 12.

Againe, by hand to hand he underſtands mox, mox, preſently, for although it may ſeeme to be long oft-times before it cometh, yet it is with God but a ſhort time. Alſo becauſe יד ſignifieth a plague, or ſtroake of God, it may be underſtood thus; Although the wicked eſcape one Judgement after another, yet they ſhall not finally goe unpuniſhed.

Laſtly, Hand joyned to hand may be put for folding the hands together, as the Sluggard Sluggard doth, he ſhall not goe unpuniſhed, with poverty, and want. But all are farre fetcht except the firſt and ſecond, yet there are other expoſitions alſo.

1. By hand to hand underſtanding from Father to Sonne, making this the ſence; although the Father having done unjuſtly, the Sonne goes on to eſtabliſh what he hath done, yet the Judgements of God ſhall come upon them both.

2. Many hands, which covetous men uſe, to get unjuſtly the goods of this world.

3. The hand of one contending in Law againſt another, as the manner of old was, as may be gathered out of Tully, who brings in two men pleading about the title of a field called Sabinus, one calling to the other, to put his hand out to his hand, and the other anſwering him accordingly, to joyne in the ſtrife; he yet that thus proceeding doth wrong, ſhall not be unpuniſhed, but the ſeed of the righteous ſhall be delivered; That is, when the ſonne of a righteous father followeth his father in the way of righteouſneſſe, he ſhall be ſaved, as Ezek. 18.

And this laſt part of the Proverb ſeemes to make moſt for that expoſition of hand to hand, whereby unjuſt dealing is ſaid to be meant, delivered as it were, from hand to hand, by the Father to the Sonne; and then generally it will follow alſo, that many joyning together to ſtrengthen themſelves to doe evill, yet they ſhall not all be able to keep off the Judgements of God threatned againſt the wicked, but if one Generation eſcapeth in this world, another ſhall not, yea all ſhall be puniſhed in Gods due time.

Verſ. 22. As a jewell of gold in a Swines ſnout, ſo is a faire woman without diſcretion; Here a faire woman, and a Sow with a gold ring in her ſnout, are compared together but this faire woman is one, which although ſhe hath the glittering gold of beauty, whereby mens eyes are drawne to her, yet ſhe hath no diſcretion to live, and doe as a woman fearing God, that is, chaſtely, and modeſtly; but as the Sow, with ſuch a ring in her ſnout, defiles it by muzzling in the mire, ſo ſhe by proſtituting her beauty to filthy fleſhly luſt. And to a Sow is a woman without diſcretion compared alſo, becauſe ſhe is both the moſt fooliſh, the moſt libidinous, and the moſt naſty of all other creatures.

To ſet forth fooliſhneſſe, the Ægyptians were wont to paint a Sow, and an Elephant, going faſt away from her, the Elephant being counted the wiſeſt of the Beaſts, and the Swine the moſt fooliſh; for which alſo Ariſtotle makes the ſwine an embleme of fooliſhneſſe. Now the Elephants haſtening away from the Swine, 'tis obſerved, that her grunting makes the Elephant to flee.

2. For libidinouſneſſe, there is no beaſt more libidinous then a Sow, ſo a faire woman but unchaſte, is full of fleſhly luſt.

3. For filthineſſe, the ſatisfying of fleſhly luſt is the greateſt filthineſſe that is, and what is beauty then in ſuch a woman, but deformity? But why is the beauty of ſuch compared with a gold ring in a Swines ſnout? Some ſay, becauſe the ſnout of a ſwine is the firſt thing put into the mire, and moſt uſed to muzzle therein; ſo the beauty of ſuch a woman ſtirres up the ſtinking mire of fleſhly concupiſcence; it ſhould be indeed as a ring to a ſwine, keeping her from routing in ſoft and miery ground, but by the Swines naturall inclination ſo to doe, it being joyned to her ſnout, is an help to turne up the mire withall; hereupon it is commonly obſerved, that the faireſt women are rarely the chaſteſt; ſome, becauſe a faire woman that is fooliſh is drawne by gold, and gaine, to ſubject her ſelfe to mens luſts, this being as a ringle in her ſnout, to turne her about, and lead her whether they will.

To conclude, the woman without diſcretion, be ſhe never ſo faire, is but as a foule Sow, her beauty ſo abuſed being no more grace unto her, then a gold ring in the ſnout of a Sow to her, that both men may learne to loath ſuch; and women that are faire may live chaſtely, and modeſtly, and not by doing contrariwiſe be thus greatly diſgraced.

Verſ. 23. The deſire of the righteous is only good, but the expectation of the wicked wrath; That is, the juſt deſire that all things may be done that are juſt, and good, and nothing elſe; but the wicked contrariwiſe are ſo ſet upon evill, as that they can expect nothing therefore, but the wrath of God to be poured downe upon them.

them, So Lavater. Some ſay, the deſire of the juſt ſhall be fulfilled, and they ſhal not alwayes expect good in vaine, but in the end it ſhall come unto them accordingly; but what good ſoever the wicked looke for, it ſhall in the end prove wrath, a deprivation of all good, and an inflicting of all evill upon them, from a God full of wrath againſt them. Some, the juſt mans deſire is wholly ſet upon Heaven, and everlaſting happineſſe, but the wicked, who by his evill living ſheweth, that this is no part of his care, muſt needs expect contrariwiſe wrath, indignation, and deſtruction. Muffet.

Laſtly, ſome, the juſt deſire that all good may come to all men, with whom they have to doe, although they cannot be beneficiall to all; but the wicked contrariwiſe are ſo vile, and malicious, againſt ſuch as they are offended with, that they wiſh, and expect nothing but wrath, and evill to come upon them. Let the reader take it which way of theſe he pleaſeth, he ſhall not erre. Rodolph.

There is that ſcattereth; and yet increaſeth, and he that with-holdeth more then is meet, but it tendeth to poverty. This and the next verſe tend to the commendations of liberality towards the poore, and to the incouraging of us hereunto. For here by ſcattering, is meant ſcattering, as a Sower ſcattereth his ſeed, upon his good ground, whereby he ſhall not looſe, but get, and increaſe his corne and ſubſtance the more. The vulgar, They that take what is not their owne are alwayes in want, for theſe words, He that with-holdeth more then is meet, Hebr. withholding from the right; מישר, which may either have reference to the thing with-held, which right reaſon would move a man to let goe, that is, Almes to the poore, or to the perſon from whom it is with-held, who is the right owner, by the covetous yet kept from him, being unjuſtly taken away; ſo that the words may beare either rending, but the firſt is to be preferred; he that is ſparing, and giveth not, when it is juſt and right that he ſhould, ſhall have nothing the more; yea he ſhall by a ſecret curſe, have his meanes waſted, and become poore. But it is to be noted, that only with-holding, when of right a man ought to give, tendeth to poverty, not all with-holding, as namely from the idle, for he that will not worke muſt not eate; ſome ſuch there are in every Towne, to ſet whom aworke is more charity, then to give unto them to maintaine them in idleneſſe, and many ſuch there are, who wander about from Towne to Towne, and from County to County, to ſend whom to their owne habitations, after correction given, for this their ſinne, is more charity, then to give unto them without this neceſſary diſcipline. Verſ. 24. Note. 2 Theſ. 3. 10.

Such as are induſtrious, and yet not able to live without ſome releife, it muſt not be with-held from them, nor yet from the impotent and aged, nor from ſuch as by evill unavoydable caſualties are brought to poverty; as the man, that travelling from Jeruſalem to Jerico fell among Theeves, for releeving whom the Samaritan is ſo much commended.

The next words, ver. 25. are a reaſon, or demonſtration, by what meanes he that is liberall ſhall increaſe more; He that watereth ſhall be watered; The vulg. he that inebriateth, ſhall be inebriated; which is all one, God ſhall ſend downe plentifully upon him the dew of his bleſsing, and ſo, as by the dew of heaven falling, the earth fructifieth more after water, by vapours exhaled, and ſent up to heaven from the earth; the almes rightly given to the poore, being ſuch watering vapours, as it were, through their praiſing of God for our beneficence, aſcending, as it were, up to heaven, and procuring this dew of bleſsing upon all that we have, to the great increaſe thereof. Verſ. 25.

And to intimate the poores bleſsing of God, as hath been ſaid, for our charity, the words put before theſe, Hebr. are, the ſoule of bleſsing ſhall be made fat; That is, the man whom the poore bleſſe, for his charity ſhall be made fat, that is, wealthy; and then the meanes whereby this ſhall be done is ſhewed, He, that watereth, &c. he hath watered, and refreſhed the hungry, now he may well expect being watered from above, as hath been ſaid; or as a Well, the water whereof is abundantly drawne out, doth the more abound with water.

A great incouragement to all rich men, to be continually giving, for they that doe ſo, Note.

ſo following the rule before going, and that not for vain-glory, but that God may be praiſed and glorified, ſhall ſurely have Gods bleſſings ſhowred downe upon them againe. which ſhall be as the clouds, which are ſaid when they raine, to drop fatneſſe upon the earth, he being likewiſe fatted, and made the more wealthy.

Pſal 65.

Verſ. 26. He that with-holdeth corne, the people ſhall curſe him, but the bleſſing ſhall be upon the head of him that ſelleth it; that is, that holdeth his corne denying to ſell it yet, becauſe he thinketh not the price great enough, which is by this meanes much increaſed many times to their private gaine, but the great loſſe and hindrance of poore people, for which they are curſed in that very thing, as Chryſoſtome noteth, keeping it, till that it is eaten by a kinde of worme breeding in it, and conſuming all the flowre, the huske onely remaining, whereby ſuch miſers have beene ſometimes inforced to poure it out into the water, thus making it away that it may not be ſeene, as being much aſhamed of that which they have done. And the peoples curſing in this caſe is ſpoken of, becauſe it ſhall take effect to bring their great heaps of corne, thus covetouſly hoorded up, to nought. And this comes well in here next unto the watering before ſpoken of to the liberall, as ſhewing, that contrariwiſe the miſerable ſhall be curſed, who intend their owne gaine onely, and for it bring many into great want and penury, but they for want of Gods watering ſhall come to want at the laſt either in themſelves or their poſterity. He that ſelleth corn, who is here bleſſed, is one that ſelleth at an indifferent price, when others, that cannot come to a greater, hold it in: yet it cannot hence be gathered, that in times of plenty the Magiſtrates may not lay up corne, whereby the people may be afterwards ſupplied at a reaſonable rate, when there is a ſcarcity. For Joſeph was for this much commended and promoted to great honour in Egypt as a moſt wiſe man.

Chryſoſt.

To apply this alſo ſpiritually, if with-holding corne, which is food for the body, brings a curſe, then much more the Miniſters with-holding of ſpirituall food, as they doe, that having the charge of ſoules ſuffer them to ſtarve for want of duly miniſtring the word unto them by preaching.

Lavater. Note

Verſ. 27. He that diligently ſeekes good procureth favour, but he that ſeekes miſchief, it ſhall come unto him; Having ſpoken of good things to be done before, Verſe 24, 25, 26. viz. Almſ-giving and ſelling our corne at a reaſonable rate to the poore, when other miſers ſeeke by hoording it up to inhance the price, now he ſaith ſomewhat to ſtir up to the doing of theſe good things betimes, for the word rendred diligently is שחר ſeeking in the morning. He that doth thus betimes apply himſelfe to doe good to others, ſhall have favour both with God and men, but he that ſeekes by the hindrance of others to benefit himſelfe, as the covetous Miſer in hoording his corne up, and with-holding almes from the poore, evill for this great wickedneſſe in him ſhall come unto him, Gods curſe to diſappoint him of his expected wealth, and the curſes of men alſo, and hatred and infamy amongſt them.

If it be demanded, whether it be not a ſinne to curſe others, although they bee ſuch as be ſo ill diſpoſed, as hath beene ſaid, that is, ſuch as preferre their owne private gaine ſo farre, that to attaine it, they doe things detrimentall to the publike.

I anſwer, although we be bound onely to bleſſe thoſe that are our private enemies and hate us, yet curſing in ſome caſes is not unlawfull, viz. either in Gods cauſe, when men are notoriouſly unfaithfull to him, and either banding againſt him or ſhrinke backe, and ſtand not for him together with their fellow ſervants when there is need; or in the cauſe of the Commonwealth, as here, when men are apparently injurious thereunto through the baſe covetouſneſſe of their mindes doing things whereby the Commonwealth is hindered, ſo that they may benefited. Thus it is ſaid, Curſe ye Meroz becauſe they came not out to helpe the Lord againſt the mighty. And as ſix Tribes are ſet by Moſes to bleſſe, ſo ſix are ſet to curſe notorious ſinners, who are apparent enemies to God, and to the Commonwealth, becauſe they bring downe Gods judgements upon the whole land by their ſinnes.

Judg. 5. 23. Levit. 27. Ier. 23. 10. Hoſ. 4.

And

And therefore in such cases the curses of the people are Gods curses, and they but his instruments to pronounce them; provided, that it be not done in way of private revenge, but for God, and for his people in generall, to whom it will be a great benefit to have such cut off.

He that trusteth in his riches shall fall, but the righteous shall flourish as a branch. Lest any man against the threatning promised, Verse 27. should flatter himselfe, thinking by meanes of his riches to escape mischiefe well enough, this Proverb is added, He that trusts to these, shall not escape, but fall into mischiefe and misery, builde he his nest never so high; but the righteous, who seekes the good of all, and is full of charity, shall flourish as a branch, Psal. 1. and Jer. 7. as a tree planted by the waters side, bringing forth prosperous branches. Vers. 28.

He that troubleth his owne house, shall inherit the winde, and the foole shall be servant to the wise in heart. This Verse hath reference to Verse 24. where he commended scattering; now lest any prodigall foole should hereupon spend his patrimony and goods in vanity, bearing himselfe upon that saying common amongst them, Spend and God will send, this Proverb is here commended unto them. As if he had said, take heed of scattering so as to trouble thy owne house or family by rioting, whoring, spending upon evill company, jesters, and such as imploy their wits in making others merry, and pleasing them in their vaine wayes, in gaming, or any other unlawfull course, by faring deliciously, going sumptuously, or living idlely: For by all these meanes and more, reckoned up by Lavater, doe men trouble their owne houses, when from wealthy, and renowned, they bring them downe to bee poore and miserable, and themselves also, being glad to turne servants to get necessaries for this life, and to doe base offices, which before they would have scorned much, as the Prodigal in the Gospel, who kept swine for his living. Cajetan expounding the first clause here of a father too severe to his children, whereby they being discouraged flye out, and take evill courses, it being no more in his power now to rule them then the wind, which bloweth where it listeth, giveth this for the sense of the second; his children being thus made fools, and mad, so that he cannot rule them, become servants to wiser men, who know how to governe better, and therefore they like better to be servants to such, then sonnes to their father so full of austerity and rigour. Vers. 29. Lavater. Cajetan.

This I cannot mislike, it being one of the wayes also, that Lavater mentioneth of troubling a mans own house to be too austere and sharp to those about him, being never pleased with any thing that they doe, but by his violent carriage disturbing all, so that they are ready like the wind to flye from him both children and servants also: wherefore I judge that the sense is the more full, if we joyne this Exposition to the other.

The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life, and he that winneth soules is wise. Having spoken of a wise man in the words before-going, The foole shall be servant to the wise in heart; now he sheweth who is a wise man; he that laboureth to win souls, using wisely all good means to this end and purpose, is wise, and the fruit coming of his labours shall be the tree of life, that is, everlasting felicity spoken of by this name Revel. 3. 7. c. 22. and typified by the Tree of life in the Garden of Eden. Thus Lavater, who yet brings another, this is the fruit of the righteous mans labour, soules being hereby converted, are made as it were, Trees of life, alwayes living and fructifying, and never fading or dying, for thus the comparisons before spoken of, go, Psal. 1. Jer. 7. and it is common in the holy Scriptures to set forth the good by the names of good Trees, the Fig-tree, the Vine, the Olive-tree, &c. Vers. 30. Gen. 3. Lavater.

Some expound it thus, The fruit of the righteous is like the fruit of the tree of life, because man might freely have gone and taken and eaten of that tree, and having done so, he should have lived for ever; so about a righteous and faithfull Preacher, men have free liberty to come and eat of his fruit, that is, heare his instructions, and so live for ever, and he that knoweth how to yeeld such fruit, is a converter of soules; the Vulgar suscipit animas, taketh soules, and is a wise man indeed, wherein it is alluded to the ſaying of Chriſt, Hereafter thou ſhalt catch men, and I make you fiſhers of men. And this Expoſition is to be preferred, and ſo here is both that which may ſtirre up to labour in this holy worke, and bring Note. ſuch into eſtimation againſt the contempt of the baſe world, which preferreth other vocations before this, when as he that laboureth according to divine Art in this, is the wiſeſt man of all others, and if moſt wiſe, moſt excellent, and his calling ſuch as none but fooles will contemne; and alſo that is ſaid here, which may ſtirre all men up that would come to life, to come about ſuch men, and to be diligent in hearkning to them, that they thus eating, may live for ever, becauſe there is no mortall man, but if he could enter into Paradiſe, he would, and eat of the tree of life there, and live for ever. But how ſhould a man attaine to this Art? onely by joyning unto ſtudy and reading, to make us wiſe herein, fervent prayer to God, who if he adds

1 Cor. 3. not to our labours his bleſſing, Paul may plant, and Apollo water in vaine; and unto all theſe a life free from all ſcandall, all our ſpeeches and actions being apparently fruits of this tree of life, that if any be not wonne by the word, yet ſeeing our good converſation, they may be wonne hereby, as Paul ſpeakes of the converſation
1 Pet. 3. 1. of wives.

Some by the righteous here underſtand the mercifull, holding that he is ſaid to be a Tree of life; becauſe that by his charity many are fed, and their lives are ſuſtained; but how then can the next words with any good ſenſe anſwer to theſe? He that converteth ſoules is wiſe, plainly ſhewing, that the feeding with the fruit of the tree of life, is of the ſoule and not of the body. The Septuagint ſeeing this incongruity, to avoid it, render the words thus, Out of the fruit of righteouſneſſe groweth the tree of life, but the ſouls of the wicked ſhall be taken away unſeaſonably, or by untimely death; but herein they go altogether from the words of the Hebrew text, reſpecting rather the ſenſe by them conceived to be in them, then the words, as they doe alſo in many other places: But here certainly they erred, becauſe they would make up the ſentence by oppoſite words, as commonly they doe, but although Salomon ſpeaketh ſo for the moſt part, yet ſometimes he doth not, as here, and Verſe 29. 25. 22. and in many more places.

Laſtly, for that Expoſition before going, everlaſting life is the fruit of righteouſneſſe, and as ſome adde, a joyfull life, and free from miſery here alſo; this laſt cannot ſtand, becauſe Verſe 31. he ſaith, The righteous ſhall be recompenced upon Verſ. 31. earth, how much more the wicked? which were altogether inconſiſtent with that expoſition, although by the Tree of life everlaſting life be underſtood, as the reward of the righteous; the Reader may take it either way, but as I ſaid before, the other is to be preferred as moſt conſonant with another Proverb, Chap. 10. 21. The lips of the righteous feed many. See alſo Verſe 31. For the laſt words here, ſee the like Jer. 23. Luke 23. If they doe this to the green tree, what will they doe to the dry? 1 Pet. 4. ult. of this a plaine wreſted meaning is given by ſome, the righteous of whom it was ſpoken before, as of a Tree of life with her fruit, ſhall be ſomewhat rewarded even in this world with bleſſings, therefore much more the wicked, who are ſo well worthy, with curſes both here and hereafter: for thus the other places of Scripture before alleadged as parallel with this ſhould ill agree. The ſenſe therefore is, that although the fruit of the righteous be life, and therefore he deſerveth beſt of all other men, as doing the moſt noble worke in the world, viz.
Heb. 12. 9. Converting ſoules, yet even he ſhall ſuffer afflictions here, and it were ill with him, if he ſhould not, becauſe they are tokens of ſonnes, to be without ſuffering, of baſtards; much more then muſt the wicked, that many times live in proſperity here, ſuffer extreamly in the world to come, when their foule ſinnes, their impenitency, and unbeleefe, and hardneſſe of heart ſhall come in remembrance. For the righteous being far leſſe ſinfull ſuffer, therefore much more they.

CHAP. XII.

HE that loveth inſtruction, loveth knowledge, but he that hateth reproofe is brutiſh, or a bruit beaſt. Here patient bearing of reproofe and chaſtiſement is commended, as much conducing to make one divinely learned; hereupon the ſaying among the Greeks is παθήματα μαθήματα, paſſions are inſtructions, but he is, and is like to continue as a bruit, and no man, that hateth reproofe, and deſerved chaſtiſement. Verſ. 1.

A good man obtaineth favour of the Lord, but a man of wicked devices will he condemne. A good man he is called here, that is upright, and without fraud; A man of wicked devices, is he that is full of deceit; he may carry it ſo fairely before men, that he may be commended, but before God he is condemned, and can looke for nothing in the end but condemnation to the pit of hell, all his fraud and foulneſſe within being diſcovered, which lay hid before. Verſ. 2.

For Verſe 3. it is the ſame with Chap. 10. 25. although in other words. Verſ. 3.

A vertuous woman is a crowne to her husband, but ſhe that makes aſhamed, is as rottennesſe in his bones. Of the honour of a gracious woman, ſee before Chap. 11. 16. Hebrew, A woman of fortitude; the Vulgar, A diligent woman; ſhe is meant that is afterwards deſcribed Chap. 31. ſhe is vertuous for this, that ſhe is induſtrious in all points of good huſ-wifry, and feareth God. Verſ. 4.

In ſaying, ſhe is A crowne to her husband, he meaneth a glory to him, becauſe a Crowne is an Enſigne of King'y dignity; and therefore to ſhew, that a man, who hath a good wife, hath in her the greateſt honour that in this world can be attained, he ſaith, ſhe is a crowne unto him, that he who hath her may account it no ſmall bleſſing; and he that is to take a wife, may looke at vertue more then at riches or beauty, or birth in his chooſing. To ſignifie this of old, the bridegroome and the bride in the day of their marriage had Crownes of Laurell or Myrtle put upon their heads, which uſed to be ſet upon the heads of Conquerours, they being hereby both declared to be Conquerours over extravagant luſts, to live together ever after in the lawfull uſe of the marriage-bed, being alwayes uſed as a remedy againſt fornication.

And it is noted by ſome, that David having taken this Crowne from Uriah, when he lay with Bathſheba, his wife, had for this through the juſt judgement of God, his Crowne hazarded, and life alſo, by his ambitious ſonne Abſalom. To this Crowne it is alluded in the Song of Salomon, where it is ſaid, My mother ſet a Crowne upon my head in the day of my eſpouſals.

For the next words, ſhe that is adulterous, immodeſt, or laſcivious, is rottenneſſe to his bones; the diſeaſe of jealouſie thus ſeizing upon him, then which there is none that more infeebleth a mans ſtrength, ſet forth by his bones. Some for his bones, have her bones; but the Hebrew is of the maſculine gender, and therefore it is meant of him, and not of her.

Nazianzen hereupon ſaith, that ſhe is a ſought and attracted plague, not to be fled from againe by any meanes. And Chryſoſtome ſaith, That neither extreme poverty, nor any uncurable diſeaſe, is like unto jealouſie. But on the contrary ſide he extols a vertuous woman for this, that ſhe is a ſtrengthning to her husband in all his misfortunes, ſo that now he can the more chearfully beare them. And Tully ſaith, that anciently an adulterous wife was judged and condemned for a Witch, becauſe that through this wickedneſſe ſhe ſtirred much hatred in many others againſt her husband, his friends, and her owne friends alſo, and therefore to be revenged upon them, and to enjoy her wicked luſts ſtill, none can be more apt to turne a Witch, thus by the Devill to be inabled hereunto. Greg. Naz. Poem. Chryſoſt. Tully.

And accordingly it is to be noted, that when Jehu charged Jezabel with whoredome, he added witchcraft alſo.

The thoughts of the righteous are right, but the counſels of the wicked are deceit; that is, the one thinketh ſincerely how he may doe good to others, to helpe them in diſtreſſe, to right their wrongs, and promote the publike Verſ. 5.

publike good, if he be in any publike place, but the wicked both alone, and together, deviſe how to cheat and couſen, and to cover over their wickedneſſe, when they have done it. Vulgar, The thoughts of the juſt are judgement. This is followed by Gregory, who upon this ſaith, that the juſt man erects a Court of juſtice within himſelfe, and weigheth here in his conſcience in all caſes happening betwixt him and others, what juſtice requires him to do, and whether, if he were as that man, whom he hath to doe withall, he would be ſo dealt withall, or ſo; and then reſolveth upon that rule, As yee would that men ſhould doe to you, ſo doe yee to them. And Bernard ſetteth forth the parts of this court thus, The conſcience is the accuſer, memory the witneſſe, reaſon the judge, pleaſure taken in ſinne the priſon, feare the tormentor, all the delights taken in ſinne, being now turned into ſo many torments. And Ambroſe comparing this Tribunall within, and other Tribunals together, ſaith, that others are but at certaine times, many dayes coming between, this ſtands every day and houre. And Auguſtine ſaith, they are miſerable men, that returne not to the Tribunall within them, where they are in danger to be overthrowne by the ſuits of their ſins.

Verſ. 6. Muffet.

The words of the wicked are to lye in waite for blood, but the mouth of the upright ſhall deliver them. From thoughts here he proceedeth to words, both of the wicked and of the righteous, the one ſpeakes in way of queſtioning with this man or that, with a deceitfull heart ſeeking to catch ſomewhat from him to bring him into danger, but the other ſpeakes ſo, as that by examining things, he may finde how to deliver and ſave thoſe that be innocent. Some underſtand this, as ſpoken of the words had betwixt the wicked, ſtirring up one another to miſchiefe and blood-ſhed; Some of falſe witneſſes, who thus caſt many a man.

For the words of the righteous delivering them; ſome by them, underſtand themſelves, becauſe they being heard, anſwer ſo well in refelling the falſe accuſations of their adverſaries, that judgement is given on their ſides; ſome by them underſtand even their accuſers, or enemies machinating againſt them, but they ſpeaking to extenuate their fault, ſave them, who ſhould otherwiſe have been adjudged to death; it may be underſtood any of theſe wayes, but chiefly of the firſt.

Verſ. 7. The wicked are overthrowne, and are not, but the houſe of the righteous ſhall ſtand. He had before ſaid, that wicked mens words tended to blood, their conſultations, accuſations and queſtions, being all for the finding out of ſomewhat againſt the righteous, whom with his family they deſire to overthrow. But this overthrow cometh by Gods juſt judgement upon them and theirs. The Vulgar rendreth it verte impios, and it is to be underſtood by ſome, as if it had been ſaid, Overturne, overturne thou, O God, the wicked, and he, together with all his, ſhall be rooted out from being in any proſperous condition any more for ever. By ſome, averte, turne thou away, as ſpoken to the man converſing with him, turne and leave him a while, and afterwards come againe, and yee ſhall ſee an end of all his proſperity, as in the Pſalmes it is alſo ſaid. But the word הֲפֹךְ is a participle, overturning the wicked, and therefore muſt be referred to ſome ſubſtantive, and what can that better be then the mouth, of which in the righteous he had ſpoken before, as delivering him? contrariwiſe here it is overthrowne him utterly, for which one renders it, The wicked overthrowing themſelves, but the juſt, who ſtands for the ſaving and delivering of others, ſhall have his houſe eſtabliſhed to continue alwayes proſperous.

Verſ. 8. A man ſhall be commended according to his wiſdome, but he that is of a perverſe heart ſhall be deſpiſed. Having ſpoken of the ſtanding of a righteous mans houſe, now he addeth ſomewhat of the credit and eſtimation wherein he ſhall live, he ſhall bee commended by all men for his wiſe and good carriage, whereby others ſpeed the better: but the wicked for his deceit, and evill carriage ſhall be deſpiſed, and by Gods judgement brought into a poore and deſpicable eſtate; for that this is the meaning the next words ſhew, Verſe 9.

Verſ. 9. He that is deſpiſed, and hath a ſervant, is better then he that honoureth himſelfe, and lacketh bread. Theſe words are added to the former, to ſhew, that as the fooliſh and wicked are deſpiſed, for the evill that is in them; ſo a man of wiſdome may be deſpiſed alſo; but if he hath ſervants, that is, by his induſtry and providence hath gotten an eſtate by lawfull meanes, thus riſing from a poore beginning, to wealth, he is better by farre, then one that cometh of a higher ſireine, and glorieth in this, that his Anceſtors were great, and noble, but yet he for his part is very pobre, and deſtitute of theſe worldly things; for if the other man be contemned for his meane Parentage, as he commonly is, yet the Gentleman, who is poore, is contemned much more. And this is ſpoken both to beat downe the vanity of ſuch men, and to ſtirre up in them a care, and providence to uphold the eſtate by their progenitours left them, and not to ſquander it away in pride, luſt, or prodigality, as too too many doe. The Hebr. for theſe words, and hath a ſervant, hath theſe, and a ſervant to him, expounded by ſome, and is a ſervant to himſelfe; That is, refuſeth no ſervile or baſe labour, but doth any worke which he lawfully may, thus increaſing his meanes; but I rather preferre the former, becauſe it is not a man ſo toyling to get worldly goods, that is deſpiſed, before he hath gotten them, but being thus growne wealthy, it is commonly objected, he was at the firſt but thus, and thus; and the Gentleman, although poore, through ill courſes taken by him, hath him ſtill in great contempt.

This Parable, or Proverb, then tendeth to the reproofe of thoſe, that doe thus deſpiſe ſuch as be in a proſperous eſtate, and to teach us to forbeare it, and vaunting our ſelves of our kindred, being our ſelves in a poore and meane condition. Note.

A righteous man regardeth the life of his beaſt, but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruell. God, who made both man, and beaſt, and put the beaſts into mans hands, to ſerve himſelfe with them, is mercifull to them all; He ſaveth both man and beaſt, he provideth graſſe for them, and feeds the Fowles of the aire, and the young Ravens that call upon him; and he made Lawes, whereby it was provided, that their Owners ſhould feed them; Thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the Oxe, that treadeth out the corne; and the beaſt muſt reſt upon the Sabbath day, and if thou ſeeſt an Aſſe falne under the burthen, thou ſhalt lift it up, although it be the beaſt of thy enemy; wherefore it is ſaid here, the righteous man, who regards Gods ordinances, and aſpires after a conformity to God, his heavenly Father, regards his very beaſt; That is, to feed it, as is neceſſary, to give it times of reſt, that it may be the better able to indure the worke, and not by unceſſant labour be worne out in a ſhort time; and in caſe of being in danger by any fall, or otherwiſe, to doe what he can to ſave it; ſo that he is none of Gods righteous people, that contrariwiſe uſeth cruelty towards his beaſt, he hereby looſeth the certaineſt marke of being one of his Children; That is, viz. of being mercifull, as his heavenly Father is mercifull. Verſ. 10. Pſal. 104. Matth. 6. Pſal. 147. Note.

And if to his beaſts life a righteous man hath ſo great a regard, then much more to his man, or maid-ſervant, to feed, and ſhew all needfull favour to them. Therefore it is expreſly ordained, that a ſervant alſo reſt upon the Sabbath day, that his Wages be duly paid him, and that he be no way wronged. For the next words, the mercies of the wicked are cruelties; the meaning is, they are hard-hearted both towards their beaſts, beating them without reaſon, and toyling them without end; and towards ſervants, and all others in eſtate under them, harſh, and hard-hearted, when any occaſion to try them is given; if in time of famine many periſh for want, they regard it not, neither ſhall have any reliefe from them; if there be Warre, and ſome be ſlaine, or wounded, they are not affected. Likewiſe in caſe of ſickneſſe, or tormenting pangs, yea, to very wives and children they are cruell, and hard-hearted; and note hence, that who ſo is thus, is wicked, for this is the character of the wicked, Their mercies are cruelties; all the mercies that any ſhall finde in them, are ſuch as have been ſaid, and therefore worthy to be called cruelties. Col. 3. 25. Note.

He that tilleth his Land ſhall be ſatisfied with bread, but he that followeth vaine perſons is voyd of underſtanding. Here is incouragement for ſuch as labour in workes of Husbandry, or in any other lawfull Calling, but they that ſpend their Verſ. 11.

time in idle and vaine courſes are cenſured, as being without wit; but workes of Husbandry are named as the firſt, and moſt anciently done, for the getting of bread, and moſt neceſſary for this life; for Adam tilled the ground, and Cain his eldeſt Sonne was an Husband-man; to Cincinnatus amongſt the Romans, when he was at his Husbandry, was offered the Dictatour-ſhip of Rome, and many great men amongſt them have frequently done workes of Husbandry; and Eliſha being at Plough, was called to be a Prophet inſtead of Elijah, that is, the head and chiefe of all others. Hezekiah is ſaid to have built Store-houſes for corne, and wine, and oyle, implying his husbandry; for vaine perſons here ſpoken of, and following them, it is the buſying of a mans ſelfe about the ſtudy and exerciſe of curious Arts, or Games, of which no profit cometh, but oft-times much loſſe, to the weakening, yea over-throw of a mans eſtate, which becauſe none but vaine perſons doe, it is ſaid, he that followeth vaine perſons is voyd of underſtanding.

2 Chron. 32. 28.

Lavater. We have read, ſaith Lavater, that ſome Emperours have put from their Court ſuch as could run upon a Rope, doe tumbling Tricks, Jeaſters, and Stage-players, &c. as vain perſons: and indeed, what wit is there in men, that ſpend their time either to attain ſuch skil, or to doe many other rare feates, of which no profit cometh? But above all, they are to be condemned, that ſtudy, and ſpend their time to get skil, to attaine to ſuch Arts, as the maine ſcope whereof, is to circumvent, and to gaine out of other mens loſſes, as Mounte-bankes, and Cheaters; for curſed is the gaine that thus cometh, and it ſhall prove bread of bitterneſſe, inſtead of the good bread that nouriſheth.

Note.

Laſtly, they come here to be taxed, that becauſe they have meanes, ſpend their time in idleneſſe, being much for feaſtings, paſtimes, or which is the baſeſt of all, Venery, following Whores.

The vulgar Latine, for vaine perſons, hath idleneſſe, the word is ריקים vanities, or vacuities, emptineſſes, and therefore may alſo be underſtood of times ſpent in idleneſſe; and if ſo, then as labour is here commended, ſo idleneſſe for ſuch, that it is not followed by any, but thoſe that want wit, being as much voyd of it, as their time ſo miſ-ſpent of profitable labour; of ſuch one ſaith, Well may they be counted fooles, becauſe they live only like fooliſh beaſts, or only breathe, as they doe.

Some by vanities, oppoſed to tilling the ground, underſtand Merchandizing, in which there is great hazzard, therefore he ſaith, they that follow ſuch trades may prove fooles, looking for much profit after a long voyage by Sea, but in vaine, all being loſt in returning home. Thus Jerome, Labour thy ground, ſhips come not from Carthage, it was good for Tyre that the ſhips periſhed, that they might labour their owne ground, and ſo have bread, according to the ſaying, He that tilleth his land, ſhall be ſatisfied with bread, that he may not live of the uncertaine danger of the waves, and ſhipwracks, but of the fruits of his labour. And according to this, Plutarch calleth Merchandizings by ſea μανίας τὰς τέχνας, vaine Arts, preferring the trade of Husbandry much before them.

Hieron. in Eſa. 23.

According to this a compariſon ſhould be here made, not betwixt Labourers in Husbandry, and idle perſons, or ſuch as addict themſelves to other vaine wayes of ſpending their time, but betwixt Husbandry and Merchant-venturing at Sea, which is improbable, becauſe although thus profit comes not alwayes in, yet ſo oft, and ſo much doth, that the Merchant Adventurer findes it not an idle, but very profitable trade, and great skill is required in thoſe that follow it: and this was uſed by Salomon himſelfe, and therefore he cannot be taken to ſay of ſuch, that they are voyd of underſtanding; ſo that the former wayes of expounding this text, is to be reſted in, this laſt rejected.

Verſ. 12. The wicked deſireth the net of evill men, but the root of the righteous yeeldeth fruit. By the net of evill men here underſtand, their cunning devices to get the things of this world; he that is wicked deſireth, that he had the Art, or skill thus to doe, as being altogether intent to get gaine, by fraudulent and deceitfull meanes, but in the end no good will come to him of all this, no fruit will grow upon ſo rotten a root; but the juſt dealer ſhall be greatly bleſſed, and from his honeſt labour labour and juſt dealing, as from a root full of ſap, the tree of thrift and proſperity ſhall grow up, which ſhall beare fruit enough, ſo that he ſhall have no want: vulg. The deſire of the wicked is the muniment of the worſt ſort of men, but the root of the juſt ſhall proſit; That is, they deſire that the wicked may ſtand, and be in place and authority unmoveably, as thinking that it will be the better for them, who may ſo goe on in their evill wayes impunè; but this ſhall not be, ſuch ſhall be farre from being as a muniment, or place of defence to thoſe of their owne ſort, to profit them thus, by keeping off Judgement from them; but if yee would know where a certaine ſtander may be found, yeelding this fruit, looke to the righteous, for he is like a tree deep rooted, and therefore ſhall never fade, but comfort ſhall be had alwayes in righteouſneſſe.

Muffet following the vulg. expounds it thus; The wicked would gladly have a ſhelter againſt death, and deſtruction, which ſhall not be unto him; but the righteous rooted in Chriſt ſhall yeeld good fruit, and ſo enjoy this muniment deſired. Muffet

Lavater, The wicked deſireth the net, or hunting of evill men; That is, it is their delight by their ſubtleties and deceits to draw men to errour, or to take the faithfull to deſtroy them; even as the Fiſher, or Hunter; but from all dangers God preſerveth them, ſo that they continue as good trees, yeelding good fruit, being nothing diſmayed, or made to goe from well doing by all the feares that they are put in, or aſſaults of temptation where-with they are aſſaulted in their faith. The word מצוד moſt properly ſignifieth a net, and not a muniment, therefore leaving that expoſition, let us reſt in the firſt, and the further amplification made hereof by Lavater. Lavater.

The wicked is ſnared by the tranſgreſſion of his lips, but the juſt ſhall come out of trouble. By the tranſgreſſion of his lips here, underſtand evil ſpeeches in generall, and in particular, teaching falſe and erroneous doctrine; for this proveth as a ſnare in the end to the wicked, to their deſtruction; but if the juſt be brought into trouble for any thing, that he hath ſaid, or taught, he ſhall come well out again; This hath often been proved true by experience both in Prophets and Apoſtles, as in Michaiah, and Jeremiah, and in Paul, and the reſt of the Apoſtles; and although many juſt men have been troubled, and not come out in this world, yet finally in death they have, it proving to them but a looſing to goe to Chriſt, which is beſt of all. Verſ. 13.

To this effect Lavater; But the words ſeeme rather to be ſpoken of thoſe that ſpeake deceitfully, to inſnare others, the evil which they thought thus to bring them into, ſhall fall upon themſelves, and they whom they ſought thus to intrap, ſhall eſcape, and keep out of danger. Lavater.

A man ſhall be ſatisfied with good, by the fruit of his mouth, and the recompence of a mans hands ſhall be rendred unto him. By the fruit of the mouth underſtand conſolatory ſpeeches, whereby the afflicted are comforted. He that applyeth himſelfe thus to deale with others, ſhall have a compenſation at Gods hands, when he ſhal moſt need; and if by deed he hath further been charitable, this alſo ſhal be abundantly recompenſed unto him. Some underſtand this of the Hearers being ſatisfied with the fruit of the Teachers lips, but here are not two, but one only, and the ſame man ſpoken of. Verſ. 14.

The way of a foole is right in his owne eyes, but he that hearkeneth to counſell is wiſe. Some there are, that conceive ſo well of themſelves, and their owne underſtanding, that with them all things are right, and well, that ſeeme to them to be ſo; but Salomon ſaith, they are fooles, for affection ſo preponderateth reaſon, that a man cannot ſo well ſee the right, touching his owne things, as another man may doe; therefore it is wiſdome herein to take counſell of others. Verſ. 15.

A fooles wrath is preſently knowne, but a prudent man covereth ſhame. He that can beare nothing but being offended is without any power to bridle his paſſions, is a foole; but the prudent man here called ערום aſtutus, ſubtile, he covereth the ſhame, or diſgrace, to which he is put by evill tongues by ſilence, hearing, but being as if he heard not the things ſpoken againſt him. Verſ. 16.

Thus

Thus Saul at the firſt ſhewed himſelfe wiſe, when ſome ſpoke of him contemptuouſly, how ſhall he ſave us from our enemies? he went away and ſaid nothing; Some there be that are ſo ſubtile, that they ſay nothing for the preſent, but they lay the wrong done them up in their hearts, meditating revenge, when opportunity ſerveth.

But ſuch are ſubtile in an evill ſenſe, not in a good, as it is here meant, and are greater offenders, then they that are ſuddenly angry, and ſo vent their ſpleen, becauſe they inſtead of being ſuddenly angry, are malicious, as Cain to Abel, and Abſalom to Ammon, that had offended.

Verſ. 17. He that ſpeakes forth truth ſheweth righteouſneſſe, but a falſe witneſſe deceit; that is, when a man cometh to teſtifie any thing, if he ſincerely declareth the truth in all things, he deales juſtly and righteouſly, and to his ſpeeches therefore good reaſon that the judge and all men ſhould attend; but when a witneſſe cometh, that inſtead of truth uttereth lyes, they that hearken to him, are deceived; ſo that as thou wouldeſt in any caſe of controverſie know the truth, have a care to finde out witneſſes that be juſt and upright, and abhor from lyers.

Verſ. 18. There is that ſpeaketh like the piercings of a ſword, but the tongue of the wiſe is health. Having in the former words ſpoken againſt falſe witneſſes, now he compareth their lying and deceitfull words unto ſwords that cut and kill, becauſe by their falſe teſtimonies men are oft-times cut off unjuſtly, as Naboth by the words of the falſe witneſſes in Jezreel. Some more at large, by piercing words underſtand all manner of contumelious ſpeeches, as curſing, railing, and reproachfull ſpeaking, and ſlandering. Some following the Vulgar, There is that promiſeth and is pricked as with a ſword of conſcience; There be ſome falſe witneſſes, that ſay they will teſtifie great matters againſt the guiltleſſe, but when they come to ſpeake, their conſcience troubles them ſo, that they cannot, but very imperfectly and interruptedly: but the honeſt diſcreet man ſpeaketh health; that is, giveth a perfect and ſound teſtimony for him that is in danger, whereby he eſcapeth. The word here uſed is בוטח ſignifying confident, There is that is confident, as the piercings of a ſword; that is, bold enough to ſpeake, but ſo lyingly and deceitfully to the cutting off of his neighbour, as that a ſword in the hand ready to ſtrike and kill, is not more dangerous, then the tongues of ſuch men.

Verſ. 19. The lip of truth ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever, but a lying tongue is but for a moment. Here Salomon goeth on in the ſame argument touching true ſpeakers and lyers, that which is ſpoken truly ſhall ſtand, none being able to gain-ſay it, but although a lyar may be beleeved for a time, within a little while his falſeneſſe and deceit will appear.

Verſ. 20. Deceit is in the heart of them that imagine evill, but to the counſellours of peace is joy; that is, they that deviſe evill againſt their neighbours, or plot how to commit any ſinne, can have no true peace of conſcience, or joy, but feare and horrour therefore; but they that ſtudy ſincerely things that belong to peace, that is, how to benefit and reconcile others that are at difference, ſhall have joy through the teſtimony of a good conſcience, bearing witneſſe for them that ſo they doe, and not againſt them.

Verſ. 21. There ſhall no evill happen to the juſt, but the wicked ſhall be filled with miſchiefe; that is, the wicked ſhall not at any time be able to hurt them, that is, unleſſe by God appointed to execute ſome corporeal judgement upon them for correction, or for their triall, which when they are, they are but as hang-men, doing the Judges will, not their owne. But againſt the wicked all creatures are ready preſt to cut off, and miſchiefe them; thus Lavater. Another, There ſhall no evill be prepared for the juſt; that is, no ſinne can be ſo coloured over, as to make a juſt man reliſh it, as one that is ſound and healthfull cannot be made to eat that which is unwholeſome for his body, howſoever it be ſeaſoned; but the wicked are filled with evill, as with meat and drinke, as being delighted as much therein; ſo doth the devill, or the fleſh ſeaſon it to their palat, and make it ſeem good; and truly this agreeth well with the originall, in which the word rendred evill is iniquity און, and the verb is ואבה which may as well be rendred prepared or condited, as happen: the the Vulgar, Non contriſtabit juſtum quicquid acciderit, altogether from the Hebrew; neither is it true, that nothing can make the juſt ſad, that falleth out becauſe it may, and doth fall out ſo, that he may ſinne, or there may be foule ſinnes committed by others amongſt whom he liveth; in both theſe caſes he cannot but bee affected with griefe. To hold us therefore to the former rendring, we have the ſenſe already, there is no ſinne, that the juſt can be drawne willingly to commit, although he may through infirmity fall into ſinne, and riſe againe by repentance, according to John. He that is borne of God ſinneth not, neither can he. If it bee expounded of evill ſuffering, the meaning is, not that ſuch evills ſhall not befall the juſt at any time, but they ſhall ſeeme nothing to him, how great ſoever they be, as Chryſoſtome ſaith, There is no evill can happen to the righteous, which he counts evill, but ſinne, the greateſt evill beſides being but as a ſparke of fire falling into the ſea, where it is preſently quenched. 1 Ioh. 3. 9. Chryſoſt. Hom. 1. in 2 Cor.

Lying lips are an abomination to the Lord, &c. A prudent man concealeth knowledge, but the heart of a fool proclaimeth fooliſhneſſe, For the former of theſe verſes ſee before Chap. 6. 17. for the next, this is the difference betwixt a wiſe man, and a fool, that the one uſeth few words, and if his knowledge be great he boaſteth not of it; but the other being very talkative, whereas he hath but a ſhallow braine, bewrayeth his folly. Cajetan, he concealeth ſome particular knowledge, or ſecret committed unto him, whereas the foole can hide nothing; but the firſt is beſt, he conceales not his knowledge ſo, as to keep it wholly to himſelfe, but forbeares vain-gloriouſly to ſpeak of it. Verſ. 22. 23. Cajetan. For the wiſe mans diſperſing knowledge, ſee chap. 15. 17.

Heavineſſe in the heart of a man maketh him to ſtoope, but a good word maketh glad. The Septuagint, A terrible word makes the heart of a man to ſtoop; and the Caldee likewiſe, and if this be followed, here is a direct oppoſition, A good word, or comfortable, makes glad; and the ſenſe is plaine, he goeth away with an heavy heart to whom his Lord or King ſpeakes terribly; but contrariwiſe with a joyfull, to whom cordially: yea even the terrible words of equalls, or inferiours ſometimes make men heavy hearted, and the good and comfortable words of ſuch, chearfull, either in ſickneſſe or any other affliction, or caſe of trouble in minde for ſin. Verſ. 25.

The evill piercing tongue is by Gregory compared to a Viper biting one, for as this poyſoneth and endangereth, and is not cured but by Treacle made of a Viper, and taken; ſo the wound made in the heart by a virulent tongue, is by the ſame tongue ſpeaking comfortably, healed againe. Gregor.

The righteous is more excellent then his neighbour, but the way of the wicked ſeduceth them; that is, it is not wealth, but righteouſneſſe, which makes a man excell; ſo that a righteous man, although he be poore, excelleth the rich man, that is wicked, which is alſo further taught and explained Jam. 2. 5. of this Jerome yeelds a good reaſon, ſaying, A poore godly man beares the image of Chriſt, a wicked rich man the image of the devill. Verſ. 26. Hieron, pauper pius gerit imag. Chriſti, dives impius imaginem diaboli.

For the next words oppoſed, The way of the wicked ſeduceth them; The meaning is, their imaginations and thoughts, that it is not ſo (but he is the beſt man, that hath moſt wealth, and this is not the caſe of many righteous men, eſpecially when the wicked have dominion, but they are poore) make them to erre, ſeeking by wicked meanes to get worldly wealth, and to thinke that when they have attained ſuch or ſuch an eſtate, then they will by repentance and charity to the poore, reconcile themſelves to God, which being done, none can be in a better or more excellent eſtate then they. But this their way deceiveth them, and keeps them from this excellency, and ſo they live and dye baſe worldlings and ſervants of mammon, when the poore honeſt man is the adopted childe of God, and heire of his heavenly Kingdome; the Vulgar renders it, He that neglects loſſe for a friend is juſt; by ſome expounded, he that paſſeth not for his owne loſſe, ſo that he may doe juſtly to his friend or fellow, is a righteous man, or that exerciſeth charity towards him, although this may ſeem to be to his detriment. But they that by oppreſſion, deceit or hardening their hearts againſt charity, thinke to grow rich, and yet that no detriment will hence redound to their owne ſoules, are ſeduced herein moſt foulely. But although the word יהר ſignifyeth to remain, or to be left, yet how out of it this Expoſition ſhould be made of neglecting his owne loſſe, I ſee not: for the other ſignification of the word excellent, or honourable, to render it hereby both agreeth beſt, and this underſtood, the Proverb is notable for the commending of righteouſneſſe above all worldly things to us all. Riches and honours attained to hereby, ſaith Chryſoſtome, in wicked men, are but like unto an old Whores ill-favoured face painted over to make it ſhew beautifull, but take away the painting, and then it appeares baſe and contemptible, but righteouſneſſe makes the face faire and ſhining, at the leaſt in another life, like the face of our Lord Jeſus in his Transfiguration. One renders it, The juſt is abounding above his neighbour, expounding it in wealth, with which God bleſſeth him in his juſt dealing; whereas the wicked, who is drawne away by his owne deceitfull imagining that by wicked meanes hee ſhall become rich, through Gods curſe is ofttimes blaſted in his eſtate, and made poore. But neither doth this reading agree with the originall, neither is it often verified in that ſenſe, wherefore I reject this Expoſition alſo.

Verſ. 27. Lavater. The ſlothfull man roaſteth not what he tooke in hunting, but the ſubſtance of a diligent man is precious. Lavater for ſlothfull here hath deceitfull, expounding it thus: as when a man hath hunted all day, and taken veniſon, yet ſometime it happeneth ſo that the dogs eat it up, and he never roaſteth it, or hath good of it; ſo by the juſt judgement of God the goods ill gotten by the fraudulent, ſometimes are torne againe from him, or ſpent by others, he never having any comfort thereof. But the ſubſtance of the diligent is precious; that is, what by honeſt labour is gotten, is durable, as precious gold. To this of Lavater doe I ſubſcribe, and the word רמיה here uſed ſignifieth not ſlothfull, but deceitfull; but becauſe the word diligent is oppoſed to it, our NewTranſlation rendered it ſlothful, reſpecting rather the condition of Hunt-men here ſpoken of, who are ſlothfull for doing any works of husbandry, being onely addicted to the pleaſure of hunting, and hawking, then the ſignification of the word. The Vulgar Latine in following the ſenſe alſo, not the ſignification hath it, non inveniet fraudulentus lucrum ſuum, the deceitfull man ſhall not finde his gaine. The words properly ſignifie the deceitfull man ſhall not burne what he tooke in hunting; whereupon Rab. Joſeph ſaith, that it was the manner of old, when a man had taken fowles, to burne their wings, and that hereunto it was alluded, it being meant, that as he that taketh fowles, but keepes them not till he hath burnt their wings, hath no profit of them, becauſe they flye away againe; ſo he that getteth worldly wealth by deceit; wherefore this gaine is nothing worth, but that which is gotten by honeſt labour, is gaine to be valued and accounted of indeed, as gaine that will continue.

R. Joſeph.

Verſ. 28. In the way of righteouſneſſe there is life, and in the path-way thereof there is no death. Having ſpoken much in this Chapter in the commendation of righteouſneſſe, now hē concludeth with the greateſt motive of all others to follow after righteouſneſſe; to them that doe ſo is life, that is, joy and proſperity here, and life everlaſting hereafter, and here is no death, or which is as a death, ſorrow and ſadneſſe in wordly reſpects: For he meaneth not, that the righteous ſhall not dye by a naturall death, for ſo all men muſt, Rom. 5.12. Heb. 12. but that they ſhall have no ſuch ſorrow, as hath beene ſpoken of, which as the Apoſtle ſaith, is unto death, nor ſuffer death eternally as the wicked ſhall.

2 Cor. 7.10.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſ. 1. A Wiſe ſonne heareth his fathers inſtruction, but a ſcorner heareth no rebuke. Heb. A wiſe ſon the inſtruction of his father; that is, in his life, and doings repreſents his father, ſo that in him, as in an inſtruction penned to ſet forth his fathers goodneſſe, and good teaching of him, it may apparently be ſeen; but the ſcornfull, ſcornfull, wicked, proud ſonne, who is impatient of any reproofe, or correction, is ſo farre from being one that commends his good Father by his life, that he diſgraceth him.

A man ſhall eate good by the fruit of his mouth, but the ſoule of tranſgreſſours ſhall eate violence. The firſt part of this Proverb ſee before, Ch. 12. 14. The meaning is, he that inſtructeth others in goodneſſe, ſhal another day be rewarded accordingly, as Daniel ſaith; They that turne others to righteouſneſſe, ſhal ſhine as the ſtarres in the Firmament; but contrariwiſe, they that with their mouthes either ſinne by lying, common ſwearing, curſing, or any corrupt talking, or ſet forth any corrupt doctrine, to the depraving of others in opinion, or life, inſtead of this ſweet fruit of the Tree of Life, ſhall be compelled to eate, and feed continually upon a moſt tormenting and violent death, as all the damned doe for ever-more: wherefore it ſtands every one in hand, as by a bit and bridle, to keep his tongue from evil ſpeaking, and as at that time he deſireth to gather, and enjoy good fruit, to utter good ſpeeches, which may be to the uſe of edifying from time to time. Verſ. 2. Dan. 12. Pſal. 11. 6.

He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life, but he that openeth wide his lips ſhall have deſtruction. Moſt aptly doth this follow after verſ. 2. wherein Tranſgreſſours with their mouthes are threatned with violence; therefore let every one keep his mouth, as his life: if evil words indanger thy life, as they doe, take heed of them, as of death it ſelfe. And well were it with evil tongued perſons, if they were in danger of a corporall death only, for by thy words, ſaith Chriſt to ſuch, thou ſhalt be condemned; for which cauſe let us remember, and with all carefulneſſe put in practiſe that of Pſal. 39. 1, 2. for openeth his mouth wide, the vulgar hath, that is inconſiderate in ſpeaking, and ſo ſpeaking wickedly, which is true ſence. Verſ. 3. Mat. 12. 36. Note.

The ſoule of the ſluggard deſireth, and hath not, but the ſoule of the diligent ſhall be made fat. Thus Hebr. and the Caldee ſpeakes to the ſame effect, but the vulg. Piger vult & non vult, He willeth, or deſireth, and deſireth not; That is, he is ſo long in deliberating before he putteth to his hand to doe, that for want of action and labour he wanteth ſuſtenance; or becauſe Hebr. it is only the ſloathfull deſireth not, which may as well be ſupplyed obtaineth not, as deſireth not, and then here is ſhewed, how vaine they are, that would willingly enjoy good things, but this is all that is in them, they are not induſtrious to get them; and as it is touching the things of this life, ſo it is touching thoſe of a better to come; a man may wiſh for them with Balaam, but it is the diligent, and carefull to doe good, that ſhall be ſatiated here-with, they that are not ſhall never have them, although they beleeve they ſhall. Verſ. 4. Numb. 23. 10.

A righteous man hateth lying, but a wicked man is loathſome, and cometh to ſhame, Hebr. ſhall make to ſtinke, and to be aſhamed. Of ſtinking, thus Jacob ſpeaketh to his ſonnes, after that bloudy maſſacring of the men of Shechem, telling them, that they had made him to ſtinke in the noſtrils of the Nations about: And the Hebrewes told Moſes, when they were the more hated by Pharaoh for his ſake, that he had made them to ſtinke before Pharaoh. So it is here meant, that wicked lyers ſtinke, and are an abomination to all the godly; That is, ſo as that they abhorre their company, and to be amongſt them; they that doe not, are made by them to ſtinke, and to have ſhame ſpoken of them, becauſe they aſſociate themſelves with ſuch companions. Verſ. 5. Gen. 34. Exod. 5.

Righteouſneſſe keepeth him that is upright in the way, but wickedneſſe overthroweth the ſinner. To the ſame effect he ſpake before, chap. 11. 3. the meaning is, the man that hath an upright heart declineth not from the right way, howſoever he be tempted; but he that hath not, is ſoone ſeduced, when temptation cometh, as one over-throwne, and caſt downe. Verſ. 6. Chap. 11. 3.

There is that maketh himſelfe rich, yet hath nothing; and that maketh himſelfe poore, yet hath great riches, Hebr. There is that maketh himſelfe rich, מתעשר, and not all, or not any thing; That is, he hath not any thing: Of theſe words, divers expoſitions are given by divers; ſome, there is, that vain-gloriouſly pretendeth himſelfe to be rich, and liveth accordingly, but is indeed a poore man. Verſ. 7.

Another againe, that is rich, ſaith, and doth ſo, as if he were poore, the better to avoyd charges; ſome, there is a man that is poore, who makes himſelfe rich through the contentation of his minde; another that is rich, makes himſelfe poore, through his covetouſneſſe, becauſe he is a rich man that is content with his owne eſtate, and he poore that is covetous.

Gregor. Nazianz. in his Poems ſaith, A covetous man that is rich, emulating the greedy Horſe-leech, holding ſome things in his minde, and thinking ſome things, and beholding ſome things againe, with no good eyes, and lightly feigning ſome things to himſelfe through vaine hope, through deſiring is alwayes more indigent. And the Apoſtle ſaith, Godlineſſe is great gaine with contentation.

1 Tim. 6. 6.

The covetous man for his unſatiable deſiring of riches, is by Nazianzen compared to Tantalus, and the Dragon, that keepeth treaſures, but maketh no uſe of them.

Greg. Nazianz.

Laſtly Beda, There is a man that makes himſelfe rich having nothing, in that being poore in this world, yet he gets him faith, and other graces; but that rich man, who is voyd of grace, is poore; to which that of James agreeth, The poore in this world, rich in faith. And that written to Laodicea, Thou ſayeſt, that thou art rich, but knoweſt not that thou art poor, and miſerable.

Beda.

Iam. 2.
Revel. 3.

The Reader may follow any, or all of theſe expoſitions, and let both the vaine-glorious and covetous take notice each one of his ſinne, to turne there-from, and above all riches, let us all aſpire after the ſpirituall.

Note.

Verſ. 8. The ranſome of a mans life is his riches, but the poore heareth no rebuke. Of this alſo there are divers expoſitions.

1 A rich man is in danger of being called in queſtion, becauſe he is rich, and by this meanes he hath ſometimes much trouble, and contention, from which he cannot come off, but by paying good ſums of money; but the poore man heares nothing of any ſuch trouble, being never ſo called in queſtion, or ſuffering ſo much as a check at the Judges hands, becauſe they care not for medling with thoſe that have nothing, but only ſuch, as by whom gaine may come in.

Some, when a man of wealth hath done ſomething againſt the Law, for which he is in danger to be called in queſtion for his life; he by his riches giving largely is acquitted, whereas a poore man without hearing is preſently condemned, and executed.

Some, a man that hath wealth is hereby incouraged, and regards not the menaces or quarrels of other men againſt him, becauſe he hath where-with to defend himſelfe, and ſo cannot be made to yeeld to the will of others, in that which he conceiveth to be evil, and conſequently dangerous to his ſoule, and therefore he is hereby ſaid to run ſo in his life; but a poore man being required by the rich and mighty to doe any thing, and threatned if he doth it not, is preſently overcome through feare, he ſtands not to heare any further threatning, becauſe he dares not.

Thus Auguſt. The poore man being required by the rich to teſtifie for him, anſwereth, he dares not; but then he promiſeth him a reward; and if he will not, threatens him: then the poore, unable to beare this, yeeldeth, and giveth falſe teſtimony, and by this word bearing, the vulgar renders it, the poore man heareth no reproofe. But herein the ſence is more reſpected then the ſignification of the word, which is, to heare.

Auguſt. De temp. Ser. 213.

Laſtly, riches laid up in Heaven by charity, are a ranſome, which Chryſoſtome proveth by the Parable of the rich man, that laid up his goods for many yeares; for as he by this meanes loſt his ſoule, ſo he that is charitable ſaves it; for he that hideth his goods, laying them up, and not diſtributing them to the poore, looſeth his ſoule; but he that brings them forth, and diſtributeth them, delivers it. According to this then the meaning is, riches given away in almes, are as a ranſome of the ſoule; and he that contrariwiſe hoordeth them up, ſhall one day heare that ſharpe reproofe, Thou foole, this night ſhall they fetch away thy ſoule from thee: But the poore man having nothing to give, ſhall never heare any ſuch rebuke. And this

expoſition is of all others moſt genuine, and next unto it, that of Auguſtine immediatly before going.

Lavater ſaith, that Clemens Alexand. expounds theſe words, as I have ſaid; but becauſe the bloud of Chriſt is the only price of our Redemption, he rejecteth this; and there is good reaſon I confeſſe to doe ſo, if by Redeeming, or Ranſoming ſhould be underſtood properly the paying a price ſufficient; but underſtanding by a ranſome parting with our worldly goods to the poor, for Chriſts ſake, which who ſo doth, ſhall be delivered from death, and received into everlaſting life; I ſee no cauſe of rejecting it, but imbracing it, as the beſt ſence; yet the ſame Lavater hath another expoſition upon the laſt words, which is not improbable, the poore man heareth no rebuke, whereby the idle are rebuked and threatned with want for their idleneſſe, and ſo they come to be pinched with poverty, which if they would have hearkened to ſuch reproofe, they needed not to have falne into, but might have had alſo where-with-all to have borne it out, if at any time they had been indangered; for ſo he expoundeth the firſt words of riches, being a mans ranſome, alledging the ſaying of Anacharſis, Rich men are like unto great flyes, that break through the Spiders web, in which little flyes are catched, and hang, and dye; ſo rich men, by the ſtrength of their owne wealth, breake through the net of the Law, when poore men are hereby condemned, and hanged. Lavater. Matth. 25.

To conclude, the ſcope of this place is to ſet forth the commodities both of riches, and poverty, becauſe either of them hath its commodities, as well as diſcommodities; the rich are many times indangered by their wealth, but ſometimes againe they have a benefit hereby; if they fall into the enemies hands in warre, they are ſpared for a ranſome; if they have enemies, that ſeeke by ſuits in Law to wrong them, their wealth will defend them; ſo the poore that indureth much miſery, if there be any rebellion in the Land made by great men, whereby they at length being over-come, ſuffer great blame, and often looſe their lives, with the poore the King medleth not in this caſe, neither doth he heare any rebuke; the rich being begged off, and denying reliefe, is railed upon by the ſturdy Rogue, but the poore man not. &c. thus, and divers other wayes he heareth no rebuke. Muffet

The light of the righteous rejoyceth, but the lamp of the wicked ſhall be put out; That is, the proſperity of the righteous, which commonly in Scripture is ſet forth by light, is ſtable, and permanent, but if the wicked have a little ſuch light, it ſoone goeth out, and ends in the darkneſſe of miſery. Verſ. 9. Lavater.

Thus Lavater, and ſome others, who alſo expound the light of fame, which to the righteous increaſeth, but to the wicked is ſoone put out, and ſo put out as that it cannot be lighted, or come to ſhine any more; as flax flaming, that hath water poured upon it, is not only put out, but oppreſſed, as the word here ſignifieth, never to flame any more.

And it is to be noted, that two words are here uſed, אור light, ſignifieth a greater light, as the light of the day, and נר a Lamp, or Candle, as Job 18. which is put out either by wind, or water; ſo the good name and proſperity of the wicked is put out by the wind of his pride, and the water of his voluptuous lying, or covetouſneſſe.

Some by light underſtand knowledge, which bringeth to the righteous great joy, there being nothing in the world wherein he ſo much delighteth, as in the knowledge of the Word, and things of God; and this light is daily increaſed more and more, it being his continuall ſtudy, and meditation: from a little light of the Prophets ſuch increaſe to the dawning of the day, and the ariſing of the Day-ſtarre in their hearts; but the Lamp, or little light which the wicked have, goeth out againe, as is ſhewed in the fooliſh Virgins, and ſo they had no joy of the Bridegroomes coming, but ſorrow for being ſhut out. And they that receive the ſeed of the Word into ſtony ground, have joy, for a time, but perſecution ariſing, this withereth. Pſal. 1. Pſa. 119.89.100 2 Pet. 1. 19. Mat. 25. Mat. 13.

Only by pride cometh contention, but with the well adviſed is wiſdome. This is chiefly ſpoken in caſe of mens conſulting together about truth, or errour, the beſt or worſt way of doing things: if they be proud, that reaſon together, one preferring his Verſ. 10.

his owne opinion, and another his, there muſt needs be ſtrife, brawling, and falling out; but if humble, as the well adviſed, or ſuch as enter into a ſerious conſideration of their owne weakneſſes are, then things are wiſely and peaceably tranſacted.

The proud man thinkes himſelfe ſo wiſe, that he ſcorneth the advice of others, and doth of his owne head whatſoever he luſteth, but by this meanes many contentions ariſe; ſo one ſelf-conceited man becomes the Author of one Hereſie at one time, and another of another, till all the Churches of God are filled with contentions. But he is not wiſe, but fooliſh, that doth ſo, how good a conceit ſoever he hath of his owne wit; he only that is well adviſed, before he attempts the broaching of any new opinion, is wiſe, and he is well adviſed, that ſeekes firſt the approbation of others, that be learned, and godly; wherefore Chriſt often commends humility to his Diſciples, when ſtrife began to ariſe, as the only meanes to quell it, and the like were to be wiſhed now, to take away our ſtrifes.

Verſ. 11. Wealth gotten by vanity ſhall be diminiſhed, but he that gets it by labour ſhall increaſe. This ſentence is plaine, and therefore they that get wealth by Gaming, Stage-playing, or keeping Brothel-houſes, or Tipling-houſes, cannot expect that their wealth ſhould continue; but the honeſt Paines-taker in a lawfull Vocation may, and that inſtead of waſting, it ſhould increaſe more and more, and this hath been often proved true by experience in many.

Verſ. 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart ſicke, but when the deſire cometh, it is a tree of life. Some expound this altogether of the hope of everlaſting life, of which St. Rom. 8. 17. Paul ſpeaketh, ſaying, The creature groaneth, and we alſo having received the firſt fruits of the Spirit, ſigh together, looking for the adoption of the Sonnes of God. Some, becauſe this hope is not ſo deferred, but that it bringeth preſent joy, for the certainty of the thing hoped for underſtand not it, but generally the hope of any good in this world, when the time is come, but yet it cometh not, this makes the heart to pine away; but the deſire accompliſhed in due time, and not deferred, heateth, and reviveth a mans languiſhing ſpirits; But hope of the life to come, ſaith Gregory, erecteth the minde to eternity, and feeleth nothing, that a man ſuffereth in the meane ſeaſon.

Verſ. 13. He that deſpiſeth the Word ſhall be deſtroyed, but he that feareth the Commandement ſhall be rewarded. By the word here is meant, not only the written Word of God, but alſo collations, or doctrines rightly raiſed here-from, by the preachers of the Word; he that deſpiſeth them, and their teaching, and threatning, deſpiſeth the Word of God, and ſhall periſh; but he that trembleth at the Word, Eſa. 66. 2. as Joſiah did, fearing to doe againſt it, ſhall have a reward; ſo much doth God ſtand upon reverence to be given to his Word, that although he that doth ſo, doth but his duty, yet he ſhall be rewarded therefore, with bleſsings here, and hereafter.

Verſ. 14. The way of the wiſe is a fountaine of life, to depart from the ſnares of death. Here by the way, or law of the wiſe, is meant his teaching the Word, or Commandement before ſpoken of, whereby is commended the expoſition before going, againſt the contempt of Gods Miniſters; the Word taught by them is Gods Word, and it keeps from the ſnares of death, which are every where laid to take, and will take them that are not inſtructed, or being inſtructed againſt them, deſpiſe it.

Verſ. 15. Good underſtanding giveth favour, but the way of tranſgreſſours is hard; That is, he who feareth God, hath ſo much favour done him by God, that he is kept from trouble, whereas the wicked by meanes of the many troubles, that come upon them, finde their wayes harſh, and rugged.

Lavater underſtandeth the way of the wicked to be hard, in reſpect of his hard and harſh dealing; but contrariwiſe, the intelligent finde favour both with God, and men, for their love and kindneſſe ſhewed in all their dealings. But he expounds it alſo of the troubles, and miſeries which befal the wicked, the Adulterers, Drunkards, Theeves, Curſers, and common Swearers.

Chryſoſtome followeth that of the meekneſſe, and goodneſſe of the man of underſtanding, derſtanding, whereby all men are drawne to love him, and to deſire his acquaintance, comparing him to the Sun that diſpelleth all fogs and miſts when it ſhineth, and to Chriſt, who reconciled Angels and men together, being before at a great diſtance.

Every prudent man dealeth with knowledge, but a foole layeth open his folly; this is much like unto Chap. 12. 23. but there the wiſe mans concealing his knowledge is commended, here his doing according to wiſe counſell in all things, whereas the foole by his raſh and inconſiderate doings layeth his folly open. that we might learne to doe all things adviſedly, and nothing raſhly, leſt we repent afterwards to our loſſe. Verſ. 16. Note.

A wicked meſſenger falleth into miſchiefe, but a faithfull ambaſſadour is health. The Vulgar, The meſſenger of the wicked: It is true both wayes, hee that is ſent out about matters of truſt by his Prince, if he be unfaithfull, incurreth his diſpleaſure, and ſuffers death ſometimes for it; Againe, the meſſenger of the wicked that is ſent about a wicked buſineſſe ſhall ſuffer for it as the Captaine with his fifty, that were ſent to fetch Eliah, they were conſumed with fire from heaven: and railing Rabſhekah, who was ſent to blaſpheme the living God, and to detract from godly Hezekiah, periſhed both he and his whole Army. So likewiſe ſervants ſent out by their Maſters about their private affaires, if they be unfaithfull and deceive their Maſters, ſhall be found out and ſuffer for it. Lavater inſtanceth in the Popes Legats a Latere, by him ſent out to the Princes of the earth, as is ſhewed Revel 16. But the faithfull Ambaſſadour is health, ſuch was Paul and the reſt of the Apoſtles, becauſe by their meanes ſalvation came to the Nations of the earth, and ſuch are all the faithfull Miniſters of Chriſt, who are ſent by him to preach the Goſpel, whereby faith cometh, and conſequently life and ſalvation for evermore. Verſ. 17. Lavater. 2 Cor. 5 20.

Poverty and ſhame ſhall be to him that refuſeth inſtruction, &c. This is commonly verified, for as he that ſubmitteth to his teachers and governours, and their good inſtructions proveth well, and liveth afterwards in good reputation, ſo he that deſpiſeth them, head-ſtrongly going on in his owne evill wayes, ſhall not proſper, but live in poverty and diſgrace. Verſ. 18.

Let them that be young therefore, and rebell againſt their Parents or governours thinke upon this, and turne obedient, humble and tractable, as knowing this will make moſt for their future good and credit, being otherwiſe in danger, although they bee rich for the preſent, to come into a moſt deſpicable condition. Note.

The deſire accompliſhed is ſweet to the ſoule, but it is abomination to fooles to depart from evill. The Septuagint, The deſires of the godly delight the ſoule, but the workes of the wicked are far from knowledge. Hereby it ſeemeth that the ſeventy Tranſlators underſtood the deſire here ſpoken of to be the deſire of the godly, that is, their deſire univerſally of being indued with all good graces, and to grow herein, and when it is thus with them, and they attaine them accordingly, this is an exceeding great joy to their ſoules; others that doe the ſame things, but not from an heart ſo affected, cannot finde ſuch ſweetneſſe herein. Moreover it may alſo be referred to their deſire, that others by their inſtructions may be converted, for when this is effected, very great is the joy of their ſoules, as St. Paul often ſheweth in his owne example, calling the Corinthians his joy and his crowne. Verſ. 19.

There is another reading of Pagnin. Cajetan, and ſome Hebrewes, The deſire broken, or interrupted, is ſweet, for ſo the word נהיה alſo ſignifieth, and then this is given for the ſenſe, the pleaſure taken in any thing, if it be ſometimes intermitted, is the ſweeter, when a man cometh to it againe; yet the wicked cannot endure to ceaſe from their ſinfull pleaſures at any time, but dwell and abide in them, till that by common uſe they come to be tedious and irkſome to them. But this expoſition doth not arride me; for if it were admitted, here ſhould be a reproofe of wicked perſons for not putting ſpaces betwixt their ſinfull pleaſures, as if uſing them more rarely they were the more juſtifiable. One makes theſe words to cohere with the former Cajetan. Pagnin. Rodolph.

former thus, there he ſaid, that ſhame and poverty ſhall be to them that deſpiſe inſtruction, here yet becauſe that going contrary to inſtruction they doe for the preſent enjoy their deſires, and this is ſweet unto them, he ſaith it is an abomination to them to depart from evill. Verſ. 12. there are the ſame words in effect, The deſire coming is a tree of life. By deſire here, I thinke, that the honour to which it is promiſed, that they ſhall come, that heare inſtruction is meant, it being as if he had ſaid, it is true, yet there appeareth no ſuch difference betwixt the deſpiſer of inſtruction and him that hearkneth to it, but the time ſhall come, when this honour by ſuch expected ſhall come, and when it cometh it ſhall be ſweet and comfortable, God hereby manifeſting himſelfe to be one, that regards obedience and dutifulneſſe in youth, whereby others may be drawne on to doe likewiſe, and no more deſpiſe their teachers; but notwithſtanding all this, fooles are ſo farre from being reformed, that it is an abomination to them to depart from evill; yea, as ſome adde, to ſee any of their companions to depart therefrom, as thinking themſelves by their meanes left the more naked and aſhamed.

Lavater.

Verſ. 20. He that walketh with wiſe men ſhall be wiſe, but the companion of fooles ſhall be deſtroyed; The vulgar ſhall be made like, Hebrew, it is either deſtroyed, or made evill; רוּעַ יֵרוֹעַ, which laſt reading is followed by Muſſet, and is beſt. To walke with the wiſe, is to keep company with the godly, who are able to inſtruct others in the wayes of God, by converſing with, and obſerving their doings and ſayings, a man may become wiſe; but contrariwiſe they are corrupted, that converſe with the evill, as by being amongſt thoſe that are ſicke of any infection, a man is in danger of being infected likewiſe.

Note. Some note here, that it is ſaid, He that walketh with wiſe men, not with a wiſe man, to intimate, that he who deſireth to be wiſe, muſt not onely aſſociate himſelfe with one, but with more wiſe men, this vertue of making wiſe, not working ſo much by ones converſing with one, but there is need of the helping hands of many to effect this. If one wicked man converſeth with one that is godly, the godly man is more in danger of being corrupted, then the wicked likely to be converted, as there is more ſtrength in a little vinegar to make a little honey ſharpe, then in the honey to make the vinegar ſweet.

Some for companion of fooles, have feeding fooles, as alſo the word רֹעֶה ſignifieth, but it anſwereth beſt to the firſt part of the proverb, to hold to the firſt reading.

Verſ. 21. Evill purſueth ſinners, but to the righteous good ſhall be repayed; that is, although a wicked man may long be ſpared, and feeles no evill, yet it certainly followeth after him, as the ſhadow doth the body, and will at length overtake him, and then he ſhall ſuffer for all his wickedneſſe, neither ſhall he be able by any meanes to ſave himſelfe here-from; and in the meane ſeaſon, there is a conſcience within every man, that committeth any notorious wickedneſſe, that purſueth and terrifieth him, even as Hounds doe a timerous Hare by their crying after it. And on the contrary ſide, although the righteous goeth a long time, and ſeeth no good more coming to him then to others, or not ſo much, yet he ſhall finally be repayed for all his labour and conſtant going on in righteouſneſſe (which is inſeparable from charity) in Gods heavenly Kingdome: beſides, he ſhall bee bleſſed even in this world, although for a time it may much frowne upon him, as it did upon Job.

Verſ. 22. A good man leaveth an inheritance to his childrens children, and the wealth of the wicked is laid up for the juſt. Here is further proſecuted the argument in hand before, becauſe he had ſaid, Good ſhall be repayed to the righteous, Now he inlargeth himſelfe further, and ſaith, that the good which ſhall be done to him in this world, ſhall not be floting and fading, ſoone away againe, but continue to him and his poſterity to the third and fourth generation; contrariwiſe, if the wicked getteth goods here, when as it is ſaid, evill ſhall purſue him; theſe his goods ſhall not continue to him, and his, but come by ſome meanes or other into the hands of the juſt, as God hath divers wayes to bring this about: yet the juſt abhor by theft, or deceit, or unjuſt judgement to take his wealth, or any part of it, bee hee never ſo wicked, for then they ſhould not bee juſt.

There is much food in the tillage of the poor, but there is that is deſtroyed for want of judgement. The Vulg. In the fallows of fathers, and in others they are gathered without judgement. Hebr. is ראשים ſignifieth either poore or heads, which latter ſignification the Vulg. following hath it Fathers, and ſome render it Princes; for the next word alſo נסחפה ſignifieth either loſt or deſtroyed, or gathered. But the New Tranſlation doth beſt expreſſe the meaning, which is that a poore man having but a little ground, but well and skilfully tilled, reapeth abundance of increaſe of it, when as others having a farre greater breadth of ground either through want of skill in husbandry, or of induſtry, reap but little profit; hereupon comes the Proverb, A little ground well tilled. Verſ. 23.

Lavater out of Pliny telleth of Furius Creſinus, that he being a poore man, that had a little ground, through his great induſtry had much increaſe, but his neighbours grounds about him bearing little: they complained to the Senate of him, ſaying, that he had bewitched their corne; then he going to the Senate, carried his mattocke and ſpade, and other inſtruments of Husbandry with him, and his daughter, that holpe him work, and ſaid, Loe theſe are my Witch-crafts, whereupon he was acquitted. Lavater.

One Paridius alſo, who had two daughters, having a piece of ground, that was a Vineyard, gave a third part of it to one of them, when ſhe married, and by his good husbandry ſo improved the reſt, that he reaped as much fruit of it as he had before done of the whole, and the like he did, when he had given another part to his other daughter alſo.

He that ſpareth his rod hateth his ſonne, but he that loveth him, chaſteneth him betimes. He had ſpoken before of a fathers leaving an inheritance to his children, Verſe 22. Now becauſe children not well nurtured, if they have an inheritance left them, may ſoone ſquander it all away, he ſpeakes of correction. It is not love, but hatred in thee to forbeare correcting thy ſonne if he doth wickedly, or ſevere correcting of him, if his wickedneſſe deſerves it; for thus Ely was the cauſe of his ſonnes, and families ruine. There is much iniquity in the heart of a childe, but the rod of correction drives it away. Therefore he that loveth him, chaſteneth him betimes, Heb. in the morning, whereby is meant both his care to doe this above all other worldly buſineſſe, becauſe he intends this firſt in the morning, and his freedome from paſſion, when he doth it, and laſtly, his frequent doing of it: his freedome from paſſion, becauſe he correcteth him not preſently when he hath angred him, but having firſt taken his nights reſt before, and his frequent doing it, as need requireth, becauſe that every morning, after he hath deſerved it, he ſpareth him not, but duly chaſtiſeth him. Verſ. 24. Chap. 22.

The righteous eateth to the ſatisfying of his ſoule, but the belly of the wicked ſhall want. Some by the eating of the righteous to ſatisfaction, underſtand that he keeps his ſtomach alwayes good by his temperance, ſo that when he ſits downe to eat, he feeds to ſatisfaction of nature, and is hereby ſtrengthened; but the wicked, that commonly keep no meaſure, at length are ſo weakned by exceſſe in eating and drinking that their bellies want, and bodies decay for want of an appetite. Some, the righteous getteth worldly goods to the ſatisfying of his ſoule, becauſe he is content with that he hath, but the wicked are never ſatisfied, but ſtill have, as it were, as hungry bellies when they moſt abound, and by reaſon of their covetouſneſſe indeed they keepe their bellies empty enough, that they may fill their purſes the more. Some, the juſt have enough, but the wicked ſhall be poore, and want neceſſaries for this life; and this is to bee preferred as the moſt genuine, and true meaning of the words. Verſ. 25.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſ. 1. EVery wiſe woman buildeth her houſe, but the fooliſh plucketh it downe with her hands. By the wiſe womans building her houſe, here is meant her providence, and induſtry to be ſuch, that her husband himſelfe, and his whole family doe all fare the better therefore, and are in the more proſperous condition; as the mid-

Exod. 1. wives of Egypt, who feared God, built their houſes, that is, made them eminent, becauſe God, that liked well of their doings built them houſes, ſo that they did it

1 Sam 25. through Gods bleſſing upon them. And Abigail, the wiſe wife of Nabal, built her houſe, when by her providence her family was preſerved from ruine, and ſhe was afterwards promoted to be wife to King David.

But the fooliſh plucks it down, when either by her wickedneſſe the whole family is corrupted, as by Jezabel, who was the ruine of her husband Ahab, and of all his ſonnes, or by her fooliſh, and prodigall waſting, the family decayeth and becomes poore.

It is obſerved by ſome, that a woman new married to a man of old, lived in her father in-laws houſe, till ſhe had gotten ſo much, as wherewith to build her an houſe, and then ſhe removed thither, and to this it ſeemeth here to be alluded. When God made woman at the firſt, hee is ſaid to have built her, for ſo the word בנה there uſed ſignifieth; now as ſhe was built, ſo ſhe muſt be a builder by governing well, and ordering all things in the houſe for the beſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh ſay-

1 Tim 5.14 ing, I will that young widows marry, beare children, and guide the houſe. And both Ariſtotle and Demoſthenes ſay, that all things in the houſe ought to be cared for, and ordered by the woman, all things abroad by the man. And it is to be noted here, that Heb. two nownes of the plurall number, wiſe women are uſed, but a verb of the ſingular, to intimate, that they doe all, as one, build their houſes, and ſhe is a fooliſh, no wiſe woman that doth not. Of all others Deborah, and Heſter were moſt famous for their building, not of private houſes onely, but of States and whole Kingdomes, raiſing them up againe, when they were dangerouſly decayed: For the fooliſh woman, ſaid to plucke downe her houſe with her owne hands,

Note. The note of one is good, that her coſtlineſſe in rings, and bracelets, and jewels, and chaines, and apparell, and other implements without end, to ſet forth her pride, is one, and that none of the leaſt meanes, to plucke it downe, and her caring more to keepe her hands, and body fine, then to keep up her houſe.

Verſ. 2. He that walketh in his uprightneſſe, feareth the Lord, but he that is perverſe in his wayes, deſpiſeth him. Becauſe much is ſpoken of the feare of God, both in this and other bookes of holy Scripture, it is here ſhewed, who feareth God indeed, and who not, viz. He that walketh uprightly, eſchewing evill, and do-

Gen. 17.1. ing good from a good heart, not in hypocriſie; as Abraham was bidden to walke before God, and to be upright, and David is often praiſed for this; but he that either liveth in any ſinne, or doth good diſſemblingly for his owne ends, and not for Gods glory, walkes perverſely, and inſtead of fearing God, deſpiſeth him. It is not a mans ſaying that he feareth God, that will juſtifie him from being a deſpiſer of him, if he walkes contrary to his will.

The Vulgar, He that feareth God, and walkes uprightly, is deſpiſed of him that goeth in an infamous way, and ſo the word him is taken to be meant of him, that feares God, whom the wicked deſpiſe, as counting him moſt fooliſh, not of God, as indeed it is. Neither will the Hebrew beare this reading, becauſe therein, as in other Proverbs, there is an oppoſition in the latter part to the former, whereas in this reading there is none, and ſo it makes the letter ו redundant.

Verſ. 3. In the mouth of the fooliſh is a rod of pride, but the lips of the wiſe ſhall preſerve them; That is, a fooliſh man is like unto him, that hath a rod in his hand, and is herewith ſtriking ſuch as come in his way, but ſhall himſelfe be well beaten at the laſt for this his proud, and diſgracefull ſmiting of others; for even ſo he that with his tongue is raſh to ſpeake things that he ought not, as through his pride ſcorning to have his tongue kept under by any man, ſhall ſmart for this, as with a rod.

rod, when he ſhall be puniſhed for his licentiouſneſſe of ſpeech; of ſuch kinde of men David complaineth, ſaying, They ſay, our tongues are our owne, who ſhall controle us? But the lips of the juſt preſerve them; they are ſo circumſpect and wary, whereſoever they come, that they forbeare ſpeaking any thing that may offend, or exaſperate others againſt them; and in caſe that they be provoked, yet ſo diſcreetly, and moderately they ſpeake to all men, that they paſſe on in ſafety, whereſoever they come. Pſal. 12.

Gregory underſtands this of a Preacher, given altogether to ſpeake againſt the vices of his people, and to reprove them ſharpiy therefore, but never commendeth their vertues, or good things in them; And Jerome, of a Father, or Maſter, or Lord, who with much pride and diſdaine ſpeakes to his ſubjects, or ſervants, or children; but the righteous, in meekneſſe, and humility; but I reſt in the firſt. Greg. in mor. Hieron.

Where no Oxen are, the crib is cleane, but much increaſe is by the ſtrength of the Oxe; That is, where good husbandry is neglected, a famine, and ſcarcity of corne enſueth, but where it is uſed there is commonly plenty. And becauſe Preachers are compared to Oxen, it is alſo meant, where Preachers are not, there is a famine in reſpect of Spirituall food, mens ſoules are as it were hunger-ſtarved, but full fed, where plenty of preaching is. Verſ. 4. 1 Cor. 9.

A ſcorner ſeeketh wiſdome, and findeth it not; but wiſdome is eaſie to him that underſtandeth: That is, he that hath a long time ſlighted living in the feare of God, and grace, which is neceſſary to ſalvation, although afterwards he ſeekes grace, whereby he may be ſaved, That is, the grace of repentance, and remiſſion of his ſins, yet he findes it not, as Eſau by long ſlighting the Birth-right, at length loſt the Bleſsing pertaining thereunto; but to him that giveth himſelfe to learne, and to fear God betimes, who is the true underſtanding man, this grace is eaſie, it is readily granted to him to be truly penitent, and ſo to be forgiven, and to have aſſurance of his ſalvation. Verſ. 6.

Some by the Scorner underſtand him, that thinkes himſelfe ſo wiſe, that he contemneth all teaching, that comes from others: ſuch ſeeke wiſdome, but finde it not, becauſe they reject the helps granted them by God to attaine unto it; but he that underſtands his owne weakneſſe, and how eaſily he may be deceived, if he be led by his owne ſence, and therefore humbles himſelfe to be taught by others, ſhall eaſily attaine unto it. Lyra.

Some, he that ſpends his young time in jeaſting, never applying his minde to any thing ſerious, he ſhall afterwards ſeeke wiſdome, but in vaine; I preferre the two former, taking it to be againſt both the ſelf-conceited, and ſuch as delay the time of repentance; they are, as one ſaith, like unto Hounds, which by a ſtrong wind blowing, loſe the ſent of the Hare, and then they may ſeeke to finde it againe, but all in vaine: A notion worthy to be thought upon by all, that deferre their converſion, the time ſhall come when they ſhall ſeeke, but not finde, although they be never ſo earneſtly deſirous. Note.

Goe from the preſence of a fooliſh man, when thou perceiveſt not in him the lips of knowledge. Againſt being the companion of fooles, ſee before, chap. 13. 20. now the ſame is repeated againe with another reaſon, viz. His fooliſh and foule mouth makes him unworthy to be kept company withall; neither can a good man beare his evill language, but it muſt needs offend him. Verſ. 7.

The wiſdome of the prudent is to underſtand his way, but the folly of fooles is deceit; That is, the thing to which the wiſe are moſt intent, is to underſtand in every thing what is well pleaſing to God, and right, and by what meanes he may moſt benefit himſelfe, and others here, and walke ſo, as that in the end he may be ſaved; but fooliſh wicked men are not intent to any ſuch thing, and if they make any ſuch ſhew of ſeeking, it is nothing but deceit, all their coming to heare, and inquire after the right way is, not to walke therein, but only to make a ſhew before men; yet herein their folly appeares, becauſe God ſeeth with what minde they doe it, and will reward them accordingly, neither ſhall their diſſembling in the end doe them any good, but rather hurt; becauſe feigned holineſſe is double iniquity, ſaith Auguſtine. Verſ. 8. Simulata ſanctitas duplex iniquitas.

Fooles make a mocke at ſin, but among the righteous there is favour. The word rendred ſinne here is חטאת ſignifying either ſinne, or a ſacrifice for ſinne, as the word is uſed, Eſa. 53. He ſhall make his ſoule a ſacrifice for ſinne.

Lavater. And Lavater hereby underſtandeth the Sacrifice of Chriſt, at which heathen fooles make a mocke, ſaying, It is likely, that God could finde no other way to Redeeme man, but by the death of his only beloved Sonne; or elſe they mocke at ſinne, that is, they count it a light matter to ſinne, not worthy ſorrowing therefore, but of rejoycing to recount, or to ſee it acted; or becauſe לוץ alſo ſignifieth to interpret; they interpret ſinne, the meaning may be, They make a favourable conſtruction of their owne, and the ſinnes of others, that be their conſorts, but an harſh one of the ſinnes of thoſe that they love not, which are better then they, by ſetting their leſſer ſinnes upon the tenter. But among the righteous there is favour; That is, if they fall out one with another, their mutuall love and good will is ſuch yet, that they are ſoone reconciled againe; or when the wicked foole makes a mocke at ſinne, they humble themſelves, and mourne for their owne ſinnes, and for the ſinnes of others, and ſo they come againe into Gods favour; as the foole, that is ſo lightly affected at them never doth, nor ſhall; or, the righteous have a complacency one with another, as the word רצון ſignifieth, and like well of the ſame good things, being delighted when they are acting them, as the wicked are, when they be acting of ſinne, and laughing at it.

Cajetan. Cajetan the foole interpreteth ſinne; That is, ever maketh the worſt of other mens ſinnes; but amongſt the righteous is as favourable an interpretation made of things done amiſſe by others, as may be.

Rodolph. Rodolph, The foole ſpeaketh ſinne, to the offending of the eares of the godly, but gracious ſpeeches are amongſt the righteous.

Aquila. Aquila renders it, Sinne will illude the foole; That is, whereas they hope to ſpeed well at the laſt, although they live long in ſinne, they ſhall be deceived, for ſinne will bring them to confuſion; but the righteous, to whom favour and all good is promiſed, ſhal truly finde favour.

Laſtly, ſome, the foole mocketh at ſacrificing for ſinne, and therefore offereth no ſuch ſacrifice, and ſo liveth in Gods diſpleaſure; but the righteous, ſacrificing as God hath commanded, hath favour and reconciliation with God; of all theſe, I preferre that which goeth upon rejoycing, and laughing at ſinne; and contrariwiſe, the endeavours of the juſt to ſpeake, and doe ſo, as that God may be there-with pleaſed, yet he ſhall not erre that followeth any of them.

Verſ. 10. The heart knoweth his owne bitterneſſe, and a ſtranger intermedleth not with his joy; That is, the griefes or joyes of mens hearts are knowne only to themſelves, not to others; much like unto this is the ſaying of the Apoſtle, No man knoweth the things of a man, but the ſpirit that is in him.

Lavater.

1 Cor. 2. 11

Muffet. Muffet, No man by his mirth and jeaſts can make that heart to rejoyce, that is wounded, and troubled.

Cajetan. Cajetan, This is ſpoken of a wiſe man, it being meant, that if he hath bitterneſſe of heart, he keepeth it to himſelfe, and ſheweth it not to others; and likewiſe if he hath joy; as it is ſaid of Socrates, That no man could ever ſee any alteration of his countenance, for things falling out ill, or well unto him; and his ſaying was, Reaſon muſt be put upon ſorrow, as a Breaſt-plate upon the breaſt, to hide it.

Socrates.

Seneca. And Seneca ſaith, Admit not Griefe, if thou canſt keepe it off, if not, hide it.

Gregor. in Mor. Gregory, The heart knoweth its owne bitterneſſe; That is, knowne to every one is his griefe for his ſins, but he that is a ſtranger to ſuch ſorrow, ſhall not partake of the joy thereof, when he that mourneth ſhall be comforted.

To the ſame effect alſo Beda; Others, when a man hath been in ſorrow, and miſery, and hath met with none to condole it with him, in caſe that he be reſtored to joy, he will call for none to rejoyce with him, it being a common thing amongſt men, he that hath not borne a part with me by ſympathie in my ſorrow, ſhall beare none in my joy. This is true, chiefly touching Chriſt, If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall be glorified with him.

Rom. 8. 16.

The

The houſe of the wicked ſhall be over-throwne, but the tabernacle of the juſt ſhall flouriſh. By houſe here underſtand Palaces, and ſtrong built houſes, which a man would thinke ſhould ſtand many Ages, by tabernacles, poore habitations, or cottages; thoſe ſhall decay, and come to ruine, theſe ſhall wax more illuſtrious. Verſ. 11.

Beda by houſes underſtandeth the wickeds ſetling of themſelves in this world, as wherein, and in the good things hereof they place their felicity; and by tabernacles, the account which the righteous make of their being here, but as Pilgrimes, or, Souldiers in Tents, the happy permanent being which they expect, being in Heaven; thoſe ſhall be deſtroyed by death, but theſe changed from temporary habitations to everlaſting; both theſe are good, and cannot well be disjoyned, becauſe godlineſſe hath the promiſe of this, and the life to come. Beda. 2 Cor. 5. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

There is a way that is right before a man, but the end thereof is the way of death; That is, ſome ſinfull way wherein he walketh ſeemeth right unto him, becauſe not only he, but moſt men goe therein, but in the end he ſhall finde it to be the way to everlaſting death; for ſo our Lord hath taught us, ſaying. Broad is the way that leads to death, and there be many that walke in it. But becauſe of the pleaſures, and profits, and worldly honours that are herein, it ſeemeth right and good. Verſ. 12.

The way alſo to Life, by holding Juſtification by workes, ſeemeth to many to be right, and other ſuperſtitious wayes, becauſe all Chriſtians generally have moſt anciently walked herein; but they will in the end prove the way to death, becauſe Chriſt only is the right way, and by the merits of his Death only, to hold Juſtification attainable, and to ſerve God in Spirit and in Truth, not with locall or outward formall worſhip, which he hath ſhewed ſhould be no more under the New Teſtament be done.

Thus Lavater; but ſome by this way ſeeming right, underſtand the way of proſperity of wicked men, becauſe all things ſucceed well unto them, and they enjoy plenty here, they thinke that they are in a good way, although they live moſt wickedly, but in the end it will prove evill and deadly; ſo likewiſe Pſal. 49. Pſal. 73. Job 21. &c. and this teacheth thoſe in thoſe times, that argue from their good ſucceſſe, that their way is good, although againſt the Word of God.

Even in laughter the heart is ſorrowfull, and the end of that mirth is heavineſſe; That is, there are ſome who have heavie hearts, yet outwardly they feigne mirth, but they cannot alwayes doe ſo, for in the end ſorrow and heavineſſe altogether ſhall over-whelme them; which is true in thoſe, that having an accuſing conſcience ſeeme to ſmother it, by going into merry company; this continueth ſtill notwithſtanding, and if no better meanes be uſed to qualifie this ſorrow, the end will prove moſt lamentable; therefore when it is thus with thee, remember thy ſinne, and repent, and ſeeke to God for pardon, and ſo the end ſhall be joy.

Some ſay, that the ſame is meant here, which Chriſt ſaith afterwards. Woe to you that laugh now, for yee ſhall waile and weepe; as if it had been ſaid, The laughter of wicked men is not to be looked at, as mirth to be envyed by them, that lead not ſo merry a life, for there is ſorrow of heart coming to ſuch, although it be not yet ſeene, and in the end it will appeare to be ſo, when their laughter ſhall be turned into ſorrow for evermore.

Some, there is a mixture of joy and ſorrow in this life, which to thoſe that improve it not aright, to be weaned from the love of the world, proveth in fine all heavineſſe. So Auguſtine ſaith, that God mingleth the bitterneſſe of ſorrowes with joyes, that we might not be too much affected herewith, and have our minds kept down to things below, and not lifted up to things above. Auguſt. Hom. 9. in mat.

Lavater thinkes, that it is hereby meant, that every one ſhall be rewarded according to his doings, he that ſlides back from good to evill, ſhall be rewarded with evill; but the good man perſevering in good, ſhall accordingly receive good, Lavater.

expoun-

expounding מעיו from it, that is, this his goodneſſe; and this doth ſo well agree, and the word beares that reading ſo well, that we may reſt in it, and ſeeke no more expoſitions.

Verſ. 15. Ambroſ. De Offic. The ſimple beleeveth every word, but the prudent man looketh well to his goings. The vulg. renders it innocent; whereupon Ambroſe underſtands him that meaneth well, and becauſe he thinkes that others doe ſo to, he beleeveth their ſayings, whereby he is many times circumvented; but it is ſimple, oppoſed to prudent, which is never in a good ſence, and therefore it is commonly taken as ſpoken of one ignorant, and voyd of the wiſdome required, he is ready to beleeve, and to be carried away with every blaſt of new doctrin, as the Weather-cock with the wind; but the prudent will underſtand his way, for ſo it is, Hebr. and it is meant the way that is byanother propounded to him to turne unto, he wil firſt ſee good ground, and reaſon out of the Word of God, otherwiſe he is not to be moved; and if they, that now adayes are turned to ſo many new wayes, had been prudent, they would never have done ſo, to the cauſing of ſo many Schiſmes in the Church, and the hazzarding of their owne ſoules.

Note.

Verſ. 16 A wiſe man feareth, and departeth from evill, but the foole rageth, and is confident. Here the difference is further ſhewed betwixt a wiſe man and a foole, the one feareth to take new wayes, for which he ſeeth no ground, or warrant, and ſo is kept from evils that others fall into; but the other, as mad to be in ſuch wayes, is angry at thoſe that feare, and turneth into them with all confidence, and aſſurance, not doubting but he is right, and all others that goe not with him wrong. And the word התעבר rendred angry, or raging, cometh of עבר to paſſe, and according to this ſignifieth, maketh himſelfe to paſſe, boldly, and confidently, or thruſteth on himſelf, as blind Bayard, fearing nothing in his new way.

Verſ. 17. He that is ſoone angry dealeth fooliſhly, and a man of wicked devices is hated. Anger blindes the minde, being as it were a ſhort madneſſe, and therefore the Cholerick haſty man muſt needs doe in many things fooliſhly, and procure much hatred to himſelfe therefore; but here are rather two ſorts compared together, the haſty man called in Hebrew, ſhort noſed, and he that concealeth his anger, not breaking out preſently, but deviſing how to be revenged; the one of theſe doth fooliſhly, but the other, as malicious, is hated of all men; for he that is ſoone angry, when he hath vented his wrath, is oft-times ſoone friends againe, but he that meditates revenge, is commonly implacable, a very Satan.

Verſ. 18. The ſimple inherite folly, but the prudent are crowned with knowledge; That is, they that care not for divine knowledge, and ſuch as pertaineth to ſalvation, ſhal have folly and ſinne with them, as an inheritance, from which they can never be removed, and conſequently the reward of their folly, which is the fruit of this inheritance, Death and Damnation for evermore; for of Death, as the fruit of ſinne, Rom. 6.22.23 the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, ſaying, What fruit had yee of thoſe things whereof yee are now aſhamed? And againe, the wages of ſinne is death. On the contrary ſide, the prudent weare knowledge, as a Crowne, eſteeming of nothing ſo much as it, and having the higheſt honour hereby, as Joſeph in Egypt; and finally, they ſhall for this be crowned in the Kingdome of Heaven with a Crown incorruptible.

Verſ. 19. The evill bow before the good, and the wicked at the gate of the righteous; That is, the righteous ſometimes by Gods bleſsing come to great honour even in this world, ſo that they who before thought themſelves as good, or better, come and bow unto them, as Joſephs Brethren did to him, and the people to Mordecai, coming into the ſame favour with Ahaſhuerus, that Haman had been in, to whom all men bowed, and Pharaoh expreſly commanded it to be proclaimed, where Joſeph came, Abrech, bow the knee; and Revel. 3. 9. I will make them to come and worſhip at thy feet, ſaith the Lord to Philadelphia. And his bowing at the Gate ſheweth yet more, viz. the great poverty that they ſhall fall into, when the juſt ſhall be rich, ſo that they ſhall begge at their Gates; and this is not without coherence with the former words, ver. 18. For this is the folly that the ſimple inherite in this world, and the crowne of the righteous; they have beggery, as an inheritance, theſe wealth, and worldly dignity, as their crowne.

The poore is hated even of his owne neighbour, but the rich hath many friends; that is, either he hateth to have familiarity with him, as being too ſordid, or he preſſeth upon him, and troubleth him ſo much for food, and other things, that he beggeth daily of him, that he is odious to him; but the rich is ſought to daily: if there be any pretence of alliance or knowledge of him, there are that will frequent him, and to get his favour, and benefit by him, humour him in all things: But theſe, ſaith Alan. are the iterals of Princes, Palatine dogs, the artificers of flattery, the forgers of praiſe, the potters of falſehood, who ſound into the ears of the rich with a loud ſound trumpet of praiſe, who that they may draw forth gifts, anoint their heads with the oyle of flattery. To the ſame effect almoſt with this is the common ſaying, Verſ. 20. Alan.

Dum fueris felix multos numerabis amicos:

And this verſe cohereth alſo with the former, the wicked ſhall bow to the righteous; that is, being by poverty forced, and this his poverty ſhall make him odious, no man caring now to make friendſhip with him, as being moſt baſe and contemptible; yet it followeth,

He that deſpiſeth his neighbour, ſinneth, but he that hath mercy on the poore, is happy; which is, as if he had ſaid, Although this be the common manner of the world to deſpiſe the poore, but to magnifie the rich, yet this is no warrant for any juſt man to doe ſo, for it is a ſinne. A man muſt not be deſpiſed for his wickedneſſe, but not ſimply for his poverty; yea, although he be thy enemy, thou muſt love him, relieve him in his need. And he that doth ſo, is bleſſed, becauſe ſuch ſhew themſelves children of God. Verſ. 21. Matth. 5. 45.

Doe not they erre that deviſe evill? but mercy and truth ſhall be to them, that deviſe good. Here by deviſing good, is meant ſtudying, how with his worldly goods he may doe good to ſuch as need, ſuch ſhall be repayed with mercy, and truth from God, who will not faile to be true of his word, but as he hath made many gracious promiſes to ſuch, ſo he will undoubtedly performe them. They that deviſe evill, are ſuch, as ſtudy how to deceive others, that out of them they may inrich themſelves: this is a foule, and dangerous errour, and going out of the way of mercy into the way of dreadfull judgements. Verſ. 22.

In all labour there is profit, but the talke of the lips tendeth onely to penury; that is, he who ſpeakes much of good husbandry, and talkes, how all things ſhould be done for the beſt, but is idle, and doth it not himſelfe, ſhall be poore, when the Paines-taker ſhall be rich, profit coming in of his labour; yet, as Lavater noteth, this is to be underſtood, through Gods bleſſing, ſought by daily prayer, becauſe otherwiſe a man may labour in vaine, as the Pſalmiſt teacheth. And there is the like reaſon of labouring to get learning, he that talketh of learned men, and bookes, but is not ſtudious, hath a ſoule empty of learning for all this. Verſ. 23. Lavater. Pſal. 127.

The crowne of the wiſe is their riches, but the fooliſhneſſe of fools is folly; that is, wiſe men having gotten riches juſtly by abour, as was before ſaid, Verſ. 23. purchaſe to themſelves honour by rightly uſing them to charity, and otherwiſe doing good; for thus riches are turned, as it were, into a Crowne, it being hereby ſhewed, that the poſſeſſour of them is a Maſter, and not a ſervant to them, as the covetous, which hold them faſt, and do no good therewith; or, as another hath it, a rich man that is wiſe, is magnified by all men, as a King, and hearkened unto, and obeyed; but if he be a foole, let him be never ſo rich, he is not accounted of; all men ſay, he is rich indeed, but he is a foole: And all thoſe rich men are ſuch, as ſpend their riches in ſumptuous buildings, gorgeous apparel, delicious fare, whores, and hawkes, and hounds, but apply not themſelves to excell others in wiſdome, whereby they may helpe the better to governe the Commonwealth, and their owne families in the feare of God, being alſo hoſpitable, and charitable. And riches are ſaid to be the crowne of the wiſe, becauſe if a man be poore, although very wiſe, he is not regarded; but in caſe that he be eminent for worldly wealth alſo, which ſhould make all rich men to labour to be wiſe alſo, and learned, and not Verſ. 24. Lavater. Muffet. Note.

not ignorant, like the common ſort, and to this end to read and ſtudy much, as having time and leaſure enough, if they well conſider, that without thus doing, their riches are to them but like a fooles coat and bauble, making their folly the more notorious, as being by their wealth ſet up on high, and the eyes of all men upon them; and as Origen ſaith, inſtead of making them wiſe, make them mad through pride that hereby growth upon them.

Origen.

Verſ. 25. For Verſ. 25. it differeth little from Verſ. 5. onely it is ſhewed, what good cometh by a true witneſſe, he delivereth ſoules; that is, when by falſe accuſation men are in danger to be condemned to dye, true witneſſes by their teſtimony given for them, ſave them.

Lavater. This alſo is by Lavater extended to Preachers of the Goſpel, becauſe Chriſt ſaith, Yee ſhall be my witneſſes, and hereunto we may add, 1 Joh. 1. That which we have heard and ſeen, we teſtifie; and I cannot ſee, but that holy Martyrs may here be brought in alſo, for both Preachers by teaching, and converting to the truth, and Martyrs by ſealing it with their bloud, worke mightily upon others to converſion and ſalvation of their ſoules. And if by a falſe witneſſe ſpeaking lyes, we alſo underſtand teachers of hereſies and errours, the Scripture very well agreeth, becauſe it is ſaid, Such as love not the truth, God giveth over to ſtrong deluſions to beleeve lyes.

Verſ. 26. In the feare of the Lord is ſtrong confidence, and his children ſhall have a place of refuge. Muffet joyneth this, and the next Verſe together, ſaying, That herein the feare of the Lord is commended for two things:

Muffet.

1. It makes a man ſtrong through his confidence in God to beare any ſufferings.

2. From hence, as from a fountaine, floweth abundance of good things unto him, for which he ſaith, that it is a well of life, and delivereth from the ſnares of death.

Verſ. 27.

Greg. Mor. l. 5. c. 13. Notable is the ſaying of Gregory in ſetting forth the ſtrong confidence of thoſe that feare God. In the way of God, it is begun at feare, that a man may come to fortitude, for as in the way of the world boldneſſe cauſeth fortitude, ſo in the way of God, boldneſſe brings forth weakneſſe, and as in the way of the world feare cauſeth weakneſſe, ſo in the way of the Lord, fortitude, becauſe our mindes doe ſo much the more ſtrongly deſpiſe the terrours of temporalls, by how much the more truly they ſubmit through feare to him, that is the Authour thereof, which being ſetled in the fear of God, ſee nothing without to be feared, becauſe that while they are joyned through feare to him, the Maker of all, they are by a kinde of power elevated above them all. And his children ſhall have a place of refuge. Here by children ſome underſtand the children of feare, ſome the children of God, and ſome of him that feareth God, which I rather aſſent unto, becauſe the man that feareth God is commonly comforted by this, that God will be both for him and his children; ſo here, he ſhall have ſtrong confidence, and his children alſo that feare God, by recounting in what great favour with God the father was. The feare of God is a well of life; that which is here called, the feare of the Lord, Chap. 13. 14. is called the law of the wiſe, where ſee the Expoſition.

Verſ. 28. In the multitude of people is the Kings honour, but in the want of people, the deſtruction of the Prince. This is ſpoken to make Kings carry themſelves ſo, as to have the love of their people, that is, uſing all love and courteſie towards them: For who would not keepe their hearts faſt towards him, upon whom their honour and ſafety ſtands?

Plato. It was never knowne, ſaith Plato, that any King periſhed for want of money but of friends. A multitude of ſubjects is an honour to a King, becauſe ſo many conſent together to make him their King, herein acknowledging him worthy to reigne over them, and becauſe by their helpe he getteth victories over his enemies, which make him glorious. But by multitude we muſt not underſtand onely their numbers, but theſe multiplyed and increaſed in wealth, and ſo both made the more magnanimous, and able to ſupply him with tribute, when need requires.

But

But through want of ſubjects thus qualified and knit to him in love, he is deſtroyed, for want of ſuch as have wealth and magnanimity, by foreigne enemies invading him, and for want of love, through inſurrections in his owne Kingdome.

He that is ſlow to wrath, is of great underſtanding, but the haſty of ſpirit exalteth folly. Something to the ſame effect of the laſt clauſe hath beene already ſaid, Verſ. 17. for being ſlow to wrath, ſee alſo Jam. 1. 19. Be ſwift to heare, ſlow to ſpeake, ſlow to wrath; that ſuch are wiſe appeareth, becauſe they have all the properties required in a wiſe man, whom as Valerius ſaith, the Ancients were wont to repreſent by three heads, of a Dogge, a Lion, and an Eagle; Of a Dogge for memory; Of a Lion for his ſtout doing, as the preſent caſe requireth; And of an Eagle for his fore-ſight of things to come, as an Eagle ſeeth things afarre off: And theſe three are ſaid by Ariſtotle to be ſloweſt to wrath of any other creatures, and ſooneſt pacified; for the Lion, as he writeth, although in the purſuit of a man, if he falleth downe before it, ſpareth him; and the Eagle is of all fowles moſt eaſily tamed; and a Dogge, for the property before-ſaid, is like unto a Lion according to Pliny. He then that is likewiſe ſlow to anger, and ready to bee againe pacified, is aptly ſet forth by theſe three, who amongſt them have all the parts required in a wiſe man, viz. Memory, and Sagacity, whereby to fore-ſee and gather what is to be done, and courage to doe accordingly, when the time cometh. Verſ. 29. Valerius.

A ſound heart is the life of the fleſh, but envy is rottenneſſe to the bones. A ſound heart, that is, a mind quiet, and not vexed at things falling out ill, makes the whole body the more healthfull, but that which vexeth either at his owne croſſes, or at the proſperity of others, is deſtruction to the body, as when it is rotten fleſh, and bones, and all. Some underſtand it of ſuch as have a good heart towards others, being affected towards them, as they ought with joy for their welfare, and ſorrow for their miſery, and of ſuch as contrariwiſe are ill affected; the firſt argueth one to be a lively member of the ſame myſticall body, of which Chriſt is the head, the other one dead and rotten. Gregory expounds this of all things weakly performed outwardly, becauſe the fleſh is weake, yet a good heart puts life hereinto, and it is accepted of before God, as if done in the beſt manner; but contrariwiſe things ſtrongly done from an envious and malicious heart, are rotten and ſtinking, like rotten bones, which are oft ſpoken of to ſet forth ſtrength, which doth well further ſet forth the ſpirituall meaning of this Proverb. Verſ. 30. Greg. Paſt. cur. pars 3. admon. 6.

He that oppreſſeth the poore, reproacheth his Maker, but he that honoureth him, hath mercy on the poore. A poore godly man is the image of God, and therefore the wrong that is done to him in word or deed, redounds to God. 2. He is more the image of God, as Lyra ſaith, then a rich man, becauſe man was made naked, when after Gods image, and not apparrelled in goodly cloaths. 3. He is a member of Chriſt, and one with him. 4. God hath made him ſo, and therefore to deſpiſe him for his poverty, is to deſpiſe God. 5. God hath made him the rich mans brother, being a common Father to them both, witneſſe thoſe words in the Lords prayer, which both the rich and poor ſay, Our Father which art in heaven. He therefore honoureth God that ſheweth him mercy, whoſe creature and image, and member he is. Verſ. 31. Lyra.

The wicked is driven away in his wickedneſſe, but the righteous hath hope in his death; that is, the wicked ſometime is for wickedneſſe baniſhed out of his Country, yea, all the wicked Jewes were ſerved ſo, being carried into Aſſyria and Caldea. And he that is ſo, when he dyeth, and deſireth to enter into heaven, he ſhall be driven away with Goe ye curſed, &c. but then the righteous hath ſure and certaine hope of being received into that moſt bleſſed place; if any other, that hath alwayes lived in ſin hath hope firſt or laſt, his hope is but vaine. Verſ. 32.

Wiſdome reſts in his heart that hath underſtanding, but that which is in a fooles heart is made known. See the like to this Chap. 13. 16. Verſ. 33.

Righteouſneſſe exalteth a Nation, but ſin is a reproach to any people. Then doth a Nation flouriſh, when governed by good Lawes, vice being ſuppreſſed, and Verſ. 34.

and rooted out, but it is infamous in all places, when notorious ſinnes abound, and it is in the way of coming to a contemptible condition to be derided and mocked at by every man.

Verſ. 35. A Kings favour is towards a wiſe ſervant, but his wrath againſt him, that cauſeth ſhame; that is, when he ſeeth his ſervant doe wiſely in that which he imployeth him about, as being for his honour, he beares a ſpeciall favour to him therefore; but if he doth fooliſhly, whereby he hath diſhonour, he is full of wrath, and diſpleaſure at him, as being much aſhamed of his doings. And that which is ſpoken of a Kings ſervant is true touching any other mans, to acquit himſelfe well he muſt not onely ſerve his maſter with his body, but alſo with his minde, being provident, and wiſely going about his affaires to doe all for the beſt, as Abrahams ſervant did, when hee went to fetch a wife for Iſaac from Padan-aram, *Gen.*24.

CHAP. XV.

Verſ. 1. A Soft anſwer turneth away wrath, but grievous words ſtirre up ſtrife: Even as lightning pierceth the hard bones, but hurteth not the ſoft fleſh, and as a Canon ſhot againſt a banke of earth, ſhattereth it not, but a ſtone wall it doth, ſo fierce words coming from fury are appeaſed by gentle and reverent ſpeeches lowly uttered; but contrariwiſe, as ſteele and flint-ſtone being ſmitten together, there come forth ſparkles of fire; ſo clamorous and virulent ſpeeches being oppoſed to the like, the fire of ſtrife is kindled and groweth into a flame; for the furious ſeeing the mildneſſe of another, againſt whom he is ſo fierce, beginneth to be aſhamed, and ſo he is as greene wood, or water to fire, ſtopping it from going any further; but two haſty harſh-ſpoken perſons meeting together, as fire meeting with more fire raging the more.

Verſ. 2. The tongue of the wiſe uſeth knowledge aright, but the mouth of fooles powreth out fooliſhneſſe, that is, ſuch conſider both the matter and manner of ſpeaking, and order their ſpeeches accordingly, ſo that they carry a grace with

Col. 4. 6. them in the eares of the hearers, as being ſeaſoned with ſalt, and ſo, ſweet and ſavoury. But whilſt fooles ſpeake regarding neither matter nor manner, they powre out folly, as one ſaith, Flumen verborum, guttam ſapientiæ, a whole floud of words, but a drop of wiſdome.

Lavater. And this Lavater noteth to be intimated in the word נבע to flow forth, as out of a fountaine, the ſame things being often repeated moſt vainly, no regard being had to that which is ſaid by thoſe that are wiſer, through the high conceit that he hath of his owne underſtanding.

The Vulgar for uſeth knowledge aright, hath adorneth knowledge, and the word הטוב Hebr. ſignifieth maketh good, or pleaſing, or gracious, which is the ſame in effect with adorning. Here then after gentle and meeke ſpeaking, Verſe 1. is commended unto us, and ſpecially to teachers ornate ſpeaking, with as much brevity as may be, not ruſticall and ſordid; for the foole is taxed for powring out folly, implying his loquacity and ruſticity.

1 Cor. 2. It is true, the Preacher ought not to ſpeake in the inticing words of mans eloquence, but in the plaine evidence and demonſtration of the Spirit; but as Auguſt. 4. de doct. Chr. Auguſt. ſaith, thy Oration muſt not be ſo naked, as to be frigid, nor ſo incult, as to be ſordid, but gravely adorned, that it may not diſpleaſe; yet he ſaith, the preacher ſo taketh ornaments of ſpeech unto him, as that he careth not for them, being carried more in uſing them by the ardency of affection, then by the induſtry of the tongue: Even as a valiant ſouldier taketh guilded armour, but regardeth not ſo much this adorning, as the ſtrength thereof, and the ſharpneſſe of his ſword to pierce and wound the enemy withall.

Gregor. Nazian. And Nazianzen, Knowledge is not to be painted like an Harlot, but adorned as a Matron; and another, ſpeech being but as the Apparrel to the body, that which is

is decent, is to be pudon, but it is not to be over-cloathed, to make it goe the more heavily: knowledge is a light coming in at a Glasse window, which if it be much daubed with painting, is dimmed. For the next words, the foole poureth out foolishnesse; Herein it is alluded to a violent storme of raine, which doth not so much water, and make the earth to fructifie, as wash it away, and the Corne sowne therein, whereas the distilling raine goeth to the root in a gentle manner, and refresheth all things; so a divine Oration wisely composed, and uttered, enters into the hearts of the Hearers, although uttered in fewer words, more significant, and well set together, when as the long declamation of a Foole uttered fast in many words, takes little or no effect in the hearers. A thing to be greatly noted for our direction, in teaching to keep us from this errour, into which many run through prepostorous zeale, that we may not make knowledge despicable, by so foolish a setting of her forth, but amiable to all by adorning her, as we ought to do by a Matron so noble.

Note.

The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evill and the good; The Lord beholdeth all things, but specially good men doing well to reward them, and the evill to punish them, see Psal. 139. Vers. 3.

A wholsome tongue is a tree of life, but perversnesse therein is a breach in the Spirit. The vulgar, A placable tongue; that is, a tongue softly spoken, according to v. 1. Hebr. it is, a healing tongue, That is, speaking comfort to such as are humbled, and contrite for their sins, this is a tree of Life, because as that in Paradise being taken and eaten of, when man by sinne had made himselfe sicke, as it were, and dying, would have made him whole againe, and to live for ever; so this healing tongue brings back from despaire and death the wounded by sinne, to hope and life for evermore. Vers. 4.

Augustine yeelds this reason of the Tree of Life healing, and making to live for ever, death cometh by the distemper of the foure humours of the body, but eating of the fruit of that tree would have brought them to an even and equall temper, and consequently to an endlesse life; for the next words, Muffet differing from all others, hath the mischievousnesse of it, is as a breach made by the wind; That is, as a strong wind blowing downe houses and trees; so an envious tongue is the cause of great ruines, and the word רוח may be rendred either in the Spirit, or with the Wind, and this last doth very well agree, and the sence is good, as one part of a tree is rent from another by a strong wind, and other things before lying together all blowne farre asunder; so by a perverse tongue divisions and dissentions are often made, never to be united or reconciled againe.

Augustt. Muffet.

They that are for the other reading say, it is as a breach, or corruption in their owne spirits, or the spirits of others, who are hereby infected, especially if it be the tongue of a Preacher teaching false doctrine; but I rather thinke because the perverse tongue is opposed to the healing tongue, and by the healing tongue cometh life and comfort; so on the contrary side, it is meant by the perverse tongue provoking to horrible sinnes, cometh a breaking in peices, as it were, or tearing to death his life, that is thus vexed and provoked hereby: or, the spirit is so broken and wounded by meanes thereof, as that it cannot againe be healed, but he dyeth in despaire. To this purpose it is commonly said of him, or her, that by his tongue exasperateth another, he vexeth my very soule.

Lavater.

A foole despiseth his fathers instruction, but he that regards reproofe is prudent, chap. 1. 8. He exhorted the Sonne to heare his Fathers instruction, now he condemneth them for fooles, that doe not, and commends them for being in the way of wisdome, that beare his corrections also; for the word יערום here used is a future, shall be wise, or prudent; as also the vulg. hath it, where some note, that the prudence here spoken of, is the same of which Christ speaketh, Be yee wise as Serpents, and therefore a Serpent-like wisdome is here meant, to which they shall attaine, that heare their Fathers instructions and reproofes, taking heed to doe accordingly, and that is the greatest wisdome that is, seeing more, and understanding more then others. Vers. 5.

Matth. 16. 16

As the Serpent is said to put the juyce of Fennell upon the eyes of her young ones, whereby they are made sharper-sighted then other Creatures; so by Parents inſtructions, and reproofes, as by the ſharp juyce of Fennell, children came to have eyes to ſee, and perceive beyond other men; but they that deſpiſe them, muſt needs be fooles, becauſe they will much more deſpiſe the inſtructions of others, that be further from them, and have not ſo great authority over them.

Verſ. 6. In the houſe of the righteous is much treaſure, but in the revenues of the wicked there is trouble. Muffet, the wicked mans revenue waſteth of it ſelfe The Sept. ſhall periſh. The vulg. The houſe of the juſt, great fortitude, the word חסן ſignifieth either fortitude, or treaſure; but fortitude, ſeemeth to me to agree beſt; The houſe of the righteous is ſaid to be ſo, becauſe it ſtandeth ſtrongly from generation to generation, if the ſon treades in his fathers ſteps, or obſerveth his precepts; as in the verſe before-going. But the comings in of the wicked through the curſe of God upon them, waſte, and crumble away, till they come to nothing. But the word Hebr. ſignifieth, as it is rendred, trouble, and the ſence given by ſome is, a juſt mans revenues, or his increaſe come in quietly in harveſt time; but thoſe of the wicked, are often times ſeized upon by others for debt, or other cauſes: or, a juſt man dying and leaving wealth, it is kept together for his children, who have great portions divided quietly amongſt them; but about the goods of the wicked oft times contention ariſeth amongſt the children or kinſfolk, one ſtriving to get from another. Or as ſome have it, who follow the rendring by fortitude, and noting, that ſometimes fortitude is put for increaſe of the fruits of the earth: In the houſe of the juſt is much increaſe, but the wicked toyling and troubling himſelf, as much as he, or more, reapes little but trouble. But this agreeth not; becauſe if he had meant ſo, he would have ſaid, in the field, not in the houſe: For the other Expoſitions, thou canſt not chuſe amiſſe.

Gen. 4. Job. 6.

Verſ. 7. The lips of the wiſe diſperſe knowledge, but the heart of a foole doth not ſo, vulg. is unlike. Expounded by Gregory, when as the juſt goeth alwayes on in declaring the ſame truth conſtandy, thus ſowing the ſeed of life, as the good preacher is compared, Mat. 13. the wicked is variable and unlike himſelf, ſometimes teaching one thing, ſometimes another, even in ſubſtantialls. But becauſe the words are לא כן not ſo, I rather aſſent unto them that ſay, the juſt is diligent in ſowing the good ſeed of knowledge, when he hath attained it, for the benefit of others; but the heart of the foole is not likewiſe ſer, by ſowing, to increaſe ſaving knowledge, but rather to ſet forth himſelfe, and his eminent parts of learning, that he may be magnified of men, not they edified. Vain men may count ſuch wiſe and learned, but God both counteth & calleth them fools: how they are ſaid to conceal knowledge. See ch. 12, 13.

Greg. paſt. cur: p. 3: admi. 19.

Note.

Verſ. 8. The ſacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight.

Verſ. 9. The way of the wicked is abomination to the Lord, &c. Theſe two Verſes do ſo cohere together, that the following verſe is a reaſon of the precedent; therefore is the ſacrifice, and ſervice of the wicked abomination to God, becauſe his way is abomination: for a man is accepted by him, or not accepted, as his way is; that no man living in ſin may have any hope, but depart from ſin, and then hope for acceptance.

Verſ. 10. Correction is grievous to him that forſaketh the way, but he that hateth reproof ſhall dye. The vulg. Doctrine is evill to him, Hebrew מוסר ſignifying either. But Salomon ſeems here to ſet forth two degrees of the wicked; one that takes no delight in teaching; the other, that doth not only not delight in it, but hates it: the firſt is out of the way, and ſo in danger; but the other muſt dye without remedy for ever and ever.

Proſper.

Chryſ. hom. 10. Oper. imperf. in Matth.

Some expound it of Preachers, that live wickedly, thus, their owne inſtruction is evill for them, and that in three reſpects. 1. Becauſe it is a condemning of himſelfe, for as Proſper ſaith, to teach well, and to live ill, is with a mans own tongue to damn himſelfe. 2. He hereby ſcandalizeth, and maketh others to fall. Whereupon Chryſoſtome, It is better to do well, and not to teach, then to teach well, and not to doe: becauſe he that doth well, may benefit others by his example; but he that doth ill, although he teacheth well, benefits none but ſcandalizeth many. 3. He highly diſhonoureth God, whoſe ſervant he pretends to be, becauſe as the ſame

Chry-

Chryſoſtome ſaith, by the doings of the ſervants, men gather what manner of one their maſter is; For which the Lord challengeth the Jewes, his ſervants that taught well, ſaying, My name is through you blaſphemed amongſt the Gentiles. Rom. 2.

Some laſtly underſtand it thus; it ſhall be evill for them, that have lived under good inſtruction, but yet are wicked ſtill: and if they have by ſharpe reproof and correction, and many ſufferings been laboured upon to reduce them into the way, but they have deſpiſed them all, hating ſuch as by whom, for them nothing remaineth but damnation; becauſe they would not bear temporall puniſhments, they ſhall bear eternall in hell. Some take this to be ſpoken to children, that are well taught, and duly corrected, but profit not hereby; but it is beſt to underſtand it generally, as hath been ſaid, becauſe it ſhall be ſo to all, who are not moved either by teaching or chaſtiſement. Rodolph:

Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord, how much more then the hearts of the children of men? Here by a compariſon of things lying moſt hid, it is ſhewed, that other things hidden from other men, are yet manifeſt to God, viz. from his knowledge of hell, and death: we heare of hell, and of the ſtate of the dead, but know nothing of it by ſight but the Lord doth; although none that dye, and go down into the pit are ever ſeen of us more, yet God ſeeth in what a condition they are. Therefore much more the hearts of all men, whether they be good or evil, upright or not, becauſe that although this is not known to other men, yet every mans heart is known to himſelf, and how is it known, but by the underſtanding, which God hath given him? therefore, he that giveth this underſtanding, knoweth it much more as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, He that giveth man knowledge, ſhall not he underſtand? It may ſeeme to be a compariſon of little force to prove, that God knoweth the hearts of men, becauſe one man by the words or doings of another, may have ſome near conjecture, what manner of heart he hath; but there is nothing, whereby we can know the ſtate of the dead, who periſh, but by the word through faith. Therefore, ſome take it not to be comparative, but enumerative, both hell, and death, and the hearts of men are all known to God. And the Hebrew is גַּם אַף which is not a note of compariſon, yea, for, yea, it is ſo, ſo, for the heart of man is knowne, ſeemeth to make for it; or rather hereby he proveth hell and death, to be knowne to God, becauſe the hearts of men are knowne. But it is commonly tranſlated both by Vulgar Latine, and Caldee, as a compariſon from hell to the heart. And the Septuagint diſ-agreeth not, which hath it, How not; To follow therefore this reading, if thou likeſt not the ſence already given, take another; Hell and death, where ſinne ſhall be puniſhed, are ſeen of God, much more then, mans heart, according to the wickednesſe whereof this judgement ſhall be; for the judge muſt firſt know the cauſe, before he determineth of the puniſhment. Or elſe, they are before the Lord, that is in his power, together with all the damned ſpirits; therfore much more man, who is weaker then they. But I adhere ſtill to the firſt, as moſt genuine, and it is worthy the conſidering, that God knoweth the heart, and ſeeth all things therein, to ſtir to get us good and upright hearts, and here to harbour nothing ſinful or evill. Verſ. 11. 1 Cor. 2. 11. Note.

A ſcorner loveth not one that reproveth him, neither will he goe to the wiſe, That is, he, who mocketh at godlineſſe, hateth ſuch as bring his faults to light, rebuking and ſeeking to reclaim him from them, whereas indeed, he ought to love ſuch above other men, becauſe they indeavour to cleanſe away his faults, againſt the time that he muſt appeare before the ſevere judge of all the world, being otherwiſe in danger of condemnation therefore. But the ſcorner who hateth ſuch, will not therefore come in their company, if he can avoid them, and this is the ſigne of a ſcorner then, to aſſociate himſelfe with merry and diſſolute companions, but not with the godly. Verſ 12. Note.

A merry heart maketh a chearfull countenance, but by ſorrow of the heart the ſpirit is broken. This is ſpoken ſaith one, that we may take heed of worldly ſorrow: the Lord ſpeaking herein as a mother to her childe, that eryeth much, thou wilt marre thy face, if thou doeſt thus; ſo the Lord hereby deterreth from griefe, and vexation for worldly things, and diſtracting cares about them, by tel- Verſ. 13. Muffet.

ling us, that this is a damping and deading to the ſpirit, but to keep the minde free from ſuch vexations, and joying in the holy Ghoſt, makes a chearfull countenance, and therefore, a chearfull heart upon all occurrences; and this is a thing, which we all affect; and therefore the means hindring it, are to be taken heed of, viz. worldly ſorrow; and the ſpirit of God is to bee ſought for, and begged; the peculiar fruit whereof, is true joy, and joy in tribulation. Notable is the ſaying of Philo: Divers affections fight in the mind, but that which gets the victory, ſets up the banner in the face, as in a Towre; ſadneſſe, and envy, the pale colour; wrath, a clay colour; modeſty, a purple; joy, white and red, duly mixed, to make the beauty of the face the more.

Verſ. 14. The heart of him that hath underſtanding ſeeketh knowledge, but the mouth of fooles feedeth on fooliſhneſſe: It may ſeeme ſtrange, that he who hath knowledge, ſhould ſeek knowledge; but it is commonly ſeen to be ſo; knowing men being the moſt diligent of all others in reading and hearing, to increaſe that more, which they have already attained: For they thinke, that they know but in part, and in that which they know, they find ſuch ſweetneſſe, as that they are hereby drawn to indeavour the increaſing thereof.

And it is to be noted, that he ſaith, ſeeketh knowledge in his heart, intimating that knowledge is cordiall to him; and that great is the delight that he taketh herein, above all other things in this world, as in the food of his ſoul; but fools are delighted with fooliſh and vaine things; ſome with jeſting and vaine talking, ſome with reading vaine bookes, ſetting forth no truths, but phantaſies, ſome with gaming, Paſtimes, drinking, or whoring, or raking together of worldly goods, &c. which are as meat unto them. And it is to be noted, that the word feede commeth of רעה to feed, as bruit beaſts doe, of which foure ſorts are ſpecially noted to feed upon the foure Elements, the Salamander upon the Fire, the Cameleon upon the Aire, the Herring upon the Water, and the Mole upon Earth: ſo the envious and contentious foole feeds upon the fire of ſtrife; the proud upon the aire of vainglory, the voluptuous upon the water of ſenſuall pleaſure, and the covetous upon the excrements of the earth, gold, and ſilver; to increaſe which, is all their delight and pleaſure.

Note.

Verſ. 15. All the dayes of the afflicted are evill, but he that is of a merry heart hath a continuall feaſt; A man in affliction, and diſcontented at it, and impatient in his minde, hath no joy of his life, but is alwayes as one weary, and tired with the preſent time, wiſhing in the morning, that it were evening, and in the evening, that it were morning; but the man, that is chearfull in his heart, both in proſperity and adverſity is like unto him, that is at a feaſt, where he hath variety, of meats to delight his taſte, of friends about him, to delight his eyes, and of a faire roome, neat and well furniſhed, and the ſweetneſſe of Muſick, and friendly talke, to delight his eares. But as Muffet noteth, None can have this merry heart, but the faithfull, who have joy of juſtification from ſin, and conſequently, of deliverance from exile and death; he that liveth in groſſe ſinnes, or in hypocriſie cannot, if hee bee merry, it is but Sardonicus riſus, Laughter fore-running deſtruction, the vulg: All the dayes of the poore are evill, which is all one; becauſe poverty impoſing a neceſſity of hard labour, and hard fare, is a continuall affliction; Yet the godly poore, through the joy that is in his heart, turneth his courſe and ſpare dyet into a continuall feaſt, he is as well as the rich, that fare deliciouſly every day.

Muffet. Note.

Chryſ. hom: in Cor.

Therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith, it is neither wealth nor poverty, that makes men happy, or miſerable, but a mans owne mind, for how healthy, and ſtrong are bodys fed only with bread? when as other bodyes, fed with all variety of dainties, are weake and languiſhing: They that weare a Diamond, if they have a ſicke mind, cannot be of a good and quiet heart: but Philoſophers, even in chaines, and want, injoy pure pleaſure. Some underſtand the firſt words here, as the words of another man, a worldling, in whoſe opinion the poor and afflicted mans daies are all evill, but he ſaith, nay, the merry or chearful heart, even in ſuch is a continual feaſt, which is little differing from the former.

Verſ. 16. Better is a little with the feare of God, then great treaſure and trouble therewith;

with. Theſe words are added as a reaſon of that which is ſaid, ver. 15. an heart full of heavenly joy and comfort, although one be poore, is a continuall feaſt, becauſe the little that ſuch a one hath, who is a man fearing God, is better then wealth laid up in abundance, in the treaſury of him that hath an evill conſcience, and for this, trouble, and feare in his minde.

Better is a dinner of hearbs, where love is, then a ſtalled Oxe, and hatred there-with. This alſo hath ſome coherence with ver. 16. as that with the 15. for they that have but a little, are glad oft-times to dine with hearbs, or as the manner of our Country is, amongſt the poore, with bread and apple, cabbage, turneps, water-gruell, or the like, which coſteth but a little; now in caſe that a man hath no better dinner then ſo, yet if he hath the love and favour of God, as they have that feare him, this dinner, to live with ſuch ſimple food is better, then to have great cheere, as they that have a great deale, but are hated of him; as it is ſaid of Eſau, that he was, and all the wicked are, being therefore called veſſels of wrath. Verſ. 17.

Another expoſition is generally followed, as if loving, and peaceable eating and drinking of friends together were meant upon poore commons, and feaſting, and fallings out, and quarrellings at the ſame; but Lavater after this mentioneth the other. and I thinke it not only fit to be mentioned, but to be preferred, becauſe men having little, but fearing God were ſpoken of, ver. 16. and meant of treaſures, but having no inward peace, but trouble for ſinne. Yet Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of a dinner of poore men, and a dinner of the rich, the one conſiſting of hearbs, or other meane fare, with all other accommodations moſt ſimple, but the other of all varieties, all other things alſo being of the beſt, ſaith, That he would rather goe to that of the poore then of the rich, becauſe Chriſt is there, and ſo love; as if this compariſon were made between theſe two feaſts. Lavater.

A wrathfull man ſtirreth up ſtrife, but he that is ſlow to anger appeaſeth ſtrife; That is, the one ſtirres up ſtrife where none was before, the other appeaſeth it by his meekneſſe, and patience where it was, for which Chryſoſtome ſaith, As water quencheth hot iron, ſo patience doth fiery anger. Verſ. 18. Chryſ. Hom. 21 in Heb.

The way of the ſlothfull man is as an hedge of thornes, but the way of the righteous is made plaine. As a man that is to goe through thornes, goeth ſlowly, and timorouſly; ſo a ſlothfull perſon goeth creeping about his buſineſſe; but the righteous man, who abhorres from his ſoule the ſin of ſloth, and idleneſſe, and is induſtrious, and laborious in his Calling, is knowne by his very pace, and manner of his going, as the ſlothfull idlesbee is by his; he goeth apace about it, and loytereth not; but the other, as one that is without all ſpirit, or heart unto his worke, he upon a plaine way, as it were, the other as upon thornes, ſoftly, as fearing to ſet his feet downe upon the ground, being ſtaid by the way ſometime by one, whom he meeteth to prate withall; ſometime by another, as he that hath hedges in his way, that he muſt be long in getting over. Gregory applieth this, to ſuch as forecalling what dangers there are in entring into, and walking in the way of God, are hereby deterred, and ſo make ſlow haſt to enter hereinto. Verſ. 19. Gregor. Mor. l. 30. c. 13.

The ſimilitude of an hedge here uſed is taken from hedges, that Husband-men uſe to make with buſhes, to keep beaſts from comming into their Corne fields: for as by ſuch an hedge the wicked are kept from, and when they have good motions in their mindes, to come into the way of righteouſneſſe, and holineſſe, retarded from entring hereinto; but the righteous, who are the elect of God, looke not at the ſufferings which may befall them in ſo doing, unleſſe it be to deſpiſe them, for the glory to come, enter and walk herein without feare, as in the beſt and ſmootheſt way that they can goe in.

Some, by the ſlothfull here underſtand the wicked, wrathfull, and contentious perſon, becauſe the righteous are oppoſed hereunto, and ſo expound it thus; The wicked furious man, of whom he ſpeakes, ver. 18. hath his way like an hedge of thornes, if any walke or converſe with him, he ſhall be pricked, and vexed with his harſh manners; but if with the righteous, he ſhall meet with nothing to offend him, ſo ſmooth through his meekneſſe and gentleneſſe is his way; wherefore the vulgar vulgar renders it, his way is without offence. Laſtly, ſome underſtand this, as ſetting forth the difference betwixt the ſlothfull and the induſtrious, in regard of their fields, thoſe of the one are over-growne with thornes; or the way thereunto, becauſe he ſeldome goeth and cometh that way; but the way of the other is ſo often traced by his going and coming, that it is plaine, and his field is kept free from briers and thornes, by ſtubbing up, that corne or graſſe may plentifully grow therein.

And this is favoured by the Septuagint tranſlation, which hath it, via fortium, the way of the ſtrong; of all theſe expoſitions none but may well be received, and good uſe may be made thereof.

Verſ. 20. For ver. 20. ſee before, chap. 10. 1. only whereas it is there ſaid, A fooliſh ſonne is an heavineſſe to his mother, here, deſpiſeth his mother; That is, either by ſetting at nought her precepts, againſt which ſee, chap. 1. 8. or by ſpeaking diſgracefully of her to others; and he that doth either of theſe is fooliſh, and wicked, for he doth herein againſt himſelfe, becauſe upon the honouring of his Parents, and ſpecially of his Mother, depends both his life, worldly bleſſings, and honour, as Plato hath well noted, and the Scripture teacheth the ſame, both in Commandement five, and Deut. 5. Eccleſ. 3. The bleſſing of the mother eſtabliſheth the houſe of her ſons, and the glory of a man is from the honour of his parents. They are Gods true Images in their old age, ſaith Plato to thee, and therefore above all Images to be worſhipped; the worſhip and honour done to them being done to God, and the contempt of them puniſhed, as the contempt of God himſelfe, Deut. 21.

Verſ. 21. Folly is joy to him that is deſtitute of wiſdome, but he that hath underſtanding walketh uprightly. This differeth not much from ver. 14. the wicked foole is affected with things vaine, they are, as it were, meat and drinke unto him, as is there ſhewed; and his deſire is to live in vaine pleaſure, but the wiſe takes moſt care to walke in the wayes of God, and herein is his joy.

Verſ. 22. Without counſell purpoſes are diſappointed, but by a multitude of Counſellours they are eſtabliſhed; the Cald. without ſecrets, and סדר ſignifieth both ſecret and counſell, but from the ſignification of the word, it is by ſome expounded thus; when men thinke to goe about great matters, but this purpoſe is not kept ſecret, but firſt divulged, this is a great hinderance to the worke intended, and oft-times preventeth the effecting of it.

But by the words oppoſed, whereby Counſellours are called יעצים it appeares, that Counſell is alſo meant here, but counſell ſecretly taken, and ſo kept, till the time cometh of doing as is adviſed.

Verſ. 23. A man hath joy by the anſwer of his mouth, and a word ſpoken in due ſeaſon, how good is it! Having commended counſell in great undertakings, now he commendeth him that giveth good counſell, ſhewing, that he ſhall have joy thereof, when as it being followed hath a good effect, and he hath honour of all men for it; this is a word indeed ſpoken in due ſeaſon.

And likewiſe there is joy in him, that by a milde and wiſe anſwer to thoſe that are upon quarrelling, prevent it, as ver. 1. and to them that ſpeake ſo ſeaſonably againſt any mans ſinne, or in the commendation of vertue, that it takes effect in the hearts of the Hearers, for their reformation; for this the Apoſtle calleth the Corinthians converted by him, his joy. It may alſo be underſtood of the Counſellours mouth, whereof the conſulter hath joy, it proving good, who haply, if he had followed his owne minde, and not taken counſell, might have repented, when it had been too late.

Verſ. 24. Col. 3. 7. The way of life is above to the wiſe, that he may depart from hell beneath; That is, he ſets his minde upon things above, as is commanded, that is, heavenly, beleeving, living, and doing ſo, as that he may when he dyeth, aſcend to heaven above, and avoyd coming in hell beneath, which all they ſhall be in danger to doe, that minde not heavenly things, but are drowned in worldly cares, ſaying, What ſhall we eate or drinke, or where-with ſhall we be cloathed? which Chriſt hath forbidden. Matth. 6.

Beda

Beda, The way of life is above, becauſe it is taught of God above, and man of himſelfe knoweth it not, till that God teacheth it him. Some it is above, becauſe an hard way, and ſo above our power, if we were left to our ſelves, it being as it were a ſteep aſcent: but the way of death is beneath, downe, which a man may eaſily goe, and he goeth herein that liveth in ſinne; much like unto which is the ſaying of our Lord, Streight is the way that leadeth to life, and there be few that finde it, but the way of death is broad. Matth. 7. 14.

The Lord will deſtroy the houſe of the proud, but he will eſtabliſh the border of the widow. Verſ. 25. By proud men here underſtand mighty men in this world, that being without conſcience of right or wrong, oppreſſe the poor, and take their inheritances from them, as Ahab did Naboths vineyard from him; Such may flouriſh for a time, but in the end they ſhall be deſtroyed, and through Gods juſt judgement loſe their lands and inheritances; but the poore thus wronged by them, ſhall in their poſterity enjoy theirs again; for by the Widow, who is moſt ſubject to oppreſſion, the poore and weake are generally underſtood, and by their borders their lands, the borders whereof were ſet, when inheritances were divided amongſt them. But all Widowes, as Lavater noteth, are not the widowes thus ſpecially patronized, and protected by God, but ſuch as are deſcribed, 1 Tim. 5. Of Gods care of Widowes, ſee Exod. 22. 22. Eſa. 1. 17. Jam. 1. ult. Of his deſtroying the proud, ſee the example of Pharaoh, Senacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, and Herod, and of Ahab and proud Jezabel. Lavater.

Ambroſe ſaith, that God taketh widowes eſpecially into his protection, becoming as an husband unto them, for their encouragement to live and ſerve him in Widow-hood; and that he is offended for no ſinne ſo much committed by man againſt man, as for the oppreſſion of widowes, as appeareth by many places. Beda expounds this of hereticks inſulting proudly over the true Church, and the Church, which is as Chriſts widow in this world, whoſe borders God will eſtabliſh, and inlarge all over the world. Ambroſ. offic. l. c. 29. Beda.

The thoughts of the wicked are abomination to the Lord, but the words of the pure are pleaſant. Verſ. 26. Wicked men have evill thoughts, and godly men pure thoughts and ſpeeches, the one are abomination to God, although they breake not out into act, the other coming from a pure fountaine, the heart, and being ordered according to the rule of purity, the word of God, are pleaſant to him, and he taketh delight herein. Hereby it appeareth, that God knoweth the thoughts of men, which even Zeno the Stoicke knew well, and therefore to one asking him, whether a man doing evill, might not avoid the knowledge of God? anſwered, no, nor thinking it. 2. Evill thoughts are ſinnes, and abominable ſins contrary to the opinion of naturall men, that thought is free. 3. He is a wicked man that hath evill thoughts in his heart, although he ſpeaketh good words. 4. Although a man of evill thoughts: a man of evill thoughts may ſpeake good words, yet they are not pleaſing to God, for thoſe words onely are pleaſing to him that come from the pure in heart. 5. None but good words come from ſuch at any time, if through over-ſight any doe, they looke better thenceforth to their wayes, that they offend not with their tongue. Matth. 5. 5. Pſal. 39. 1.

And they that are pure in heart, utter themſelves in ſpeech edifyingly, not being ſullenly ſilent, nor vainglorioully talkative. Some reſtraine the thoughts here ſpoken of, to the unchaſte, ſome to thoughts and inventions of miſchiefe in one man againſt another; and contrariwiſe the words of the pure, to chaſte and true, free from fraud, but of this reſtraint I ſee no reaſon.

He that is greedy of gaine troubleth his owne houſe, but he that hateth gifts ſhall live. Verſ. 27. This is ſpoken to deterre men from covetous ſeeking to get the world by right or wrong, ſuch can never live in quiet, but through their unjuſt dealing bring trouble and ſuits in Law upon themſelves and poſterity to whom they leave their inheritance ſo ill gotten. But he that is averſe from taking bribes to prevent juſtice, will certainly avoid all other unjuſt dealing alſo, and therefore hee ſhall alwayes live in peace and quietneſſe.

and therefore for expoſition, the Reader may have recourſe thither, onely theſe words, The heart of the righteous ſtudieth to anſwer, are in vulgar Latine rendred, meditateth obedience, becauſe the ſame word ענוה ſignifieth humble as well as anſwer, and becauſe humility is the foundation of obedience. But thus it anſwereth not to the next words of the wicked mans mouth pouring out evill things. Therefore to hold to the New Tranſlation, the meaning is, hee premeditateth before he ſpeaketh, and ſo ſpeaketh to the purpoſe that which is ſolid: but the foole, whatſoever cometh to his tongues end, without any premeditation, by which meanes not onely idle and vaine prate comes from him, but alſo filthy words, oaths, and lyes, and fooliſh jeaſtings &c.

Verſ. 29. The Lord is farre from the wicked, but he heareth the prayer of the righteous: That is, he is like one afarre off for hearing, being otherwiſe neare to every man. Bernard conſidering that there be two impediments of hearing, nigh deafneſſe, the other a farre diſtance, ſaith, that ſometime God heareth not, becauſe hee ſtops his eares, and will not heare, viz. in caſe of hard-heartedneſſe towards the poore, as he ſaith, He that ſtops his eares againſt the cry of the poore, ſhall cry unto God, and he will not heare him; ſometime he heareth not, becauſe he ſtands as it were at a farre diſtance, as in caſe that he be proud that prayeth, For God lookes upon the proud afar off, but is neare to the humble.

Verſ. 30. The light of the eyes rejoyceth the heart, and a good report maketh the bones fat. Here are two things mentioned which are very pleaſing to men, ſome beautifull object ſet before the eyes, and a good report made of them coming to their eares, and therefore they are herein naturally much delighted; and this good report is their fame ſpread amongſt their neighbours, this is even as a fatning to the bones, as meat of the beſt, wherein one takes great pleaſure; ſo is every man pleaſed with a good report going of him, and to ſee friends and lovers flocking about him, pleaſant gardens and orchards, and faire buildings of his owne, a comely loving wife, faire children, &c.

The word rendred report is שמועה hearing is rendred therefore by ſome, a good meſſenger. Here are two things compared together, the firſt, light coming to the eyes, and good news to the eare; of the one it is ſaid, that it delighteth the heart; that is, the light of the morning with ſome comfort reſtored after a ſad and ſorrowfull night cheareth the heart of the other, It is a fatning to the bones; the meaning being according to ſome, that there is as much joy and comfort in this hearing, as in that ſeeing.

To me the words ſeeme to have coherence with verſe 29. where he had ſaid, The Lord heareth the prayers of the righteous; now to ſhew what a comfort this is, he ſaith, as the light is a comfort to the ſight, and ſo to the heart, ſo and much more is this hearing, being ſo great a joy, that it is enough to renew and ſtrengthen, not onely the inner, but the outward man alſo, as it is when the bones are filled with marrow, that all may flye wickedneſſe and purſue righteouſneſſe, that God may heare them calling upon him to their ſo great joy.

Note.

Verſ. 31. Verſ. 32. The eare that heareth the reproofe of life abideth amongſt the wiſe. Verſ. 32. He that refuſeth inſtruction, deſpiſeth his owne ſoule, but he that heareth reproofe getteth underſtanding. Something like unto this hath beene ſaid, verſ. 10. By reproofe of life, underſtand reproofe tending to the reformation of a mans life, and conſequently the attaining of life everlaſting, by ſaying the eare that heareth, he meaneth the man that heareth and obeyeth, he ſhall abide amongſt the wiſe; that is, be ſet up with them, and advanced to wealth and honour in this world, if God ſeeth it meet for him, and he be fit for it, but howſoever he fareth here, he ſhall have place amongſt them in the glory to come; contrariwiſe death and deſtruction ſhall be to ſuch as hate reproof, as verſe 10. and thus he ſhall prove one that deſpiſeth or ſetteth light by his owne ſoule in the end, that deſpiſeth inſtruction and reproofe, going on notwithſtanding this obſtinacy in his evill wayes.

But he that heareth reproofe getteth underſtanding; that is, as was ſaid at the firſt, cometh by this meanes to be one of them that are wiſe to ſalvation. All

which tendeth to ſhew the neceſſity of reproofe, and making a good uſe of it, as a man tenders the good of his owne ſoule, ſo that he is a foole, and void of all wiſdome, that hateth reproofe. Note.

The feare of the Lord is the inſtruction of wiſdome, and before honour is humility, Chap. 1.7. The feare of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdome, or the head of wiſdome, the principall part thereof, the ſame is meant here, they are wiſe and well inſtructed and taught that feare God; and becauſe none ſubmit themſelves thus to do but the humble, before any man comes to this, and ſo to the honour that ſhall be to the wiſe, he is humble, and not proud. Verſ. 33.

CHAP. XVI.

THe preparations of the heart in man, but the anſwer of the tongue is from the Lord. When a man by ſtudy is beſt prepared to ſpeak, or to make an Oration, or Sermon, yet if God giveth him not utterance in going about to ſpeake, hee ſhall be confounded. There is need then of a double grace to him that would ſpeake well. Verſ. 1.

1. Of preparation of the heart, whereby he attaineth the knowledge of good things to be uttered by him, having conned them by heart, as we ſay.

2. Of elocution to ſpeake them for the inſtruction of others: For in ſaying, The preparations of the heart in man, he meaneth not, that they are in him without God, but when through the helpe of God his preparation is made to ſpeake, there is further need of the help of God and of his Spirit to utter the matter ſo prepared; for without his helpe a man ſhall either be confounded, not knowing what to ſay, as ſome have ſometimes beene, or things may ſlip from him beſides his matter premeditated, to doe more hurt, then good; to prevent which, Gods aſſiſtance muſt be deſired, that a man may freely ſpeake, as Paul deſireth the Epheſians to pray, that a doore of utterance might be opened unto him, and that he would moderate and guide the tongue ſo in ſpeaking, that herewith nothing may be ſpoken, but according to the preparation made. Eph. 6.19.

Pelagius urged much this ſentence to prove free-will in man, becauſe he that can prepare his owne heart muſt needs have liberty of will ſo to doe; but Auguſtine anſwereth, that although the preparations of the heart are in man, yet hereby it is not implied, without God co-operating with him in his ſtudies. Some underſtand this of the anſwer of the tongue, onely in caſe of being queſtioned, when ſo, for him to anſwer ſo as to ſatisfie the queſtioner, is from God. This is too ſtrict, yet ſomewhat is ſaid, which is alſo meant here, the beſt prepared matter, when it cometh to be uttered, cannot take effect in the hearers without God, and his Spirit working therewith, as is ſaid, 1 Cor. 3.7. Pelagius. Auguſt. Cajetan.

All the wayes of a man are cleane in his owne eyes, but the Lord weigheth the ſpirits. Chap. 12.15. it is ſpoken almoſt to the ſame effect; the meaning is plaine, a wicked man is ſo fooliſh (for he is there called a foole, that is here called a man;) that he thinketh even his owne wayes and doings good and right, as ſuppoſing that he hath reaſon to juſtifie them; For as Quintilian ſaith, there was never a reaſon wanting to any hainous wickednеſſe, and the ſame is true touching thoſe that are in the way of errour, their opinions ſeeme to themſelves good and true, though never ſo erroneous. But the Lord weigheth the ſpirits, the things done by them may be good, as giving almes, praying, reading, preaching, and hearing of the word, but their hearts and ſpirits not being right that doe theſe things, they are wicked and abominable to God; if vain-glory or worldly gaine be herein aimed at, or by theſe outward performances it be thought that God is well pleaſed, the heart being afarre of. Verſ. 2. Quintilian. Sceleri nunquam defuit ratio.

This ſerves to ſhew the blindneſſe of wicked men and heretickes, and the cauſe why they goe on in their evill wayes, and are not reformed, although their ſinnes and errours be plainly laid open, yet they will not thinke of them; but as of truth Note.

truth and righteouſneſſe, as the wicked Jewes ſaid, That the wayes of the Lord were unequall, and their owne wayes equall; but this ſhall not ſtand, but as in a well ordered Common-wealth things are weighed by the Kings Standard, and then they that have falſe ballances are found out and puniſhed, ſo God will bring to weighing in his ballance all their doings and opinions, ſet forth here by the word ſpirits, becauſe they are carried unto them by an evill ſpirit, if the thing done bee evil, and not by the Spirit of God ſpeaking in his word, or if for matter it be good, but done with an evill heart, or in an ill manner, for all ſuch ſhall be weighed and judged alike to condemnation.

Commit thy workes to the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed; That is, whereas wicked men are conceited of their owne doings, that they are right and juſt, which yet coming to be weighed will be found otherwiſe, Verſe 2. Let thy workes, who feareſt God, be regulated by his word, and by prayer commit them for good ſucceſſe to him, and then thou ſhalt not thinke to bring them to a good paſſe in vaine, but as thou thinkeſt and expecteſt, it ſhall be done. For thus the Apoſtle directeth, ſaying, Be carefull for nothing, but in every thing by prayer and ſupplication, let your requeſts be made knowne to God; thus thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed. The Hebrew word is roule, expounded by ſome, referre all to his glory, then thy thoughts ſhall be directed aright when thou doeſt thus, neither ſhalt thou erre, as they doe that ſeeke themſelves in their good workes; I thinke it beſt to joyne both theſe together.

Matth. 5. 16.

The Lord hath made all things for himſelfe, yea, the wicked for the day of evill. God in making men and women, and all other creatures ſought his own glory, as the maine ſcope and end of all his workes.

Verſ. 4.

But how is it ſaid, that he made the wicked for the evill day? that is, the day of judgement; for all things which God made were good, and man being made good is not made wicked by God, but by being drawne away by his owne concupiſcence, and inticed, or as Eccleſiaſtes ſaith, by ſeeking to himſelfe many inventions. His making of him then for the day of evill is nothing elſe, but his ordaining him to everlaſting condemnation for this wickedneſſe to the glory of his juſtice. For as Auguſtine ſaith, the good he hath both made and ordained, but the wicked he made not ſuch, but onely ordained them to their juſt puniſhment; for he both made and ordained kindes and natures, but privations, ſuch as wicked are, he made not, but ordained, as it is ſaid of the light, that he made it, but not likewiſe of the darkneſſe. But why doth the Lord ordaine ſome to judgement? This may be reſolved from the word here uſed in ſpeaking of ſuch, the wicked he ordaineth them to evill, becauſe they are wicked, not as many hold, meerly of his owne will, as the potter, being hereby carryed, onely makes ſome veſſels to diſhonour, for this would be little to the praiſe of his juſtice, and his will is declared to be to the contrary, Ezek. 18. 2 Pet. 3. And by that ſimilitude taken from a Potter, it is onely ſhewed, that God could have done ſo, that no man may open his mouth againſt his doing in condemning ſome, when he electeth others, but not that he may not open his mouth in vindicating God from being contrary to himſelfe, or his juſtice from cruelty towards his poore creatures. By mercy and truth ſinne is purged, and by the feare of the Lord men depart from evill. Deliverance from ſinne, and purging therefrom, as the meritorious and efficient cauſe thereof, is the bloud of Chriſt, and therefore mercy and truth doth not thus cleanſe from ſinne: but that almes-deeds cleanſe, our Lord teacheth, Luke 11. 41. and Dan. 4. 17. but this is, when he that beleeveth in Chriſt doth acts of mercy, and ſo is declared to be cleane from ſinne, wherewith all they are ſtill polluted, that onely beleeve being without good workes, what outward meanes elſe ſoever they uſe ; it is true, the act of beleeving at that inſtant cleanſeth the ſoule in the ſight of God, if it be by a true faith, but this faith is not true and lively, unleſſe it be thus operated by love ; a true Beleever then is made cleane by beleeving, but then only doth it appeare that he beleeveth ſo, when he bringeth forth fruites of mercy and love, and therefore now we may ſay, he is cleanſed indeed. And as a man is thus purged from ſinne paſt, ſo by the feare of God he is kept from ſin for time to come. Jam. 2.

Some alſo interpret this purging from ſinne in reſpect of temporall Judgements, out of which Mercy helpeth, and from which being falne into them, Mercy delivereth ; becauſe he ſhall have mercy that ſheweth mercy. Muffet. Matth. 5.

Some to avoyd the Popiſh tenet, founded here about the merit of good Works, expound it of Gods mercy in Chriſt, whereby ſinne is purged ; but there needs no ſuch ſhift to avoyd that errour, as may be gathered from that hath been already ſaid. Lavater.

When a mans wayes pleaſe the Lord, he maketh even his enemies at peace with him. The ſcope of this place is to ſtirre up to the good before commended to our practiſe ver. 6. becauſe he that doth ſo, walketh in wayes pleaſing to God, and if he hath enemies in this world, he both can, and will reconcile their mindes towards him, ſo that the Wolfe and the Lion ſhall dwell with the Lambe, and the Kid. Verſ. 7. Eſa. 11.

Some expound it of Spirituall enemies, the Will, Affections, and Deſires, which are worldly, and when they are ſo, be a mans great enemies ; but when a man is converted, and ſo his wayes are pleaſing to God, theſe are quiet, and ſubject themſelves to the ſpirit in him ; but the contrary is true, for even in thoſe that have the Spirit, there is the fleſh fighting againſt it, therefore this is only an incouragement to feare God, and to ſeeke to pleaſe him, not men, for God will provide, that men ſhall doe no harme to ſuch, although they be of a contrary minde ; yea, ſometimes they ſhall be brought from a contrary to be of the ſame minde, and ſo of enemies to be moſt loving friends ; Verſe eight is the ſame in effect with Chapter 15. 16. Gal. 5. 17. Rom. 7.

A mans heart deviſeth his way, but the Lord directeth his ſteps. This is not much unlike to ver. 1. only that which is there ſaid of ſpeaking, is here ſaid of going about this, or that, or doing, herein man may determine what he will, but ſhall not be able to goe, or doe, but as God pleaſeth, that we may crave his aſſiſtance in all things, and be comforted againſt the threatnings of enemies. Verſ. 9.

A divine ſentence is in the lips of the King, his mouth tranſgreſſeth not in judgement ; That is, according to the high place wherein God hath ſet him, he giveth him many times a divining faculty, as it were, to finde out the truth, when he ſitteth in judgement. This Salomon ſpake by his owne experience which he had of the truth hereof, in the caſe of the two Harlots, that came before him. Verſ. 10.

This may alſo be underſtood of a King, ſetting himſelfe to enact good Lawes with his Counſell about him, concerning the Common-wealth, when he ſincerely doth thus, ſeeking not ſo much his owne private as the Publique good, God whoſe Vice-gerent he is, doth ſo extraordinarily aſſiſt him, as that his ſayings are as Oracles, and accordingly by the people to be received, and obeyed ; the ſcope of this is to make the King ſo by all his Subjects to be reverenced, as that when he hath given his judgement without any tergiverſation to reſt herein, and not to preſume to oppoſe him, who is ſo neare to God, and ſo extraordinary gifted by him as not to erre, and therefore to acquieſce in his Sentence ; he that doth not, but reſiſts, ſhall reape to himſelfe damnation, becauſe he ſo little conſidereth the neare relation betwixt God and him. Some, becauſe no King elſe is free from erring, ſay that Chriſt is meant here, and the King following the rule preſcribed unto him, as Deut. 17.

A juſt weight and ballance are the Lords, all the weights of the bag are his work ; ſee before, ch. 11. 1. how wel pleaſing to God juſt weights and ballances are ; but here the Kings ſentence being ſpoken of, ver. 10. as Divine ; that is, Gods Sentence Verſ. 11.

pronounced by him, and ver. 12. It is abomination to Kings to commit wickedneſſe; the vulgar, They are abominable to Kings that doe wickedly; and the Hebrew being a plurall, עשרה ſignifying doing, favoureth this reading; it is therefore conceived, that by juſt weight and ballance, here the juſt and unerring judgement of the King before ſpoken of is meant, theſe words being added as a reaſon, why the King erreth not in judgement; for his judgement is as a true ballance, and juſt weight, which God hath wrought in him, and therefore as he weigheth things, ſo they muſt be accounted to be by all his Subjects: of Gods weighing ſpirits it is ſpoken before, ver. 2. where his righteous judging of ſpirits is meant, as having tried them in a juſt ballance.

In like manner here, his Judgement in pronouncing which he directeth the King, is ſpoken of in like manner; which is not yet to be underſtood of every King, but of that King, which in judging walketh by the rule before ſpoken of, Deut. 17. that is, of the Word of God. The King then that doth ſo, that is, readeth this Word continually, ſeeking hereby to informe himſelfe what is true, and right, in caſe of difference, and ſo giveth his judgement; this judgement of his is to be held as a juſt ballance, and weight, directed to by God, and they that reſt not herein, reſt not in the worke and ſentence of God himſelfe, but take upon them even above the Divine Majeſty, and ſo ſin moſt dangerouſly.

Note.

And the next words, ver. 12. are a reaſon, why Kings thus regulated in their judgement erre not; Doing wickedly, and all that doe wickedly are abomination to them; therefore they themſelves will not doe ſo. And this tendeth to the eſtabliſhing of his Throne, as is intimated, Deut. 17. 20. both to him, and to his children after him, for hereby his Subjects are made to love him, and Gods bleſſing is procured towards him, which are more for his eſtabliſhment, then all the ſtrength of Armes that he can raiſe. O that our King had thought upon this, and ſo abhorred from all unrighteous wayes of getting riches, and not truſted to his Forces, which could not ſtand him inſtead to eſtabliſh his Throne, being by this meanes ſo greatly weakned, and now over-throwne.

Pſal. 101. The wrath of a King is as meſſengers of death; Having ſhewed in what grace and favour the righteous are with righteous Kings (and they that favour not ſuch, but hate them, follow not David, but wicked Ahab, and Herod, who hated, the one Elijah, the other cut off John Baptiſt, for their righteous lips) now he ſheweth, how great their wrath is againſt evill doers, nothing is by them to be expected at their hands, but death, and cutting off, as David alſo ſaith, that he would cut off the wicked out of the Land. For the phraſe here uſed, as the meſſengers of death, it is hereby meant, as a Meſſenger ſent to ſlay a man; ſo is the wrath of a King, he that incurreth it ſhall ſurely dye; yea, not only by his wickedneſſe deſerving it, but if the King be carried more by paſſion, then right reaſon; but in this caſe the wiſe either by good ſpeeches, or officiouſneſſe towards him, appeaſeth him, and ſo eſcapeth.

Verſ. 16. For the words of ver. 16. How much better to get wiſdome then gold, ſee before, chapter 8. 11. And who getteth this precious wiſdome is ſhewed, verſ. 17.

Verſ. 17. The high way of the upright is to depart from evill, and this is elſe-where ſaid of the feare of God, and that this feare is wiſdome; ſo then he getteth wiſdome, that makes this his way; and he that keeps to it, as the next words, preſerves his ſoule: for, live in ſinne, and deſtroy thy ſoule, depart from it, and preſerve it.

Verſ. 18. Pride goeth before deſtruction, and an haughty ſpirit before a fall; ſee chap. 11. 2. ſaying, that when pride cometh, then ſhame cometh. Chryſoſtome inquiring quiring into the reason hereof saith; That pride makes a man to fall by the weight thereof, sinne is heavie, and therefore by any sinne a man is in danger of being weighed downe, and falling; but humility in a sinner lighteneth his sinne, and so he cometh not to ruine by falling; but pride is so heavie, that although it be joyned with vertue, nothing of the weightinesse thereof is abated, but it presseth downe, and ruineth such as otherwise excell. Upon this ground it is added, vers. 19. Chrysost.

It is better to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, then with the proud to divide the spoyles; which is so spoken, because proud men live in contention quarrelling, and fighting for wealth and dominion, in which course they sometime get victories, and spoyles of the enemy, which they divide amongst them, of which they have wonderfull great joy; but there is not, saith he, so much joy of this, because falling attends the proud; as of humility, and conversing with the humble, although in a poore and meane estate: of such proud ones the world affords many examples, but never more then in these miserable times; but let us, that have no part or portion in such spoyles, be comforted in this, that we are in a farre better estate, because the time shall come, that he who spoyleth others, shall be spoyled, as the Prophet Esay speaketh, and then the humble abhorring from such wicked gaine, shall stand safe and sure. Vers. 19. Note.

He that handleth a matter wisely shall finde good, but happy is he that trusts in God. For, handleth a matter wisely, Hebr. is, He that understandeth upon a word על דבר משכיל one renders it, He that hearkeneth to the Word, but he goeth quite from the originall; The meaning is, he that well understands the matter, which he goeth about, shall bring it to a good effect; but for all this he must not relye, or trust upon his owne skill, but to God, who must make his attempts prosperous, otherwise, how wise soever he is, and circumspect, he shal doe no good on it. Vers. 20 Musset.

Some going upon the signification of דבר a word say, that he who can handle his tongue well, and speake eloquently, prevaileth in speaking; but he that wanteth this faculty and trusteth in God, shall have best successe, and be happiest in the end. The reader may understand it either way, yet this seemeth to me to be best.

The wise in heart shall be called prudent, and the sweetnesse of the lips increaseth learning. Here a learned man, and one that speakes graciously, and sweetly, are compared together: the first is worthily said to be learned, who hath a wise and understanding heart, but the other doth most good to other men, bringing them by his teaching to understanding, which the other doth not, who keepeth his learning to himselfe. But it is not hereby meant, that any man, who is unwise in heart, that is unlearned, can speake so, as to bring others to learning, but when a learned man hath also eloquence, and useth it, he increaseth in learning more and more himselfe, and edifieth others in knowledge and grace; yet he that wants such utterance, having wisdome within him, is counted prudent also. Vers. 21.

Understanding is a well-spring of life to him that hath it, but the instruction of fooles is folly. This cometh well next unto that of the sweetnesse of the lips increasing learning: for knowledge thus used, is as a well-spring of life, abounding the more, as that doth the more it floweth forth, Hebr. for him that hath it, is him that possesseth it; betwixt which Plato makes this difference, He hath wisdome, that hath the theory thereof, but he possesseth it that hath the practise also, as a man taketh possession of a thing by his Bond: but the instruction of fooles is folly; That is, foolish wicked men teach nothing, that tendeth to life, or reformation from sinne and wickednesse, but rather to increase it more, and so to increase folly, because wickednesse is the greatest foolishnesse that is in the world. Vers. 22. Chap. 10. 11.

The heart of the wise teacheth his mouth, and addeth learning to his lips; the vulgar, addeth grace to his lips; the word לקח signifieth either Learning, Sweetnesse, or Law; the meaning is, he that is of a wise heart, by meanes of the wisdome that is in him, governeth his tongue so in ordinary talke, as that it speaketh not but like a tongue well instructed, and when he cometh to make an Oration, such matter, and so well set forth cometh there-from, as that it is sweet and delightfull Vers. 23.

full to the hearer, and is accounted the tongue of the learned; but it is to be noted that he ſaith a wiſe heart doth this, he premeditateth firſt that uttereth ſuch learning, he ſpeaks not ex tempore.

Verſ. 24. Pleaſant words are as an honey comb ſweet to the ſoul, and health to the bones, becauſe he had ſaid, that the heart of the wiſe addeth learning to the lips, or a ſweet and delightfull ſpeech, now if any man ſhall ſay, what is this to the hearer? It is, ſaith he, as an honey comb, chearing him both body and minde, be it in time of danger by enemies, in time of ſadneſſe of ſpirit, or being in the way of deſpaire; for now to ſpeake comfort, and encouragement doth much worke upon the ſoule, as being more delightfull then any other thing.

Verſ. 25. For Verſe 25. ſee before Chap. 14.12.

Verſ. 26. He that laboureth, laboureth for himſelf, his mouth craveth it of him. Tremel.

Tremel. He that is troubleſome troubleth himſelf, for his mouth recoyleth upon himſelf, expounding it thus, to what trouble a man putteth another by his evil tongue, either by falſly accuſing, by ſlandering, or tale-bearing, or giving counſel of miſchief againſt him, it ſhall come accordingly to himſelf, ſo Pſ. 7.15,16,17. This, I confeſſe, is not diſagreeable to the Hebrew, עמל ſignifying to labour; it ſignifieth alſo perverſe, and a perverſe man putteth another to much trouble, and אכם rendred craveth, ſignifieth hath bent or recoiled upon him. I cannot therefore but approve this expoſition and ſenſe, and the rather for that which followeth Verſe 27.

Verſ. 27. A wicked man diggeth evill, and a fire burneth in his lips, for what is this, but a confirmation of this, that the trouble, which with his mouth he ſtirreth up againſt others, recoileth upon himſelfe, becoming a fire in his owne mouth to burn and torment him? And if we looke before to verſe 24. we may plainly ſee if there be any coherence in theſe verſes, as doubtleſſe there is, becauſe in many together the lips and tongue are ſpoken of, that after the commendation of a good tongue, ſuch as is the tongue of the wiſe, now he beginneth to reprove and threaten ſuch as

Beda. have troubleſome, dangerous, and vexing tongues; yet becauſe the ſtreame of Interpreters expound it of labour, he that doth labour can doe no otherwiſe, ſince

Gen. 3. that fatall neceſſity laid upon Adam for eating with his mouth the forbidden fruit, and upon all his poſterity, In the ſweat of thy brow thou ſhalt eat thy bread till thou returne to the duſt, Man muſt labour, his mouth requireth, or craveth it of him; I have thought good to mention this alſo, if there be any that had rather ſtill follow it.

For the next words, A wicked man diggeth evill; the meaning is, he ſecretly plotteth evill againſt another, as he that by digging under the ground doth ſecretly prepare to deſtroy others by blowing them up; and fire is ſaid to burne in his lips, becauſe ſo hot and fierce ſpeeches come from him, or provoking ſpeeches, which, as

Jam. 3. a fire, ſet on fire the whole courſe of nature, as James ſaith.

Lavater. Lavater by this his digging underſtandeth his great paines-taking in ſinning, becauſe they that dig in Mines, labour greatly both night and day. A righteous man may fall into ſinne, but he is a wicked man, called here a ſonne of Belial, that taketh great paines to doe evill. And the word dig is to be noted, for hereby is ſhewed, as a man digging turnes up, and diſcovers things before hidden in the ground, ſo the wicked lay open againſt others, things done long before and forgotten, to make them the more odious.

Greg. Naz. As for their having fire in their lips, but yet digging evill, Nazianzen ſetteth this forth by a ſimilitude taken from the mount Ætna; as that burneth firſt long within, no noiſe being heard, but at length it maketh a terrible noiſe, and caſts out fire; ſo the wicked conceale long their malice, ſecretly plotting miſchiefe, but at length they thunder and lighten, as it were, the fire which they had within before, now breaking out; but as was ſaid before, it ſhall be a fire to himſelfe as well as to others, as no man can hold fire in his mouth without burning him.

Verſ. 28. A froward man ſoweth ſtrife, and a whiſperer ſeparateth chiefe friends. How odious they are that make diſcord, ſee before Chap. 6.19. The vulgar hath it, verboſus ſeparat principes, and Heb. it is אלוף a Captaine, or Prince; the meaning then is, that by the peeviſh and perverſe, who backbite and ſlander their neigh-neighbours, ſtrife ariſeth and by the tale-bearer, that ſecretly whiſpereth in the eare, even the Prince is brought to be at variance with his ſubjects, and one Prince with another, to the diſturbance of the publike peace, which ſhould make tale-bearers, and back-biters moſt odious to all men: and to give the poſie of Auguſtine, who ſo loveth by his ſayings to gnaw upon the fame of others, let him know that he ſhall not be welcome to my table. How this proverbe was verified, ſee in the example of Ziba againſt Mephiboſheth, and of Doeg againſt Ahimelech the High-prieſt.

A violent man enticeth his neighbour, and leadeth him into the way that is not good. By the violent man here, underſtand one that is very urgent in moving to things, to which if they can perſwade, ſuch as are drawne by them in the end ſhall finde to their coſt, that they were evill and pernicious. Such are ſeducers to hereſie, theeves, and robbers, that perſwade to robbery and blood-ſhed, of whom Chap. 1. malicious men, that by faire ſpeeches draw others to places, where they may take advantage againſt them, and kill them, as Cain did Abel, and ſuch as move to runne to riot. Verſ. 29.

He ſhutteth his eyes to deviſe froward things, moving his lips he bringeth evill to paſſe. Of the wicked deviſing evill, and ſhutting his eyes, or winking therewith, ſee before Chap. 6. 13. the vulg. hath it aſtoniſhed in his eyes, but Heb. it is ſhutteth, it hath alſo biting his lips, but the word קרץ ſignifieth either annuere, or innuere, or ſuccidere, to grant, intimate, or cut, and in regard that theſe are ſignes of a man bent to miſchiefe to winke with his eyes, and to bite his lips, which is as it were a cutting of them; I ſee no reaſon of rejecting this reading. And the violent man is ſaid to ſhut his eyes when he is plotting miſchiefe, becauſe when the eyes are ſhut, and there are no objects to diſtract the minde, it can more intentionally thinke upon things, therefore the earneſt ſtudy of the wicked about doing evill is hereby ſet forth, as before by digging. Verſ. 30.

The hoary head is a Crowne of glory, if it be found in the way of righteouſneſſe. This is ſpoken to ſhew what honour belongeth to old age, that neither the ancient may be aſhamed of their gray haires, nor deſpiſed, but honoured as the Law commandeth; Thou ſhalt riſe up before the hoary head, &c. But it is an hoary head in the way of righteouſneſſe, ſuch as have lived honeſtly in their younger time, or in their age, at the leaſt are converted, are thus honourable, not the wicked who live in the ſinnes of youth. To ſhew this the Romans had two Temples, the one of Vertue, the other of Honour, and that of Vertue ſtood firſt, and a man muſt goe through it, that would come to that of Honour. And Cicero ſaith, not hoary haires, or wrinkles bring authority and honour to the aged, but the age going before lead in honeſty. Seneca ſaith, that an elementary old man is a filthy and ridiculous thing; ceaſe to will the ſame things (O old man) which thou willedſt being a childe, let this be thy work, think upon this, to put an end to thoſe evils: where by the elementary old man he underſtandeth one that in age for ignorance and rudeneſſe is like unto a childe. And Chryſoſtome ſaith, gray haires are then honourable, when they doe thoſe things that become them, but when the old doe youthfully, they are more ridiculous then the young. Verſ. 31.

Chryſoſt. in Hebr. Hom. 7

He that is ſlow to anger is better then the mighty, and he that ruleth his ſpirit, better then he that taketh a City. Valiant men that doe great exploits againſt the enemy are much eſteemed of and honoured; but the patient man is more excellent then he, if he hath not the like power over his affections and paſſions; for he prevaileth againſt ſpirituall enemies, that fight againſt the ſoule, the mighty man onely againſt corporeall, and then is overcome by ſpirituall, wrath, luſt, or covetouſneſſe, or luxury, as Sampſon having overcome the Philiſtims, was made a ſhame to Dalilah; Hercules to Omphale, and Alexander the Great to luxury and wrath; for his ſervant a man is made, of whom he is overcome, and he that is overcome of corruption, is the ſervant of corruption, and in bondage. Chryſoſtome compareth the man that ruleth his owne ſpirit to a King, ſaying, that he is inveſted with more glory, then he by his Crown, and Imperiall Robes. Againe a patient man under ſufferings is by him preferred before the ſtrongeſt man, becauſe he, although weake, and lying upon his ſicke-bed, beareth that with invincible courage, that the ſtrong cannot. Verſ. 33. Beda.

The lot is caſt into the lap, but the whole diſpoſing thereof is of the Lord. Some underſtand this as ſpoken of election, as if he had ſaid, it is a thing hidden, as a lot is in the boſome, who are elected; but when death cometh, this ſhall bee made manifeſt, the Lord will make it knowne, and diſpoſe of every one as he hath appointed. Others, of Gods judgements befalling the wicked, the evills allotted unto them for their wickedneſſe, come as lots into their boſome; but this is not by chance or fortune, but by Gods diſpoſing: of the ſame meaſure that men mete to others repayed into their boſome, ſee Luke 6.38.

But the common Expoſition is according to the letter, although lots goe together accidentally, and to man it ſeemeth caſuall, that one draweth one lot, or hath it drawne out unto him, or another to another, yet God ordereth them ſo, either for the taking of offenders, as in the caſe of Achan and Jonathan, or the aſſigning to one man one portion, and another to another, as in the caſe of dividing the land of Canaan amongſt the children of Iſrael, or for chooſing aright to an holy and high office, as Matthias was choſen for an Apoſtle.

Caput de ſortilegiis.

And this uſe of lots is ſtill lawfull, although in the Decret. Extran. cap. ult. this laſt be denied now. There is another ſort of lots alſo, viz. divinatory, whereby heathen men have uſed before hand to finde out events to come, in going out to war, and ſucceſſes about other things; for this is forbidden, Deut. 18.10. and it is an abomination, becauſe man thus prieth into things kept ſecret by God, till he is pleaſed to manifeſt his will herein, unleſſe it ſeemeth good unto him to doe it by ſome of his ſervants the Prophets.

Lavater.

Lavater here noteth that the word rendred lap, ſignifieth the middle, and therefore the midſt of an urna, or hollow veſſell is meant, whereinto lots were wont to be put and ſhaken together, and then drawne forth. And he noteth, that what is here ſaid, is not meant onely of lots, but of all things, which to us are moſt caſuall, they are yet diſpoſed to come thus to paſſe by the Lord, ſo farre extending his providence, that a ſparrow falleth not to the ground without his will, that fortune or chance may not be once named amongſt us any more, but providence in all things.

A wiſe ſervant ſhall have rule over a ſonne which cauſeth ſhame, and ſhall have part of the inheritance among brethren. The vulg. over fooliſh ſonnes. and he ſhall divide the inheritance amongſt brethren. Heb it is a ſon that cauſeth ſhame, and ſhall divide in the midſt of brethren; not have a part amongſt them, but by reaſon of his wiſdome, have this truſt committed to him by their Father; but forſomuch as he that maketh his parents aſhamed of him, is a foole, as he is called, Chap. 10.1. the vulg. hath well rendred it fooliſh. This is ſpoken according to that, which was oft done of old, when a father having fooliſh ſonnes, but a wiſe and faithfull ſervant, gave him power over his children to teach and chaſtiſe them, and in fine to part his goods amongſt them, as he ſhould ſee might be beſt for them.

Allegory.

Some apply this myſtically to the Gentile preferred before the Jew, whom God firſt owned for his ſonne, but he being fooliſh and unbeleeving, he adopted the Gentile beleeving, ſo that now he cometh to inherit in the midſt of them, they being by them ruled over.

Ambroſe. Chryſoſt. Rodolph: Lavater.

The fining pot is for ſilver, and the furnace for gold, but the Lord tryeth the hearts. Here a compariſon is made betwixt God and man, to ſhew how he trieth mens hearts; man by trying gold or ſilver in the fining pot purgeth out the droſſe, and ſo puriſieth it; thus the Lord the hearts of men by adverſity, and by his Word and Spirit, and this is often ſpoken of by Ambroſe and Chryſoſtome. But there is alſo another ſaying according to theirs, viz. as a man putteth gold into the

the fire to try the goodneſſe of it; ſo God by afflictions trieth the faith, and patience of his ſervants, that they may appeare to be true, as he did Job; of this it is ſpoken, 1 Pet. 1.7. but when he trieth thus, it is not for information to himſelfe, but that a man may the better know himſelfe, and be known to other men, and upon this triall ſhine.

A wicked doer giveth heed to falſe lips, and a lyar giveth eare to an evill tongue. Here they are cenſured that are ready to heare tales, and detractions againſt their Neighbours; it is as if he had ſaid, that none but wicked and diſſembling men, that are themſelves lyars, will doe ſo, for the Proverb holdeth in this, Like will to like; and it is not for good, but miſchiefe, that he is ſo intent to heare ſomething againſt him. Excellent ſpeech becometh not a foole, much leſſe doe lying lips a Prince. By excellent ſpeech here, underſtand ſpeaking of matters too high, and hard for him that ſpeaketh, or contrary to which he practiſeth, or is able to performe. As for a young man to diſcourſe of points moſt profound, a drunken man of ſobriety, a proud man of humility, a Philoſopher, that is without experience of Military affaires, as Phormio did once before Hannibal, who called him a foole for his labour; or a poore weake man, of ſuch and ſuch mighty acts, that he would doe, to which he is altogether unable, much leſſe lying lips a Prince, for his doings are exemplary; therefore every Prince ſhould be like to Alphonſus the King of Aragon, who was wont to ſay, That the ſingle word of a King ſhould be as much as any other mans Oath. And truly when a King makes no conſcience of his words, and promiſes, he diſhonoureth himſelfe ſo farre, that he maketh his owne Subjects to be againſt him, and thus overthroweth himſelfe. Verſ. 7.

The vulgar for excellent ſpeech, hath, Sermo compoſitus, a ſpeech compoſed; by ſome expounded deceitfull; and thus it anſwereth moſt aptly to the words following, and carrieth this ſence, It becometh not a foole; that is, the baſeſt and vileſt man to lye, much leſſe a Prince, who is the head of all others.

Baſilius the Emperour to his Sonne Leo ſaith; Make greateſt account of being true in thy ſpeeches, and having ſuch men about thee, ſo thou ſhalt be counted firme, and conſtant in all thy doings, and ſayings, and ſo thou ſhalt hold faſt unto thee the good will of all men both true and unſuſpected. But if thou ſhalt come into the ſuſpicion of lying, and vanity, thou ſhalt be convinced to doe things unworthy the imperiall Majeſty, and thou ſhalt bring it to paſſe, that thy Subjects ſhall be alwayes fearefull, and uncertaine of all things, and, as men ſcandalized, quaile in their affections towards thee. Baſil, cap. 29. lib. exhort. ad Leonem filium.

And Tho. Aquinas ſaith, The Prince ought to beware of lying as of poyſon, he takes heed of bodily poyſon, ſo as that his Cooke, and Taſter, muſt firſt taſte, and try his meat, before he eateth it, leaſt it be poyſoned; much more ſhould he beware of the poyſon of lying, which is herein worſe then other poyſon, that it killeth being but in the mouth; for Wiſd. 1. The mouth that lyeth, ſlayeth the ſoule. This poyſon had the Serpent in his mouth, when he tempted Evah, which made him infamous to all Generations; and the Prince that hath it, becomes hereby the Tho. Lavater. To a precious Stone a gift is compared, becauſe great are the vertues thereof; by one the bloud is ſtenched, by another poyſoning cured, or prevented; ſo is the force of gifts not only in Judges, but in all men; whereupon Philip the King of Macedon was wont to ſay, An Aſſe laden with gold, is able to enter into any City; and of him Plutarch ſaith, It was not Philip, but Philips gold that won Grecia.

Deut. 16. 19 hath a point in the left horne, and ſo is of the ſame valour with ס underſtand, to what Prince, or Judge ſoever it cometh, it makes him in Judgement to doe like a foole, or a mad-man, that ſeeth not the right, as he that takes bribes doth not, but like a man having his eyes blinded, for which it is ſaid, that Gifts blinde the eyes; but the word שכל ſignifieth, either to underſtand, or to proſper, and therefore in vulgar it is prudentes intelligit; That is, makes the Judge, or Prince to underſtand his meaning, that giveth him the gift, and to be of the ſame minde with him; but I rather thinke, that it ſhould be read word for word, according to the Hebrew, in all that it turneth to, it maketh to underſtand; but it is by that wiſdome that

Verſ. 10. A reproofe entreth more into a wiſe man, then an hundred ſtripes into a foole. As divers bodies are diverſly affected at ſtripes, the tender being ſenſible of the leaſt blow, but the hard not at very great ſtripes; ſo it is with the foole in reſpect

Quintus Curtius of the ingenuous, as Quintus Curtius ſpeaketh of a noble ſpirited Horſe, the very ſhadow of a whip is enough to him, but to a dull Jade not many ſtripes. And Hieron. Jerome ſaith, They need not to be ſpurred, whoſe owne reaſon is their Miſtris, and their Conſcience their Rod; as Polipores muſt by beating much be made fit for ſeaſoning, that they may be pleaſant meat, being otherwiſe hard, and diſtaſtfull, ſo a foole muſt have much beating.

Verſ. 11. An evill man ſeekes only rebellion, therefore a cruell meſſenger ſhall be ſent againſt him; Hebr. A rebell only ſeekes evill. Having before ſhewed the difference betwixt the wiſe man, and the foole, in the point of correction, now he ſheweth a reaſon, why the foole is not reformed, how much ſoever he be beaten, viz. he is a rebell, ſtomaching correction ſo, as that he rather ſeekes to miſchiefe Father, or Magiſtrate, that puniſheth him according to his deſerts, then ſubmits himſelfe to be hereby reformed, therefore a cruell Meſſenger ſhall be ſent againſt him, Hebr. either Meſſenger, or Angell, and I thinke it better to render it Angell, and ſo it is alluded to the Angell, that God ſent out againſt rebellious Pharaoh, who deſtroyed all the firſt borne in Ægypt in one night; for ſo likewiſe all fooliſh rebels againſt God, and his Vicegerents, that deſpiſe correction, ſhall aſſuredly in the end be deſtroyed.

And the like is to be held touching thoſe, that being reproved, and ſmitten with the tongue of their ſpirituall Paſtor, meditate miſchiefe againſt him therefore. Some expound it of quarrelſome and contentious perſons, who ſhall at length meet with their match, who ſhall as much hurt them, as they have hurt others.

Let a Beare robbed of her whelps rather meet a man, then a foole in his folly. Verſ. 12. This alſo hath coherence with ver. 10, 11. for he is the foole here meant, that being provoked by correction ſeekes revenge. He in this caſe is compared with a Beare robbed of her whelps, becauſe moſt fierce and dangerous of all other Beaſts; for which, when the Lord threatens the wicked Jewes, he threatens them with coming againſt them, as a Beare, robbed of her whelps. Hoſ. 13.

The Shee Beare which is here meant, as Ariſtotle noteth, is of all other Beaſts more couragious then the Male, amongſt others the Male, and doth ſo earneſtly love her whelps, which Shee formeth by licking, that if they be taken away, ſhe runneth ſo ſtrongly to recover them againe, that ſhe breakes through the very Nets, which are ſet to catch wild Beaſts, and ſhe ſets upon, and teareth him, whoſoever he be that cometh in her way; ſo a foole greatly loveth, and doteth upon the conceptions of his owne minde, and his owne wayes, ſo that he is bent to miſchiefe all thoſe that croſſe him herein, and in this regard it is worſe to have to doe with him, then with ſuch a Beare, becauſe that man by his wit may avoyd the danger of the Beate, but not ſo eaſily of ſuch a foole, who hath knaviſh wit enough to plot miſchiefe againſt him, although in reſpect of all true wiſdome he be a foole. Ariſtot.

Who ſo rewardeth evill for good, evill ſhall not depart from his houſe. There are ſix differences ſaith Auguſtine: 1. Not to render evil for evil. 2. To render good for evil, theſe are the properties of good men. 3 Not to render good for good. 4. To render evil for good, the one of theſe evil men doe, the other the worſt of men. 5. To render good for good. 6. Evil for evil, the laſt of theſe is of middle men, the other comes nearer to the good. Verſ. 13. Auguſt. in Pſal. 8.

But how is it ſaid, that evil ſhall not depart from the houſe of the worſt of theſe? ſhall their Children be purſued with evil becauſe of their fathers ſins? Anſ. It is meant of his houſe only that doth ſo, the Son after the Father, the good Son of the evil Father not.

The beginning of ſtrife, is as one that letteth out water, therefore leave off contention before it be medled with. As a breach made in the banke of a River, the water runneth out with ſuch violence, that it cannot be ſtopt againe; ſo contention being once begun, and not ſtopt at the firſt, by meeke and good ſpeeches, as Chap. 15. 1. therefore reſiſt the beginnings hereof, being reviled, doe not revile againe; being ſtricken, ſtrike not againe, but uſe patience. Verſ. 14. Matth. 5.

Why is there a price in the hand of a foole to get wiſdome, ſeeing he hath no heart to it? Here by price underſtand wealth, whereby a man may maintaine thoſe that be learned, and by their help attaine Wiſdome and Learning, yea, ſuch many times give maintenance to learned and wiſe men, but being done without an heart in them, either deſirous to get wiſdome, or capable thereof, they ſtill remaine voyd of all true wiſdome. The Hebrew is, and no heart, the foole hath a price, but no heart; Wealth, but not Wiſdome; And the cauſe is here denoted, he wanteth an heart affected to it, and hath an heart much more taken up with the profits and pleaſures of this world. Verſ. 16.

Now of ſuch it is demanded, by way of interrogation, Why hath the foole a price in his hand, but no heart? as if he had ſaid, Why is any man ſo fooliſh, as to be thus taken in his love with worldly goods, but hath ſo little love to that, whereby he may be ſaved? Certainly he hath not the heart of a man, but of a bruit Beaſt, with whom it is thus. And therefore it ſtands every rich man in hand, as he would not prove himſelfe a foole, to uſe his riches to the doing of deeds of charity, eſpecially to the faithfull; his authority and power to maintaine the right, and to ſuppreſſe wickedneſſe, and that he may be directed aright herein, not to ſpare for coſt, or time, to get knowledge, and grace, by reading, hearing, praying, meditating upon Note. the the Word; and to this end to get good Bookes, and able Teachers, that may further him herein. And as for himſelfe, ſo for his Children, not being ſo carefull to make them rich, as wiſe, and learned in the beſt learning.

Verſ. 17. Muffet. A friend loveth at all times, but a brother is borne for adverſity. Some render it, And is borne a brother in adverſity; expounding it of the ſame man, ſaid before to be a friend, and alwayes loving, but then ſpecially ſhewing himſelfe to be a brother, when adverſity cometh; and the Hebr. will wel beare it.

There is true love in a friend to his friend at all times, then he is conceived, as it were; but as a childe is borne in labour and pangs, ſo in the middeſt of ſorrows and miſeries, through adverſity, he that was through his continuall love before a friend, is now borne and brought forth a brother, through his conſtant cleaving to his friend, even now, when others forſake him. Before this triall he is not certainly knowne, but now he is knowne, and proved, to love with a brotherly love, according to the ſaying; As yellow gold is tried in the fire, ſo in an hard time the fidelity of a man is to be ſeene. And here the ſimilitude of Plutarch is good; As the goodneſſe of an Horſe is ſeene in the Warre; ſo the fidelity of a friend in calamity. And another ſaith, That a true friend is not like unto the beame of Scales, one end going up when the other goeth downe, but going downe through ſympathy alſo, when his friend goeth downe.

Scilicet ut fulvum ſpectatur in ignibus aurum tempore ſic duro eſt inſpicienda fides.

Auguſtine bringeth an example of a Souldier, who being in a Fight, and finding that by accident he had killed his Brother, he ſlew himſelfe alſo, that he might be in the ſame eſtate with him in death, the loweſt ebbe of all miſery; but I commend not this to imitation of any other friend.

Aug. de civit. l. 2. c. 25.

Verſ. 18. A man voyd of underſtanding ſtriketh hands, and becometh ſurety in the preſence of his friend. Of Surety-ſhip ſee before, chap. 6. 1. Here after commending the love, and conſtant affection of a man towards a friend, ver. 17. is an item given, not to be ſo forward to ſhew his love, as to be bound for his friend as a ſurety, before he deſireth him; none but a foole, and one that conſidereth not the danger that may follow will doe ſo, but when neceſſity requireth truly.

Verſ. 19. He loveth tranſgreſſion that loveth ſtrife, and he that exalts his gate ſeekes deſtruction. The word פשע here uſed, ſignifieth either prevarication, or rebellion, which are all one; for he, whoſe heart is ſet upon ſin, and delighteth in it, is a rebell againſt God, and ſuch is every contentious perſon; And his Gate he exalteth, that carrieth an higher ſayle then his Ship will beare, that liveth farre above his means; he is like unto one, that climbeth up unto an high Hill, where for want of firme ſtanding, or any thing to hold him up, he falleth downe head-long and periſheth.

The laſt words here ſeeme not to anſwer to the former, but if by him that loveth tranſgreſſion, and loveth ſtrife, we underſtand a proud man, as was ſaid before, Onely by pride doe men make contention, then it may be conceived to anſwer very well thus; He that is addicted to ſtrive, and ſet himſelfe againſt other men, magnifying himſelfe, howſoever he offendeth others by ſo doing, as one that lifts himſelfe up too high, ſhall meet with ſome, that will by contending with him, be his overthrow.

As a man, that buildeth his houſe high above his Neighbours, whereby their light is hindred, exceeding herein the proportion by Law allowed, is made, to his great detriment, to pull it downe againe; ſo he, that through his pride makes ſtrife, when he ſeekes to exalt himſelfe, ſhall be abaſed.

Verſ. 20 He that hath a froward heart findeth no good, and he that hath a perverſe tongue falleth into miſchiefe; For perverſe, ſome read, crafty tongue; The meaning is, that both an evil heart, that deviſeth evil, and an evil tongue uttering it, bring to deſtruction; the very thoughts of the heart, and the words of the mouth ſhall be the condemnation of many men.

Note.

Verſ. 21. He that begetteth a foole doth it to his ſorrow, and the father of a foole hath no joy. The like was ſaid before of a Mother, bearing a fooliſh ſonne, where enough hath been ſaid for expoſition; onely it may be added, the Father hath ſorrow, becauſe a man hath hope to live in his ſonne after his death, his houſe continuing tinuing in good fame and credit, but if he be fooliſh, he ſeeth nothing, but matter of griefe, both for the preſent, and the future.

A merry heart doth good like a medicine, but a broken ſpirit dryeth the bones. Of this ſee before Chap. 15. 13. Verſ. 22.

A wicked man taketh a gift out of the boſome to pervert the wayes of judgement. This is underſtood by Lavater two wayes, either of the Judge, who if hee taketh gifts to judge contrary to juſtice, is a wicked man; or of him that holdeth plea with his neighbour, if he ſecretly taketh a gift, as it were out of his boſome, to procure his favour to judge for him unjuſtly, he is a wicked man; and ſo are all that give money for preferment in the Church, or in the Commonwealth, to a beneficiall place for preaching, or doing the part of an officer in any Court of juſtice; for he that buyeth this power, will undoubtedly exact upon thoſe with whom he hath to doe, which is a great wickednesſe. Verſ. 23. Lavater.

Wiſdome is before him that hath underſtanding, but the eyes of a foole are in the ends of the earth. It appeareth by a mans countenance whether he be wiſe, or fooliſh, the wiſe man hath a ſtayed looke, and grave countenance, but a fooles eyes are caſt about this way, and that, and his countenance is ridiculous. The countenance, ſaith Tully, is the image of the minde; and Caſsiodor, the habit of the minde is knowne in the ſtate of the body, hereby the hidden man of our heart is knowne either to be lighter, more boaſting, or turbulent, or contrariwiſe, more grave, conſtant, purer, and riper. Verſ. 24. Tull. de orat. l. 3. Caſſiod. Epiſt. l. 4.

There is alſo another very good Expoſition of theſe words, wiſdome is the thing at which the underſtanding man looketh, and whereupon he ſetteth his heart, but the foole upon the lands ends, to inlarge his fields and worldly poſſeſſions, as much as he can by any meanes. But he that lookes at wiſdome deſireth above all things to doe juſtly, and to this end to increaſe his knowledge in the word of God, counting none ſo great wiſdome as that which is learned from hence; This is the ſame in effect with ver. 21. for part of it, and for the whole, with chap. 10. 1.

But here it is added, after theſe words, A fooliſh ſonne is a griefe to his father, and bitterneſſe to her that bare him. Verſ. 25.

Alſo, It is not good to puniſh the juſt, or to ſtrike Princes for equity; it being meant, that ſuch Children indeed are to be ſeverely puniſhed, but their good Parents, who have endeavoured to forme them better, although with ill ſucceſſe, are not to be puniſhed; no more is a Prince, or Magiſtrate ſet up by the King, if he proceedeth according to Juſtice and equity, although his Government ſucceedeth not, as he deſireth, thoſe that be under it, offending the King, and his Lawes, they are to be ſmitten, but not he therefore. Verſ. 26.

Some expound it as depending upon ver. 25. as if two ſorts were here propounded, who are not to be puniſhed; 1. Any juſt man. 2. A juſt Magiſtrate, from ſtriking whom every one is to forbeare, much more for his relation to the King, or Emperour, whom he repreſenteth, and therefore the diſhonour done to him, is judged by the Imperiall Law to redound to the King, and he that doth it to be puniſhed, as if he had done the ſame to the King.

Some make not two ſorts here, but one only; by juſt men in the firſt place, underſtanding Magiſtrates, and expounding the next words, as further ſetting forth their imployment, about doing right, and the Hebrew word will well beare this; To puniſh the juſt is not good, to ſmite Princes for right; as if it being asked, what is meant by puniſhing the juſt, he had anſwered, To ſmite Princes; men having rule for the ordering of all things juſtly, and rightly, and doing accordingly. And in ſaying it is not good, he meaneth, that it is very evill.

And the chiefe Magiſtrate, ſaith Lavater, although he doth unjuſtly, is not by man to be ſmitten, but the other Magiſtrates may by conſent depoſe him: in which laſt, I would he had either not affirmed it, or ſhewed ſolid ground for it, becauſe God ſaith, By me Kings reigne, and I take them away, and give them in wrath, as he did by Saul; but none elſe durſt doe it, no not David, his appointed Succeſſor, and already anointed by God. Lavater.

He that hath knowledge ſpareth his words, and a man of underſtanding is of Verſ. 27.

an excellent ſpirit. A foole hath often before been ſaid to be full of words, and the wiſe, a man of few words, according to that, The man is wiſe that ſpeaketh few words. And a man of underſtanding is of an excellent or precious ſpirit; That is, the ſame knowing man before ſpoken of, that is ſparing of his words, is hereby knowne to be ſuch, and ſo is had in price, and that which he ſaith, as a rare thing, is counted precious. Now he ſpareth his words; That is not ſo ready to ſpeake, but ſtayeth till he is asked, and when he doth ſpeake, compriſeth his matter in as great brevity as may be.

Verſ. 28. Even a foole, when he holdeth his peace, is counted wiſe, &c. So much doth it conduce to wiſdome to be of few words, and to be opportunely ſilent; as that the foole, who thus hideth his folly, refrayning from much babling ſeemeth wiſe. A great motive to refraine our tongues, and not to be ſo talkative, as moſt commonly we are.

CHAP. XVIII.

Verſ. 1. THrough deſire a man having ſeparated himſelfe, ſeeketh and intermedleth with all wiſdome; The vulgar, He that will depart from his friend ſeekes occaſions, he ſhall be exprobable at every time; Jun. A haire-brained man, Cerebroſus, Seeks according to his deſire, in all things that are he mingleth himſelfe. Muffet, He that ſeparateth himſelfe ſeeketh a quarrell, he medleth in every matter; Hebr. The ſeparated ſeeketh according to his deſire, he mingleth himſelfe in every matter; And the meaning is, the ſeparated in affection from ſuch as he formerly loved, ſeeketh occaſion of quarrelling, even as his owne evill will or deſire leadeth him; and to this end he pryeth into, and ſifteth every thing, whereupon he may take occaſion to quarrell, and fall out with his friends, although there be no juſt occaſion given him.

Here then is ſet forth the evil quality of contentious men, and falſe-hearted to their friends, they are not like the friend before ſpoken of, chap. 17. 17. but inconſtant in their love, now loving; now from loving, turning to hating, and practicing againſt their friends, ſeeking occaſion where none is, and where there is the leaſt occaſion aggravating it, and making it more. This is a foule evil, and therefore by all men to be abhorred; it was the ſinne of Achitophell againſt David, and let every one take heed of ſuch a friend, and therefore of making friendſhip with the quarrelſome, and buſie-bodies: for what love ſoever he pretendeth to thee, he is not to be truſted, within a while he will ſhew his nature towards thee, as well as towards others, and ſo will get more advantage againſt thee, to doe thee hurt.

Note.

Verſ. 2. A foole hath no delight in underſtanding, but that his heart may diſcover it ſelfe; Junius, but in the things that are in his owne minde. This ſeemeth fitly to anſwer the former verſe, according to the New Tranſlation, and intermedleth with all wiſdome; if thereby we underſtand, as ſome doe, will be talking of all manner of learning, for when he doth thus, it is not with a minde to learne, or to get underſtanding, as it is here ſaid, but hereby the fooliſhneſſe, and want of underſtanding in his owne heart is diſcovered to his ſhame; or following the reading of Junius, In the things that are in his owne minde; That is, his owne fooliſh Phantaſies, and imaginations; but the firſt reading is according to the Originall, that his heart may diſcover it ſelfe; That is, in his intermedling with all matters, ſeeking occaſion from hence to ſeparate, or alienate his affection, as hath been ſaid, he bewrayeth, that he is not delighted in underſtanding, in his witty inquiring into things, he ſheweth no heart, taken with the love of true wiſdome, but poſſeſſed with fooliſhneſſe.

Verſ. 3. Muffet. When the wicked cometh, then cometh alſo contempt, and with ignominy reproach; That is, contempt, ſhame, and reproach follow the wicked, whereſoever they become, viz. they ſhall think to change their places of habitation to come, where they they may live in more credit, it will not be ſo, but as they are in diſgrace in one place, ſo they ſhall be in another.

Some expound it of the contempt of others, whereſoever he cometh, he contemneth other men, and by laying reproaches upon them, ſeeketh to turne away mens eyes from ſeeing his vileneſſe: It may be taken either way. Lavater.

The words of a mans mouth are as deep waters, and the wel-ſpring of Wiſdome as a flowing brooke. For man, Junius hath, an excellent man, but Hebr. it is a man without an Epithite, yet ſuch a man is doubtleſſe meant, as the next words intimate; for wiſdome there ſpoken of, and a man here, are all one: the words of a man excelling in wiſdome then are as deep waters, becauſe they abound in his mouth, and he is full of them, uttering them plentifully, not ſparingly. But this is by Lavater referred to Chriſt, the words of whoſe mouth were deep, as into the bottome whereof it is hard to dive; for which cauſe, when he had ſpoken ſundry times, he expounded his Parables apart to his Diſciples. Verſ. 4. Junius. Lavater.

Beda underſtands a difference of the words of the wiſe here ſet forth, ſometimes they ſpeake ſo myſtically, that their words are as deep waters; ſometimes ſo plainly, that they are as the ſhallow waters of a Spring, which ſtand not deep, but run over to the watering of the ground about, and making it fruitfull. Some ſay, That they are compared to deep waters, becauſe they come from the depth of the heart upon due premeditation, and over-flow by the mouth to the edification of the Hearers, as Spring waters come from the veines of the earth, lying deep in Hills, and Mountaines. Beda.

It is not good to accept the perſon of the wicked, to overthrow the righteous in judgement; That is, it is a great evil in Judges ſo to doe, forbidden, Deut. 1. 17. Verſ. 5.

A fooles lips enter into contention, and his mouth calleth for ſtroakes. In this and ver. 7, 8. ſome things are ſpoken, to teach us to have a care of our tongues: he that is not wiſe enough, to know how to order his tongue, by his evil language, and provoking ſpeeches, many times ſtirres up ſtrife, and procures blowes to himſelfe, either from Parents, or Maſters, or others, who will not forbeare him. Verſ. 6.

A fooles mouth is his deſtruction, and his lips are the ſnare of his ſoule, or life; That is, he getteth not only blowes by the licentiouſneſſe of his tongue, but alſo ſometimes he is hereby brought into danger of loſing his life, as in caſe of ſpeaking treaſon. Verſ. 7.

The words of a Tale-bearer are as wounds, and they goe downe into the innermoſt parts of the belly. Of Tale-bearers ſee before, chap. 11. 13. his words are here ſaid to be as wounds in the innermoſt parts of the belly, becauſe as wounds within are moſt incurable, ſo are they. Verſ. 8.

The wounds made hereby are wrath, and enmity, and hatred ſtirred up in the heart by this meanes; and becauſe the party, to whom tales are brought, is told them in ſecret, and moſt commonly not to ſpeake of them againe; there can be no Medicine applyed to heale this wound, by the Parties making Apologie for himſelf, who is accuſed to have ſpoken ſo, or ſo.

He that is ſlothfull in his worke, is brother to him that is a great waſter. Againſt the ſlothfull ſee before, chap. 6. 6. 9. but here he is ſaid to be brother to a waſter, or ſpend-thrift, becauſe as the idle man by neglecting his Husbandry, or other buſineſſe, getteth not things neceſſary for this life, and by this meanes falleth into extreame poverty, ſo the waſter of his goods. Verſ. 9.

The name of the Lord is a ſtrong tower, the righteous runneth into it, and is ſafe. The Rabbins underſtand this of the name יהוה the foure letters whereof they compare to the foure ſides of a tower, ſo ſtrong, that a man is hereby fenced from all enemies. Some expound it of the name Jeſus, but the meaning is, The Lord is a ſtrong tower to the righteous, by his being about them, as he is when ſuch call upon him, for by ſo doing they run into this tower, and are ſafe. But it is to be noted, that not the wicked, but the righteous run into it, he that regards wickedneſſe in his heart, the Lord will not heare his prayers. Verſ. 10. Pſal. 66. 18

ccit. So the like, chap. 10. 15. but here it is ſpoken of, as being ſo in his owne imagination, who is a worldling, and truſteth in his riches, but he that doth ſhall

Prov. 23. 5 be deceived, for they have their wings, and fly away; and they are like Jonah his Gourd, ſoone withered. This verſe anſwereth well to ver. 10. where the juſt is ſaid to have God for his ſtrong tower; here the rich worldling to have his riches for his, and theſe he thinketh a wall ſufficient to defend him, againſt all the darts of his enemies caſt at him; but as Chryſoſtome ſaith, his riches are rather his priſon, and his fetters in this priſon is the love of mony, from which he can never get looſe, becauſe as Auguſtine hath it, when all other vices wax old, only covetouſneſſe waxeth young; For ver. 12. ſee before, chap. 16. 18.

Verſ. 13. He that anſwereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and ſhame unto him. This may be underſtood either of Judges giving Sentence, before that they have ſufficiently heard all Parties; or of Preachers, that raſhly enter upon the Office of Teaching, before they have attained competent learning, or expound difficult places of Scripture, of the ſence of which they are ignorant; or determine touching any point controverted, which they doe not throughly underſtand; or laſtly, of any other man, that is ready to ſpeake to any matter.

Petrarch. Petrarch compareth ſuch Judges to Muſicians, that play before that they have tuned their Inſtruments, and ſet every ſtring right, and tried them; for as hee makes an harſh ſound in mens eares, and gets nothing but ſhame; ſo a raſh Judge: And it is true alſo touching Preachers, and all other men, the common cenſure of ſuch is, That their tongues run before their wits.

Verſ. 14. The ſpirit of a man will ſuſtaine his infirmity, but a wounded ſpirit who can beare? That is, if a man be diſeaſed bodily, but hath a good Conſcience, and be not troubled herein, he can beare with comfort both this, and all outward croſſes; but if he be troubled within, he cannot beare that; his wealth, his wife, children, friends, mirth, or muſicke made him are nothing to him, to eaſe this griefe, only God can doe it.

Cajetan. Some by his owne infirmity underſtand the evill that he hath brought upon himſelfe, this a man will frame himſelfe to beare; but by a wounded ſpirit, the miſchiefe done to him by another, this pierceth him ſo, that he cannot beare it; but for as much as the contrary hath been proved true in many Martyrs, who have joyfully ſuffered at the hands of others, this cannot ſtand. The vulgar, for a wounded ſpirit, hath a ſpirit prone to anger, it being expounded thus; A man that is of a meeke ſpirit ſuſtaineth himſelfe, and keeps in the way of moderation, when he meeteth with many provocations; but the cholerick and haſty of ſpirit, will beare nothing. This is to be rejected, becauſe it goeth from the true ſence of the words, and the firſt to be reſted in, as it is generally.

Verſ. 15. The heart of the prudent getteth knowledge, and the eare of the wiſe ſeeketh it. Of getting knowledge by hearing, ſee chap. 1. 5. here the two meanes of getting knowledge are put together by ſtudying, and meditation, to ſeeke it with the heart, and by hearing attentively with the eare, which who ſo doth not, ſhall never

Hoſ. 4. 6. attaine any meaſure of knowledge, but remaine alwayes ignorant, and be in danger of periſhing for want of it.

Verſ. 16. A mans gift makes roome for him, and bringeth him before great men; of a gift prevailing ſee before, chap. 17. 8. according to which this is commonly expounded, but diverſly by divers.

Some by gift here underſtand, a gift given to the Kings Guard, or Groomes of his Chamber, he that is liberall to them ſhall have roome made for him.

Some, a gift given to the King, or other great Perſon, if ſuch a man be in priſon, he ſhall be inlarged; if grieved for any wrong doe unto him, he ſhall have acceſſe to him granted; or if he be deſirous to be honoured with an Office about his Perſon, he ſhall be admitted; or by inlarging underſtanding, inlarging ſo, as that he may now live as he will, the Law ſhall not take hold on him to puniſh him. Or,

Laſtly, by gift, underſtanding liberality, in giving in generall, this inlargeth a man in the eſtimation of men; but of all theſe this is moſt improbable, although the word ירחיב will inlarge to him, will beare it, becauſe an inlarging is meant, which which bringeth before great men, to finde favour with them, and this is not by liberality in generall, but towards them; therefore that Expoſition is to be preferred, which agreeth beſt with the New Tranſlation. He obtaineth great inlargement, through the favour of great men, to come freely to them, to be ſet at liberty from bands, or ſuch as moleſt him, yea, and he may be bold alſo to live in a licentious way; of ſo great force are great gifts with corrupt Princes: All good ones therefore take yee heed of being thus corrupted, as yee are often ſtreightly charged. Note.

He that is firſt in his owne cauſe ſeemeth juſt, but his neighbour cometh and ſearcheth him. This is made by R. Ezra, to agree with ver. 16. thus; A gift doth ſo make way for a man, that although another hath been before him, and made his caſe appeare to be juſt, yet he coming prevaileth, to make the Judges ſearch againe into it, ſo as that at laſt it is found naught, and this bribing mans cauſe good. Verſ. 17. R. Ezra.

Junius, He that cometh firſt commonly telleth ſo good a tale for himſelfe, that his cauſe is thought to be good, but his adverſary coming, he layeth open the caſe ſo, as that it appeares to be naught; and this is according to our common Proverb, One mans tale is good, till anothers be heard. Junius.

Lavater expounds a mans being firſt in his owne cauſe, of his accuſing and judging himſelfe for his ſins, and ſo clearing himſelfe there-from; he that doth ſo, is fit to inquire into, and to judge of the ſins of others. Lavater.

The vulgar not much differing here-from, renders it; The juſt is firſt accuſer of himſelfe, his friend cometh and findeth him out; whereupon Chryſoſtome ſaith: Tell thou thine iniquities firſt by confeſſing them, tarry not till they be laid open before thee, ſo thou ſhalt make dumbe the mouth of thy adverſary. In the Courts of men confeſſe firſt, and the Judge can ſhew thee no favour, but contrariwiſe, before God to confeſſe, is the way to get favour, to be forgiven. Chryſ. Hom. 4. in Gen. 1 Ioh. 1. 8.

To the ſame effect Ambroſe compareth a man confeſſing, before his ſinnes are urged againſt him, to one that ſeeth a Wolfe, before the Wolfe ſeeth him, the Wolfe in this caſe cannot hurt him; but if the Wolfe ſeeth him firſt, then he hath power over him; ſo he that ſeeth his ſins firſt, & accuſeth himſelf therefore, is forgiven, and juſtified from them, neither hath the Devil any power over him, but if he doth not, that Wolfe, or roaring Lion will devour him, and he ſhall not eſcape. Ambr. Hexam. l. 6. c. 4.

With this of the vulgar Latine agreeth alſo the Septuagint Tranſlation; Cyrill alſo following this, ſaith, We are by nature ſo diſpoſed, that we eſteeme leſſe of thoſe that juſtifie, and magnifie themſelves, but when any ſpeake humbly of themſelves, and of their owne doings, we are ready to praiſe them; according to this its ſaid, The juſt is firſt in accuſing himſelfe; then cometh his friend, and findeth him out; That is, when a man thus debaſeth himſelfe, another that knoweth him, and his worth, cometh and declareth him to his praiſe. The Hebrew is, The juſt man is firſt in his ſtrife, where by his accuſing of himſelfe is implyed, he being here ſpoken of, as one that is to come to be Judged, as every one muſt, for we muſt all appeare before Chriſts Judgement Seat. Cyrill, l. 2. in Iohan. Rom. 14.

And to the ſame effect our Lord biddeth, Agree with thine adverſary whilſt thou art in the way; our Adverſary is God, ſo long as we are in the ſtate of ſin, and the firſt thing about his controverſie with us, is to accuſe our ſelves, whilſt we are in the way of this Life, and by ſo doing we ſhall be reconciled, and then our friend Chriſt will finde us out, and take us for ſuch as belong to him; and then we ſhall be praiſed, juſtified, and ſaved, who have before accuſed, and judged our ſelves; whereas all they that doe not, ſhall be judged as unrighteous perſons, and no friend ſhall appeare to ſave them, but they muſt periſh everlaſtingly; and herein I reſt, as the beſt ſence of this place: and to render the words, He that is firſt in his owne cauſe ſeemeth juſt, is to blinde-fold the meaning, and by miſſe tranſlating to draw the Reader to a ſence not intended; read we it therefore, The juſt is firſt in his owne controverſie, and ſo we muſt needs fall upon the ſenſe given, becauſe it is not the way in the Courts of men to meet with a friend to accuſe our ſelves, therefore it muſt be at Gods Tribunall to get into his favour. Matth. 5. 23. Note.

Verſ. 18. The lot cauſeth contentions to ceaſe, and parteth between the mighty. Of Lots ſee before, Chap. 16.33. and in what caſes lots are to be uſed.

Verſ. 19. A brother offended is harder to be wonne then a ſtrong City, and their contentions are like the barres of a Caſtle; Vulg. A brother that is holpen by a brother, is as a firme City, and judgements as the barres of a City. The words Hebr. are A brother offended, then a ſtrong City. Pagnin. underſtandeth a brother, ſupplying it thus to make out the ſenſe, to a brother having tranſgreſſed his brother, is better then a ſtrong City to defend and ſave him, for the great affection he beareth to him; and this cometh neare to the Vulgar in ſenſe, and holds to the Hebrew better, which is נפשע offended; with the Vulgar the Septuagint agreeth; for the next words, Judgements as the barres of a City; this is underſtood of true judgement given and executed, this turnes to a ſtrong defence to any City or State but the word מורדים ſignifyeth contentions, not judgements; therefore another reading, and ſenſe is followed by others, viz. New Tranſlation, this being given for the ſenſe. As the love of brethren is greateſt of all others; ſo when one is offended by the other, his hatred is greateſt, and he is moſt irreconcileable. But becauſe it is not ſaid, a brother offended is harder to be wonne, nor a brother helping a brother, I thinke another ſenſe is to be ſought, and that is this, a fraternity offended, many brethren holding together as one, are more invincible then a ſtrong City, they by whom any one of them is offended, ſhall feele their puiſſance, when they come againſt them to take revenge, to be of no little force for their cloſe holding together; as others, although all of one City, doe not, but are in their mindes diverſly divided: and then the next words anſwer to theſe thus, their contentions, when by one of them offended they are provoked hereunto, are as ſtrong, as the barres of a Caſtle, to defend themſeves if they be aſſaulted, and from thence offend others. The ſcope then is to perſwade brethren to live in love and unity one with another, as being thus made invincible, as one once ſhewed to his ſonnes, by many ſtickes bound together, he bad one of them take and breake that bundle, he could not, then another, and a third, but none of them all could; then he bade ſever the ſticks, which being done, any one of them could eaſily breake, firſt one, then another. This being done, he ſaid, If yee live together in unity, yee ſhall be as this bundle, which none can breake, but be divided, and then lye open, as moſt weake to the force of any man.

Note.

Verſ. 20 A mans belly ſhall be ſatisfied with the fruit of his mouth, and with the increaſe of his lips ſhall he be filled. How this is to be underſtood, ſee before Chap. 12.14. and 13.2. where he ſpake to the ſame effect.

Verſ. 21. Death and life are in the power of the tongue, they that love it ſhall eat the fruit thereof. Having ſhewed in the former words the benefit of a good tongue, now he inlargeth himſelf further, ſhewing, that this is life and ſalvation for ever: as on the contrary ſide from an evil tongue ſpringeth death and damnation, according to that of our Lord, By thy words ſhalt thou be juſtified, and by thy words condemned. Some underſtand it of the tongue of Judges and witneſſes, whereby ſuch as are accuſed of capitall crimes are acquitted or condemned to dye. Some underſtand the tongues of Teachers, if they ſpeake to the ſeducing and corrupting of the hearer, and he bee taken herewith, it is death both to him and his teacher: if to the building of him up in the knowledge of the truth and grace, it is life, all which is true: as alſo that the raſh and inconſiderate tongue uttering words of Treaſon and Rebellion, or to incenſe others to ſtrike and ſlay, as many times it doth, brings death: but the well-adviſed tongue following that rule, Be very wary what thou ſayeſt of any man, and to whom, eſcapes this danger and liveth, They that love it ſhall eat of the fruit thereof. This anſwereth to verſe 20. He that loveth his tongue is he that hath a great care thereof, as David, Pſal. 39. not to offend with it, but to uſe it aright, in bleſſing God and man, talking of Gods word and workes, to the raiſing up of his owne, and the hearts of others to him to beleeve, love, feare, and reverence him, this tends to the attaining of life, and ſo eating of the hidden manna, and of the Tree of life, to eating and drinking in the Kingdome of Chriſt.

Who

Who ſo findeth a Wife findeth a good thing, and obtaineth favour of the Lord. When God had made Man at the firſt, he was alone, and this he ſaid was not good for him, therefore he made Woman, and joyned her unto him, and he made her in his owne Image, as he had done man. Verſ. 22.

To this Salomon alludeth here; He that hath a wife indued with the Image of God, which is in righteouſneſſe, and holineſſe, hath a good thing, and obtaineth favour of God, becauſe he receiveth a ſpeciall favour from him, one of his owne daughters; for ſo godly women are called, 2 Cor. 6. 18. It is not meant of any wife, for ſome are very evil things, and continuall Corroſives to their Husbands, by their evil conditions, the very daughters of the Devill; he that is matched ſo, is as one that hath a wife baſely borne, and qualified accordingly; he that is matched to a vertuous woman, hath the Kings daughter to wife, for which he is for ever bound unto him. Note.

The poore uſeth intreaties, but the rich anſwereth roughly; This is ſpoken as it is commonly, but not alwayes done, if by the poore we underſtand the poore of this world; for ſome poore men are as proud as the rich, and ſpeake as ſtoutly, and diſdainfully, whereupon the Proverb ariſeth, A proud heart, and a beggers purſe; and ſome rich ſpeake courteouſly, therefore it is meant of the poore in ſpirit, who, whether they be rich or poore, ſpeake lovingly, and meekly, but if not, diſdainfully, and harſhly. Verſ. 23.

A man that hath friends muſt ſhew himſelfe friendly, and there is a friend that ſticketh cloſer then a brother, Hebr. A man of friends to joyne himſelfe in ſociety, and a lover, cleaveth more then a brother; The meaning is, he that hath many friends, let him be ſociable towards them all, and joyne with them in anſwering their love expreſſed to him with the like; for he that doth not, is worſe then a Publican, for Publicans love thoſe that love them; but if amongſt them all he findeth one above the reſt, ſingularly loving to him, as Tully ſaith, alter idem, another ſelfe, as it were, as Jonathan was to David, let him make ſpeciall account of this friend, for ſuch a one will ſtick to him, when even his owne brethren forſake him, to helpe, and doe for him, yea, being even ready to dye for him. Verſ. 24. Matth. 5.

A Father and Mother, and Wife and Children, and Brethren are neare and deare to us, but it may fall out ſo, that they may not be loving; but a true lover never changeth, as was ſaid before, he is a brother borne in adverſity; for the ſimilitude of manners knitteth the hearts of men nearer together, then ſimilitude of bodies, and outward favours; therefore a friend is faſter knit to his friend then a brother, but he is a rare one that is ſuch, and if there be any to be found it is but a friend, not friends, for as Tully ſaith, Amicitia eſt inter duos, friendſhip is but between two. Plutarch. Chap. 17. 17

CHAP. XIX.

Better is the poore that walketh in his integrity, then he that is perverſe in his lips and is a foole; Junius hath it, who indeed is a foole; ſome, for he is a foole; the word Hebrew is, and he is a foole, the word and being here as much as for. The man that is perverſe, and ill tongued, either railing, curſing, ſwearing, or ſpeaking deceitfully for his advantage, although he be rich, for ſuch a one is meant, and by Junius expreſſed, is not ſo good as a poore man, that walkes uprightly towards all, and hath a good tongue in his head: which is ſpoken to pull downe the pride of rich men, who are commonly for their wealth thought the beſt men, and ſo they thinke of themſelves, howſoever their tongues run riot; but before God they are the worſt, and the poore honeſt men, whom they deſpiſe, the beſt, and they are ſuch as are threatned with the cutting out of their tongues. Verſ. 1. Pſal. 12.

That the ſoule be without knowledge it is not good, and he that is haſty with his Verſ. 2.

his feet ſinneth; Jun. He who diſcerneth not that which is good, ſinneth alike with him, that is haſty with his feet; That is, as a man, that goeth before he looketh, to ſee whether the way be right or wrong, muſt needs wander out of the way; ſo he that conſidereth not that which he is about to doe, whether it be lawfull or not, is in danger of going from the way of Gods Commandements, and thus of ſinning; Hebr. Alſo where there is not a knowing ſoule, it is not good, coupling this with ver. 1. where he averred the perverſe in his lips to be a foole, as every ſinner is; now he addeth further, where knowledge is wanting, the man cannot be good, that is, wiſe, and therefore a foole alſo; and to illuſtrate this further, he compareth him with one haſty to goe, before he knoweth the way; for every man is a Traveller, but the ignorant perſon knoweth not which is the way, therefore he muſt needs erre, and be in danger of death, and never coming to life; for which cauſe it is neceſſary for every one to get knowledge at the leaſt of the Principles of the Chriſtian Religion, the Lords Prayer, the Creed of the Apoſtles, and the ten Commandements, as Lavater ſaith.

Lavater.

But to ſpeake a little upon the words; There is no good in that ſoule that wants knowledge, becauſe there is nothing good for the ſoule, but Grace; and worldly goods are not worthy the name of goods, if this be wanting; for the goods of this world are good to the good, but to the evil, evil. And of grace knowledge is the beginning, according to that of Chriſt; This is life eternall, to know thee the only true God, &c. and if life, then grace that leades to life, muſt be referred to knowledge, and a ſoule void of knowledge is void of grace.

Bona hujus mundi ſunt bonis bona, malis mala. Ioh. 17. 3.

Verſ. 3. The fooliſhneſſe of a man perverteth his way, and his heart fretteth againſt the Lord; That is, when he through ignorance hath erred, and gone out of the way, and ſo is in danger of everlaſting deſtruction; he murmureth and complaineth againſt God, who hath made him ſo: or in caſe of Judgements by God executed upon him here, when as his owne fooliſhneſſe, and perverſneſſe only is the cauſe hereof; for God tempteth no man to ſinne, yea, he exhorteth all men to turne from ſinne, that ſo they may eſcape death, the reward thereof.

Iam. 1. 14. Ezek. 18.

Auguſt. Wherefore both Auguſtine, and Chryſoſtome, inveigh againſt thoſe, that impute their ill qualities, and the fruit thereof, death, to Fate, and Deſtiny, to the Conſtellations under which they were borne, and ſo could not poſſibly avoyd being ſuch. But hereby, ſaith Auguſtine, to juſtifie themſelves, they accuſe God, by whom the Starres are governed, as having a malignant quality in him, and putting it into them, which as Chryſoſtome ſaith, is the higheſt degree of ſinning, and ſhall be moſt ſeverely puniſhed; as he that layeth any foule evill, worthy of death, to the charge of another, ſhall dye for it, as the Law hath appointed.

Verſ. 4. For ver. 4. ſee before, chap. 14. 20.

Verſ. 5. A falſe witneſſe ſhall not be unpuniſhed, and he that ſpeaketh lyes ſhall not eſcape. Of the odiouſneſſe of falſe witneſſes ſpeaking lyes, ſee before, ch. 6. 19.

Verſ. 6. Many will intreat the favour of the Prince, and every one is a friend to him that giveth gifts. Of gifts, and their force, ſee chap. 18. 16. The word rendred Prince, here is נדיב liberall, which becauſe that a man may be, he muſt be a principall man of the Country, and of great wealth, it is rendred Prince; and indeed Princes ſhould be liberal, or elſe they beare their names in vaine. It is meant then upon great perſons, who are liberall, many fawne to get ſomewhat by them, pretending to ſuch all love, and readineſſe of ſervice, for the gifts ſake, which they hope to receive from them. Thus it is done towards the rich, who are able to benefit their friends.

Verſ. 7. But even the brethren of the poore hate him, much more his friends, or neighbours, that have no alliance to him, goe farre from him; for it is not meant of a ſingular friend, that cleaveth to his friend faſter then a brother, chap. 18. 24. but only of common and ordinary friends; ſee the ſame in effect, ver. 4. He purſueth them with words, yet they are wanting unto him; That is, being moſt earneſtly intreated to commiſerate him in his want.

Verſ. 8. For verſ. 8. where he that getteth wiſdome, is ſaid to love his owne ſoule, enough hath been ſaid before, ch. 4. 11, 12, 13. and ver. 9. is the ſame with ver. 5.

Delight

Delight is not ſeemly for a foole, much leſſe for a ſervant to have rule over Princes. A foole, that is, a wicked man is worthy to be beaten, and hardly intreated, not to be humoured by doing things towards him, wherein inſtead of paine he may have pleaſure, much leſſe doth the honour of chiefe rule and dominion become one of a ſervile condition; for he that is thus advanced, as ſome men of inferiour quality have ſometime beene, cometh now to rule over his ſuperiours yea, very Princes, which is moſt unſeemly, yea abſurd, neither can men of high birth, and quality long indure it. Verſ. 10.

Lavater by delight, underſtandeth any thing that a man is delighted in, as to be rich, to have authority, to be a goodly perſon and faire. Theſe things are not ſeemly for a foole, becauſe a meanes to make him more fooliſh and proud; and as for paſtimes and playes, he is herewith beſotted more and more, as not knowing how to put an end to vaine pleaſures, but following them from day to day, as a trade. And if a foole be thus made more fooliſh and proud, then much more one advanced from a ſervile and baſe eſtate to the higheſt honour, for he will be moſt proud and tyrannicall. Lavater.

The diſcretion of a man deferreth his anger, and it is his glory to paſſe over a tranſgreſsion; The Vulg. The doctrine of a man; The Heb. שכל ſignifieth underſtanding or prudence, and it is taken by ſome for the prudence of a Teacher, to be patient, although his doctrine be contemned, and he ſuffereth therefore; by others for the prudence of any man, teacher, or hearer; by this it appeareth, that he hath profited in learning, that he is ſlow to anger; which is moſt genuine, and is that which James preſcribed, Let every man bee ſwift to heare, ſlow to ſpeake, ſlow to wrath. And to paſſe by offences is his glory, ſometimes to bee as if hee ſaw not, or heard not things that might offend him, thus avoiding contention. Verſ. 11. Chap. 14. 29. Iam. 1. 19.

The Kings wrath is as the roaring of a Lion, but his favour as dew upon the graſſe. Chap. 16. 14. his wrath is ſaid to be as meſſengers of death, which is all one in effect. Touching the Lion, it is ſaid, that when he roareth, the beaſts of the forreſt, whom he hunts after, are ſo ſtricken, that their ſtrength failes them, ſo that they are not able to goe from him, and thus become a prey unto him. In like manner, when the King is angry, and ſet upon the ſlaying of any man, he cannot eſcape. Auguſtine applieth this to that anger which is for tranſgreſſing his Lawes, or juſtly conceived againſt the wicked, as King Darius in wrath caſt thoſe men into the Lions denne, who deceitfully had ſought to have Daniel deſtroyed there. But indeed whether it be for this, or upon lighter occaſion, his anger is terrible by reaſon of his greatneſſe, and therefore his favour is by all his ſubjects to be ſought, and the pacifying of his anger, when it is up; and this is ſaid to be as the dew, that is, moderate raine upon withering graſſe, making it green againe. And by ſome it is taken to be ſpoken by way of admonition to Kings to be ſlow to anger, as is commended to all, verſe 11. leſt by being precipitate herein, they make themſelves guilty of blood-ſhed unjuſtly. Verſ. 12. Auguſt.

The contentions of a wife are a continuall dropping. For the firſt part of this verſe, A fooliſh ſonne the calamity of his father, ſee Chap. 10. 1. here is recounted another miſery of a man, that hath wife and children, they being fooliſh and wicked, and ſhe a ſcold, ever checking and taunting him by one thing or another. This is compared to a continuall dropping of water into an houſe, ſo that a man cannot reſt quietly in his bed, nor ſit at his table, or eat his meat in quiet, yea, and the timber worke of the houſe is hereby corrupted and decayeth; So the married man having ſuch a wife, for his good and comfort intentionally, hath her to his continuall vexation, and the ruine of his family, the ſervants being wearied at the hearing of this diſcord, and he ſo, as that he leaveth his houſe at ſix and ſevens, and goeth to other places, where he may be more quiet, by which meanes his domeſticall affaires are neglected, and his eſtate waſted. Verſ. 13.

Houſe and riches are the inheritance of fathers, but a prudent wife is from the Lord; that is, although they come from God alſo, yet it is by meanes of fathers, who got and preſerved them through Gods bleſſing to come to their children; Verſ. 14.

dren; but a good wife is immediately given by God, as was ſaid before, in great favour, as when a King giveth a man his owne daughter to wife, and therefore this gift is to be obtained of God by prayer.

Verſ. 15. For ver. 15. Slothfulneſſe caſteth into a deep ſleep, and an idle ſoule ſhall ſuffer hunger; ſee chap. 10. 4. & 18. 9. Junius and Lavater render it, the deceitfull ſoule, and the Hebr. רמיה ſignifying deceitfull, ſo that here are two evils pointed at, which cauſe want, ſlothfulneſſe, and deceit, which is uſed in getting worldly goods; for as the idle perſon, ſo the deceitfull, ſhall in time become poore, although he may thrive for a time.

Verſ. 16. He that keepeth the Commandements keepeth his owne ſoule, but he that deſpiſeth his wayes ſhall dye; That is, regardeth not how he walketh, but is diſſolute in the courſe of his life; for the keeping of Gods Commandements is the way to life, but to live in diſobedience thereunto, to death, and thus doe all diſſolute and careleſſe perſons. If thou wouldeſt enter into life, ſaith Chriſt, keep the Commandements, therefore have no care to keep them, and be ſure to dye.

Verſ. 17. He that hath pitty upon the poore lendeth to the Lord, and look what he giveth, he will pay him againe. Chryſoſtome upon the word lending, not giving to the Lord, noteth, That this word is uſed to move even covetous men, to give to the poore, for ſuch will lend very gladly to be paid uſury; it is therefore thus ſpoken, to ſtir up even the moſt covetous to charity.

Chryſoſt. in Pſal. 38.

Baſil. Baſil upon thoſe words of Chriſt, Lend freely, looking for nothing againe, ſaith; This lending is giving, giving to the poore, from whom looke for no retribution againe; but it is a lending upon uſe to the Lord, becauſe that he will give a great deale more unto thee, then that which thou giveſt.

Yet the Lord is not altogether like unto a man that takes Money upon Uſury, becauſe it is his owne that is lent him, when it is given to the poore; and therefore his remunerating this, is of grace, not of due debt: whereas the Borrower upon uſe, muſt pay of due debt, both the principall againe, and for his borrowing. So that they who inferre hereupon, That eternall life is due to Almeſ-givers, are foulely miſtaken, becauſe man giveth not to God firſt, that he might looke for retribution, as of due debt, but having firſt received from him, and as his Steward, diſpenſeth his worldly goods to the poore.

Verſ. 18. Chaſten thy ſonne whilſt there is hope, and let not thy ſoule ſpare for his crying. Muffet, Lift not up thy ſoule to kill him. So likewiſe the vulgar; but Hebr. it is, at, or for the tumult that he maketh, let not thy ſoule ſpare him. For when Children are corrected, they will ſometimes cry out, as if they were killed, and this makes Parents to ceaſe giving them correction; but whilſt they are young, and in this regard there is hope of reforming them, this muſt not move thee, for if yeares come on, and thou ſuffereſt him till then, he will be incorrigible.

Verſ. 19. A man of great wrath ſhall ſuffer puniſhment, if thou deliver him, thou muſt doe it againe; Hebr: thou muſt yet adde; That is, thou muſt doe the ſame for him many times over, becauſe in his fury he will commit things worthy of puniſhment, and therefore it is, as if he had ſaid, As good let the Law have the courſe againſt him at the firſt, as ſave him to doe more miſchiefe.

Verſ. 20. Heare counſell, and receive inſtruction, that thou mayeſt be wiſe in thy latter end; That is, thou that art a young man, that in old age thou mayeſt be wiſe: for he that would be a wiſe old man, muſt be endeavouring to get knowledge betimes, becauſe as a Spring, riſing not farre from the Sea, never gathers much water, but runneth in a ſmall ſtreame; but the Spring that riſeth afarre off, by the acceſſion of more waters by the way, groweth to a great River, over-flowing its bankes; ſo doth wiſdome over-flow in him, that beginneth to gather it betimes, in his old age, to the refreſhing of many more; when as another, that hath not hearkned to inſtruction, remaineth deſtitute of wiſdome to his laſt end.

Verſ. 21. There be many devices in a mans heart, nevertheleſſe the counſell of the Lord ſhall ſtand; That is, mens thoughts are variable, now having thoughts to doe thus, and afterwards thus, yet never doing what they have thought thought in many things; but it is not ſo with the Lord, all his thoughts and counſels ſhall take effect, in his good time. See the ſame, Pſal. 33.

But to what end is this ſpoken? Rodolph. ſaith, In reference to that which went before, ver. 20. to direct us from whom to ſeeke counſell, that we may be wiſe. viz. not of men, for their thoughts and opinions are variable, but from God, and therefore from his Word, wherein he ſpeaketh, and giveth us all his inſtructions. Rodolph,

Some, that we may not truſt to men, who are ſo mutable and vaine; but unto God only, all whoſe words and promiſes of good ſhall ſtand, and never faile; we may take it either of theſe wayes.

The deſire of a man is his kindneſſe, and a poore man is better then a lyer; Jun. Nothing ſo much to be deſired of a man, as his benignity; That is, that he may ſhew himſelfe kind and bountifull, and he, that being rich doth not this, is not ſo good as a poore man, that hath nothing to be bountifull of, but yet is a true man, becauſe ſuch a rich man, to be excuſed from giving, lyeth, ſaying, that he is poore, and unable to give; or if he be one that giveth, he doth it not out of a ſincere and bountifull heart, but either hypocritically, ſeeking the praiſe of a bountifull man, or grudgingly, through the niggardlineſſe of his heart; either of which wayes he is a lyer. Thus Junius, and Muffet after him. Verſ. 22 Junius.

But Lavater by his kindneſſe more rationally underſtandeth the kindneſſe, or mercy of the Lord, of whom it is ſpoken, ver. 21. This all men deſire, but the wicked ſhall not obtaine it, nor the righteous, that ſtand upon their owne righteouſneſſe; but the poore penitent ſinner, that caſteth himſelfe wholly hereupon for Juſtification; and ſuch a poore man is better, then the rich Angel of the Church of Laodicea, who ſaid he was rich, but was indeed poore, miſerable, blinde, and naked. But Lavater maketh no coherence of the parts of this verſe. Lavater. Revel. 3.

Others either ſay the ſame with Junius, or expound it thus; Many men deſire wealth, pretending that if they were rich, they would ſhew mercy, and kindneſſe to the poore; but in truth it is the covetouſneſſe of their hearts, and ſo they lye, in making this the pretence of their deſire; and a poore man that is content, is better then ſuch a man, a lyer: But I reſt in that, which expounds it of the mercy of God, and ſo it may be beſt rendred, being Hebr. חסדו, his mercy, and becauſe God was ſpoken of immediately before, of the mercy of God. Rodolph. Janſen.

The feare of the Lord tendeth to life, he that hath it ſhall be ſatisfied, he ſhall not be viſited with evill. Here ſaith Lavater, are three benefits of the feare of God; 1. Life, which ſhall be long here, and for ever hereafter. 2. To be ſatisfied in time of Famine, when others want. 3. To be kept ſafe from all evill, when others ſuffer evill; not that they who feare God are free from ſufferings, but becauſe their ſufferings are not evil, but good for them, according to that of David, It is good for me that I have been afflicted. Verſ. 23.

A ſlothfull man hideth his hand in his boſome, and will not ſo much as bring it to his mouth againe. Of the ſlothfull it hath been ſpoken before, in reſpect of his ſlow going about his buſineſſe; now a greater degree of ſloth is ſaid to be in ſome; That is, of ſuch as goe with their hands in their boſome in cold weather, or in their pockets, being even unwilling to pull them out, to put meat in their mouthes. Verſ. 24. Ch. 18, 19.

Some by צלחת underſtand a Frying-pan, wherein meat is ready to burne, unleſſe it be ſoone turned, or taken out, as if that ſlothfulneſs had been ſet forth, whereby one will not make ready his owne meat; and indeed the word ſignifieth as well a Caldron, and as ſome ſay, a Frying-pan, as well as a Boſome; but becauſe it is ſaid to put it to the mouth againe, it muſt be meant of one ſet downe to eate, but ſo ſlothfull, that he puts his hand in his boſome, and will not ſo much as feed himſelfe; as I have read of certaine Gentlemen, in ſome parts of India, that doe not ſo much as put their owne meat with their hands into their mouthes, but this is done by a ſervant, that attends upon each one of them, this is done in a place called Riboth.

Smite a ſcorner, and the ſimple will beware; reprove one that hath under- Verſ. 25.

ſtanding, and he will learne knowledge. By the ſimple here underſtand one that is of an honeſt and docible nature, being ready, as a childe, if he hath erred, upon admonition, or ſeeing ſtripes inflicted upon another, to returne into the right way: By the ſcorner, one of an harſh and hard nature, upon whom admonitions will not worke, but he ſleights them all, for ſuch an one are ſtripes; for the tractable, and ſuch as are more eaſie to be reduced, it is enough to ſee them puniſhed, to make them take better heed to their wayes, or to reprove them onely, for this workes upon them more, then ſtripes upon the other.

One obſerveth here, that the word rendred underſtanding, properly ſignifieth the prudence of a Serpent, of which Albertus writeth, that if a place be haunted by Serpents, get but one of them, and kill, and burne it there, and all the reſt will be gone afarre off; ſo one being ſmitten, another is warned, and he that is, is happy, according to the ſaying, Fælix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum. Cyprian.

Happy is he, whom other mens harmes doe make to beware.

And he is too precipitant, ſaith Cyprian, that will adventure to goe where he hath ſeene another fall, and he is very unruly, into whom feare is not ſtricken, when another periſheth; but there is care of his owne ſalvation in him, that avoids the way, wherein another man came to his death, and he is provident, that is made ſolicitous by others ſtripes.

Verſ. 26. He that waſteth his father, and chaſeth away his mother, is a ſonne that cauſeth ſhame, and bringeth reproach. The word שדד rendred waſting, ſignifieth breaking, as the husbandman breaketh clods upon his land, and therefore by Vulg. is rendred afflicteth; it implieth both tearing with vile words, and making his eſtate to crumble by his riotous living; by chaſing away of his mother, his hard uſage of her is meant, whereby ſhe is made to leave her houſe to provide for her ſelfe elſewhere. Such a ſonne doth ſo ſhamefully, that he is by this meanes for ever diſcredited amongſt all men, neither will any man be for him, becauſe it will bee conceived, that he, who hath dealt thus by his owne father and mother, will much more be injurious to his other benefactors.

Verſ. 27. Ceaſe (my Sonne) to heare the inſtruction, that cauſeth to erre from the words of knowledge. Jun. Ceaſe to erre from the words of knowledge, that thou mayeſt hearken to inſtruction. Vulg. Ceaſe not to hear doctrine, neither be ignorant of the ſpeeches of knowledge; but the Hebr. is word for word, as in New Tranſlation, the meaning being, ceaſe from hearing the teaching of thoſe, that ſeduce to errour, for thus he muſt needs doe, that will heare true teaching to profit thereby; whatſoever he thinketh, that goeth to heare phanaticall men, who teach in corners, that he will onely heare what they ſay, but their teaching ſhall not hurt him, ſhall finde it contrary in the end, for he ſhall be tainted with errour, and ſo goe from the way of knowledge to his owne deſtruction. In that he ſaith, Ceaſe, he implieth a going formerly after ſuch, from which to be turned, is as much as to be turned from the way of ſinne and wickedneſſe, neither can the ſoule otherwiſe be ſaved. Thus, if we take the words as they lye in order, but by a little tranſpoſing of them, the reading of Junius may well ſtand.

Iam. 5. 18.

Verſ. 28, 29. An ungodly witneſſe ſcorneth judgement, and the mouth of the wicked devoureth iniquity. Stripes are prepared for the backe of fooles, and judgements for ſcorners; that is, a falſe witneſſe mocketh at ſpeaking the truth and judgement giving accordingly, and he ſwalloweth iniquity when he ſpeakes lyes, and makes no bones thereof, as we uſe to ſpeake; ſo Muffet. The word בלע ſignifieth not only to ſwallow, but to precipitate, by the latter of which if we take it, this expoſition may be good, the wicked ſtickes not but haſtily, and raſhly uttereth lyes. But take it for ſwallowing as it may be expounded thus, the wicked Judge ſwalloweth ſuch falſe witneſſe, and proceedeth according to them as truths, and ſo giveth falſe judgement.

Muffet.

Lavater. Lavater expounds it at large, the wicked ſwallow the wickedneſſes that they have done making nothing, as it were, of them, which is not to be miſliked. But yet there is another expoſition to be preferred, a falſe witneſſe maketh judgement given by a Judge contemptible, becauſe by his teſtimony the cauſe is carried ſo, as that wrong prevaileth againſt the right, and ſo wicked men are fleſhed in their wickedwickednesse, and made bold to swallow any sinne, hoping likewise to be justified by false witnesse, if they come to be judged; and the word ילוץ being in hiphil, and so properly signifying, make derisible, or contemptible, makes for it. The word Judgement may either be taken for the Law of God, or the last Judgement, or civill Judgement; but here it is taken the last of these wayes. And there is a phrase not unlike to this, He drinketh in iniquity like water, which more confirmeth this sense; for the words verse 29. they are plaine of themselves, although the wicked witnesse makes the eluding of true judgement a matter of sport, yet hee shall be judged in earnest therefore, and the fools back shall beare the sinnes which he hath made nothing of, when they shall prove grievous, and tormenting stripes unto him for ever. Iob. 15.

CHAP. XX.

Wine is a mocker, and strong drinke raging, whosoever is deceived thereby, is not wise; the Vulg. drunkennesse is raging, and the word שכר signifieth any drinke that inebriateth or maketh drunken, and so if we render the effect for the cause, it is drunkennesse, and thus it will best agree, wine is a mocker; that is, when a man hath drunke thereof till his heart be merry, as was Nabals, he doth ridiculously, all men being made to mocke at him, but being more drunken, he falls to raging, fighting, and killing, if he can, any that come in his way. Vers. 1. 1 Sam 25.

It is an honour for a man to cease from strife, but every foole will bee medling. To make peace where strife is begun, is commendable, for blessed are the peace-makers; but to hold up strife when it is begunne, is a wicked and foolish part. Vers. 3.

The sluggard will not plow by reason of the cold, &c. Against the slothfull, see before Chap. 19. 24. Now another of his properties is set downe, and the punishment thereof, he that is not so hardy as to plow in all weathers, but at more favourable times, is a sluggard, and shall be in want when others have plenty, and if he beggeth, he shall have nothing given him, because unworthy. Vers. 4.

Counsell in the heart of a man is like deepe waters, but a man of understanding will draw it out. The meaning is, there is deepe dissimulation in some men, who say one thing with their mouths, and thinke another in their hearts, but an understanding man by examining him, and wisely observing all passages in his answers and behaviour, will finde out the truth. Thus Muffet alleadging Prusius. But Lavater understands it of wise counsell indeed, which an intelligent man will get out of him in whom it is, for his owne better inabling. Also he propounds another exposition thus, A man having an intent to doe one thing in his minde, pretending another, hath counsell in his heart like waters lying deep in the ground, but there is some wise man, who hath a speciall faculty to discerne this, and not by his outward pretences to be deceived. And this should I prefer, but that the word used here for counsell is עצה signifying not the intentions of wicked men, except the word wicked be added, but that in wise men, who for their profound learning are able to teach others, and doe utter their grave and wise counsels, and instructions to benefit others; this they are well able to doe, because knowledge in them is as a deepe well of water, being nothing diminished by the drawing out of water, by reason of a continuall supply of more water that cometh into it. Whereas it is said, A man of understanding draweth it out, the meaning is, he that cometh to learne of such a Master, and bringeth braines with him, shall in time be made like unto him in wisdome, as by drawing water out of a Well, a great and deepe pit may be filled, and have depth of water in it as well as the other. So that the scope of this Proverbe is, to stirre up all that would be wise to draw water out of such Wells by diligently, and according to their best understanding attending to them, but then they must not bee like sieves that let the water runne out Vers. 5. Muffet. Lavater. Note.

againe, but like whole Veſſels, that will hold it, and profit in their manners hereby.

Verſ. 6. Moſt men will proclaime every one his owne goodneſſe, but a faithfull man who can finde? Tremel. Many men will commend a man for his bounty, Hebr. many a man will cry a man his bounty, and it is thus expounded; Many will ſpeake aloud every where in the praiſe of him, of whoſe bounty he hath taſted; but if that man hath cauſe to try his fidelity towards him, for all his goodneſſe, or mercy, as the word חסד ſignifieth, he ſhal hardly finde one, amongſt many, faithfull to him, to requite, or doe for him in his adverſity. The reaſon of the difference in tranſlating is, becauſe איש ſignifying a man, is in the New Tranſlation rendred each man, or each one, but without cauſe, ſeeing the ſence is good, yea beſt, as it hath been already ſet forth, according to the other reading.

Verſ. 7. A juſt man walketh in his integrity, his children are bleſſed after him; That is, he, who uſeth no fraud, or deceit, in his dealings, to get an eſtate for his Children, but in all his dealings is upright, ſhall leave children like himſelfe, unleſſe they ungraciouſly degenerate, and ſo bleſſed likewiſe from generation to generation.

Verſ. 8. A King that ſitteth in the throne of judgement, ſcattereth away all evil with his eyes. Hereby Kings are both taught their duty, to ſit themſelves in Judgement, and not to commit all matters to the judging of others, and the benefit comming hereby, they ſcatter away all evill with their eyes; wicked men ſeeing them ſo attent to adjudge the evil to death, or other ſharp puniſhments, are ſo terrified by their preſence, that they avoyd the places, where they come.

Lavater.

Plutarch. As Plutarch writeth of Cato, that the Harlots of Rome could not endure to come in his ſight; and it is certaine, that a juſt and ſober King, who is an enemy to drunkenneſſe, and wrong, doth ſo worke upon the ſpirits of his Subjects, that many of them are hereby moved to turne juſt and ſober: wherefore all Kings are to thinke upon this, and not to put off all judging from themſelves, that they may be free to follow their vaine pleaſures, and paſtimes, for they are not ſet up for that, but for juſt judging of the people: ſo that it was well demanded of one once, that ſued to the King to doe him juſtice, but had anſwer, That he was not at leiſure then to heare his Cauſe; art thou at leiſure to be King, and reigne?

Note.

And Columella, from an Husband-man preſſeth to this, ſaying, That the King that doth ſo, is like to an Husband-man, that tilleth not his ground himſelfe, but puts it out to others to plowing, which no good Husband-man will doe; for he expects a better crop of his owne plowing, then of any other man, becauſe he will doe it more carefully, and ſo deſtroy the thiſtles, and weeds, that would otherwiſe abound in his ground.

Verſ. 9. Who can ſay, I have made my heart cleane, I am pure from my ſinne? This is by ſome underſtood, as if he had ſaid, Who can be certaine in this life of his Juſtification and Salvation? but becauſe this is contrary to divers other places of Scripture, where a certaine aſſurance is taught, as Rom. 8. 1 Joh. 3. 3. 2 Pet. 1. 10 Vaſques himſelfe waveth this, as not the meaning of this place.

Others yet of his ſect, and he alſo, ſeeke to elude the plaine evidence of this place, againſt perfection of inherent righteouſneſſe in any man, by ſaying, that the meaning is, No Saint of God can ſay thus vain-glorioufly, as boaſting hereof, becauſe in humility they all acknowledge themſelves to be ſinners; for no man can ſay, while he liveth here, either vaine-glorioufly, or truly, that he is cleare from all ſinne, no not by grace aſſiſting him, becauſe there is the fleſh fighting againſt the ſpirit, ſo that he cannot doe the good that he would. Verſ. 11. Even a childe is knowne by his doing, whether his worke be pure, or whether it be right; That is, when he is young it may be diſcerned, what his diſpoſition is, as in Iſhmael at thirteen yeares of age, and in Joſiah at eight.

It is ſaid of Athanaſius, when he was a Boy, that in playing he executed the Office of a Biſhop, and was afterwards a famous Biſhop indeed; and the Areopagites cenſured a Boy to dye, becauſe that having found a Quailes Neſt he cruelly digged out the eyes of the young: From whence they gathered, that if he ſhould

liue to be a man, he would be moſt cruell towards thoſe that were under him: yet ſometimes we are deceiued herein, for ſome who are addicted to goodneſſe in their Childhood, degenerate when they are of more yeares; and contrariwiſe. Some, ſaith Lauater, becauſe the Hebrew word ſignifieth as well is hidden, as knowne, expound it ſo; then Children betimes learne the art of diſſembling their nature, and are not knowne till afterwards, of what diſpoſition they are. Lauater.

The hearing eare, and the ſeeing eye the Lord hath made, even both of them; That is, not only the bodily eye and eare, which are ſo uſefull for us in this life, but alſo the eare, and eye of the minde to heare and underſtand, and obey, and walk in his wayes; we have not theſe of our ſelues, but he giueth them, who hath made us, and all our members, and faculties of body and ſoule; wherefore our Lord ſaid to his Diſciples, To you it is giuen to know the myſteries of the Kingdome of heauen, but to them it is not giuen, that hearing they might heare, and not underſtand, &c. He had ſaid before, ver. 11. Euen a childe is knowne, whether he be pure; but here, if he be ſo, it is given him of God, for he hath made the hearing eare, and the ſeeing eye. Therefore Petrarch ſaith well, all the Doctors that are, have been, or ſhall be, cannot kindle one whit, unleſſe there be ſome ſparkes within in the minde, which being holpen, and ſtirred up, by the ſpirit of the teacher, may lay hold upon the tinder of Diſcipline, otherwiſe he ſeekes to blow up the fire in vaine. And this ſhould make us both to ſeeke to God by prayer, and to impute the grace, that is in us, to him. Verſ. 12. Mat. 13. 11, 12. Petrarch, Dial. 81. Note.

If by the hearing eare, and ſeeing eye, we underſtand the bodily eares and eyes, then it followeth, that they ſhould be uſed aright to heare his Word, to ſee his Workes, to diſcerne hereby his infinite power and wiſdome, and to glorifie him accordingly, and not to turne them to heare, and ſee vanity, whereby we may be corrupted; for this, ſaith Chryſoſtome, is againſt nature; but to hearken and looke to the other, whereby vertue may be attained, is according to nature, as we may ſee, becauſe that naturally at the hearing, or ſeeing of horrible wickedneſſes we are commonly aſtoniſhed, but at the hearing of things excellently done, we are affected with joy. Likewiſe, if we ſpeake of obſcene things, we are made to bluſh; if with our hands we ſteale, we hide it; and alſo committing Adultery, or any other groſſe wickedneſs. Note. Chryſoſt. Hom. 22. in 1 Cor.

Laſtly, he is ſaid to make the eare to heare, and the eye to ſee, to intimate his all-ſeeing eye, and all-hearing eare, that we may every where walke as in his preſence, living in his feare alwayes, and never daring to commit iniquity. Pſal. 94. 9.

But here it is ſaid, Take his garment, which may ſeeme to be contrary to the Law Deut. 24. Exod. 22. where the taking of the garment of the poore for a pledge is forbidden, or at the leaſt to keepe it all night. But to this ſome ſay, that it is not meant of ſureties, who by their owne temerity and raſhneſſe, bring themſelves to poverty, for they are well worthy to be thus puniſhed, or if no man, though through his owne fault brought to poverty may be thus uſed, then it is to be taken, as ſpoken to terrific Verſ. 16.

Touching the next words, A pledge for a ſtrange woman, in the margine of the Hebrew Bible, it is indeed a feminine ſingular, but in the text a maſculine plurall, and his pledge for ſtrangers; and thus it is rendred in vulgar Latine, and the meaning is nothing elſe, but that of him, that is ſo fooliſh as to be a ſurety, the creditor ſhould doe thus, nothing doubting of the lawfulneſſe of the fact, for which the ſame is ſaid over againe the ſecond time, and the number is varied, Strangers, for a ſtranger, to ſhew, that it ſhould be done thus, not in one, but in all caſes, the ſureties very garment ſhould be taken for a pledge, that others by him might learne more wit, and cautelouſneſſe.

Bread of deceit is ſweet to a man, but his mouth ſhall be filled afterwards with gravel; Heb. the bread of lying, that is gotten by lying and diſſembling is pleaſant at the firſt, men have great joy when their frauds take effect for a time, but afterwards it proveth gravell in their mouthes, that is, as Lavater ſaith, like little ſtones that hurt the teeth, and cannot therewith be broken, and going downe into the ſtomach cannot be digeſted, but lye heavy there. So goods evill gotten hurt him afterwards that gets them, bringing paine unto him, and lying heavy upon his conſcience, unto which heavineſſe, nothing lying heavy upon, or oppreſſing the ſtomach is comparable.

Verſ. 21. Lavater. Wiſd.3.2.

An inheritance may be gotten haſtily at the beginning, but the end thereof ſhall not be bleſſed. This is by Lavater applied to children that make away their parents, to come to their inheritance, ſuch wickedneſſe ſhall not goe unpuniſhed. He alſo applieth it to them, that deſire to have their parts given them before the time, like the Prodigall ſonne, ſee what a bleſſing followed upon it. Therefore Syracides adviſeth parents not to part with their inheritance to their children before their death; and it is a ſaying, One father can better keepe ten ſonnes, then ten ſonnes one father.

Some by an inheritance haſtily gotten, underſtand worldly goods, in getting which a man ſtayeth not till they come in by honeſt labour, but he uſeth unlawfull meanes that he may ſoon be rich; he may increaſe apace for a time, but in the end his wealth ſhall waſte and melt away againe, by Gods juſt curſing it inſtead of bleſſing: we may follow either of theſe.

There is nothing that a man is more prone unto, then being wronged, to take revenge, according to Juvenal, Revenge is good, and ſweeter then life it ſelfe: Therefore Lavater commendeth theſe conſiderations unto us, that we refraine here-from; 1. That God beareth more at our hands. 2. We haply have deſerved it, if not one way, yet another. 3. No wrong can be done us without Gods providence, as David ſpake touching Shimei. 4. Mans goings are of the Lord, how then can a man underſtand his owne way? that is, whether by his goings we underſtand his going with his body about any matter, or of his minde in the way of grace, all are of the Lord, his very going forth to warre, or about any buſineſſe, and the ſucceſſe is from God; or when hee ſetteth forth, it is not knowne to man whether he ſhall be able to goe on or no, much more his going in the ſtreight way, that leads to life; for of this it is ſaid, He works the will and the deed of his own good pleaſure; far ſtretching then is his providence even to every man every time that he goeth forth, which is ſaid, in him we live, move, and have our being. And if we go in the good way, let us thank God for it, as being ſet hereinto by him. How then can a man underſtand his way, or his owne way according to ſome? and both are true, a man knoweth not the way whereby God thus worketh and ordereth all mens goings, neither knoweth he when he is about to take into any way, what ſhall be the event thereof, for this is onely knowne to God; but becauſe God guideth and orders all events, who is our Father, we learne to be content, although things ſucceed not according to our deſires, our Father yet will ſee, that all ſhall finally worke together for the beſt.

It is a ſnare to a man to devoure that which is holy, and after the vowes to enquire. Sacriledge by the conſent of all is here taxed, and this is of two ſorts, as Lavater hath it; 1. When that which hath beene already ſanctified is taken away, 2. When after vowing any thing to be ſanctified to God, a delay is made, and the thing devoted is not given.

Many other Expoſitions are alſo given by others, but of all, that ſeemeth to mee the beſt, which ſaith, that it is meant of Tythes, which God moſt anciently ſanctified to the maintenance of his worſhip, and lands and other things devoted unto him. The man that devoureth theſe, brings himſelfe into a ſnare, and the caſe being plaine that he ought not ſo to doe upon paine of a curſe, he is put to it to deviſe how to juſtifie this his wicked fact, and to enquire and finde out reaſons for this purpoſe. The ground of this, ſee Levit. 27. 14, 15, &c. and v. 30. where fields and houſes devoted to God, are ſaid to be ſanctified, and tythes holy to the Lord. Some reſtraine it to the devouring or eating of a beaſt at home, which a man had vowed, and then deviſing how to juſtifie it. Some to the devouring of that ſanctified, and giving a worſe for it; but theſe may be alſo included. The Vulgar, It is a ſnare to a man to devoure the Saints, and after vowes to retract, or to retract vowes, expounded thus, to devoure their goods by taking them away, and having ſo done, to treat about devoting them to the Lord. But the word is קֹדֶשׁ the ſanctified thing, and therefore the Expoſition before going is to be preferred, as moſt genuine. And hereby it appears what a foundation of deſtruction they lay to themſelves, that goe about to take the Tythes away, and otherwiſe to make allowance to the maintenance of Miniſters; for this is to come into the ſnare here ſpoken of, and therefore we are to pray to God to keepe the Rulers of the land, that they doe not ſo, but count all devices about the foreſaid future maintenance, but the enquiring after vowes here cenſured.

Note.

A wiſe King ſcattereth the wicked, and bringeth the wheele over them. Here it is alluded to the Husbandmans doings touching his corne, which he threſheth with a wheele; ſo the King teareth, as it were, the wicked, as ſtraw from the corne, to their great paine by his ſevere cenſures, that all may be made to fear to do the like. Some more probably underſtand this as of a kinde of puniſhment by a wheele, unto which the malefactor being faſtened was firſt turned up aloft, as the wheele was turned, and then downe in an heap of aſhes, where he was ſmothered to death, or if not at the firſt time, being turned downe againe and againe, unto which it is alluded, Pſal. 83. 13. Make them as a wheele, and as the ſtubble before the winde. Some thinke it to be alluded to the wheele of fortune, whereby they that are now aloft by proſperity, are brought downe to the loweſt ebbe of miſery; ſo a wiſe King dealeth with the wicked of what eſtate or degree ſoever they be, he he pulleth them downe, and ſets others that are better up. The Reader may follow whether of theſe he pleaſeth, but I have paſſed my ſentence already. The Vulgar for rotam, wheele, hath fornicem an arch, which was a thing that was wont of old to be erected by great men for a monument, as it is ſaid of Saul, that he did: but the King by turning this downe, and leveling it with the ground, rooteth out the memory of ſuch evill and wicked men.

Verſ. 27. The ſpirit of man is the candle of the Lord, ſearching all the inward parts of the belly; that is, with ſuch reaſon God hath endued a wiſe King, of whom hee ſpake before Verſe 26. as that he findeth out, as by candle-light, wickednesſes, as cloſely hidden, as that which is in the belly, to puniſh them. To the ſame effect it was ſaid, A divine ſentence is in the mouth of a King. Lavater expounds it thus, the ſpirit of a man is as plainly ſeene by the Lord, as a candle lighted by us, and he by his All-ſeeing eye pierceth into the moſt ſecret parts of man, that is, the inward thoughts of the heart. If it be underſtood of man in generall, this meaning is good, or rather it may be reſolved thus, mans ſoule is a light through underſtanding by Gods making it ſo, piercing even into the things that are within him as the Apoſtle ſaith, No man knoweth the things of a man, ſaving the ſpirit that is in him. And wherefore are we here put in minde of this? to ſtrike a feare into us of doing ought, which we feare may come to light; for how can it but come to light, to which our ſpirit is privy, which is the very light or candle of God, whereby he ſeeth into every mans heart? I thinke it is firſt to be underſtood, as ſpoken ad oppoſitum, to that which was before ſaid of a King, and accordingly it is true in ſome meaſure in every wiſe man, although moſt in a King, as was ſeene by experience in King James 1605. and the light in him above others to diſcerne that worke of darkneſſe of the Gunpowder-Treaſon, and to ſcatter the plotters thereof, the knot of wicked Traitors. Secondarily it alſo ſheweth, that nothing within us is hid from him that is wiſeſt of all, whoſe lights, our ſpirits that know all within us, are, and therefore are ready to accuſe and condemne us, if we doe evill, as Rom. 2. the word rendred candle, is כר light.

Verſ. 28. By mercy and truth the King is preſerved, and by mercy his throne upholden. This being ſpoken alſo of the King makes it more probable, that verſe 27. coming between verſe 26. and this, is meant of the King alſo. By mercy, here underſtand his not being over rigorous, or extream in puniſhing, nor exacting of monies from his ſubjects, by truth, his ſtanding to his word and promiſe, of which I ſpake before, but of theſe two the one is ſpoken of againe, as eſtabliſhing his throne, to ſhew, that mercy principally ingratiateth a Prince with his people. To this end Lavater capitulateth to theſe ſayings, Antonius ſaid, nothing becometh a Roman Emperour ſo much as clemency. Antigonus King of Macedon, being perſwaded, when he had taken Athens to ſet a ſtrong garriſon there to keepe them under, anſwered, that he was alwayes of the minde, that there was more force in clemency then in violence. And Cato adviſed Potentates ſparingly to uſe their power, that they might alwayes uſe it. Tully, no man ever held violent Empire long.

Chap. 16. 30. Verſ. 30. Junius. The blewneſſe of a wound cleanſeth away evill, ſo doe ſtripes the inward parts of the belly. Jun. Blewneſſe and wounds purge the wicked, and ſtripes entring into the inner parts of the belly; that is, ſevere dealing, and ſharply reprooving the wicked oft-times, is an occaſion of his repentance in his very heart, and conſequently of his ſerious turning from his ſinnes, which are as wounds in the ſoule, and ſo theſe ſtripes and wounds are healed. Hebr. Blewneſſes, a wound, a purgative in evill, and ſtripes, the inward parts, where muſt needs be underſtood, a purge of the inward parts, to which the ſenſe already given, agreeth very well.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXI.

THe Kings heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water, he turneth it whether ſoever he will. As rivers of water by Gods hand are turned, ſo that ſometime they run forward, ſometime backward, as the river Jordan, of which David ſaith, in ſpeaking of the Miracle that was wrought upon it, What ayled thee O Jordan, that thou waſt driven back? ſo when God pleaſeth, he can turne the Kings heart, that is running to cruelty and injuſtice, to lenity and juſtice, ſo that he ſhall not doe to his Subjects as he had intended. Of this we have many examples, of Ahab towards Elijah, of Jeroboam towards the Prophet, whom Joſephus calleth Jadon, that came to threaten the Altar that he had made for Idolatry; and of Nebuchadnezzar towards the three Children. And he turneth likewiſe, ſaith Lavater, other mens hearts, as Eſau's towards Jacob, who came out with a purpoſe to kill him, but he kindly imbraced him; and Laban's alſo, who purſued him in fury, but made a League with him. Verſ. 1. Lavater.

As Cyrus, by digging trenches in the ground turned the river Euphrates, that ran before through Babilen, but he did it with great labour, God without. The Septuagint for rivers of water, hath force of water; whereby is implied the great violence whereby the Kings heart is carried, yet turned by God, as he pleaſeth. Therefore let Kings voluntarily yeeld to the will of God, and ſubmit themſelves to be governed by him, and not ſtay till he cometh by force to turne them, leſt he deale by them as by Nebuchadnezzar, take away the heart of a man, and give them the heart of a beaſt, and drive them from their Kingdome; and let Subjects, having a wicked King, pray to God, that he would turne his heart; but not when his heart is turned, and there is ſome appearance of hope of living more comfortably under him, to ſuſpect him, and yet to refuſe to comply with him any more for ever, ſith this were a mocking of God, to whom we have prayed, and a rejecting of his grant obtained, a ſleighting of his favour, to the bringing downe of more wrath upon us. For ver. 2. ſee chap. 16. 2. Note.

To doe juſtice, and judgement, is more acceptable to the Lord then ſacrifice. By ſacrifice here, underſtand all duties of piety, praying, preaching, hearing of the Word, &c. it is therefore meant, that when theſe duties are done, and we are frequent herein, yet if juſtice, and judgement be not done by us, we are not for theſe accepted of, yea, our ſacrifices are abominable, Prov. 8. 15. Eſa. 1. 13, 14, 15, 16. And the reaſon is, becauſe love is wanting, which is ſhewed by injuring no man, but dealing juſtly with all men. And he that loveth not, hateth, and is hated of God, and therefore cannot be accepted in any thing that he doth, neither is any preſent acceptable, which he bringeth; as a man accepteth not of a gift from him, whom he hateth. Verſ. 3.

He that executeth Juſtice, and Judgement then, and as is elſewhere added, ſheweth mercy, if he ſacrificeth, is highly accepted of, for he is bidden, Offer to God the ſacrifice of righteouſneſſe, and of praiſe; but the wicked are forbidden ſo to doe. Mich. 6. 6. Mat. 23. 23. Pſal. 50. 18.

An high looke, and a proud heart, and the plowing of the wicked is ſinne. Jun. & Vulg. the light of the wicked is ſinne; and ſo it is Hebr. Some by light here, underſtand the beſt duties done by the wicked, for which they ſeeme to be children of Light, yet being done by them they are ſinne; whereupon it is that Auguſtine calleth them, being done by the Heathen, Splendida peccata, bright ſhining ſinnes. But others underſtand the two things before ſpoken of, the high looke, and proud heart, which are the light and glory of the wicked, becauſe that in their pride by an haughty carriage, and other outward pomp, they thinke that they ſhine as bright lights in the eyes of others; and this is the rather to be received, becauſe there is no conjunction copulative, as in the New Tranſlation, but the word light is put by oppoſition to theſe two before going, as if he had ſaid; The proud looke, and heart, even both theſe, in which the light of the wicked ſtandeth, when they are in proſperity, are ſinne; or they make their proſperity ſin, Verſ. 4.

by being thus turned by them into ſinne, as fuell that feeds the fire, is made all fire.

The vulgar renders it, The high looke is the dilatation of the heart, and hereupon ſome Expoſitors ſay, That by the high looke is the covetous eye meant, which looketh after, and aſpireth after a great and high eſtate in this world; he which hath, inlargeth his heart after wealth more and more, the more he aboundeth with it. But this agreeth not ſo well to the word, high, for covetous men rather crouch low, and abaſe themſelves to get, they care not how; it is therefore doubtleſſe ſpoken of the proud, who are puft up by worldly wealth, which they have unjuſtly gotten, or their fathers before them; this makes them to looke with ſo high and ſupercilious a looke upon others, and hereby it is ſaid, their heart is inlarged, or extended greater, according to the common ſaying, He ſwelleth with pride; but Hebrew it is not, the high looke is the dilatation, but the high looke and the dilatation of the heart; and then followeth, the light of the wicked is ſinne, in the ſence before ſaid; or if we underſtand by light acts, and exerciſes of light, That is, the doing of religious and charitable duties, wherein a light is given to lead others to the ſame, then it is to be underſtood, thus; The high looke, and heart ſwelled with pride, yea, the very light, the pious practices of the wicked are ſinne, and no leſſe abomination then their pride, which God deſpiſeth.

Verſ. 5. The thoughts of the diligent tend only to plenteouſneſſe, but of every one that is haſty, only to want; That is, true induſtrious and provident men conſider wel in all things what they goe about, to doe it well, being patient of continuall labour and ſo they grow wealthy; but he that is for the moſt part idle, when he cometh to doing, is raſh, and inconſiderate; or when he cometh to bargaining, hereby that which he hath, is waſted, and he is brought to poverty, according to the ſaying Haſt makes waſt.

Verſ. 6. The getting of treaſures by a lying tongue, is a vanity toſſed to and fro, of them that ſeeke death. Of goods gotten by lying, and deceit, here are two evils ſet forth.

1 They are vanities toſſed to and fro; That is, they are vaine and tranſitory, going from one to another, and not long continuing with him, that getteth them by ſuch wicked meanes.

2 They bring their Owners to death, and deſtruction for ever; they get the world, but looſe their ſoules; and therefore they, who thus ſeeke worldly goods, ſeeke their owne death, which who but a mad man will doe?

Of Lyers for gaine there are foure ſorts; 1. The falſe Witneſſe, who is hired for money to ſweare. 2. The corrupt Judge, who judgeth for Bribes. 3. The crafty Lawyer, that undertakes a bad cauſe for a Fee. 4. The Flatterer, who by ſpeaking pleaſingly circumventeth his neighbour; And this is ſpoken in oppoſition to that, ver. 5. of diligence, tending to abundance; as if he had ſaid, contrariwiſe, he that ſeekes wealth by lying.

Verſ. 7. The robbery of the wicked ſhall deſtroy them, becauſe they refuſe to doe judgement; Junius renders it, the calamity of the wicked, but all others robbery, or rapine, as שדד ſignifieth, and beſt agreeth with the premiſes; for hereby is ſhewed how they ſeeke their owne death, that get by lying, both falſe Witneſſes, and corrupt Judges, &c. are robbers, they rob men of their goods, and are therefore ſaid to be companions of Theeves: To refuſe to doe judgement, is to goe from the way of juſtice and equity in their dealings in Courts of Juſtice, between man and man.

Eſa. 1. 23.

Verſ. 8. The way of man is froward, and ſtrange, but as for the pure his worke is right; That is, the way of man, who is but naturall, and unregenerate, is croſſe to the way which God hath commanded us to walke in, and ſtrangely differing from it; but the way of the pure in heart, who are borne againe of the Spirit, is alwayes right in reſpect of the intention of his minde, and if he erreth at any time, he turneth againe into the right way by repentance.

Some will have it ſaid to be ſtrange, becauſe againſt the nature of one reaſonable, onable: of the tediouſneſſe of a ſcolding wife, ſee Chap. 19.13. Now the trouble of ſuch an one is otherwiſe ſet forth. Verſ. 9.

The ſoule of the wicked deſireth evill, his neighbour findeth no favour in his eyes. It is the deſcription of one ſet upon miſchiefe, one, a neighbour dwelling neare unto him, and his acquaintance and friend, is no more to him then another man, ſo eagerly is he carried to the doing of evill, yea he will wrong his owne brother, or father. This is true in the covetous deſiring unlawfully his neighbours inheritance, as Ahab did Naboths vineyard, and in the drunkard, who when he rageth through ſtrong drinke, ſtrikes, and kil is, if he can, every one that commeth in his way without reſpect of perſons. Verſ. 10.

For Verſ. 11. ſee before Chap. 19.25. Verſ. 11.

The wiſe man rightly conſidereth the houſe of the wicked, but God overthroweth the wicked for their wickedneſſe. Heb. overthrowing the wicked into evill, or throwing him, ſo alſo Junius, whom Muffet followeth; and the meaning is, Although the wicked proſper for a time, yet he that is wiſe, as being taught by the word, lookes upon his houſe as ready to come to ruine, and having the cauſe of this evill in it, viz. the materials thereof gotten by bloud, *Hab.*2.11. and that hereby he is throwne into evill, when for this Gods judgements ſeize upon him, and deſtroy him, ſee *Pſal.*73. and 49. Verſ. 12.

He that ſtops his eares at the cry of the poore, he alſo ſhall cry himſelfe and not be heard. He ſtops his eares that heareth not he poore and miſerable to relieve them; in ſaying, that he ſhall cry, he meaneth, that he ſhall fall into miſery likewiſe, and then ſeeke for ſome comfort, but in vaine, as we may ſee in the example of Dives and Lazarus; and if this happeneth not in this life, yet it ſhall certainly be ſo in the life to come, as in the example propounded. Verſ. 13. Luke 16.

A gift in ſecret pacifieth anger, and a reward in the boſome, ſtrong wrath. The word rendred gift is מתן the reward or preſent שוחד by the firſt of which ſay the Hebrewes a leſſer gift is ſet forth, by the other a greater, and ſo the meaning is, a Judge being angry with a malefactor, by a gift, although ſmall, given him in ſecret, is pacified, the cauſe of his anger being not great; but let him be never ſo angry, a great gift pacifieth him in caſe of the greateſt offence. Some diſtinguiſh thus, A gift promiſed ſecretly, lenifieth him, but being given, much more, but the firſt is beſt. And it is to be noted here that כפה ſignifieth to extinguiſh wrath, as well as to mitigate it, and therefore it is hereby intimated, that the Judges wrath is as a great fire; but as a great quantity of any heavy things, not combuſtible, being caſt together upon this fire covering it all over, the fire not being able to pierce through, goeth out; in like manner by great preſents the great wrath of the Judge is extinguiſhed. But this is not ſpoken as approving ſuch doings, but to ſhew how it is with corrupt Judges, as was touched before, Chap.16.16. and Chap.17.8. yet it is applicable to God the juſt Judge of all the world, If by gifts given in ſecret, we underſtand almes ſecretly given; for hereby his ſtrong wrath is pacified, neither do we read of any thing elſe as able to do it, *Matth.*25. Almes are therefore by Cyprian compared to the water of Baptiſme, as that once extinguiſheth the fire of hell, being once adminiſtred; ſo Almes often given, often extinguiſh the fire of Gods wrath, when it ariſeth for ſin. Verſ. 14. Matth.6. Cyprian ſerm. de aqvet. eleemoſyni. Aug. ſerm de Eliſæo.

Auguſtine comparing it to oyle, ſpeakes likewiſe of the ſame, and whereas oyle rather increaſeth, then extinguiſheth the fire, it is ſaid, that although it commonly doth ſo, yet if it be caſt upon lime burning, it quencheth it. And for ſecret giving Almes, he bringeth in that which Eliſhah bad the widow doe, viz. to ſhut the door of her houſe to her, and then to poure out of her little oyle, promiſing, that ſo it ſhould increaſe miraculouſly; for in like manner this miracle of extinguiſhing the fire of Gods wrath, and procuring mercy from him, which is as oyle to make us chearfull, is not wrought but the doore being ſhut, when wee poure out our oyle, that is, when we exerciſe mercy, we are cloſe and ſecret, and ſeeke not hereby the praiſe of men. 2 King.4.

It is joy to the juſt to doe judgement, but deſtruction ſhall be to the workers of iniquity. Junius, To doe judgement bringeth joy; that is, the joy and peace of a Verſ. 15. Junius.

good conscience here, and everlasting joy hereafter, when the just shall shine as the firmament; Hebr. The doing of judgement a joy to the righteous, which by Lavater is expounded of the content and comfort that he taketh in doing that which is right, as when he hath delivered any that were in danger to suffer wrong, or being tempted to any injust action he hath grace to resist, and to doe rightly, although to his hinderance.

Psal. 15.

The vulgar Latine for these words, destruction shall be to the wicked, hath Pavor, feare shall be to the wicked, expounded by some of the Judges doing justly: for when he doth so, the just hath cause of joy, because he is out of the danger of his censure, and the wicked, who would otherwise rob, or be some way obnoxious to him, is cut off; But when this is done, other wicked men surviving feare. Some by judgement understanding mercy to the poore shewed in secret, according to the verse before going, expound it thus, to give Almes is a joy to the just, because hee thus provideth for the securing of all the rest of his estate, and is sure of a reward in heaven; but the wicked miser is alwayes full of feare of being robbed, and losing that, which he hath with so much care, and stretching of his conscience gotten, because there is no fence by Almes set about it, and if his conscience be awakened, he hath inward horrour in respect of the wrath to come. Some, the just hath joy, and is delighted in well-doing, but this very thing is a terrour to the wicked, because his goodnesse condemneth the wicked mans naughtinesse, as it is said, The Queene of the South shall rise in judgement against this generation, and condemne it, for she came from a farre to heare the wisdome of Salomon, but they would not heare the wisdome of Christ, who was greater then Salomon, for to be condemned is matter of terrour. Some because the word rendred feare cometh from חתת to bring forth, which when a woman doth, she doth it not without great feare and sorrow, expound it of the feare in which wicked men doe their wicked facts, as the Thiefe when he breaketh through and stealeth, the Adulterer in regard of her husband, whom he defileth, the riotour seeking to the night for feare of being seene; but contrariwise, doing rightly to the just is secure without fear or care, full of joy and comfort. And of the wicked mans travelling with, and conceiving sinne, we read Jam. 1.14. Job 15. This, if the word hath such a signification, which I cannot finde, were excellent; but that it signifieth pavor or feare none doubteth, and therefore I thinke it best to follow the Vulgar, especially because so it answers best to joy, and I see nothing against any of the Expositions premised, and therefore indifferently imbrace any of them.

Matth. 12.

Vers. 16. The man that wandreth out of the way of understanding, shall remaine in the congregation of the dead. The word רפים rendred dead, signifieth also Giants, for which the Vulgar renders it so, and by Giants Devils are commonly understood, for their Gigantean qualities, wonderfull power and cruelty. If it be rendred dead, the meaning is (if this deadnesse be taken for corporally dead) he shall fall into some sepulchre or other of the dead, and there remaine and perish, that is, doe like unto one that goeth out of the common road, who cannot in some places goe farre, but he cometh amongst these sepulchres, which amongst the Jewes were made neare to common roads in the fields, and therfore such a man going out of the way came soone amongst them; or for this wickednesse he shall be adjudged to dye: Or by the dead understanding the spiritually dead, it is meant, that the hereticke going from the truth, is now no longer to be counted one, that is living amongst the living, but dead amongst the dead, because he is as a member cut off from the body, thenceforth living no more, as Augustine reasoneth: And if he were orthodoxe before, now he is twice dead, or twofold more made the childe of hell, then the Pharisees once, as all are by nature, and now the second time by falling away from the truth, so that indeed the hereticke is more the childe of hell, then the very devill, for he was but once made so, the hereticke twice. If it be understood of Giants, or Devils, then the meaning is, that none other end is to be expected by him, that erreth from the right way, but to be cast into the place of terrible and cruell Devils, there to abide for ever and ever, yea, he is continually in the assembly of Devils here, as having them for his friends, companions, allies, and fathers.

fathers. To this effect Athanasius, heretickes goe about every whither with their father the Devill, hauking after causes of iniquity: and Nazianzen calleth such a company the Devills fortresse, there he hath an Army, saith he, there are his guard and defenders, and legions of uncleane spirits. A dreadfull case then are they in that erre from the way of true doctrine either by departing to heresie, or out of the way of righteousnesse or holinesse hereby taught. Athan. Naz. orat. 84.

He that loveth pleasure shall be poor, and he that loveth wine and oyl, shall not be rich. Vulg. He that loveth banquets, and that loveth wine and fat things. Heb. A poor man loving mirth, and loving wine and oyl shall not be rich. The Cald. and Sept. also render the first words so, but the Sep. goeth far from the Heb. in the last, He that loveth wine and oyle to riches. The word שמן signifieth either oyl or fatnesse, as Lavater readeth it, understanding hereby all delicate and dainty fare, as also sweet ointments, in spending which upon their bodies they of the East were very profuse, and some touch hereof is given in the woman, that poured a boxe of ointment very costly upon the head of Christ, of the preciousnesse of which see there in the history. The meaning is plaine, a poore man, that is given to pleasure, and fare daintily, and to drinking, shall never bee rich. For indeed hee that is thus addicted, although he be rich now, shall not long so continue, but become poore. Verse. 17. Lavater.

The wicked shall be a ransome for the righteous, and the transgressor for the upright. The Vulg. here renders it, The wicked is given for the just, leaving out the word ransome, which is Heb. כפר and there is no word signifying, is given. To keep therefore to the New Translation it is meant, that the righteous and wicked both being in danger of Gods wrath, the wicked is taken, and cut off, and he preserved, as is shewed Ezek. 9. and was verified in the example of Jeremiah and Baruch, who, when all the City of Jerusalem was destroyed, were preserved. Some expound it of the wicked wronging the just by imprisonment, deprivation of goods or life, they shall come to suffer in like manner for their thus using of them. But I adhere to the first: so the seven men of Sauls posterity were made the price of redemption, as it were, for righteous David, and his people, when they were hanged up, and the famine ceased, which before endangered their lives. Thus when Israel was spared, and Egypt, and Ethiopia suffered, it is said I will give Egypt and Ethiopia for thy ransome; which way soever it be taken, it is a comfort to the just, as shewing Gods care to deliver him; as it is a great comfort to a poore subject taken by the enemy, and carried away captive, to know, that his Prince will pay his ransome; but a terrour to the wicked, that liveth yet at home, to know that he shall go to live in slavery in his stead. He then that is wicked, that fareth best in this world, can have no joy of it, if he considers this well; for he hath but a time, and that very short, to live thus, and then he must goe into misery for ever, and the just man, whom he thought miserable for his present afflictions, shall be delivered, and live joyfully for evermore. Verse. 18. Hugo, Dionys. Beda. 2 Sam. 21. Note.

There is a treasure to be desired, and are in the dwellings of the wise, but a foolish man spendeth it up. Hebr. יבלענו will devoure it, we may understand this either of wealth, and plentifull provision of the best food, for this doth oyle or fatnesse commonly set forth: or if by oyle mercy to the poore be understood, as was before said, it is meant, that such spend in charity much, and yet have abundance; whereas the foolish covetous man devoureth all that he hath alone, not that he spends so much upon his body, but he devoureth all by his covetous minde, being poore and destitute, because he hath not the power to use his wealth that he hath, but is a slave or servant to it; or he is said to devoure it, because he hoords it up, and giveth not to the poore, as the wise doe, but keepes all to himselfe, and his children; or his foolish and prodigall spending consumeth it, together with his improvidence, and witlesse ordering of his affaires. It is not here commended unto men, to gather abundance and to set their hearts upon thus doing, but propounded as an incouragement to doe wisely, because through Gods blessing it shall be thus with the righteous and provident. neſſe, and honour. The juſt dealing man, that liveth in the feare of God, and is charitable, is through Gods mercy in Chriſt accepted of for perfectly righteous, and ſo ſhall after this fraile life ended, live eternally in heavenly glory; yea, he is in the way of living long and proſperouſly here alſo, and coming to promotion and honour amongſt men.

Some underſtand it of a man fearing God, and ſo ſetting to this worke by ſeeking his helpe firſt, as the Machabees did, and miraculouſly prevailed againſt their Enemy. CHAP. XXII.

A Good name is rather to be choſen then great riches, and loving favour rather then ſilver and gold. This may ſeeme ſtrange, ſeeing that in riches there is reality, but to be ſpoken well of amongſt men, what is it, but the empty aire, beating with a vaine ſound, but doing no man any good? Verſ. 1.

Anſ. If it cometh from vertue and well doing, it doth a man more good ſometime, then money, as namely, when ſuch a man hath occaſion to ſpeake, he ſhall be more willingly heard for his good, and the good of others. 2. For this, ſometime great preferment cometh. 3. After death, when riches faile, this continueth. 4. If he hath children, they ſhall fare the better, and finde more favour for his ſake.

If it be ſaid, ſome wicked men have a good name amongſt men, and ſome righteous men are reproached, and vilely ſpoken of; it is true, but their good name is not the name here ſpoken of, which is founded upon vertue, for they come to it through deceit, by reaſon of the ſhallowneſſe of men, that can looke upon one only ſuperficially, and not diſcerne the evil that is in him. And for the juſt, defamed for righteouſneſſe, this is no infamy, but fame before God, and all good men, becauſe ſuch are the bleſſed of the Lord. But why is love preferred before Gold or Silver? Mat. 5. 12.

Anſ. Becauſe ſometime a friend in the Court is better then a penny in a mans purſe, and he that is befriended, hath his cauſe wel ended.

2 If warre hapneth, and he falleth into the enemies hands, to finde favour then with Nebuchadnezzar, as poore Jeremiah did, is more then to abound with gold and ſilver, as Zedekiah, and his Princes; Nehemiah a Captaine, finding ſuch favour with Artaxerxes, benefited himſelfe, and all his Country-men the Jewes: and how much good came of Ahaſhuerus his favour to Eſter? alwayes provided yet, that there be a concurrence of Gods favour with the favour of men.

A prudent man fore-ſeeth the evill, and hideth himſelfe, but the ſimple paſſe on, and are puniſhed. The evil here ſpoken of is the plague, or the judgement of war, or ſome other generall judgement coming for ſin; the prudent ſeeing this hideth himſelfe by flying to God in prayer, for there is for ſuch an hiding place, under his ſhadow, and feathers, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh. Prudence alſo teacheth in time of danger, by enemies, or perſecutors to flee for ſhelter, from one place to another, as Chriſt ſaid to his Diſciples, When they perſecute you in one City, fly to another; and in time of the Plague likewiſe, provided, that we firſt and chiefly fly to God. 2. Be not over timorous, for this ſheweth little faith. 3. Herein each one hath reſpect to his Calling, not for feare of infection to forſake that; ſuch as have a Calling to attend upon the ſicke, and Women great with childe, or in travell at ſuch time, not now to forbeare, but to have confidence in God, and doe their Office, and likewiſe ſuch, as to whom the care of burying the dead belongeth. Theſe evils coming are not by them lookt at, to be ſtirred up hereby to repentance, but being this way unfenced, they lye nakedly open to them, to be devoured hereby, and then to be ſwallowed up of the bottomleſſe pit for ever.

Verſ. 5. Thornes and Snares are in the way of the froward, he that keepes his ſoule ſhall be farre from them. Thornes prick and hurt, and ſnares hold, and trouble ſuch as are taken therein; in ſaying then that theſe are in the way of the perverſe, or wicked, he meaneth ſinnes are as ſnares, taking, and holding the wicked to their deſtruction, and as thornes pricking and galling their conſcience, and particularly ſinnes that they fall into, through the worldlineſſe of their mindes, the cares of this

Therefore we are here taught how we may eſcape the danger of theſe thornes, and ſnares, viz. by keeping our ſoules, not ſuffering worldly cares to take place in our hearts, but being heavenly minded and ſpirituall; for thus we ſhall count all things here as droſſe, and dung, Lavater. Lavater alſo addeth, that by ſnares are meant the ſnares of the Devill, whereby they are intangled that are taken with Hereſie, and that thornes and ſnares are in their way, as was ſaid before of the ſlothfull, hindering them from going in the way of righteouſneſſe, to which laſt I cannot ſubſcribe, becauſe they are ſaid to be in the way of the perverſe, as a puniſhment, that we may be deterred from walking that way, and have a vigilant care of our ſelves continually, that we be not by any meanes drawne into it. They are not then ſpoken of, as being in their way to hinder their coming out of it into the right way, which they have no minde to doe, but to ſhew the dangerouſneſſe of the way, that they are in; for the other Expoſitions, they altogether make the ſence moſt full.

And of the ſnare of the Devill, in which the wicked are, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh

Verſ. 6. Traine up a childe in the way wherein he ſhould goe, and when he is old he will not depart from it. This is according to the common ſaying, Quo ſemel eſt imbuta recens ſervabit odorem teſta diu. As a new veſſell is ſeaſoned, ſo it will hold the tang a long time. Sometimes it is not ſo, but for the moſt part it is, and therefore Parents muſt inſtruct their children betimes, and ſeaſon them with

Verſ. 7. The rich ruleth over the poore, and the borrower is ſervant to the lender. How the rich rule over the poore, is commonly ſeene, becauſe they labour for them, and are commanded by them, and the Debtor is a ſervant to the Lender, becauſe that by the Law, if he were not able to pay, he was to be ſold for a ſervant, and ſo payment was to be made, or to ſerve him.

The vulgar to the ſame effect; He ſhall be conſumed by the rod of his anger: But the New Tranſlation is word for word according to the Hebrew: but the word rendred faile, ſignifieth alſo conſume, and if him be underſtood, the firſt rendring and expoſition is good, ſhall conſume him; and then the ſence is plaine, as hath been ſaid. It is aptly ſpoken next unto that of the rich, ruling over the poore, ver. 7. the rich being hereby warned to take heed, that he rule not with rigour, for if he doth, and wrongs the poore, he doth but ſow the ſeed of his owne ruine: evill done to others, will bring forth the like evill to him againe, and that with increaſe; yea, the rod that he hath, which is put for an enſigne of power, That is, his dominion before ſpoken of, being thus abuſed, againſt a poore man, with whom he is angry, ſhall turne to the bringing of him downe ſo, as that he ſhall become poore alſo, and then his former power ſhall faile him.

If there be any one ſuch, the Prince is here required to take him away; That is, to cut him off, and to quell the reſt, that are ſtirred up by him to mutiny. All are not to be animadverted againſt for this one, but he is to be rooted out, or a few, and then the reſt will be quiet, and ſuch contemptible ſpeeches ſhall be heard no more.

Theſe words doe aptly follow the other, about caſting out the Scorner, for now he ſheweth on the contrary ſide, whom the King ſhould have in eſtimation, viz. a man of a pure heart; That is, him, who is ſincere, and upright in his whole life and carriage, that is no mocker, but full of wiſe and gracious ſpeeches, tending to peace, and righteouſneſſe. Verſ. 16. He that oppreſſeth the poore to come to riches, and that giveth to the rich, ſhall ſurely come to want. The firſt clauſe here is plaine; for the ſecond, he is meant that feaſteth the rich ſumptuouſly, and ſpends prodigally upon them for vain-glory, as ſome doe: For when thou feaſteſt, ſaith Chriſt, invite not the rich,

Luke 14. yet not abſolutely forbidding it, becauſe it tendeth to the increaſe of love, but it is a greater act of love to invite the poore; ſo that if that be done, and this neglected, but much more if the rich be feaſted, and the poore oppreſſed, God is offended, and the rich that doth thus, ſhall by him be brought downe to poverty. Lavater

Lavater. underſtands it of a man that having oppreſſed the poore, for which he is complained of to the Judge, and that he may finde favour with him giveth ſome great preſent to him. He ſhall come to poverty either by the Princes picking ſome quarrell againſt him, and ſo ſqueezing him, or by enemies breaking into the land, and taking of his goods away from him, according to the former of which it is ſaid, Quod non accipit Chriſtus, tollit fiſcus. The vulg. He ſhall give to one richer and want; that is, will he, nill he, one richer ſhall ſpoyle him, as he hath ſpoyled the poore.

Baſil. Cajetan. Baſil ſetteth forth this by a compariſon taken from Fiſhes, the great devoureth the little, but then cometh a greater then he, and devoureth him. Cajetan underſtands God by the richer, to whom he giveth, when he is by him deprived, but this is forced. Some underſtand two wayes of coming to poverty here ſpoken of: 1. By oppreſſing the poore. 2. By giving largely to the rich in hope to be abundantly recompenced, but in the end his goods being thus waſted, and no recompence coming, he remaineth poore. To me it ſeemeth to be of larger extent, when God hath committed the goods of this world to thy diſpenſation, and thou comeſt to diſtribute them, then to give them to rich friends that have enough already, and not to the poore, is the way to come to want the true treaſure, and ſo to be moſt poore, and miſerable indeed, a thing too commonly practiſed: but let

Note. this be a warning to thee, if thou beeſt wiſe, to incline more to the poore, though ſtrangers, then to the rich, although familiar friends, or kinsfolke, for ſo thou ſhalt ſurely have a treaſure in heaven, otherwiſe thou ſhalt ſurely want one day as well as he that oppreſſeth the poore.

Verſ. 18. It is a pleaſant thing to keep them within thee, they ſhall withall be fitted to thy lips. Here, and verſe 17, and verſe 19, 20, 21. is a generall exhortation to heare the words of knowledge, it being ſhewed, that no ſmall, but great good will redound to every one that doth. The things to which we are exhorted are, 1. In humility, to heare all the inſtructions before going, and to beleeve them, verſe 17.

ſpring up and fructifie, and lye deep in the ground, becauſe where there is no depth of earth, although it ſprings up, it ſoone withereth againe, and this muſt be done out of a delight taken herein. 4. Not ſo to keep them in heart, as not to ſpeak of them, for which it is added, They ſhall withall be fitted to thy lips; the good hearer being one that talketh of the word which he hath heard, and ſpends not his time after this in vaine and worldly talke altogether, for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth ſpeaketh; the word heard is as living water flowing out of the belly to eternall life. The good or benefit redounding to a man that heareth, as hath been ſaid, is firſt confidence in God, Verſ. 19. That thy truſt may be in the Lord, for none but ſuch can truſt in God, in others if there be a confidence, it is none other then preſumption, and the obedient hearer that truſts in God, ſhall not be deceived; for his words be the words of truth, of which he is aſcertained, for he is a God that cannot lye, though all men be lyars. Verſ. 19. Verſ. 21.

Beda thinkes, that Salomon hitherto propounded onely what he meditated upon in private, but now proceeding to preſſe theſe things to his ſonne, for whoſe learning he penned them, he thought good to premiſe this exhortation, and then to come to the charge giving, which followeth; but becauſe he often exhorted before alſo to hearken, this cannot ſtand, but rather it is probable, that fearing, leſt in uttering ſo many things the hearer ſhould grow drowſie and dead-hearted, he here quickens him againe to give diligent attention to the end. And indeed ſo prone are all hearers to drowſineſſe, as Eutichus, when Paul prolongs his ſpeech, as that they have need by the way to be often ſtirred up to attention, as is the laudable cuſtome of all zealous preachers of the Goſpel, and we have much adoe alſo thus to quicken ſome hearers, or to keep them waking. Beda. Note. Act. 20.

Rob not the poore becauſe he is poore, neither oppreſſe the afflicted in the gate, for the Lord will plead their cauſe. In giving his charge he here beginneth with the Proverb laſt ſet downe verſe 16. againſt oppreſſing the poore. Rob not the poore, becauſe he is poore, that is, take not advantage of his poverty to wrong him; and thou that art a Judge, adventure not for this to oppreſſe him by a falſe judgement, for although there be no might in him that thou needeſt to feare, yet there is in his God, who will plead for him, and will ſurely ſpoyle thoſe that ſpoyle him; for to oppreſſe in the gate, is to oppreſſe in judgement, becauſe the Judge was wont to ſit in the gate of the City. Verſ. 22.

Make no friendſhip with an angry man, and with a furious man thou ſhalt not goe; Leſt thou learne his wayes, and get a ſnare to thy ſoule. Men and women are apt by nature to take any evill infection from others if they converſe with them that be infected, therefore as ſociety with any that are infected, is to bee eſchewed; now ſinne is an infection, and as other ſinnes, ſo anger, for which end companying with ſuch is to be taken heed of. And the companion of the furious gets a ſnare to his ſoule, becauſe ſuch a man being but a little provoked, is ready to kill and ſlay his very friend in his mad fit, as Alexander is ſaid to have done by Parmenio; and to fall by the ſword, and by a ſnare is all one, becauſe either brings death. CHAP. XXIII.

Veiſ. 2. IF thou beeſt a man given to the appetite, put a knife to thy throat, &c. Here is a charge againſt gluttony, to which ſome men of great appetites are very apt, when they are at good cheare; Heb. for theſe words, If thou beeſt a man given to the appetite, it is, If thou be maſter of a ſoule. The vulg. If thou haſt thy ſoule in thy power. If it be underſtood as a precept againſt gluttony, as many Expoſitors take it, the ſenſe is plaine, refraine thy ſelfe at a feaſt, and be not tempted by delicious meats and drinkes to exceſſe, as thou wouldeſt keepe thy ſoule from deſtruction, for he is בעל נפש the maſter of his ſoule, that keepes it from coming under the power of evill luſt, the being overcome of which, is to be brought into thraldome, and ſo to inevitable deſtruction; wherefore the Tranſlation ſhould goe thus, Put thy knife to thy throat, if thou wouldeſt be maſter of thy owne ſoule; that is, keep the power of it to ſalvation, and not betray it to ſo baſe a thing as gluttony and drunkenneſſe, to thy deſtruction. It ſeemeth to me not to be unlike to that of our Lord, If thy right eye offend thee plucke it out, and caſt it from thee, ſo if thy appetite offend thee, cut thy throat rather with thy owne knife, then that it ſhould doe ſo to the indangering of thy ſoule, becauſe the ſoule is farre more precious then this life, and therefore to kill the one, to ſave the other, is wiſdome, and to indulge the one, and deſtroy the other, extream folly. Yet this is not ſo ſpoken, as though in any caſe one might cut his owne throat, God forbid, for ſuch dye in the foule ſinne of bloud-ſhed; and ſo there is no mercy for them, no more then for Judas, Saul, or Achitophel, it being never heard, that any faithfull, but deſperate perſons did thus, and if by faith one be ſaved, then they that end their lives in deſpaire, are certainly damned; and this be ſpoken by the way againſt the dangerous tenet of ſome, that ſome ſelfe-murtherers may be ſaved, whereby it is to be feared that ſome have been animated to this moſt unnaturall ſin. But a man ſubject to this temptation is bidden rather then yeeld unto it, to cut his owne throat, to ſhew in what deteſtation he ſhould have this groſſe ſinne, ſo that if thou abhorreſt from cutting thine owne throat, thou muſt abhorre here-from, it being all one to be a glutton and a drunkard, and a murderer of a mans ſelfe, and that not onely in reſpect of everlaſting life, but of this preſent life alſo, becauſe many diſeaſes, which are mortall, are gotten by ſurfeiting, the pleureſie, the dead-palſey, the dropſie apoplexie, burning-feavers, the painfull-gout, ſhaking palſies, loſſe of appetite, and wit, and dimneſſe of the ſight before the time.

2 Pet. 2. 19.

Note.

Note.

Some there are, that underſtand this of ſpeaking, becauſe a man ſpeakes through his throat, when thou ſitteſt downe with a Ruler, who makes a great ſhew of love unto thee in inviting, and ſumptuouſly feaſting thee, beware leſt when thy heart is merry with wine and good cheare, words fall from thee, whereby advantage may be taken againſt thee; for Princes ſometimes invite for a colour to intrap their gueſts, as Abſalom did Amon, and Richard 2. King of England the Duke of Buckingham, Arundel, and Warwicke and then tooke and clapt them up in priſon. And the rather they incline to this, becauſe the Ancients had their Sympoſia, or Philoſophical feaſts, wherein they ſitting downe together, feaſted one another with witty ſayings, and diſcourſes, as was touched in the Preface.

The myſtery. Laſtly, ſome expound this myſtically of coming to the Lords Table, who is the Lord and Ruler over all, and of the care that every one ſhould have that cometh hither, as thou wouldeſt be maſter of thy ſoule, and not loſe it, now put thy knife to thy throat, be cautelous and circumſpect, as about a matter of life and death, becauſe he that eateth unworthily eateth damnation to himſelfe, and ſo putteth a knife, as it were, to his owne throat to kill himſelfe. But if it be taken thus, how ſhall we underſtand the next words? 1 Cor. 11.

Deſire none of his dainties, for they are deceitfull meat, unleſſe we ſhall ſay, they are deceitfull, becauſe they that ſit downe here, do by this precious and dainty thing deceive themſelves, by placing confidence in the bare eating in reſpect of ſalvation, taking no care about eating and drinking worthily or unworthily. I conclude, that the firſt expoſition is moſt genuine, this laſt one made beſides the intent of the Writer, yet ſuch, as unto which it may be not unprofitably drawn, and the like may be ſaid of the middlemoſt expoſition alſo. Verſ. 3.

Labour not to be rich, ceaſe from thine owne wiſdome, &c. Vulg. Put a meaſure to thy wiſdome, which is expounded thus, Although I have before commended the wiſe, and the induſtrious, ſaying, that they ſhould have riches and plenteouſneſſe, yet let none grounding hereupon, labour after riches and abundance in this world, having attained to a competent eſtate, and being ſupplied with neceſſaries for this life, but now ceaſe uſing his wits this way more, leſt that which was before but neceſſary frugality, be turned into baſe and damnable covetouſneſſe. But the Hebr. word is, Ceaſe from thy underſtanding; the meaning yet may be the ſame, ſeeing that man ceaſeth from uſing his wits about this or that, who puts a meaſure thereunto. Worldly wiſdome, which is here ſpoken of, putteth a man on, the more he hath to labour for the more; but this is here forbidden, and therefore to doe ſo is a ſinne, even the ſinne of covetouſneſſe. Verſ. 4, 5.

Moreover, worldly wiſdome puts a man on by wit, without taking paines in a lawfull Calling, to ſeeke riches, as doth the Mountebank, the Cheater, the Gameſter, the crafty Lawyer, the Stage-player, and the jeaſter, together with all thoſe that uſe any fraud in buying, and ſelling, falſifying weights, mingling things unprofitable with profitable, &c. yet theſe kindes of men labour alſo, for they work with their wits, by circumventing others to inrich themſelves, and therefore it is aptly ſaid unto them, Labour not to be rich, but ceaſe from thine owne underſtanding.

The words following are a reaſon, why we ſhould not labour for riches, any more then our neceſſity requireth, they are nothing; and, Wilt thou ſet thine eyes then upon them? for, riches have their wings, and fly away as an Eagle, to Heaven. The vulgar, Liſt not up thine eyes to riches, which thou canſt not have, Hebr. Wilt thou make thine eyes to fly to it, and it not? whereunto if we adde by way of ſupplement to be had, and it is not to be had; it will be the ſame in effect with vulgar Latine, and then the meaning is, Looke not after the getting of ſuch riches, as are not to be had or gotten lawfully; That is, either by covetous labouring after them, when thou haſt no want, or imploying thy wits to deceit; for, ſuch riches have their wings like an Eagle, and fly away to Heaven; That is, they ſuddenly fly away, as an Hawke, being by thee never ſeene more, as the Faulkenor having loſt his Hawke, being flowne from him; for ſo goods ill gotten ſoone vaniſh, and if their place be lookt for, in his houſe that is greedy of gaine, it is no where to be found; and therefore a compariſon is here fitly made with Eagles feathers, for of them Albertus writeth, That being laid amongſt other feathers, they doe in a ſhort time corrupt, and conſume them, as he ſaith, that he had tried by experience in Gooſe feathers; ſo ill gotten goods conſume thoſe that are well gotten, be the ill gotten never ſo few, for which he ſaith, that one feather of an Eagle doth it. Verſ. 5. Albertus Magnus.

Some alſo expound the flying to Heaven of returning to God, from whom they came at the firſt, by him to be diſpoſed of, taking them from the covetous, and deceiver, and giving them to others. If we underſtand according to the New Tranſlation, and it is nothing, then the vanity of riches in this world are hereby ſet forth, Wealth is as a thing of nothing, and therefore not worthy to be lookt after, and the tranſitorineſſe of worldly goods, they are ſuddenly gone oft-times, as the Eagle upon her wing ſoareth up aloft, flying ſoone out of ſight, I take it to be meant of riches ill gotten, becauſe they that are well gotten are ſaid to be Gods bleſſing, and ſuch as have them are promiſed that they ſhall inherite them, and leave them to their children after them.

Eagle

Chryſ. And of ill gotten goods Chryſoſtome ſaith, They are as Leaven, which although but a little, leaveneth an whole lump of Dough, ſo they corrupt all the reſt. A rich man then, that thus getteth worldly goods, may lock them up, and make them as ſure as he can; but there is a ſtrong thiefe, Covetouſneſſe within, that will breake open all his locks, and he ſhall looſe them againe.

Verſ. 6, 7. Eate not the bread of him that hath an evil eye, for as he thinketh in his heart ſo is he; Vulg. In ſimilitudine arioli & conjectoris, but the Hebrew is, as New Tranſlation; the vulgar therefore not regarding the words, ſeemeth to ſet forth this as the ſence: He is like unto a Wizzard, who conjectureth at things, and ſpeakes accordingly; ſo he, when thou art eating with him, biddeth thee eate, and drinke, but meaneth not ſo, becauſe he conjectureth, that thou doſt ſo by him, when he is at thy houſe, and this agreeth well to the reading in the New Tranſlation, as he thinketh, ſo is he; he thinketh thee to be one, that ſpeakes in this kinde, Contra animi ſententiam, and ſo he ſpeaketh to thee.

But who is the man of the evill eye here ſpoken of? Some ſay, The envious man; ſome, a baſe niggardly man, that pineth at the conſuming of his meate and drinke by his friends, and neighbours, that come in unto him in love, and good will, and he ſeemeth to be likewiſe affected to them.

Verſ. 8. The morſell that thou haſt eaten thou ſhalt vomite up, and looſe thy ſweet words; That is, by reaſon of his envious eye, his meat, when thou perceiveſt this, will be unto thee but as meat, which thou canſt not digeſt, it will doe thee no good and the good words which thou uſeſt in thanking him, and being merry with him, thou ſhalt looſe, for thou ſhalt finde, that all thy good cheare was not worthy ſo much as thankes: whereas Lavater hence gathereth, that diſcourſes at table ſhould not be grave, and about matters Theologicall, but pleaſant and merry: Chriſt, whoſe example muſt bee our imitation, was not ſo ſtrict, when one at table gave occaſion of ſuch ſerious diſcourſes, by ſaying, It is good to eat bread in the Kingdome of heaven; for he tooke the opportunity to utter that parable of him, that made a marriage feaſt, as he ſat at table, wherein he diſcourſed of matters moſt grave and divine. And before that, he gave inſtructions about feaſting directing what gueſts to bid, and to uſe all humility at ſuch meetings. From whence we may rather gather, that at meat all the time is not to be ſpent in merry talke, but ſome good, and ſerious diſcourſes ought then to be entred into, which may be for edification, as we are required that all our ſpeeches ſhould be, and not filthy, nor jeaſting.

Verſ. 9. Matth. 7. 7. Speake not in the eares of a foole, for he will deſpiſe the wiſdome of thy words. To the ſame effect our Lord biddeth, Caſt not pearles before ſwine, fools underſtand not acute and ſublime diſcourſes, or ſayings, and therefore they deride them as vaine; but we are not to count every one a foole that is not preſently benefited by our teachings, but ſuch as refuſe to be taught, or ſhew manifeſt contempt; for to ſeeke by inſtruction to better ſuch, were as if a man laboured to joyne againe together the parts of an earthen pot being broken, or as if a man ſhould ſpeak to one in a dream, or as Lavater hath it, ſow his ſeed upon barren and thorny ground.

Verſ. 10. Enter not into the field of the fatherleſſe, for their redeemer is mighty, and he ſhall plead their cauſe with thee. Before theſe words he ſaith, Remove not the ancient bounds, Hebr. עולם גבול the bound of eternity, whereby is intimated, that he who goeth about to wrong the fatherleſſe of their inheritance, medleth not with that, which is ſetled not for a time, but for ever, and therefore he ſhall both loſe his labour, and have God for his enemy, who will ſtand to maintain it, though the poore orphan being a childe, and weak, cannot.

Verſe 13. 14. Propound nothing elſe but correction-giving to children, of which ſee before, Chap. 22. 15.

My

My ſonne, if thou be wiſe, my heart ſhall rejoyce, even mine, yea, my reines ſhall rejoyce, when thy lips ſpeake right things. This is ſpoken according to Chap. 10.1. A wiſe ſonne maketh a glad father, and the word I is iterated, even I, for the greater emphaſis; ſome thinke it is ſupplied thus, even I rejoyce, as in a thing, wherein I am nearely concerned, becauſe the ſons or ſchollars profiting in wiſdome and knowledge is by the father or maſter counted as his own profiting, ſo wel-pleaſing and delightfull it is unto him; according to that of Seneca, I never take ſo much pleaſure in knowledge when it is incloſed onely in my owne breaſt, as when I have ſome fellowes to partake hereof together with me. So Paul calleth the Philippians his crowne and his joy. Verſ. 15. Seneca. Phil. 4.

Let not thy heart envy ſinners, but be thou in the feare of the Lord all the day long. Verſ. 17. For ſurely there is an end, and thy expectation ſhall not be cut off. Againſt envying the wicked in their proſperity, ſee Pſal. 73. for fearing God, and conſtantly holding on ſo to do, in ſaying thus he implieth troubles, and ſufferings, which are oft-times to the righteous, when the wicked proſper; but he exhorteth to perſiſt in fearing God all the days of thy life notwithſtanding this, and that upon this ground, for ſurely there is an end, &c. both the proſperity of the wicked ſhall have an end, and the miſeries of the righteous, and which is more then that, that which through hope thou expecteſt in the world to come ſhall not faile thee, but be accompliſhed in Gods good time. Verſ. 16,17.

Here an application is made of that which was ſaid Chap. 20, 1. againſt drunkenneſſe, unto which, riotous eating of fleſh is added alſo. And the drunkard and glutton are both alike threatned with poverty. And it is added, Drouſineſſe ſhall cloath a man with rags, becauſe drunkenneſſe and gluttony by vapours aſcending to the brain cauſe drouſineſs: againſt gluttony alſo it was ſpoken before in this Chap. v. 1. Buy the truth and ſell it not, alſo wiſdome, inſtruction, and underſtanding. Having in the verſe before exhorted to hearken to father and mother, by whoſe wiſe counſell a young man may be guided in the right way of truth, now he biddeth buy the truth, that is, if it cannot be attained otherwiſe, as for the moſt part it cannot by parents, becauſe many of them are very ignorant and corrupt, yet bee at coſt with other teachers, of whom thou mayeſt learne the truth of God, and bee made wiſe and learned to ſalvation; and becauſe young children have neither the wit, nor money wherwith to make this purchaſe, it is the duty of parents to doe it for them, intending more with their purſes going this way to make them wiſe, then to make them gay in apparrel, and well monied in their purſes, as moſt doe, to their childrens undoing for ever. But now take notice of it (O yee parents) and take notice of it (yee children alſo) that true wiſdome is the pearle of more value then all other pearles, as Chriſt ſetteth it forth, and therefore buy this, although others muſt goe for it, yea, even all that is precious in this world, ſome money for inſtruction, and all, and life alſo, if need requireth, for Chriſt, the wiſdome of God, and the truth, as he is called. Sell it not, that is, on the contrary ſide ſell it not for a little money, by with-holding whereof thy childe wants inſtruction, or for worldly gaine diſpoſing of thy ſelfe, where thou wanteſt frequent preaching, or for love of worldly wealth forſaking the truth in any thing. For he that doth either of theſe, ſels this invaluable pearle for droſſe and dung, as Eſau did his birthright for a meſſe of pottage. Verſ. 23. Matth. 13. Note.

Laſtly, to ſhew that truth and true wiſdome are inſeparable, he addeth to theſe words, ſell not the truth, alſo wiſdome, inſtruction, and underſtanding. Sell away the truth, as hath beene ſaid, and ſell away wiſdome, buy it not, and buy not him, and ſo live and dye a foole, and periſh everlaſtingly.

Verſe 24, 25. Are onely an application in generall to all parents of that which he had ſaid, verſe 15, 16. what a joy it is to all parents to have wiſe children, and therefore it is againe repeated to put them on to uſe the meanes, whereby they may be made ſuch, as hath beene ſaid, verſe 23.

as hardly get out againe, as one that falleth into ſuch a pit, but muſt there lye and periſh for ever, ſo greatly doe fleſhly pleaſures bewitch the whoremonger.

Verſ. 29. Who hath woe? who hath ſorrow? who hath contentions? who hath babling, and wounds without cauſe, and redneſſe of eyes? they that tarry long at the wine, &c. From hence to the end of the Chapter, Salomon ſtrikes at the root of Adultery, and fleſhly luſts, viz. drunkenneſſe; for it is vaine for him to be warned againſt it, that is a wine-bibber; wherefore he ſheweth both many other evills that ſhall befall the drunkard, and then this of Adultery, and Fornication alſo, verſe 33.

Verſ. 33. Thine eyes ſhall looke after ſtrange women. Here is an enumeration of all ſorts of evills which are incident to drunkards; 1. Woe and ſorrow through diſeaſes and ſickneſſe, which drunkards fall into, and poverty. 2. Contentions, brawling and wounds; for drunkards commonly are quarrelſome, and being diſabled by drinking they goe by the worſt, if they provoke others to fighting, although oft-times they ſuddenly miſchiefe, and ſometimes kill and ſlay thoſe with whom. 3. Redneſſe of eyes, and of face alſo, whereby the drunkard is much deformed, looking ſpeckled and bloughty, and his face beſet with rubies, more like a monſter, then a man. 4. Verſ. 32. It biteth like a Serpent, and ſtings like an Adder, that is, bringeth ſudden death, as happeneth to him that is thus ſtung, ſo that wine and ſtrong drinke are now turned into poyſon. 5. Verſ. 34. He is like one ſleeping upon the top of a Maſt, and lying in the midſt of the Sea, that is, ſtaggering and reeling to and fro, and as ſicke of the turning ſickneſſe, all things ſeeming to turne round about him. 6. He is ſenſeleſſe being ſtricken, and not feeling it, as the dead doe not, nor hee that is dead drunke. Verſ. 35. 7. He comes to an habit of drinking, When ſhall I awake? I will ſeeke it yet againe; that is, notwithſtanding all the miſeries coming by exceſſive drinking, hee taketh no warning to breake off from this ſinne, but is the more eagerly ſet upon it, when he hath beene drunken once, and againe, a thirſt being bred in him, as in the hydropicall man, who having drunke now, deſireth by and by to drinke againe, to the increaſe of his diſeaſe more and more.

Moreover amongſt theſe evills, another, coming by drunkenneſſe, is inſerted, which is dangerous both to body and ſoule; that is, fleſhly luſts, unto which abundant drinking of wine and ſtrong drinke ſtirreth up, Thine eyes ſhall looke after ſtrange women. So that he who would not bee in danger of falling into the foule ſinne of Adultery, had need to flye drunkenneſſe: For there is a relation of one that was tempted to Adultery, and then to murther, but hee abhorring from both, fell into the ſinne of drunkenneſſe, and being drunken, committed them both; for hereby a man is made a beaſt, and ſo doth that which is naturall to him, how evill and abominable ſo ever. But let every one that delighteth in drinking, be warned by this,

Verſ. 31. Looke not upon the wine when it is red, when it moveth it ſelfe aright, and goeth downe pleaſantly, for to him that doth ſhall be woe, that is, for his laughing over his cups, he ſhall have weeping and lamentation, but no eye ſhall pity him, neither ſhall his teares doe him any good; for the Serpent here ſpoken of, ſome underſtand that called dipſas, with which who ſo is ſtung deſireth to drinke till he burſteth.

Laſtly, theſe words, When ſhall I awake? are expounded thus, When will it bee morning, that I may riſe, and goe to drinking againe? And this doth well agree with that Eſa. 5. Woe to them that riſe up early to follow drunkenneſſe.

CHAP. XXIV.

BE not envious againſt evill men, &c. For this ſee before, Chap. 23. 17. Verſ. 1.

Verſ. 2. For their heart ſtudieth deſtruction, and their lips ſpeak miſchief. Verſ. 2.
A good reaſon, why thou ſhouldeſt neither envy them, nor deſire to be admitted into the ſociety of the wicked, although in great proſperity for their evil hearts & tongues make them abominable to God, and are men of ſuch a condition not to be envied, becauſe they are rich; nor is their company to be deſired, with whom a man cannot be ſafe, when they ſeeme to be moſt loving; for deſtruction is in their hearts, to make themſelves by the ruine of others, and all their kinde ſpeeches are finally for miſchiefe to ſuch as to whom they ſhew moſt friendly.

By wiſdome is an houſe builded, and eſtabliſhed, and the chambers ſhall bee filled with all pleaſant and precious riches. Of the riches wherewith the wiſe ſhall be bleſſed, ſee before Chap. 22. 4. and 21. 20. and in divers other places, and therefore I ſpare to ſpeake any more of it here. And for Verſ. 6. ſee Chap. 20. 18. 15. 22. 11. 14. Verſ. 3. 4.

Wiſdome is too high for a foole, he openeth not his mouth in the gate. Here by the foole, underſtand the worldly minded man, all whoſe ſtudy and care is ſet upon worldly things, for him whoſe heart is ſo low, wiſdome is too high; neither can he ever attain to ſuch a faculty of ſpeaking in the preſence of others, as to be thought fit to ſit as a Magiſtrate, or Judge, who have of old uſed to ſit in the gate of the City to heare and determine cauſes; or if he ſitteth amongſt them, being conſcious of his owne weakneſſe, he dareth not once open his mouth to ſpeake there. Some underſtand it of the laſt judgement, when the foole, that is, the wicked man, ſhall bee ſpeechleſſe, as it is ſaid of the man without a wedding garment. Hugo yeeldeth this for a reaſon, why a fooliſh worldling is ſaid to be ſuch, that wiſdome is too high for him, he is too little, and ſo cannot reach ſo high, and ſo heavy laden with worldly cares, that he cannot liſt himſelfe up to her. And Auguſtine ſaith, Wiſdome is ſometime ſet forth as profound, and that is in reſpect of the proud, who will not ſtoope low enough, and ſo cannot attaine her, and ſometime as being high, that is in reſpect of the worldling, whoſe minde is altogether upon things here below, profits, or pleaſures of this life. Beda yeelds this reaſon, why wiſdome is ſaid to be too high for a foole, he is drowned in the depth of vice, and therefore in the gate, that is, when he goeth out of this world, he ſhall not open his mouth to be heard or accepted of, whatſoever he ſhall then plead for himſelfe, as the workers of iniquity doe. Verſ. 7. Janſen. Matth. 22. Hugo Card. Auguſt. Beda. Matth. 7. 21.

He that deviſeth to doe evill, ſhall be called a miſchievous perſon; Hebr. To him they ſhall call, or cry a maſter of imaginations; Vulg. ſhall be called a foole, and ſo rendred, it anſwereth to verſe 7. ſhewing who is the fool there ſpoken of: and indeed he that agitateth evill thoughts in his minde, is a wicked man, and conſequently a foole, and therefore the Vulgar to avoid a tautology, renders it not by thoughts or imaginations, but according to the ſenſe, every ſuch man is the fool for whom wiſdome, and conſequently preferment is too high, and therefore he ſhall not attaine to it. Verſ. 8.

The thought of fooliſhneſſe is ſinne, and the ſcorner an abomination to men. Here is a ground laid downe why the deviſer of miſchiefe ſhall come into reproach, as was ſaid, verſe 7. If a man doth but thinke fooliſhly and wickedly, this is ſin and wickedneſſe in him, and this being declared by a mans ſcornfull and contemptuous carriage toward his reprovers, makes him abominable to all wiſe and godly men. Verſ. 9.

If thou faint in the day of adverſity, thy ſtrength is ſmall; Vulg. Thy ſtrength ſhall be diminiſhed; in the Hebrew there is a paranomaſy after צרה adverſity, it being ſaid צרכחנה that is, fainting in the day of ſtraits ſhall cauſe a ſtrengthning in thy ſtrength and ſpirit. Theſe words are ſpoken by way of preparative to that which is ſaid after, verſe 11. 12. Verſ. 10.

be slaine. If thou sayest we knew it not, doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? and he shall reward every one according to his workes, whereby the meaning appeareth plainly to be this, If when thy brother is in a strait, by reason of wicked mens conspiring against his life, thou upon any pretence puttest not forth thy selfe to helpe him out of his danger, but pleadest thy inability, and so he perisheth, thou shalt for this come into straits hereafter, and then if there were any friend in whom thou trustedst as in thy strength, he shall faint and faile thee likewise, and so for want of deliverance thou shalt perish also.

Beda. Hugo. Lyra. Jansen. Beda, Hugo, and Lyra expound it thus, if thou being in a strait despairest and groweſt faint-hearted, thy strength, which is supported by hope, shal faile thee, because the ground thereof being taken away, the building reared up hereupon must needs totter, and become ruinous. Jansenius, if thou faintest in the day of thy adversity, it is a signe of a straitned spirit, and without the strength of faith.

Clarius. Clarius looking to that which went before, saith, If thou faintest at the difficulty of getting Wisdome, and so remittest thy care of attaining it, when adversity cometh, thy strength to beare it shall be strait and little, for this is according to a mans being indued with wisdome, or wanting it, he that wanteth, having no

Vatabl. power to beare afflictions, when they come, if they be great: Vatablus, if thy heart faile thee, in time of being assaulted by adversity, when thou hast most need of courage, and resolution, thou shalt never be able to beare it, but be overcome hereby; wherefore the saying of the Poet is to be put in practise, Give not thou place to evills, but more courageous be. All which I have recited, because they are all truths, but the true exposition of this place went first.

Tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior esto.

Rodolph. Junius. Lavater. And hereunto Rodolphus agreeth, and Junius, and Lavater, although he followeth that of a mans owne adversity, yet he mentioneth this also, and illustrateth it by an example of a Country man, that having an Asse heavie laden travelling upon the way, and an Horse, that carried a light burthen, the Asse groaning under his burthen, desired the Horse to help him beare part of it; the Horse denied so to doe, saying, That he was not able; the Asse then by his overgreat burthen laid upon him, after a while fell downe, and dyed; then the Husbandman tooke it, and laid it upon the Horse, together with his owne load; then the Horse complained, That he was dealt too cruelly withall; but the man answered, He was well enough served, because he would not help his fellow, being oppressed with lading, which if he had done, they might both have gone well on to their journies end; but now there was no remedy, he must beare all, although he dyed also.

August. Augustine saith, it is preluded in the doings which came from us towards others, what shall be done to us, and if we draw back under any pretence, and help not our brethren out of trouble, if we have power, we may hence gather, that trouble hangeth over our heads, and then we shall be likewise forsaken, all men falling from us.

Vers. 13. Vers. 14. My sonne, eate thou Honey because it is good, and the Honey-combe, which is sweet unto thy taste, so shall the knowledge of wisdome be unto thy soule. When thou hast found it, then there shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off. Taking both these verses together it is manifest, as all Expositors agree, that under the similitude of Honey, the Word of God is commended unto us, whereby wisdome to salvation is attained.

Hippocrat. Pliny. Here are three properties of Honey set forth; 1. It is good many wayes, as Hippocrates, and Pliny writeth, 1. being eaten with other things it is good for food. 2. It preserveth naturall heat, and so is good against slothfulnesse, and to make a man goe about his businesse with fervency. 3. It is good against flegme, which it looseneth, and purgeth. 4. It is good to keep other meates from corrupting in the stomack, and body. 5. Being laid upon a wound, it is good to heale it. 6. Upon a dead body it is good, to keep it from corrupting, and stinking.

Touching the sweet and pleasant taste, who is there that knoweth not this? and this is the first property, secondly, by the good effects which it hath in the body, it preserveth in health, and strength unto old Age, making one to live very long.

In

In like manner, the Word of God being eaten, That is, diligently heard, and other things being mixed withall, faith in the hearing, and serious meditation and practise, is excellent food to the Soule, and by Job therefore preferred before all bodily food; and of this it is meant, which is said, The words of the wise feed many. Heb. 4. 2. Job 23. 12.

2 It quickneth, and putteth life into men, so that whereas before they were slothfull, and backward to any good work, now they are transported with zeale, as hot as fire.

3 It keepeth the cold flegmatick humour to this end from increasing, and the man that is fed herewith, from being corrupted, when he heareth, or seeth that which tendeth to the corrupting of the minde, as corrupt communication, erroneous teaching, railing, and cursing, &c. and this answereth to the fourth property of Honey.

5 The wounds of the soule are healed by the consolations of the Word applied there unto.

6 The soule thus healed, or the man thus healed, although he dyeth as other men doe, yet his good name continueth blessed, when the memory of the wicked, who regard not Gods Word, shall rot. Prov. 10. 7.

Thus I have shewed the Word to be good as Honey; now for the sweetnesse thereof, it is like that of the Honey-combe, honey is sweet, but the Honey-combe sweeter; By the Honey, saith Beda, after Augustine, the literall sence of the word is set forth, which is open in many places to the Reader, by the Honey-combe, the Mysticall, which a man attaineth to, but drop after drop, being hidden in the combe, but being attained to, the sweetnesse is much more; and so is the understanding of every difficult place of the Word, as I have found abundantly by experience, and I doubt not, but whosoever being a lover of the Truth trieth it, he shall likewise finde it so. And as to the Reader, that laboureth to come to this, so to the intelligent hearer it is most sweet, being by his teacher opened unto him, as by Philip to the Eunuch; which should both stir up students to this labour, and make such hearers ashamed, as are willing indeed to eat the honey, but care not for tasting of the honey-combe, that is, would have the teacher speake altogether upon plaine places, but nothing upon the mysticall, which are the sweetest when they are understood; for this is as much in effect, as if thou shouldest say, give me the honey, but the honey-combe keepe that to thy selfe. 3. As honey preserveth to old age in health and strength, so doth the word such as feed upon it to eternity; hearing and obeying it, is a meanes to live long, and to prosper in this world, and for ever in the world to come; for this is the bread which Christ giveth, of which who so eateth, shall never dye, although they that ate manna in the wildernesse be dead, thus it is here promised, There shall be a reward, and thy expectation shall not be cut off. The vulg. Thou shalt have hope in the end, in novissimis. And yet there is a difference betwixt Honey and the Word, Honey is sweet for the present to the taste, but it is afterwards turned into bitternesse, causing a bitter taste in the mouth, but the Word is sweet at the first, and he that feeds hereupon, shall taste more sweet in the end, even that of fulnesse of joy, and pleasures for evermore. 2. Honey must be sparingly taken to doe thee the good before spoken of, otherwise if thou eat over much, it makes thee sicke, and causeth vomiting; but of the Word the more thou eatest, the more health and strength thou gettest to thy soule. Psal. 19. 9. Cant. 5. 1. Beda. Act. 8. Note. Psal. 34. 12. Ioh. 6. Psal. 16. Prov. 25. 16. 27

Lay not wait (O wicked man) for the dwelling of the righteous, neither spoyle his resting place. Vers. 15.

For the righteous falleth seven times and riseth againe, but the wicked shall fall into mischiefe. Augustine, and most Expositors after him, understand this of falling into trouble; Gregory, of falling into sinne. For dwelling place, which the wicked is charged not to spoyle, is נָוֶה put Hebr. by some rendred his chamber, whereby is meant, that no wicked man should dare to put him to trouble, whereby he might be kept from resting in quiet. The vulg. hath it, Lay not wait, nor seeke iniquity in the house of the just; as if it were meant, seeke not Vers. 16. August. Gregor. Magnus.

to draw him to ſinne, for he may indeed fall often, but he riſeth up againe. But in this reading iniquity is added more then is in the original, which cauſed that expoſition of falling into ſinne, whereas it is meant onely of falling into troubles; ſeven times being a number of perfection, ſetteth forth very many times, but it is not ſeven times a day, as it is commonly ſpoken. The troubles of the righteous alſo, ſaith David, are many, but the Lord delivereth him out of them all. Pſal. 37.

In ſaying here, He riſeth up againe, he meaneth more ſtrong and able through faith, then he was before, as the Poets feigne that Pantheon was ſtrengthened more and more by falling to the ground, and therefore he ſuffered his adverſary to caſt him downe often, becauſe that every time that hee touched his mother Earth, Tellus, he increaſed in ſtrength, and at laſt was found invincible, of which mention is made by Gregory Nazianzen. But although that be a fable, it is true of the faithfull, the more they ſuffer, the more their faith and patience is ſtrengthned, ſo that the wicked practiſing any thing againſt them, they riſe up advantaged hereby, and ſo all their attempts are fruſtrated, but it ſhall not be ſo with them, when Gods judgements come for this, and all other their wickedneſſes, they ſhall fall and riſe no more for ever, their falling ſhall prove to them the greateſt miſchiefe that ever befell mortall men. Gregor. Nazian. Note.

And thus the words verſe 16. are a ſtrong argument to deterre the wicked from attempting any thing againſt the righteous, as if he had ſaid, Doe not ſo (O yee wicked) ſeeke not to overthrow his dwelling, diſturb him not, for although yee may ſeeme to prevaile much in ſo doing, yet it is but for a time, and yee give him advantage hereby, all that you doe againſt him, being turned to his greater good, and to your utter ruine, and therefore yee had need rather looke to your ſelves, and your wayes, learning of him to turne righteous alſo, that yee may eſcape the miſchiefe that is otherwiſe certainly coming upon you.

Verſ. 18. Leſt the Lord ſee it, and it diſpleaſe him, and he turne away his wrath from them. This may ſeeme to be contradictory to Chap. 12. 10. When the wicked periſh, the City rejoyceth, and to Pſal. 58. it is ſaid, That the righteous ſhall ſee the deſtruction of the wicked, and rejoyce, and Pſal. 68. and Moſes and Miriam rejoyced, and praiſed God for drowning the Egyptians; ſo likewiſe did Deborah and Barack, and Jehoſhaphat. Lavater to this anſwereth, that there are two things to be looked at in the deſtruction of the wicked: Exod. 15. Judg. 5. 2 Chron. 20. Lavater.

1 The good that cometh hereby, to God, to his Church, and to the wicked themſelves, 1 To God glory, his juſtice and power being ſeene in their ruine, that were before ſo mighty, is for this by all men praiſed, as Revel. 19. for the fall of Antichriſt the Saints praiſe God. 2. To his Church, ſafety and deliverance cometh by their fall, as by the fall of Saul, and of Nebuchadnezzars houſe, Sennacherib and Pharaoh. 3 To the wicked, that is, others ſurviving, who ſome of them at the leaſt are warned and converted.

The ſecond thing to be looked at is the evill, the falling of men for ought that we know both in body and ſoule, who by Creation were one fleſh with us, and came of the ſame Father, God, as it is ſaid of Adam Luke 3. who was the Sonne of God, and St. Paul We are his generation. And in this regard, we muſt be farre from rejoycing at the ruine of our worſt enemies, for this cometh from hatred, and it is given us in charge to love our enemies. We are alſo to conſider, that wee are either like to them that fall, or better, or worſe; if like unto them, what cauſe of rejoycing? may not the ſame judgement come upon us alſo? as Chriſt ſaid to thoſe, that rejoycingly told him of the cruelty of Pilate to the Galileans, Thinke yee that they onely were ſinners? I tell you nay, for unleſſe yee repent yee ſhall all likewiſe periſh. 2 If better, whence haſt thou it? haſt thou any grace more then another, which thou haſt not received? why then doſt thou rejoyce at the ruine of others, and inſult over them? he that gave this to thee, could have paſſed by thee, and given it to him. 3 If worſe, as many are who be ſpared, when others fall, there is no cauſe to rejoyce, but feare; was not he ſpared, but is falne and deſtroyed? Act. 17. Luke 13. 1 Cor. 4 7.

deſtroyed? how much more mayeſt thou, who art worſe, looke then for deſtruction alſo? Parents beat not ſome children, and ſpare others, that they might rejoyce, but all feare and take heed of running into the like errour.

Polybius ſaith of Scipio, that when Carthage was all on fire and burning downe, he ſtood by him beholding it with teares falling from his eyes, and he asking him the cauſe, he anſwered, that he conſidered the viciſſitude of things, Rome might one day be burnt downe, as Carthage now was. And Metellus Macedon, when Scipio Africanus his enemy was dead, put on mourning apparrel, and David mourned for Saul. Polyb.

Thus it being ſhewed what is evill in our rejoycing at the fall of our enemies, it eaſily appeareth at what God is diſpleaſed when we doe ſo. And for the laſt words, and he take away his hand from them; the meaning is, grant them to riſe up againe, and ſo for a puniſhment of this thy inſulting joy, give them power over thee. And theſe words doe fitly follow thoſe verſe 16. where it is ſaid, The wicked ſhall fall into miſchiefe, but here, when they doe, rejoyce not thou at it, leſt God ſee, and be diſpleaſed.

Fret not thy ſelfe at evill men, neither be envious at the wicked. As thou muſt not rejoyce at their fall, ſo neither muſt thou envy them for their proſperity, of which enough before, Chap. 23. 17. For as rejoycing at their fall conduceth to their riſing againe, and then it will be worſe for thee; ſo if they proſper, and thou envieſt it not, Their candle ſhall ſoone be put out, that is, their proſperity ſhall ſoone be at an end. Verſ. 19. Verſ. 20. Job 21. 17.

My ſonne, feare thou the Lord, and the King, and meddle not with them that are given to change. To feare God and the King, ſaith one, is to give to Cæſar the things of Cæſar, and to God the things of God; now he giveth theſe to either, that ſo obeyeth the Kings Lawes, as that he obeyeth the Lawes of God alſo: And he ſinneth againſt this precept, that obeyeth thoſe of the King, but not thoſe of God, or thoſe of God touching the keeping of his Sabbaths, praying, hearing, &c. But not thoſe of the King, to live in ſubjection to him, to pay him tribute or cuſtome, but out of a diſtaſte of his government, to rebell againſt him, with ſuch meddle not. Verſ. 21.

For their calamity ſhall come ſuddenly, and who knoweth the ruine of them both? that is, both of rebels againſt God, and againſt the King, who is Gods Vicegerent in his Kingdome, as he hath ſaid, By me Kings reigne. For the firſt kinde of rebellion, that he is guilty of it, that liveth not in obedience to Gods Lawes, appeareth in Saul, to whom rebellion was objected, when he did not as God commanded in the matter of the Amalekites; and Eſa. 1. 21. and for rebellion againſt the King, it is ſaid, He that reſiſteth ſhall reap to himſelf damnation, for he is Gods Miniſter for thy good. And this is the reaſon, why both God, and the King muſt be feared, becauſe as the Kings officers or Miniſters are reverenced for the Kings ſake, ſo the King is to be feared for Gods ſake, whoſe officer he is. Some underſtand this thus, Feare God, and obey him firſt and chiefly, and then the King ſo far forth, as obeying him is not a diſobeying of God, which is true alſo: For theſe words, Meddle not with them that are given to change. The vulg. Mingle not with detractours, that is, conſort not with them, be not one amongſt thoſe that diſparage the King lawfully ſet up, who ſeeke by this means to alienate his ſubjects hearts from him, and conſequently his putting downe, that another may be ſet up more conformable to their mindes, and the word תתערב properly ſignifieth mingle not thy ſelfe. And that which is ſaid of the King, and fearing him, doth alike concerne the chiefe Magiſtrates of any Nation: as the Judge, when it is governed by a Judge, as we may ſee in Samuel, for when the people rejected him, and would have a King, the Lord ſaid, They have rejected not thee, but me, for their deſtruction ſhall come ſuddenly; that is, both of him that doth not feare God, or feareth not the King, he may proſper haply for a time, but ruine ſhall at length come to them both. The word both may alſo have reference to both the detractour from the King, and to him that is moved hereby to rebell againſt him. And he ſaith, Who knoweth the ruine of them both? either in reſpect of the time, or the Verſ. 22. Prov. 8. 1 Sam. 15. Rom. 13.

the manner of Gods or the Kings proceeding againſt them, to judge them according to their demerits; I doe not think, as ſome would have it, to be meant of the unlimited power of the King more then of other Judges, to adjudge to what Deut. 17. puniſhment he pleaſeth, for even he is herein to proceed according to Law, and not otherwiſe, for to this end, that he might know how to proceed thus, he muſt read the Lawes of God continually.

Verſ. 23. Theſe things alſo belong to the wiſe, it is not good to have reſpect of perſons in judgement. Having warned ſubjects of their duties, now he addeth ſomething touching Kings, and Judges, whom he calleth, the wiſe, becauſe they are commonly the wiſeſt of all other men, or ſhould be the wiſeſt, that are advanced to Lavater. this height of honour. It is not good, he tells them, to have reſpect of perſons in Deut. 1. 17. judgement; that is, either to the rich, or to the poore, being moved by the bribes or favour of the one, or by the pitifull condition of the other to judge unrighteouſly, but it is a great evill, and therefore by them to be abhorred. Againſt reſpecting perſons in judgement, alſo ſee Chap. 18. 5. The word rendred good, is טוב which ſignifieth alſo decorum, comely, whereupon ſome note, that the Judge who accepteth of perſons in judgement, takes the blemiſhes, as it were, that were upon the face of the evill-doer, and placeth them upon his owne, and ſo deforming it; for which it is noted, that the word rendred perſons is Bernard. conſid. 1. faces פנים, whereupon Bernard ſaith, He that reſpecteth faces, cannot ſtand before the face of God. Some by theſe words, Theſe things belong alſo to the wiſe; Hebr. underſtand, that all wiſe men hold and teach, as hath beene ſaid verſe 21, 22. and as in this verſe alſo, but the firſt is moſt followed.

Verſ. 24. This is all one with Chap. 17. 15.

Verſ. 24. Verſ. 25, 26. But to them that rebuke the wicked ſhall be delight, and a good bleſsing ſhall come upon him. Every one ſhall kiſſe his lips that giveth a right anſwer; that is, as the corrupt judge, who hath reſpect of perſons is had in abomination; ſo the juſt judge, that looks to the cauſe brought before him, and judgeth accordingly,
Junius. is by every one praiſed. Junius hath for the good bleſsing of every good man, for by them righteous judges are bleſſed, but not by the wicked, whoſe aſſociates are by their juſt proceedings rebuked, and put to ſuffering, and therefore they are ready to ſpeake againſt them; but the good both love and reverence every ſuch judge, which is meant by ſaying, not onely bleſsing of the good ſhall come upon him, but every one ſhall kiſſe his lips; the ceremony of kiſſing ſetting forth reverence, as is ſhewed Pſal. 2. Kiſſe the Son, leſt he be angry, and 1 King. 19. 18. Every one that hath not kiſſed Baal. Some underſtand this as ſpoken to Kings and Judges to ſtir them up againſt flatterers, and to rebuke them rather then to bee well pleaſed with them; for they by their falſe praiſes of Princes, and juſtifying even things evill, done by them, incourage them to goe on ſtill in ſo doing, to the great griefe of all good men. They therefore that doe ſo, are curſed of the people, yea, the Prince that is pleaſed with them, groweth odious, but he that rebuketh ſuch flatterers ſhall be bleſſed: or whereas the flatterer juſtifying the acts of wicked Princes becomes hereby abominable; ſo he that is bold, and takes liberty to reprove ſuch Kings, is bleſſed and praiſed; as Diogenes, who, as Plutarch ſaith, tooke liberty in this kinde, and was greatly honoured therefore. But the firſt expoſition is to bee preferred, becauſe all that is here ſaid, cohereth with verſe 23. It is not good to have reſpect of perſons in judgement. He then that is condemned, verſe 24. for ſaying to the wicked, Thou art juſt, is one that ſitteth in judgement, and the thing for which he is thus condemned, muſt needs then be his unjuſt judging for the reſpect aforeſaid.

Verſ. 27. Prepare thy worke without, and make it fit for thy ſelfe in the field, afterwards build thy houſe. The ſcope of this precept is to perſwade us to an orderly proceeding in all things, whether concerning the body or the ſoule; even as a man Muffet. that will build him an houſe, firſt provideth materials abroad, then heweth and ſquareth and fitteth them to be put together, and laſtly falleth to building; for even ſo he that will make feaſts, and maintaine a good table, well furniſhed for many commers, and live royally, muſt firſt get him an eſtate, wherewithall he may doe ſo, and then keepe ſuch hoſpitality; and likewiſe he that would be bleſſed with an eſtate, or competency to live, muſt firſt ſeeke the Kingdome of God, and the righteouſneſſe thereof, for if ye do ſo, ſaith Chriſt, All theſe things ſhall be added unto you. 3. He that will pleaſe God, and obtaine his bleſſing in all things, muſt proceed orderly in things pertaining to the ſoule, and to his kingdome; firſt bee a learner, and then a teacher, and to this end, not be about religious duties in private houſes, when the Congregation meeteth in publike, but firſt, and alwayes at ſuch times there, then afterwards in private, ſpeaking nothing but what he hath learned in publike; as Jerom ſaith of himſelfe, that he never taught any thing but what he had firſt learned of others, being allowed publike teachers in the Church of God; both which, if they were obſerved well, errours and ſchiſmes would bee prevented, whereas now to our great ſcandall they abound. And if the ſecond were thought upon, piety would be greatly promoted, and a greater bleſſing from heaven, would upon our worldly eſtates flow downe. If the third, ſo many mens revenues would not be through prodigality waſted, nor ſo many kept poore and miſerable as be. Thus in generall, but becauſe there are two words uſed, בחוץ without, and בשרה in the field, ſome thinke, that by the firſt merchandize is meant, and by the ſecond husbandry, which are two wayes of getting wealth, whereby a family may be maintained; and therefore the meaning is, If thou beeſt a Merchant or Tradeſ-man, or Husbandman, provide firſt one, or both of theſe wayes for the maintenance of a family, and then build thy houſe, that is, take a wife, beget children, and bring them well up, or at leaſt learne, and get the knowledge of thoſe wayes, that by being well verſed herein, thou mayeſt be skilfull, and ſo the more apt to get thy living to maintaine thee and thine; and this is not to be miſliked, becauſe building of an houſe is ſometime put for bearing of children, and forming them by inſtruction according to good manners.

Matth.6.33.

Note.

Hieron

Be not a witnes againſt thy neighbour without a cauſe, neither deceive with thy lips; Hebr. for deceive, is הפתיתה coming of פתה to ſeduce, to intice, to break in peeces, and therefore ſome render it, breake him not in peeces, becauſe when a man is before a Judge in a matter of life and death, and he is now in ſome poſſibility to eſcape, ſome witneſſe coming in againſt him, that is not required, by his teſtimony may cut him off. And ſuch a witneſſe is meant by a witneſſe without a cauſe; and by the Imperiall Law, therefore ſuch a mans teſtimony is forbidden to be taken, becauſe it is conceived, that he is ſtirred up hereunto out of malice to be revenged for ſome wrong formerly done to him. And no leſſe implied in the words following here, Verſe 29.

Verſ. 28.

Lavater.

Say not I will doe to him as he hath done me, I will render to the man according to his worke, which is partly taken from Chap.20.22. By Lavater the word is rendred deceived, nunquid allicies, wilt thou allure? that is, by thy inticing and perſwaſive ſpeaking, cauſe the Judge being drawne hereby to paſſe an unjuſt ſentence, and then the firſt letter ה hath the force of an interrogative. Some that follow the rendring by deceive, underſtand it not as ſpoken to the ſame purpoſe, but as thou oughteſt not to come in as a witneſſe againſt a man unrequired, ſo beare him not in hand that thy love is great toward him, when it is not, but contrariwiſe thy hatred.

Verſ. 29.

I went by the field of the ſlothfull, and by the vineyard of one void of underſtanding, and it was all overgrown with thornes, &c. Of the ſlothfull, ſee before Chap.6. and in ſome other places of this Booke; here the evill effects of his bad husbandry, and his poverty following thereupon is ſet forth, to deterre all men from idleneſſe, and to ſtir up to diligence. And that which is here ſpoken, is by Ambroſe, and ſome others, applyed ſpiritually to thoſe that are ſlothfull in Gods Husbandry, letting the field of their heart run out with thornes and weeds, whereas they ought, like good ground receiving good ſeed, to yeeld a plentiful increaſe of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe unto him, for want of labouring to doe which, they come to be poor and miſerable, and undone for ever. And according to this the Prophet biddeth, Break up the fallow ground of your hearts, and ſow not amongſt thorns, and where thorns are, the ſeed is choaked, and the ground that brings forth briars and thorns is accurſed.

CHAP. XXV.

THeſe are alſo the Parables of Salomon, which the men of Hezekiah copied out, Vulg. which they tranſlated, Hebr. העתיקו coming of a word, which ſignifieth to remove, or to transferre, whereby is not meant their tranſlating them out of one Language into another, but their taking them out from amongſt many more; for his Proverbs are ſaid to have been three thouſand, and therefore moſt probably out of them theſe beginning here, and continued, Chap. 26. 27, 28, 29. were taken, as the moſt choyce ones, by the Scribes, or Prophets, living in the dayes of godly Hezekiah, by the direction of the Spirit of God, and added to thoſe that went before, and ſo made Canonicall, as other parts of holy Scripture; the reſt, which were never any part hereof in continuance of time, periſhing without any detriment to the Church of God.

1 King 4.

Verſ. 1. It is the glory of God to conceale a thing, but the honour of a King is to ſearch out a matter. There are many things which God of his goodneſſe hath revealed, even all which it concerneth us to know for our ſalvation; but there are many more things kept ſecret, and hidden from us, which it doth not belong to us to know, neither may we ſearch into them, according to that of Moſes, The ſecret things of the Lord belong to the Lord, the revealed to us; and therefore the Apoſtle ſaith, that here we know but in part.

Deut. 29 29.
1 Cor. 13.

The ſecrets of God are, what he did before he made the world, when the Day of Judgement ſhall be, or the time of our owne departure out of this life, what ſhall be the ſtate of the world after this, what the particular cauſes are of Gods Judgements upon divers men in this world, who be elect, or reprobate, why the Lord in making election is moved more to ſhew mercy to ſome then to others, for herein we muſt cry out with the Apoſtle, How unſearchable are his judgements, and his wayes paſt finding out? There are alſo many ſecrets in Nature, the reaſon whereof we cannot finde out; but all this makes for the glory of God, in that we are hereby ſet a worke, to extoll and magnifie his Wiſdome and power, as exceeding the apprehenſions of all men. But the Kings glory is to ſearch out a matter which is hard to be found out, that in Judgement he may give a right ſentence, and therefore not to proceed raſhly herein, but having firſt heard both parties, and weighed well all circumſtances, as Salomon did in the caſe of two Harlots.

1 King. 3. 16.

Verſ. 2. The heaven for height, and the earth for depth, and the heart of the King is unſearchable, Hebr. There is no finding out of the Heaven in the height, of the earth in the depth, or of the Kings heart. He had ſaid before, ver. 1. that it is the glory of a King to ſearch out a Matter, but now touching the ſecrets of the Kings heart, this he ſaith is not by any other man to be found out, which yet is not by all Expoſitors underſtood, as if it were here meant, that the Kings heart and wayes are ſo unſearchable; but by Junius, and ſome others, that the King ſhould have ſo profound and wiſe an heart to mannage the weighty affaires of the Kingdome, over which he is ſet.

Junius.

Conſidering that which was ſaid, verſ. 1. which this moſt aptly followeth, it ſeemeth plaine to me, that the meaning is nothing elſe, but it cannot be found out by others, how large a Kings heart is for the finding out of things ſecret and hidden, that Malefactours might not be bold to doe wickedly in hope to be concealed; for both chap. 20. 8. and elſewhere it is ſo ſpoken, of the divining faculty in the King, as that this ſeemeth to be but a ſetting forth of the ſame in other words; and therefore all other Expoſitions made hereupon are but conjectures, whether of them, that ſay the inſtability of the King in his wayes is here ſet forth, who often changeth his minde, as being tyed by no Lawes; or of them, that ſay, his lifting up of ſome aloft, and then caſting them low dowre againe, is here ſet forth &c. but much more doe they erre in expounding this, that ſay, a compariſon is here made betwixt Kings and Subjects, Kings being as Heaven above, and Subjects as the earth beneath, and therefore too farre below them to be able to ſearch into their Counſels. And that expound it, as if it were meant, that the height of Heaven, and depth depth of the Earth might be found out, but not the Kings heart: but the ſpeech is altogether of Kings, and not of Kings and Subjects, and tends to ſhew a parity, not a diſparity betwixt Heaven and Earth, and the Kings heart. If it be ſaid, the height of Heaven, and depth of the earth, and circumference of both, have been found out by the Art of man, it is anſwered; This is but conjecturall, not certaine, becauſe the rules whereby the Aſtronomer goeth may faile; if it had been ſimply meant of the impoſſibility to finde out what the Kings heart is, here had been nothing ſingular ſaid touching him, for ſo it is in reſpect of the heart of any other man, unleſſe it ſhould be underſtood of him, as the chiefe Judge over all the people, as if he had ſaid; When the King hath found out a ſecret, as is aforeſaid, it cannot be knowne in all ſuch Caſes, what the King will doe in way of puniſhing the wicked being found out, whether by one kinde of puniſhment or another, becauſe this is to him Arbitrary.

Take away the droſſe from the Silver, and there ſhall come forth a veſſell for the finer. Take the wicked from before the King, and his throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed in righteouſneſſe. Here by a ſimilitude it is ſhewed, how neceſſary it is to remove the wicked from about the King, Flatterers, corrupt Judges, the one ſort of which the Emperour Severus called Smoke-ſellers, commanding them ſtrictly not to come at his Court.

Verſ. 4. Verſ. 5. Alex. Severus.

And to finde out who were ſuch droſſe, Conſtantius the Father of Conſtantine the Great deviſed this way, he cauſed it to be proclaimed, that all ſuch as would not ſacrifice to the gods ſhould be put from being his Counſellours, and Servants, but ſuch as would, ſhould ſerve him; then all they that were unſound, came readily and offered, but the true-hearted Chriſtians would not; this triall being made, the Emperour commanded all that offered to depart from him, ſaying, That they could not be faithfull to him, that were unfaithfull to their God, but the refuſers to offer, he kept ſtill unto him. And this policy he ſeemed to learne from Jehu, who dealt likewiſe with Baals ſervants.

Conſtantius.

1 King. 10.

Wicked men about the King, ſaith Carneades, keep him, that he can learne to doe nothing well, but to ride, and ſo bewitched is he by them, that he careth not for doing rightly otherwiſe, for whether he doth or no, they applaud him; but the Horſe, that putteth no difference betwixt him and another man, will fling, and caſt him off, if he be not a good Rider. It is the part of Kings therefore, as they deſire to ſit ſure, to put ſuch from about them, as David did; and that they may ſo doe, the policy before ſpoken of, is to be uſed, and in a King that doth ſo, the Expoſition before going, of the unſearchableneſſe of the Kings heart is verified, for who could know the heart of Jehu, or Conſtantius, till that having found out the wicked they diſcovered themſelves?

Carneades.

Note. Pſal. 101.

And thus, theſe words alſo doe well cohere with thoſe verſ. 3. for ſo much as the Kings heart is ſo unſearchable, for the deep policy thereof, to finde out corrupt perſons, let them make this uſe hereof to finde out ſuch as are wicked about them, and having found them out, put them away, as Conſtantius did.

Put not forth thy ſelfe in the preſence of the King, neither ſtand in the place of great men, for better it is, that it ſhould be ſaid unto thee, come up higher, &c. The meaning of this is, That no man ſhould beare an ambitious minde, aſpiring to high places, becauſe he that doth ſo, ſhall be put downe againe to his ſhame. And it is ſaid, In the preſence of the King, becauſe it is a direction to ſuch as come to ſit in Counſell with him; as that of Chriſt, who biddeth take the loweſt place, is for ſuch as come to meetings at Feaſts, where it is a foule ſhame to be bidden, Sit downe lower, but much more to be thus debaſed before the King.

Verſ. 6. Verſ. 7. Luc. 14.

Goe not forth haſtily to ſtrive, leſt thou know not what to doe in the end thereof, When thy neighbour hath put thee to ſhame. Debate thy cauſe with thy neighbour himſelfe, and diſcover not thy ſecret to another: Leſt he that heareth it, put thee to ſhame. Jun. Debate the matter with thy neighbour, but reveale not anothers ſecret. That is, be not haſty to goe to Law with any man, as is alſo adviſed, 1 Cor. 6. leſt it goe againſt thee, and thou be committed to priſon, from whence thou knoweſt not well how to get out againe; but if thou canſt not avoid it, but to law thou muſt goe, contend with him onely, that thus urgeth thee, but if there be any other man, againſt whom an action might have beene brought as well as againſt thee, but what he hath done is concealed, and not taken notice of by him that commenceth the ſuit againſt thee, doe not thou diſcloſe that, leſt the Judge before whom, note thee for a malicious man, and ſo a diſgrace never to be done away, be brought upon thee; And the Hebr. favoureth this reading, and expoſition, and therefore I reſt herein.

Verſ. 11. A word aptly ſpoken is like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver : for theſe words aptly ſpoken, Heb. it is, upon its wheels, whereby is meant according to ſome running in an eloquent ſtreine, and garniſhed with flowers of rhetoricke, but according to others better, a word of ſeaſonable reproofe, which for the tartneſſe thereof may ſeem to be as the wheel, which of old was uſed for torment, as hath beene before ſhewed, which doth more plainly appear by the 12. verſe following.

Verſ. 12. As an eare-ring of gold, and an ornament of fine gold, ſo is a reprover upon an obedient eare; for the reprover is he whoſe words for the preſent, are as the wheele before ſaid, but his words being taken heed unto, and obeyed, adorne the man that obeyeth them in ſuch a glorious manner, as that now he is like unto one arrayed in a rich robe curiouſly wrought with gold and ſilver, and having at his eares hanging golden eare-rings and about his head and neck other ornaments of the pureſt gold, whereby he is wonderfully graced. He therefore that is impatient of reproof, as moſt are, doeth he knoweth not what, like a foole, to whom moſt precious things are offered to make him glorious, but he rather preferreth deformity, and beggars rags. Indeed for a poore man to have ſuch ornaments put upon him, and taken off againe, as they dealt by Chriſt, upon whom was put a purple robe, is ridiculous, but he that by putting ſuch on, hath them made his owne, and they are before God counted a grace unto him, is hereby made glorious and ſhall in the end be received into his Kingdome, when as the deformed, and ſuch as are clad in filthy cloathing ſhall be ſhut out.

Note.

Verſ. 13. As the cold of ſnow in the time of harveſt, ſo is a faithfull meſſenger; What a good thing a faithfull meſſenger or ambaſſadour is, ſee before Chap. 13. 17. but here it is ſet forth by a ſimilitude taken from the cold of ſnow in the time of greateſt heat, ſuch as the time of harveſt commonly is, eſpecially for the great labour of harveſt-men in the heat of the Sun. But how is the cold of ſnow, ſuch a refreſhing at this time? Jerome ſaith, that ſnow lay upon the mountaines of Libanus all the yeare, and that againſt extream heat they uſed to put it into their drinke, and by mingling it therewith they were greatly cooled, and refreſhed, and he that had a burning feaver was healed. To this then he alludeth, becauſe a man, that is anxious about a buſineſſe of importance, and hath a meſſenger to ſend out about it, who is faithfull, is a great eaſe and comfort to him, to ſee him ſoone returning the buſineſſe about which he went, by his care being diſpatched according to his hearts deſire. Some expound it of ſnow coming in the heat of harveſt to refrigerate the aire, or of cold blaſts coming from thoſe parts where ſnow lyeth: But becauſe the firſt of theſe is but imaginary, and a thing that never happeneth, and cold winds, that is, ſo cold would not be a refreſhing, but rather a dangerous piercing to mens bodies, their pores being open in ſo hot a time, I prefer, and reſt in the firſt.

Hieron. de locis Heb.

Verſ. 14. Who ſo boaſteth himſelfe of a falſe gift, is like clouds and winds without raine: that is, as the Husbandman is grieved, when by clouds and winds ariſing, he is put in hope of raine, but none cometh; ſo a man that by another is borne in hand that he will doe great matters for him, but when it cometh to the triall, he doth nothing, is vexed to ſee how he was deceived, and his confidence fruſtrated. Jude in his Epiſtle ſetteth forth falſe brethren, and hypocrites likewiſe, as clouds carried about of the winds without raine.

Verſ. 15. By long forbearing is a Prince perſwaded, and a ſoft tongue breakes the bone. Of this in general, ſee before ch. 15. 1. only here it is further applied to a Prince.

Here moderation in eating honey is preſcribed, as before Chap. 24. 13. it was commended to be eaten, and ſaid to be good, leſt therefore it ſhould be eaten to exceſſe, this caveat is here given.

With-

Withdraw thy foot from thy neighbours houſe, leſt he be weary of thee, and hate thee. Some joyne this verſe to the former, and make this to be the ſenſe, if thou findeſt thy neighbours houſe as ſweet as honey, for the good cheare which thou alwayes findeſt there, yet frequent it not too much, leſt he inſtead of making thee welcome, loath thy company, as too troubleſome a gueſt, and uſe thee contemptuouſly. And Lavater takes that ſpoken verſe 16. as a ſimilitude, as if it had beene ſaid, as a man finding honey eateth but a little, if he doth much, it will doe him more hurt then good; ſo if thou haſt a friend to whoſe houſe thou art welcome, goe but ſparingly thither, leſt he be weary of thy company, and reject thee as too impudent an intruder. A falſe witneſſe inveighed againſt here, hath beene often condemned before, but now he is compared to a maul, a ſword, and a ſharpe arrow; the firſt of which breaketh hard things in peeces, the ſecond cutteth them aſunder, if they be ſuch hard things as will be cut by a ſharp inſtrument, the third pierceth into the inward parts of the body; the meaning is, which way ſoever yee looke upon a falſe witneſſe, he is moſt dangerous, one way or other deſtroying him, againſt whom he cometh: and therefore, as enemies breaking into the land with clubs, ſwords, and arrows are oppoſed and ſuppreſſed by all men; ſo ſhould falſe witneſſes be. Some, becauſe three ſimilitudes are here uſed, by the firſt underſtand that which knocketh a man on the head, for this doth an hammer; by the ſecond, that which cutteth the throat, for this the ſword doth; by the third, that which pierceth the heart, for this the arrow doth. And he acts the part of an hammer, when he ſtriketh the head ſo, that the defendant cannot deviſe through aſtoniſhment what may make for his owne juſtification, and the overthrow of his teſtimony; of a ſword cutting the throat, when for want of invention he becomes unable to ſpeak: and of an arrow, when by entring into his heart, he makes him to bring forth ſecrets lying hid there, which make againſt him.

Janſen.

Laſtly, as the hammer and ſword kill at hand, ſo the arrow doth afarre off; in like manner the falſe witneſſe, not onely by teſtifying to his face, but calumniating him behinde his backe, makes him more infamous.

Confidence in an unfaithfull man in time of trouble is like unto a broken tooth, and a foot out of joynt, becauſe as the tooth, if a man cheweth therewith, it paineth him, and a foot out of joynt being ſet upon the ground to goe, puts a man to more paine; ſo truſting to a falſe friend in trouble, increaſeth the ſufferers paine; and to a foot, and a hand, and eye is a falſe friend compared by Chriſt, where he ſaith, If thy foot offend thee, cut it off and caſt it from thee. A friend is deare to a man, as a member of the body, but to be cut off, and no more friendſhip to bee held with him, if he deceiveth thee, when thou haſt moſt need of his helpe. The Vulg. joyneth alſo the next words at the beginning of verſe 20. hereunto, as he that taketh a garment in cold weather, expounded likewiſe of a deceitfull friend, for as a man in cold weather needs garments to keepe him warme, and it is a great hurt to him then to take them away; ſo for a friend to withdraw himſelf in time of trouble. And thus indeed it ſeemeth beſt to agree, although Hebr. the verſe bee ended before theſe words, for with that of verſe 20. it hath no agreement, the words being rendred, as in New Tranſlation, and Vulg. alſo, as Vinegar upon Nitre, that ſingeth ſongs to an heavy heart. But Junius that puts on him a garment in time of cold, or Vinegar upon Nitre, that ſings a ſong to one ſorrowfull in heart, expounding it of the comfort wherewith an heavy minde is affected at muſicke, as he that covers the naked with a garment in cold weather, who was before almoſt hard frozen, or by pouring on Vinegar upon Nitre, diſſolveth it, being of a ſtony hardneſſe before. And Nitre ſaith he, is not ſalt growne into this hardneſſe, but a kinde of earth white in colour, hardened by the Sunne, as Bellon. writeth: that Vinegar diſſolveth Nitre, ſee Ariſt. Meteor 4.6. and that muſicke eaſeth a troubled minde 1 *Sam.*16. 2 King. 3. the word rendred taking away commeth of עדה to remove, or to adorne, ſo that it may bee indifferently rendred, that taketh away or cloatheth with a garment. If it be rendred cloatheth, it goes thus, Cloathing one in a cold day, Vinegar upon Nitre and ſinging in ſongs in, or to an heart heavy or ill. So that three things ſeem here to be put together, as if it had beene ſaid, they are alike, and then the expoſition of Ier. 2. Junius is moſt right: and touching Nitre, elſewhere it is ſpoken of as a ſcourer, and he ſaith, that things being waſhed herewith are made purely white. But if it be contrariwiſe underſtood of taking away a garment, &c. then the ſong in ſorgs to an heavy heart is ſpoken of, as like unto him that doth ſo, increaſing rather the heavineſſe, then diminiſhing it: And touching Vinegar upon Nitre, which is a Cajet. in. cleanſer and ſcourer, Cajetan ſaith, that he hath noted that this mixture is ſo farre from taking ſpots out of a garment and making it white, that it is thus ſpotted more. The effects of Nitre and Vinegar mingled together, are by divers noted to be divers:

1. Galen ſaith, that Nitre is not diſſolved by oyle, but by Vinegar moſt Galen l. 3. de medicin. cap. 7. readily.

2. Beda ſaith, that it being poured upon Nitre, makes it crackle like unto lime, when water is poured on.

3. It temperеth the acrimony of Nitre, and being mixt together, the ſharpneſſe of the Vinegar is allayed. So Pliny.

4. This mixture healeth the noiſe in the eares, and purgeth the filthineſſe

And touching the making of Nitre, Georgius Agricola ſaith, that it is made of the water of Nilus, or Lye, or ſweet water drained through the earth, and hardened by the heat of the Sun And as to finde out the meaning of theſe words, the effects of Vinegar poured upon Nitre is to be known, ſo we muſt know what is meant by the words rendred an heavy heart, Hebr. לבֹרע, an evill heart, and therefore by ſome it is taken for a wicked heart, by others for a ſorrowfull heart. And the words, שר־ב שרים a ſong in ſongs ſignifieth ſometimes lamentation, and woe, Ezek. 2. and 27. and 32. and then hereby is meant ſeverity, reproofe, and denouncing of woes againſt the notoriouſly wicked. Yet becauſe Vinegar put upon Nitre allayeth the acrimony thereof, as hath beene ſaid, it is meant that a moderation muſt bee uſed in reproving, the offender not being dealt with altogether with ſharpneſſe, but ſome gentleneſſe, that he be not exaſperated, in ſtead of being amended. And the man here ſpoken of, as being of an evill heart, may well be thought to be the unfaithfull one ſpoken of, verſe 19. and therefore we may underſtand all together thus: To the unfaithfull man ſhall be removing or taking away the garment in cold weather, he having no helpe herefrom, as he afforded others no helpe in their trouble, who truſted to him; but inſtead of comfort, when he is thus denuded, Vinegar and Nitre, lamentation and woe ſhall be to him, as one that hath thus diſcovered himſelfe to be of a moſt evill and wicked heart, that is, he ſhall taſte of ſharpe and bitter afflictions, whereby he ſhall be made burning like lime, when water is poured Note. upon it, and inſtead of ſolace, whereby men uſe to comfort others in miſery, hee ſhall heare nothing ſounded to him, but ſongs of lamentation and woe, that all men by his example may be warned againſt doing the like, that is, being unfaithfull to their friends, and leaving them in their diſtreſſe without helpe, which is the moſt contrary to the duty of love that can be. For other expoſitions that are made hereupon, becauſe none of them doe throughly agree to all things here ſaid, I omit them as impertinent. The divers effects of Vinegar and Nitre indeed, hath given occaſion of divers, but ſurely it is no intent of the Spirit of God, that this ſimily ſhould be ſtretched to them all, but onely to thoſe which moſt aptly agree to the matter intended here.

Verſ. 21. If thy enemy be hungry give him bread to eat, &c. From this the Apoſtle ſpeaketh Rom. 12. And it is not without ſome coherence with that which went before, verſe 29. where the unfaithfull friend is cenſured, for not helping his friend in time of trouble; hee that will ſhew himſelfe one of Gods faithfull people, contrariwiſe muſt not onely doe for his friends in diſtreſſe, but even for enemies, as Chriſt alſo teacheth. Of the meaning, Heape coals of fire upon his head, ſee my Expoſition upon Romans 12. Matth. 5. 45.

The North wind driveth away raine, ſo doth an angry countenance a back-biting tongue. The word here rendred driveth away, ſignifieth alſo bringeth forth; and whereas it is an angry countenance, a back-biting tongue, one puts a back-biting tongue firſt, giving this for the ſence, As the North wind bloweth up clouds, and raine, ſo a back-biting tongue detracteth from a mans credit and honour, cauſeth heavineſſe, like a cloud in the countenance, and the raine of teares to fall from the eyes. Verſ. 23. Cajetan.

But keeping to the New Tranſlation, which is alſo the vulgar, Jerome expounds it by a Similitude, as a man that ſhootes an Arrow againſt a ſtone, or iron wall, it recoyles upon him, and he is hereat daunted, and goes away, and ſhootes ſo no more; in like manner the Detractour back-biting his neighbour, before one that lookes with a diſpleaſed and angry countenance upon him, when he is ſo doing, is aſtoniſhed, and dares not proceed any further, but goes away confounded. Hieron.

As cold waters to a thirſty ſoule, ſo is good newes from a farre Country; That is, good newes long looked for, which a man cannot come to heare but by ſending out a long journey, as Jacob did his ſonnes after Benjamine, required by Joſeph, and Simeon detained, but they againe returning at length, and bringing good newes, that Joſeph was the Lord of the Country, his ſpirits revived. So many that have ſonnes likewiſe in a farre Country, and longing to heare of their welfare, if good newes hereof be brought them, it is very comfortable to them. Verſ. 25. Gen. 47.

In like manner, when we have an Army abroad afarre off, to heare of their victorious proceedings, and likewiſe to heare from other Nations, that they imbrace the truth. For the Compariſon, Artaxerxes having a little pudly water brought unto him, when he was in a great ſtreight through thirſt, tooke and drunke it moſt gladly, ſaying, That he never dranke any wine with more pleaſure.

This is alſo by Lavater applied to the good newes of the Goſpel, propounding ſalvation by Chriſt, which cometh from a farre Country, that is, Judea to us, and by the thirſty is readily received, being water moſt ſatiating, inſomuch as that our Lord ſaith, He that drinketh of this water ſhall never thirſt againe; and therefore he crieth out, ſaying, He that thirſteth, let him come and drinke of this water freely. Lavater. Joh. 4. Joh. 7. 37.

A righteous man falling downe before the wicked is as a troubled fountaine, and a corrupt ſpring, Junius, Fons conturbatur calcibus, A fountaine troubled with heeles, the vulgar, with the foot. Hebr. נמפש dirtied, and becauſe dirt and mire is made by treading in waters, it may well be rendred troden under foot, and trampled upon with mens foule feet, or beaſts, whereby it is fouled. Now as this is a vile thing, and cannot but ſtirre up indignation in all that behold it, to ſee good and pure water thus abuſed; ſo to ſee a poore man that is righteous abuſed, and trodden under foot by the wicked, is an unworthy ſight; the neceſſity of Spring-waters, and therefore of keeping them pure is well knowne to all men, and therefore the Imperiall Law provideth, that none trouble them. Verſ. 26.

Now a righteous man is like unto a Fountaine, for ſo it is ſaid before, that the mouth of the righteous is, and for this reaſon of great good uſe, in the place where he liveth; and therefore if ſuch an one falleth before the wicked, by being cut off, or kept under, that he dareth not to ſpeake, or if he ſpeaketh, he is not regarded, or for feare he falleth from his righteouſneſſe, and complieth with the wicked, that is mightier then he; The caſe of ſuch a place is as if the fountaines of water therein were dirtied, by treading ſo, as that they are made unuſefull for men, or cattell, that all may lay it to heart, and provide againſt it to the uttermoſt of their power.

It is not good to eate much Honey, ſo for men that ſeeke their owne glory is not glory. Hebr. To ſeeke their glory is a glory; for there is no negative, only Jerome ſuppoſing that a negative is to be underſtood, that it might anſwer the former part, hath rendred it according to this ſence, He that is a ſearcher of Majeſty ſhall be oppreſſed by glory; and New Tranſlation according to theſe words: but acute Cajetan takes it for an affirmative thus: As it is not good, but unwholſome for Verſ. 27. Cajetan.

for a man to eate much Honey, ſo indeed to ſeeke his owne glory, in ambitiouſly hunting after Honours in this world, or praiſe of his well doing, is an ill thing, but to ſeeke the common glory, and credit of the King, and Nation wherein a man liveth, is a glory, and he doth worthily that doth ſo.

Matth. 6.

That againſt a mans ſeeking of glory to himſelfe is left to be underſtood, as being eaſie for any man to conceive, that ſome ſuch ſentence muſt be thought upon to anſwer to the evill that cometh by eating of Honey over much.

And another ſentence is haſted unto contrary to that, There is glory in ſeeking the glory of others, who are worthy, and howſoever one giving honour, going one before another, for ſo the Apoſtle directeth; and with this expoſition I reſt, wiſhing that the Originall might be conſidered, and be rendred accordingly without variation.

Verſ. 28. He that hath no rule over his owne ſpirit, is like a City that is broken down, and without walls. This is by ſome underſtood, of power wanting to a man to refraine his tongue; for he that cannot, layeth himſelfe open, as a City, the walls whereof are broken downe, and ſo the enemy hath advantage to enter and take it, for thus by loquacity a man layeth himſelfe open to all, that will take advantage againſt him. And in this ſence well is ſuch a tergue ſet forth by a City, the walles whereof are broken downe, becauſe the tongue is by nature walled in with lips, and teeth, but not being refrained, theſe walles and Gates are broken downe.

Some, by refraining his ſpirit, underſtand his proud heart, as Chryſoſtome, who ſaith, that by humility a man is fenced, but by pride he lyeth open, as the City, the walles broken downe.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 20. in Rom. Gregor. Paſtor. 3. admon. 15. Philo Judæus. Some, his wrath and fury, as Gregory, who yet ſpeakes rather according to the firſt of words into which the wrathfull breake; Philo Judæus ſpeaking of wrath, ſaith, They that ſerve Wrath are brought into the greateſt ſervitude, that is, even as they that live under a Tyrant: we ſhall not need to divide but take all theſe together, and put in the ſpirit of Luſt alſo, for by any of them a man lyeth open to the enemy of his ſoule; the proud man becauſe he is weake, through the want of Grace, which is given only to the humble; the angry man, and the envious, becauſe he is blinded by paſſion, and ſo as Sampſon led by the Philiſtims, as being without ſtrength to reſiſt; the licentious Prater, becauſe by the words that come from his fooliſh mouth he is eaſily inſnared; and the luſtfull, becauſe reaſon is in him overcome by Luſt, and ſo he is by Luſt carried away captive to his inevitable deſtruction.

CHAP. XXVI.

Verſ. 1. As ſnow in ſummer, and raine in harveſt, ſo honour is not ſeemely for a foole. This is but a ſuppoſition, becauſe ſnow never falleth in ſummer, not in Judea raine in harveſt, unleſſe in great wrath, as in Samuels dayes, when they would needs have a King, to terrifie, and ſhew them their folly. The meaning therefore is, As God orders the times and ſeaſons ſo, as that ſnow is not in ſummer, for then the aire muſt be extreamely cold, and ſo things ſpringing out of the earth would be nipt and killed; neither doth he ſend much raine in harveſt, if the time be ſeaſonable, for ſo Corne would be corrupted, and grow in the field to the great detriment of the people.

1 Sam. 12.

In like manner in a well ordered State, Fooles are not ſet up rulers, but wiſe men, for if fooles be put in authority, woefull is the caſe of that Land, and ill would it be with the Lords harveſt, That is, his faithfull people. This is not much unlike to that which was ſet forth before, ch. 25. 26.

Verſ. 2. Junius. As the Bird by wandring, and the Swallow by flying, ſo the curſe cauſleſſe ſhall not come; Or, as the Bird, or Sparrow in wandring; The meaning is, the Curſes of the wicked, whereby they curſe the innocent, ſhall be but as Birds flying in the aire, but ſet not their feet upon the ground, to make any impreſſion there; there; so the curses of mad and furious fooles, then which nothing is more common in their prophane mouthes, shall vanish as it were, in the aire, and not light upon them that are causelesly cursed, to hurt them.

Lavater will have the meaning to be, That these curses are no more to be regarded then the flying about of Birds in the aire, which hath none effect touching us, although much observed by the superstitions given to vaine Divinations; and he further applyeth this to the Popes cursing of those of the reformed religion, with Bell, Booke, and Candle. Lavater.

Of this, touching a whip for the backe of the foole, see before, chap. 10. 13. only it is here spoken of by way of comparison; as, a whip for the horse, and bridle for the horse, which cannot otherwise be ruled. Vers. 3.

Answer not a foole according to his folly, least thou also be like unto him. Answer a foole according to his folly, lest he seeme to be wise in his owne eyes. Divers are the Expositions given upon these words: Vers. 4. 5.

1 By Beda, when it is no fit time to answer a foole, as when he is drunken, or in a rage, doe not reprove him at that time, but deferre to speake to him till afterwards, when it is more likely that reproofe will doe him good, and make him see into his folly, to repent. Beda.

2 Of Cajetan, Answer not a foole according to his folly, by returning the like language to that which he giveth thee, rayling for rayling, and cursing for cursing, for so thou shalt shew thy selfe a foole like him; but speake so, as that he may see his folly, and be ashamed. Cajetan.

Cyprian, If a foole rayleth upon thee, overcome his folly with silence for the time, but let him in time convenient be answered, as he is worthy, with sharpe stripes for his wickednesse, for the rod, as was said before, ver. 3. is for the fooles backe, and by words he is not to be dealt withall. Cyp. de sing. Cler.

Lastly, unto these we may adde, If by his foolish and wicked speeches, or doings, thou beest provoked, answer him not either by word or correction in thy passion, for then thou shalt both speake, and deale foolishly, like unto him; but tarry till thy heate be over, and then deale with him so, as that he may not want of reproof, or correction, be incouraged in his folly, as thinking for that he hath spoken or done well.

He that sends a message by the hand of a foole, cutteth off the feet, and drinkes damage, Jun. cutteth his feet, or drinketh some hurtfull thing; the vulgar, He is lame on his feet, and drinkes iniquity. I preferre the reading of Junius, as most agreeable to the Hebrew, and the meaning is plaine, if a man sends a message by a foole, it is either undone, and so he had as good have sent by one that had no feet; or it is ill done, and by this meanes sometimes he suffereth as much hurt as by drinking a little poyson, by reason of the vexation coming to him hereby. Vers. 6.

The leggs of the lame are not equall, so is a parable in the mouth of a foole; Junius, The leggs of the lame are lifted up, for the word דלין signifieth either unequall, or lifted up, but the sence is the same, lifted up unequally. Verse 7.

And a parable in a fooles mouth is compared hereunto, because if he uttereth one wise sentence, another foolish and vaine cometh from him, yea the common course of his speech is foolish, and so he goeth as it were upon leggs, one shorter, and another longer; it is more disgrace then credit for him to utter a wise saying sometimes, and therefore let such either turne from their folly, or speake not at any time so, as whereby the common course of their speech, and their owne doings are condemned. And this specially reproveth such teachers, as in publick speak excellently, but privately are full of vaine talke, and live wickedly. Note.

As he that bindeth a stone in a slinge, so is he that giveth honour to a foole. A man doth not use to binde a stone in a slinge, from whence it is by and by to be throwne, saith Lavater. But how this can be fitted to this place I see not; it is therefore better which he addeth according to the vulgar Translation, that bindes a stone in acervo Mercurii, for the word Hebrew signifieth an heape, and the Greeke word Ερμαιον signifieth an heape, or Mercury, which Mercury was by the Vers. 8. Lavater.

the heathen counted the god of wit and reaſon, whereupon he giveth this for the ſenſe; He that giveth glory to a foole, is as one that placeth an ordinary ſtone amongſt thoſe that, for their wit and underſtanding, are as precious ſtones; and therefore ſuch, and of ſuch place of concernment for the publike good, as that no foole ſhould have the honour to be ſet amongſt them. And ſome, he ſaith, underſtand it of an heap of ſtones to be caſt at him, that is to be ſtoned to death, ſome rendring it, that bindes a ſtone in purple, becauſe אדרכן ſignifying purple, cometh from the word here uſed, and ſo will have the ſenſe to be, as he that clads an ordinary baſe ſtocke or ſtone in purple, ſo is he that giveth glory to a foole. Some that bindes a ſtone in a ſling, for this being done, it cannot be ſlung to ſmite withall. Some, that puts a ſtone in a ſling, for as he cannot throw right, ſo doth not he, that promotes a foole; but this is moſt frigid of any expoſitions that have beene brought, becauſe we read of thoſe that could throw a ſtone out of a ſling at an haires breadth, and David miſſed not the forehead of Goliah. Of all theſe expoſitions, or any others, for there be many more given, that is the beſt, which goeth upon the word purple, and this is the expoſition of R. Joſeph; for what fitter compariſon to ſet forth a foole promoted to honour, who is as a ſtone for underſtanding or utterance, then that taken from a ſtone with purple, the habit of a Ruler put about it?

Judg. 20. 16

R. Joſeph.

Verſ. 9. As a thorne goeth up into the hand of drunkards, ſo is a parable in the mouth of fooles. Heb. A thorne aſcending into the hand of a drunkard, and a parable, &c. that is, are alike. About the rendring of חוח a thorne, all are agreed, but for משל parable, the Sept. hath ſervitude, ſome a tanting proverb, or parable, ſome domination. Divers are the expoſitions given by divers hereupon;

Junius. Junius, a thorne, or goad, or other ſharpe inſtrument in the hand of a drunkard, and a divine ſentence in the mouth of fooles hurt alike, for the drunkard being thus armed doth much miſchiefe, yea, ſometimes killeth him with whom he meeteth; ſo fooles abuſe the ſentences of holy Scriptures to the hardening of themſelves and others in ſinne to their deſtruction. They that take it for domination, ſay for fooles to have command, is as dangerous. They that take it for tanting, as a thorne runneth into the hand of a drunkard, but whilſt he is in this caſe he feeleth it not, but afterwards he hath great paine thereof; ſo he that raileth upon another, and uſeth tanting ſpeeches ſhall finally feele the ſmart and paine of them through his body, piercing his owne through the juſt judgement of God, whereby it is meaſured to every one according to his meaſuring to another; here I ſpare to bring more expoſitions, of which there be alſo many, and reſt in this, as beſt agreeing with the words aſcending into the hand, or pricking it, and not being in it, to bee uſed againſt others, as he luſteth to hurt them, for then hee would rather have named ſome inſtrument, which men commonly uſe to wound others withall.

Verſ. 10. The great God, that formed all things, rewardeth both the foole and the tranſgreſſor. Heb. The great former of all. Here becauſe there is no word ſignifying God expreſly, but רב great, Vatabl. underſtands a great man, a Prince forming the Commonwealth by good Lawes, and he rendreth the words thus, The great man doth all things himſelfe, but the foole for a reward hireth tranſgreſſours, as if nothing elſe were meant here, but to ſhew a difference betwixt a worthy and wiſe Prince, and a fooliſh; the one that all things may be well and uncorruptly done in judgement, doth all himſelfe; the other contrariwiſe committeth all to others, and thoſe none of the wiſeſt neither, whereby much corruption groweth in the Commonwealth; but Heb. it is not, the foole hireth for reward, but both rewards the foole, and rewards the tranſgreſſour.

Vatab.

Moreover it is not probable, that theſe words, The great Former or Creator of all, ſhould be ſpoken of any mortall man, but of God alone, of him therefore I underſtand it; but then what is meant by ſaying, That he rewardeth the foole, and the tranſgreſſour? Some by reward will have the ſame meant, that is ſpoken of Matth. 5. He makes the Sunne to ſhine, and raine to fall upon the good and the bad, &c. As if it had beene ſaid, God ſupplieth even the ſinfull and wicked with with neceſſaries in this life, notwithſtanding their ill deſerts, therefore this ſhall much more be ſupplied. But becauſe when the word reward goeth alone, and nothing elſe is added to expreſſe what manner of reward, it is commonly meant of a reward in wrath, if wicked perſons be ſpoken of. The meaning then is, as he is great and mighty enough to give all the wicked their pay as they deſerve, ſo hee will doe it, be they fooles, that ſinne out of ſimplicity or ignorance, or tranſgreſſors that knew their Maſters will, and yet committed things worthy of ſtripes, hating to be reformed. And being thus underſtood there is ſome coherence betwixt theſe words and the former of meaſuring to men as they meaſure to others, the great God of all ſhall ſee that they be thus rewarded, and with the words following, verſe 11.

As the dog returnes to his vomit, ſo a foole to his folly: As if he had ſaid, notwithſtanding all this, that God declareth himſelfe to be a rewarder of the wicked, yet they will not ceaſe doing wickedly and fooliſhly to the end, no not after that by judgements they have been for a time conſtrained to leave their ſinne, yet theſe being a little while removed, they returne to the ſame evill courſe of life againe. Verſ. 11. 2 Pet. 2. 20.

The ſluggard is wiſer in his owne conceit, then ſeven men that can render a reaſon. And verſe 12. hitherto he ſpeaketh againſt the ſlothfull in the ſame manner, that he ſometimes before had done, ſo that of thoſe verſes there needs no expoſition, but onely verſe 14. in ſaying, that as a doore turneth upon its hinges, ſo doth he, which is meant of his turning him in his bed from one ſide to another, and lying ſtill in the ſame place, when others are up, as the doore often moving by opening and ſhutting yet remaineth where it was. For theſe words, the ſluggard is ſaid to be wiſer in his owne conceit, in way of anſwering to verſe 12. for hereby it is ſhewed, that the ſluggard is the ſelfe-conceited foole there ſpoken of, and hee is ſaid to be wiſe in his owne conceit, becauſe he thinkes himſelfe wiſer in lying long in bed, and taking his eaſe, then all they that riſe early, and diligently apply themſelves to labour in their Callings, although they can give a good reaſon of their ſo doing, viz. their being better inabled to reſiſt luſts of the fleſh, to get wherewithall to live and give to the poore, and to goe about the worſhip and ſervice of God, time being thus gained to this end and purpoſe. Verſ. 16.

By the ſluggard alſo underſtand one, that will not take paines to get the moſt neceſſary learning for his ſoule, for ſuch yet thinke themſelves wiſe.

And laſtly, the timorous and fearfull, for which the ſluggard is ſet forth ſaying, there is a Lion in the way, he will not ſuffer for Chriſt, and his truth, but rather then ſo lye ſlugging in the ſinke of errour.

He that medleth with ſtrife not belonging to him is like unto one that takes a dogge by the ears; that is, by his ſpeaking to men in the heat of their contention he doth but provoke them, or one of them, at the leaſt to flye upon him with his virulent tongue, as a dog, being taken by the eares, to bite with his teeth him, that layeth hold upon him. Verſ. 17.

As a mad man that caſteth arrows, firebrands and death, ſo is he that deceiveth his neighbour, and ſaith am I not in ſport? The ſcope of this compariſon is to ſhew, that there is as much danger in a falſe-hearted friend, as in furious enemies, that placing themſelves out of ſight doe ſuddenly ſhoot at, or caſt fire-balls amongſt thoſe that they fight againſt, whereby they doe much miſchiefe; for as ſuch enemies are more obnoxious, then they that come openly to fight becauſe theſe may be taken heed of, thoſe cannot: So a falſe-hearted friend hideth himſelfe, as it were, under a pretence of meaning no harme, when he doth his friend miſchiefe, for hee would make him beleeve that hee did it but in jeſt, and that the harme done was beſides his intention. Some thinke it is meant, that hee deſideth him being thus hurt, as glad that he had done it to his great vexation. Verſ. 18.

Againſt Tale-bearers verſe 20. it hath beene ſpoken before, and how that by their meanes contention is made onely, here it is illuſtrated by a compariſon taken from wood and fire, hee being as fewell to the fire. Verſ. 20. Chap. 22. 10 17. 4. 18. 8. 20. 19.

Verſ. 21. As coals are to coals, and wood to fire, ſo is a contentious man to kindle ſtrife. This and verſe 22. are nothing elſe but an amplification of the evill coming by make-bates.

Verſ. 23. Burning lips, and a wicked heart are like a potſherd covered with ſilver droſſe; that is, the lips of him, that by Tale-bearing kindleth the fire of contention covereth his wicked heart over with good words, but this is no more then the covering over of a potſherd with droſſie ſilver; it is a baſe heart, and a baſe mouth, though ſeeming glorious like ſilver, under which it is hidden. Some will have the droſſie ſilver underſtood to be within, and the burning earthen veſſell, the lips, and the fire, the triall, whereby it is found out to be droſſie. But the word צפה ſignifieth to cover, and therefore this expoſition falleth. For the former is Junius, who Junius. ſaith further, that as ſuch a cover is no longer a cover to hide the baſe ſtuffe which is under it, if it be a little ſcraped off, ſo ſuch guilded lips being examined, will eaſily be found to have a baſe and vile heart hid under them. And that this is the meaning the 24,25,26. verſes doe plainly ſhew: faire and flattering ſpeakers then, whoſe aime is to ſtirre up ſtrife, are not to be truſted, and if any come to thee with ſuch a tongue, thou mayeſt well know that he hath a wicked heart, and therefore truſt him not, but take heed of him.

Verſ. 27,28. He that diggeth a pit ſhall fall therein, and he that rolleth a ſtone, it will returne upon him. A lying tongue hateth thoſe that are afflicted by it, and a flattering mouth worketh ruine. After warning given to others againſt Tale-bearers and flatterers; now he threatneth ſuch with deſtruction by their owne machinations, ſuddenly and unexpectedly to come upon them, as he that diggeth a pit into which another may fall, little thinketh ever to fall into it himſelfe, and hee that rolleth a ſtone up an hill, letting it to lye ſo there, that at the leaſt touch it may fall upon, and cruſh another to death, little thinketh that it ſhall ever fall upon his own head: but by Gods juſt judgement ſometime he himſelfe falleth thus, and is thus deſtroyed. A lying tongue hateth thoſe that are afflicted by it, Junius, that it would deſtroy; that is, cloſely doth endeavour the deſtruction of his neighbour, whom he beareth faire in hand, but by ſpeaking him faire on the one ſide, and tickling the Magiſtrate in the eare on the other ſide, that he is a wicked man he bringeth him ſuddenly to ruine, as one that falleth into a pit, or hath a great ſtone fallen upon his head from an high place; when as indeed the man by his inſtigation thus ruined, is a righteous man, but he a wicked liar, and malicious, to whoſe deſtruction therefore the moſt righteous Judge of all the world, that cannot be de-

Lavater. ceived, will finally turn this his deviliſh plot: But becauſe the Hebrew word is, דפיו, either contritos ſuos, or conterentes eum, I rather aſſent to thoſe that expound it thus, the man that hath a lying tongue, whereby he hath done another miſchiefe, is ſo farre from being hereby ſatisfied in his malice, that he hateth him ſtill, not ceaſing till he hath brought him to utter ruine; or to thoſe that expound it by conterentes thus, he hateth ſuch as ſuppreſſe and curb him in his way of lying, for wicked men hate thoſe that finde them out in their haulting, and puniſh them therefore, and to wrecke their teene upon them, they cunningly ſeeke their ruine.

CHAP. XXVII.

Verſ. 1. Boaſt not thy ſelfe of to morrow, for thou knoweſt not what a day may bring forth. This ſeemeth to be ground of that ſaying, Jam. 4. Go too now yee that ſay we will goe to ſuch a City, and there be a yeare, &c. and ſo it is by expoſition generally taken, a man knoweth not, whether he ſhall live till to morrow, and therefore it is not for him to boaſt what he will doe to morrow; but if a man hath an opportunity of doing now, take it and defer it not, leſt thou be prevented. It is a is a vaine and dangerous thing, and therefore let every one for this take the time preſent.

Let another praiſe thee, and not thine owne mouth, a ſtranger &c. For a man to praiſe himſelfe, ſaith Chryſoſtome, is a diſpraiſe and infamy, unleſſe he be by neceſſity inforced to relate good things touching himſelfe, as Paul was; for men will hardly heare one man praiſing another, much leſſe praiſing himſelfe. By repeating the word another man, with a little variation, a ſtranger, he intimateth, that a man ſhould not only not praiſe himſelfe, but not ſuffer ſuch as ſtand in neare relation to him, to praiſe him, but ſtrangers that have no relation in the fleſh unto him, or by familiar acquaintance, but are meere ſtrangers, or ſuch as are in affection eſtranged; that is, very enemies; for when a man liveth and doth ſo, that even his enemies cannot but praiſe him, this is for his credit and fame indeed, for they would not otherwiſe ſpeake well of him, but compelled by the truth. Verſ. 2. 2 Cor. 11.

A ſtone is heavy, and ſand weighty, but a fooles wrath is heavier then both. Wrath is cruell, anger outragious, but who can ſtand before envy? It was ſaid before that anger reſteth in the boſome of fooles; now it is ſhewed how intolerable this anger is, and that being begun, it increaſeth more and more, ſo that none are able to ſtand before it. And he nameth wrath, anger, and envy as the degrees. Verſ. 3. 4.

Lavater for outragious, hath overflowing, and ſo the word שטף ſignifieth. Firſt, by wrath, that is ſaid to be cruell, underſtand the firſt degree thereof, for wrath in a foole tends to bloudſhed in any meaſure, anger, or fury to the bearing downe of all that come in the way, as an overflowing floud, and envy, which is worſe then both theſe, for the floud coming may be avoided, but the envious and malicious foole cannot be taken heed of, and therefore none can tell, how to beware of an envious foole ſo, as not to be at ſome time or otther indangered by him; for anger much tranſporteth wiſe men, therefore fooles much more, whom nothing but bloudſhed will ſatisfie, when they are angry, and dwell herein to malice and envy, ſo that they are not to be borne by thoſe that can beare the heavieſt things: which is ſpoken, that we may take heed of ſuch, and have nothing to doe with them, as we would keep out of their gun-ſhot. Lavater.

Open rebuke is better then ſecret love, faithfull are the words of a friend, but the kiſſes of an enemy deceitfull; That is, he doth better that rebuketh him openly that ſinneth openly, then he that ſaith he loveth him, but ſuffereth ſinne in him, and ſpeaketh not againſt it, contrary to the charge given, Levit. 19, 17. but this is to be underſtood only of open ſinning, for if thy brother ſinneth againſt thee in private, tell him, ſaith Chriſt, betwixt him and thee alone, for ſuch ſaith Paul, As ſinne openly, rebuke openly, that others may feare. And although the rebuked be thus wounded with the ſmiting of the tongue, yet this is better then an enemies kiſſes and imbraces, which are but as that of Judas towards Chriſt, and of Joab towards Abner, who imbraced him, and ſlew him; for a friends reproofe although it peirceth, and woundeth, comes from love, as the lancing and ſearching of any corrupt part of the body to let out the corruption within; but let enemies ſpeake thee never ſo faire, they herein ſeeke their owne good, not thine; a thing to be conſidered by young perſons dearly loved by their friends, againſt whom they are ready to be exaſperated for their reproofes; but ſuch companions as humour and ſpeake pleaſing things unto them, they love, and are well pleaſed with; but let none henceforth be ſo fooliſh as to doe thus, but know them to be their beſt friends, and that to be the greateſt love which ſtands in juſt reproofe. Verſ. 5. Verſ. 6. Mat. 18. Note.

The full ſoule loatheth the honey-combe, but to the hungry ſoule every bitter morſell is ſweet. This is to be underſtood not only of meates, but of all other delightfull things alſo, ſatiety herein breeds a loathing, and the ſaying is true, rariora jucundiora, ſo did Manna, when they were daily fed therewith in the Wilderneſſe, and the ſpirituall food of the Word is, for their being full fed herewith, diſtaſtfull to many men, but ſuch as come newly to it, when they have long wanted it, finde farre more comfort and ſweetneſſe in it. Verſ. 7.

But this is true only in Carnall men, for David who was ſpirituall, that made Pſal. 119. 88. 89. Pſal. 19. 7, 8, 9. 1 Cor. 12. 31. the Word of God his daily meditation, found ſtill a moſt ſweet taſte herein, becauſe he is covetous hereof, as of a treaſure, to which it is alſo compared; and therefore as to the covetous, Dulcis odor lucri, the taſte of gaine is ſweet ſtill, how much treaſure ſoever he hath; ſo to him that covets theſe beſt things, as St. Paul ſpeakes, the more he underſtandeth, and is taught in the Word, the more ſweetneſſe he ſtill findeth herein.

Verſ. 8. As a bird that wandreth from the neſt, ſo is a man that wandreth from his place. Here warning is given to all men not to goe from their place and calling, but where God hath placed them by his providence to abide, and have a care of their Neſt; That is, their Houſe and Family, which they ſhall beſt provide for by ſo doing; whereas the man that goeth from his Calling, or is given often to change his habitation, or goeth idleing up and downe, neglecting his worke and children, from home, and is ſo often in idle company, doth like a bird wandring from her Neſt, leaving her Eggs at ſix and ſeavens, and her young ones, till all be marred; for every man is bidden to continue in his calling, and he that careth not for his owne houſe is worſe then an Infidell; And a rolling ſtone (we ſay) gathers no moſſe, Thus Lavater.

1 Cor. 7. 1 Tim. 5. 8.

Lavater. Muffet. And Muffet addeth, That he is like a bird in levity, going ſome time hither, ſometime thither without cauſe, and by this meanes meeting with a Net, or Lime-twigs, and being ſo taken.

Verſ. 9. Oyntment and perfume rejoyce the heart, ſo doth the ſweetneſſe of a mans friend by hearty counſell. It is noted by Clemens Alexandrinus, that ſweet Oyntments and Perfumes comfort the heart, and ſtrengthen the head, for which of old they uſed to anoynt the head at feaſts to keep from drunkenneſſe; ſo the hearty counſell of a true friend comforts the heart in adverſity, and in proſperity ſtrengthens the head ſo, as that it is kept from being intoxicated with the joy of ſuch a proſperous eſtate, for which one ſaid, He had rather have the counſell of an hearty friend, then of a wiſe man.

Verſ. 10. Thine owne friend, and thy fathers friend forſake not, neither goe into thy brothers houſe in the day of thy calamity, for better is a neighbour, that is near, then a brother farre off. For as much as the counſell of a friend is ſo precious, as hath been ſaid, forſake not, but keep an old and tried friend, that hath long been a friend both to thee, and thy Father; as for a brother, he oft-times dwelleth farre off; yea, too farre for thee to goe for ſuccour to him in the day of adverſity, and therefore keep friendſhip alſo with thy neare neighbours; for at ſuch a time he may ſtand thee in more ſtead then a brother, who dwelleth farre off, can, although he loveth thee well, and ſometimes it falls out ſo, that there is no great love amongſt brethren. The ſcope then of this place is, to teach us not only to make account of brethren, who are neare to us in the fleſh, as moſt doe, regarding none elſe, but brethren, or kinsfolke; but alſo of neighbours, and other friends and acquaintance, becauſe the caſe may ſo ſtand, that we may finde more help from them, then from brethren.

Note.

Verſ. 11. My ſonne, be wiſe, and make my heart glad, that I may anſwer him that reproaches me. That a wiſe ſonne makes a glad father, ſee chap. 10. for anſwering to reproach; The meaning is, that if any man ſhall ſeeke hereby to diſgrace me, that I have not done my part in thy youth to ſeaſon thee with grace, and wiſdome, by teaching, and bringing thee up in the feare of the Lord, I may be able to put him to ſilence, by ſaying, Behold my ſonne, how wiſely and religiouſly he behaveth himſelfe, doth not this ſpeake plainely for me, that I have done my duty in his education? and hereby it is intimated, that it is a reproach to Parents, when through their neglect their children degenerate, and are of a wicked life and converſation. For verſ. 12, 13. ſee ch. 22. 3. and 20. 16. where both have been explained.

Note.

Verſ. 14. He that bleſſeth his friend with a loud voyce, riſing early in the morning, it ſhall be counted a curſe to him. Here is a warning given againſt flattery, he praiſeth his friend with a loud voyce, that praiſeth him immoderately, and exceedeth the truth in ſo doing, that he may by this meanes ingratiate himſelfe with him, as making

making him beleeve that his affection is extraordinary towards him, for the vertues that ſhine in him. And he riſeth up early in the morning ſo to doe, that raſhly giveth him ſo great praiſe, before that he knoweth him, and his conditions very well; for that he may know him indeed, what manner of man he is, he muſt firſt be long converſant with him, as the Proverb is, He muſt firſt eate a Peck of ſalt with him.

To doe thus therefore is baſe flattery, and ſhamefull to him that doth it, for he cannot but be taken notice of by others for this to be a palpable Sycophant, under a pretence of extraordinary love to him, ſeeking benefit by him; or a ſimple and fooliſh man, becauſe there may be vices in him for ought that he knoweth, for which he is more worthy to be diſgraced then praiſed; and if ſo, he ſheweth his owne vitiouſneſſe in praiſing ſuch an one, but much more if he knowing it to be ſo, yet praiſeth him, as many flatterers doe; or if he be not ſo vicious, he may turne to vice, yea, his unreaſonable praiſing of him may puffe him up with pride, and ſo make him moſt vicious; for all men are mutable, and therefore are not truly happy, or to be much praiſed before their death, as the Proverb ſaith; and for this cauſe it is here ſaid, It ſhall be counted a curſe to him; That is, all men ſhall ſpeake ill of, and condemne ſo groſſe a flatterer, yea, and his bleſſing of his friend ſhall be turned to a curſe unto him, as being thus brought into the more diſgrace; according to the Proverb, Nimium honoris, dimidium dedecoris, too much honour, halfe a diſgrace, becauſe we uſe to ſay, when a wicked man praiſeth another, Marke the praiſer, he is a good man I warrant you, whom ſuch an one commendeth; and if he be good indeed, the Paraſite is by him rejected, as thoſe were by Paul and Barnabas, that honoured them as gods; but an Herod indeed contrariwiſe takes well the divine honour done unto him, although God be highly offended hereat, and immediately abaſeth him therefore, by making him worms-meat.

Act. 12.

Touching a contentious woman, Verſ. 15. ſee before Chap. 19. 13. But it is here further added:

Whoſoever hideth her, hideth the wind, and the ointment of his right hand, which bewraieth it ſelfe; whereby is meant, that ſhe is ſo violently ſet upon ſcolding and brauling, that none can any more ſtay her there-from, then the bluſtering wind from blowing, or the ſmell of a ſtrong ointment from coming forth, although he holdeth it cloſe in his hand, for it will notwithſtanding come forth and fill all the houſe where it is.

Verſ. 16.

Iron ſharpeneth iron, ſo a man the countenance of his friend. Some, taking this to cohere with Verſe 15, 16. underſtand it as ſpoken of a man and his wife, his friend, and taking the word יחד for uniting, as it ſignifieth, if it be held to be a radix, although if it be derived from חדד it ſignifieth to ſharpen, they give this for the ſenſe; as iron is united to iron, that is, being heat in the fire, ſo a man uniteth his wife to him, although of a moſt rigid nature, by love making her milde and patient, when ſhe is ſo impatient and contentious: for love is as fire in this reſpect, ſoftening and framing them with the hammer two hard bodies into one; and the countenance is ſaid to be united, becauſe love and good will being reconciled, the countenance, which was before fierce and angry is changed into amiable. But as Chryſoſtome noteth, this uniting of iron is with iron, not of iron with ſilver or gold, braſſe or pewter, ſo a firme union is not like to be betwixt man and wife, if a poore man, and ignobly deſcended marrieth a woman rich or noble; for now the ordinance of God muſt be by her pride and impetuoſity perverted, and ſhee will not be ſubject to him, but he muſt be ſubject to her, and therefore he exhorteth to equall marriages making, noble perſons with noble, rich with rich, and not otherwiſe.

Verſ. 17.

Rodolph. Bainus.

Chryſoſt.

This Expoſition is not to be miſliked, but moſt Expoſitors take it to be more generally meant, and ſo doe I alſo of any friend, if there be ſtrife betwixt friends, if there be true love, one will unite himſelfe againe to the other, as iron and iron are joyned together by meanes of fire, ſo that although the countenance of the one upon a falling out be averſe from another, yet it is hereby againe turned towards him, him, and ſo ought it to be, and is where there is love after any contention or falling out, according to that common ſaying, The falling out of lovers is the renuing of love. But inſtead of rendring it united, many follow that of whetting or ſharpening, and ſo give this for the ſenſe, as iron rubbed againſt iron, makes it bright and ſharpe to cut withall, if it be a ſword or knife; ſo a good man, a friend coming in preſence, not onely chearfulneſſe of countenance is cauſed in his friend, and ſo brightneſſe, but alſo he is by his preſence whetted on to zeal, and the affectation of goodneſſe in any kinde the more. Some, becauſe the word here uſed ſignifieth ſteele as well as iron, expound it thus, as ſteele and iron tempered together, make a ſharpe inſtrument; ſo a friend, who is of an harder nature, being joyned to one of a ſofter, makes him ſharpe, that of himſelfe was before but blunt and dull to worthy actions. Some taking the ſtrife, and falling out of friends to be here meant, expound it thus, as one iron rubbed againſt another, ſharpeneth it to cut the more dangerouſly; ſo one friend beginning to fall out with another, by his unkinde and provocative ſpeech, exaſperateth his friend againſt him, that he loved him not ſo much before, but now he hateth him as much. I preferre that expoſition of uniting, becauſe it is, ברזל אחד בברזל, iron uniteth with iron, which doth not ſo well agree, if it be rendred, Iron ſharpens iron, for the ב which is redundant.

Amantium iræ amoris redintegratio eſt.

Verſ. 18. Who ſo keepeth the Figtree, ſhall eat the fruit thereof: ſo he that waiteth on his maſter ſhall be honoured. As the Figtree was in that land to the husbandman, ſo is a maſter to his ſervant. The husbandman, that would eat of the Figtree, diligently tendeth it by keeping away beaſts that they may not bite it, pruning and digging about it, that it may fructifie, for by this means, he cometh to have plenty of Figs to feed upon; ſo the ſervant ſhall come to honour, that attendeth duly his maſter, in all things to defend him, if he be aſſaulted by enemy or robber, to provide his food, and dreſſe it for him, to keep his cloaths clean, and to doe all things neceſſary about him, and what elſe he commandeth, for either he will promote him, or God will, whom he ſerveth in doing diligent ſervice to him.

Col. 3. 24.

Lavater. Lavater noteth, that this is ſpoken according to that which is done, they that keep Figtrees live upon the fruit thereof two months in the yeare, and grow fat herewith, which was in times paſt a great comfort to poore ſervants, having commonly ſo courſe fare as they had. And by honour here ſpoken of, is meant exhibition, ſome good matter ſhall by a maſter be given to his ſervant, that is diligent and faithfull about him; ſometime his freedome and meanes of maintenance being granted him at his diſmiſſion, as hath been done by good maſters of old to well-deſerving ſervants, for ſo the word honour is taken 1 Tim. 5. Honour widows that be widows indeed. And much more he that waiteth upon, and diligently ſerveth God, the great Maſter of us all, ſhall be honoured by him, and be bidden enter into his joy.

Verſ. 19. As in water face anſwereth to face, ſo the heart of man to man; Hebr. As water face to face, that is ſheweth face to face, ſo man ſheweth his heart to man and thus Junius renders it; the Vulg. as water repreſents the face, ſo the exteriour habit, the heart of man; Thus Lavater relates it, but it is, As in water the face ſhineth, ſo mens hearts are manifeſt to the wiſe. The ſenſe being looked at, and not the words; the meaning is, although the heart of man is knowne to no other man, yet there is ſome darke repreſentation of it made in his ſpeeches and actions to him that well obſerveth them from time to time; thus Lavater, and all commonly, that underſtand another mans heart here, and by water, cleare and calme water, others that underſtand troubled water and moveable, expound it thus, as the face is repreſented in the water, yet ſo as that a man beholding it, cannot well perceive what manner of face it is; ſo it is but little that one man can diſcerne of the heart of another; for it ſeems to him to be otherwiſe then it is. Others that the ſimilitude may be more fully anſwered in the thing, to which it is applied, will not have another mans heart meant here, but a mans owne, as the face to which that in the water is repreſented is his owne, who by ſtanding with his face to the water cauſeth it. And indeed this is the beſt, as a man ſeeth his face in the water, as in a glaſſe, ſo in the glaſſe of the word, every one that is wiſe may ſee his owne heart, and the blemiſhes therein, to ſeeke in time the cleanſing of them away, as it ſtands every one in hand to do, before the coming of the ſtrict Judge, who will otherwiſe find them out, and lay them open to their everlaſting confuſion. And yet he ſaith not, in a glaſſe face ſheweth face, but in water, becauſe many looking-glaſſes are deceitfull, and repreſent the face fairer then it is, but cleare water doth not, nor the true glaſſe of the word. Note.

Hell and deſtruction are never full, ſo the eyes of man are never ſatisfied; that is of the covetous man, what abundance ſoever he hath, he ſtill coveteth more, what treaſures, what goodly poſſeſſions ſoever he ſeeth he coveteth, and therefore covetouſneſſe is called the luſt of the eyes, 1 Joh. 2. 16. of the ſame ſimilitude ſee more Chap. 30. 15, 16. And this ſhould be an argument to ſtirre up our hearts againſt covetouſneſſe, becauſe ſuch can never have ſatisfaction, and to be ſatisfied is the thing for which men covet the goods of this world, therefore it is a vaine thing to covet them, but to covet the beſt things, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, tendeth to full ſatisfaction, for he that thirſteth after righteouſneſſe ſhall be ſatisfied. Verſe 20. Creſcit amor nummi quantum ipſa pecunia creſcit. Note. 1 Cor. 12. Matth. 5.

As the fining pot for ſilver, and the furnace for gold, ſo is a man to his praiſe, Hebr. a mans praiſe for his mouth. Silver and gold come to ſhine by meanes of the fining pot and furnace, whereby they are purified; ſo a man of wiſdome becomes glorious by meanes of his mouth, wherewith he ſpeakes excellently and divinely, for ſuch words are the words not of men, but of the Lord, which are like unto ſilver tried ſeven times in the fire, and therefore he that uttereth them, and liveth accordingly, is hereby adorned, being for this in his mouth as a ſilver trumpet, or the golden bells of Aaron. And this was notably exemplified in Chryſoſtome, who for his divine eloquence had the name from χρύσιον στόμα a golden mouth. The Vulgar renders it, So is a man tryed by the mouth of the praiſer, expounded by Beda thus; A good man is tryed by the mouth of him that praiſeth him, becauſe that being praiſed, he rejecteth it, but the wicked and proud are hereby lifted up. And Gregory ſaith the ſame, yeelding this reaſon, either hee knoweth that this praiſe is falſe, and then he is humbled to heare himſelfe praiſed ſo unworthily, for it grieveth him to thinke how farre ſhort he cometh of that which is ſpoken of him, or if he knoweth it to be true, he is humbled and feareth, leſt the praiſe given him by men, ſhould be an occaſion of loſing his reward in heaven. And this ſenſe the Hebrew will well beare, if we render it word for word thus, And a man by the mouth of his praiſer; that is, is tried by the mouth thus ſpeaking of him, if he takes it not to be proud, but be humbled therefore, he is knowne now to be as gold or ſilver tried, if otherwiſe, he is baſe and droſſie: For this alſo is Lavater; for the firſt, Junius, and the reaſon of the difference is, becauſe the word בְּ is without any word added to ſhew whoſe mouth is meant, but the ſenſe is beſt, if it be underſtood of the mouth of the praiſer, according to the Vulgar. Though thou ſhouldeſt bray a foole in a mortar with wheat, with a peſtle, yet will not his folly depart from him, Jun. In a mortar with barly, and the Vulgar hath for barly Piſanas, ſignifying the ſame ſodden; Pagnin. farreum; *R. videnee and induſtry, the good that will come hereof to the Husbandman being ſhewed. And here firſt it is commended to him to look to his flockes and herds from time to time himſelfe, becauſe if he doth not, they will for want of well-looking to, decay; and he that hath great flockes now may ſoone loſe them, or many of them, and this will be a great blow to his riches, he muſt not thinke, that they will continue alwayes with a man that is careleſſe; for the very Crown, which is the greateſt riches of all others, is not everlaſting, but thereafter as he that hath it, carrieth himſelfe worthily or unworthily.

Allegory. ſome ſpiritually applyed to Paſtors of the Church, who are here injoyned by auricular Confeſſion to know the ſtate of their flockes from time to time, that ſo they may the better know what to doe for the keeping of them ſound. But if it were meant ſo, as Lavater ſaith, then this order ſhould have beene followed in thoſe dayes, and every one ſhould then have come to the Prieſt to make this confeſſion, but this the Papals themſelves will not ſay, that they did; It holds therefore only to Paſtors to know by examining, and obſerving, and hearkening after mens doings, that be under their charge, what the ſtate of their flockes be, to miniſter a word of reproofe and comfort to them accordingly.

Beda. Beda therefore, who firſt of all others applyeth to Paſtors, ſaith nothing of Auricular confeſſion, as a meanes to know, but in generall, as hath beene ſaid. And it belongeth to Princes alſo, whoſe flockes their Kingdomes are, and muſt be well governed, and with great care, or elſe they will not laſt long.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Verſ. 1. THe wicked flyeth when none purſueth him, but the righteous is bold as a Lion. This is true both of theeves and adulterers, when they are about their wickedneſſe, and of other notorious ſinners, they are terrified in their conſciences exceedingly, and ſo is a Tyrant, that by bloudſhed commeth to a Kingdome, and this is threatned in the Law, he ſhall feare at the ſhaking of a Levit. 26. 17. Deut. 28. leafe. &c.

Verſ. 2. For the tranſgreſsion of a land many be the Princes thereof, but by a man of underſtanding the ſtate thereof ſhall be prolonged; that is, for ſinne either one killeth or expelleth another, and reigneth in his ſtead, as was done 2 King. 16. or inſtead of a Monarchy the Nation cometh to be governed by an Ariſtocracie, in either of which caſe the people ſuffer grievouſly by many exactions, as was proved in Iſrael, when two Kings reigned together, one over Judah, another over Iſrael, or ten Tribes thereof. And the like had England experience of, in the time of the Heptarchy of the Saxons here, and the Romans in the time of the Triumviri, Cæſar, Anthony, and Lepidus.

But by a man of underſtanding, &c. that is, by one wiſe King or Prince the ſtate is long ſetled in the life of ſuch a King to the great good of the land, for ſo it is promiſed, Deut. 17.

A poor man that oppreſſeth the poor is like a ſweeping rain that leaveth no food.

Verſ. 3. For any man to oppreſſe another, is ſo great a ſin that God threatneth to take revenge

1 Theſſ. 4. 6. upon oppreſſors, but for one poor man to oppreſſe another, that by his more impoveriſhing he may gain, this is moſt intolerable, becauſe he is not content to get ſomewhat from him, but ſweeps away all, as a raine that falleth ſo abundantly and haſtily, that it waſteth the ſeed ſown, out of the ground, ſo that according to the Proverb,

Starved

Starved fleas bite moſt; ſo the poorer he be that oppreſſeth, the more unmeaſurable he is in oppreſſing his fellowes.

Such as forſake the Law praiſe the wicked, but ſuch as keep it, contend with him; Wicked tranſgreſſours love to have many fellowes, who doe as they doe, and therefore they favour and praiſe others, that live in diſobedience and ſinne, becauſe they thinke themſelves by this meanes the more ſtrengthened, and to purchaſe the more authority, and that they are in their illegall doings the more juſtified. But righteous men, that make conſcience to live according to the Law, oppoſe them herein all that they can, out of their zeale for the Law: therefore the vulgar hath it, Accenduntur, are kindled, or ſet on fire at this, they cannot indure ſuch doings, and this is the cauſe why the wicked are at continuall enmity againſt the righteous, and when they have power, perſecute them to the death; but the righteous not being moved, or deterred by this, ſtill oppoſe them, and with all earneſtneſſe ſeeke to ſuppreſſe them; and he that hath not this zeale is luke warme, and God will ſpue him out of his mouth.

Verſ. 4. Note. Revel. 3.

Evill men underſtand not judgement, but they that ſeeke the Lord underſtand all things. That of the Apoſtle, 1 Cor. 2. 14, 15. ſeemeth to be taken from hence, The naturall man receiveth not the things of God, but the ſpirituall judgeth all things. For although wicked men, who are yet in the ſtate of nature, have ſome of them much knowledge of the letter of the Lawes of God, yet they have not that underſtanding, which is commended in the Word, becauſe they underſtand not to live, and doe ſo, which they that doe not, underſtand not judgement, as is here ſaid, or the things of God, as there; for this underſtanding is alwayes practicall, for ſo much as the things of God are faith to beleeve, and repentance to turne from ſinne to righteouſneſſe in all things. They therefore being without this underſtanding, are rightly ſaid not to underſtand the things of God, becauſe they underſtand not the principall, they may have knowledge, but not knowledge to ſalvation, and to aggravate their Damnation; as, the Servant that knoweth his maſters will, and doth it not, who ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes. Such men alſo are without underſtanding of judgement, becauſe they underſtand not the truth, to take heed of errour, but are groſly many times intangled herewith, but they that ſeeke the Lord underſtand all things; both the truth, to cleave conſtantly and only to it in all things, and thoſe maine things of God, faith and repentance, to beleeve, and to abſtaine from all ſinne.

Verſe 5. Luk. 12. 47.

But it is to be noted, that this is not granted to any, but to thoſe, that in hearing, reading, and ſearching into the Myſteries of the Word, pray, and ſeeke diligently for this, according to that, If any man wants wiſdome, let him aske it of God; that when we betake our ſelves to reading, or hearing of the Word, we may alwayes remember to begin with prayer, for to him that asketh it ſhall be granted, he that ſeeketh ſhall finde.

Note. Jam. 1. 5. Mat. 7. 7.

Of the underſtanding of thoſe that ſeeke God, Nazianzen ſaith; The firſt or chiefe wiſdome is a good and honeſt life, purged by God, or certainly purging it ſelfe.

And Chryſoſtome, The converſation of the juſt containeth the doctrine of all Philoſophy; for what is Philoſophy, ſaith he in another place, but the knowledge of Divine and Humane things? and this knowledge he hath, for he knoweth humane things to decline them, and divine to enſue them.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 54. in Gen. in Cæl.

And this Proverbe cohereth well with the former, ver. 4 as containing a reaſon why the wicked love the wicked, that forſake the Law, they underſtand not judgement; but ſuch as keep the Law contend with them; theſe underſtand all things, and they cannot approve themſelves to God, unleſſe they be zealous againſt ſuch.

This verſe, wherein the poore honeſt man is preferred before the wicked, is the ſame with chap. 19. 1. where there is only this difference, that is a foole there, though he be rich; Here, if he be fooliſh, his riches give him no preheminence, but the pooreſt honeſt man that is, is better then he; and therefore it is not true, that is commonly ſaid, in ſpeaking of rich men that be wicked, when they are ſleighted ted by ſuch; Sirrah, know your betters, for be they never ſo rich, they are baſe, Iam. 2. 5. and ſuch poore men their betters. And this is well added here, after that of the wicked, not knowing judgement; but the juſt mans knowing all things, the one being hereby convinced to be a foole, and the other, wiſe; and who doubts, but that a wiſe man is better then a foole, though he be rich, as a poore leane man is better then the fatteſt beaſt, for his underſtanding, which the beaſt wanteth; but

Eſa. 1. 1. 2. a beaſt is alſo ſometime ſhewed to be more intelligent then wicked men.

Verſ. 8. He that increaſeth his ſubſtance by Uſury, and unjuſt gaine, ſhall gather it for him, that will pitty the poore; the word rendred unjuſt gaine, is תרבית ſignifying multiplication, and the meaning is nothing elſe, but as he is condemned here, that puts his money to uſury, ſo although it be not direct uſury; That is, compacting for ſo much for lending his money, but unreaſonable gaine, that is taken any other way, either for it, or any other thing, whereby a man gathers wealth very faſt, but others, with whom he dealeth looſe, and are impoveriſhed thereby. As for example, by letting Houſe or Land too deare, ſelling Commodities, and giving day, but when the time of payment comes, to exact much more for them by reaſon of the time, or by miſ-reckoning, &c. Againſt this ſee an expreſſe Law, Deut. 23. 19. and Levit. 25. 36. where the word תרבית is alſo uſed, and it is forbidden.

Muffet. Muffet by occaſion of theſe words defineth uſury, that every one may know what is ſpoken againſt in this place, or elſewhere, and he ſaith, it is to be levied upon compact to be paid the principall againe, and for uſe more or leſſe; and hereupon he inferreth, that to make and take according to ſuch a compact is a ſinne, becauſe the borrower may by caſualty, without any default of his, loſe all that he Exod. 22. 15. borrowed, and the Lord hath made a Law in ſuch a caſe, that the borrower ſhall not make good the thing hired; If the owner were by, he ſhall not make it good, if it were hired, it came for his hire; ſo that ſaith he, of any thing hired, the hire is to be paid, but not the thing it ſelfe, if it be loſt, and therefore Money lent for uſe, not; but according to this reaſoning a generall concluſion is made upon a particular propoſition, the thing borrowed the borrower ſhall not be forced to make good, if the lender being by, ſaw that without all fraud or guile it miſcarried, and the borrower could not help it; therefore he that borrowes Money for hire, and that be loſt by caſualty any where, either in the preſence, or not in the preſence of the lender, ſhall not make it good. Who can approve this reaſoning to be good? when as money borrowed is purſed up, and carried away, the lender not knowing whether, and if it be loſt by any caſualty, there might be fault in the borrower, by whoſe negligence, or over-ſight, or of ſome about him, it came by this caſualty in part, or in whole to be loſt. For the true meaning of that place, ſee my Commentary upon it, and likewiſe touching Vſury, Exod. 22. 25. He that thus increaſeth his goods ſhall have it in Gods due time taken away from him or his, and put into the hands of thoſe that will pitty the poore, and give to ſuch, as he by his oppreſſions hath wronged and impoveriſhed.

Some rendring it, He gathers it, that he may pitty the poore, expound it thus; by pittying the poore, or giving to them, he increaſeth as by uſury, becauſe he that giveth to the poore, lends upon uſe, as it were, to the Lord, as was before ſaid, by whoſe bleſſing his goods ſhall be increaſed the more. But this over-throweth the true ſence, which is to deter men from uſurious gaine.

Verſ. 9. He that turnes away his eare from hearing the Law, even his prayer ſhall be an abomination. The ſame in effect with chap. 15. 8.

Verſ. 10. Who ſo cauſeth the righteous to goe aſtray in an evill way, he ſhall fall himſelfe into his owne pit, but the righteous ſhall have good things in poſſeſſion. The meaning is, that by his evill counſell, or inticement, makes the righteous to erre, or ſinne, or to come into danger, which he hath plotted to bring him into, he ſhall fall himſelfe, and the evill that he falleth into, ſhall be his ruine, but the righteous ſhall be delivered againe, and come to injoy a proſperous eſtate, and comfort here, and glory everlaſtingly hereafter.

Verſ. 11. The rich man is wiſe in his owne conceit, but the eare that hath underſtanding ding ſearcheth him out. Rich men are ready to be conceited of their own wiſdome, and providence, as if they had hereby gotten their wealth; againſt which therefore Moſes giveth warning, Deut. 8. 14. But the poore man ſearcheth him out, yet not every poore man, for moſt fawne upon rich men, and extoll them, as excelling others in wiſdome, as they doe in wealth; but the poore, that hath underſtanding, he by his anſwers, when he cometh to talke with him, findeth out his ſhallowneſſe, and layeth him open, not to be the man that he was taken to be; as the blinde man reſtored to his ſight did the Phariſees, who thought themſelves the wiſeſt of all others. Joh. 9.

God, ſaith Lavater, hath diſtributed his gifts diverſly, to ſome giving riches, to others wiſdome, and the rich men for the moſt part, howſoever they may be wiſe enough for this world, yet their hearts are ſo taken up with their riches, and honours, that there is no place for true Chriſtian wiſdome there; for which it is ſaid, Not many wiſe, not many rich, or noble are called; the poore man of underſtanding, howſoever others be deluded, perceives well enough how fooliſh he is, and derides him. Lavater. 1 Cor. 1.

When righteous men rejoyce there is great glory, but when the wicked riſe a man is hidden. Here the word rendred hidden is חפשׂ ſignifying either to hide, to finde out, or to change, and therefore ſome expound it thus; When the wicked rule, good men hide themſelves, as knowing that they ſeeke their lives; as Ahab, and Jezabel did the life of Eliah. Verſ. 12.

Some, they change in their manners, conforming to the preſent authority; ſome, they change their habits, that they may not be knowne for feare of danger, or they change their Country, going away from under the dominion of ſuch, as intolerable.

Some, a man is found out of what mettle he is made, whether he be approved or no, by his conſtancy, or inconſtancy in goodneſſe, when the Rulers and times are ſo evill; for when the righteous rule, which is meant by rejoycing, becauſe it is the common joy of the juſt to ſee ſuch preferred, many glorious in vertue then appear, it being an eaſie matter then to ſhew piety, when the higher powers favour and affect only ſuch; but then is a man found out, whether he be truly ſuch or no, when the wicked rule, as Gregory ſaith, To be good amongſt the evill, this ſheweth one approved indeed. Gregor.

Laſtly ſome, A man is inquired after, or ſearched for, as the word alſo ſignifieth, there being ſo few, that now a ſearch had need be made all over a City with Lanthorne and Candle light, as Diogenes did in Athens ſometime, to finde out one, as God alſo bad Jeremiah, ſearch over Jeruſalem, by running to and fro. Jer. 5. 1.

He that covereth his ſinnes ſhall not proſper, but he that confeſſeth, and forſaketh them, ſhall have mercy; That is, the Hypocrite, who goeth on in ſinne, under the cover of pretended holineſſe, ſhall ſurely be detected and puniſhed, he ſhall finde no favour with God, but be cut off, and have his portion with Hypocrites. And ſo ſhall they that ſtand upon their owne juſtification, denying the evill that they have done, defying thoſe that challenge them for it; or being bold, when they are under the cover of darkneſſe, or ſecreſie, to commit any ſinne. But he that confeſſeth with contrition, that he hath ſinned, and amends his life, returning to his heavenly Father, as the Prodigall, ſhall have mercy, and forgiveneſſe; as was verified in David, who when he was charged with ſinning, ſaid, I have ſinned; and immediately he heard from the mouth of the Prophet, The Lord hath forgiven thy ſinne; which becauſe Saul did not, but covered it, he could not proſper ever after, but declined, and finally periſhed, together with his poſterity. Verſ. 13. Luk. 15. 2 Sam. 12. Note.

But for confeſſing our ſins to men, we have no precept or preſident for that, unleſſe it be openly, as they did, that came to be Baptized of John, and thoſe Converts, who were turned at Pauls preaching; but of this, and of Auricular confeſſion, ſee upon Jam. 5. 16. Luk. 3. Acts 19.

Happy is the man that feareth alwayes, but he that hardneth his heart ſhall fall into miſchiefe. Having in the former verſe ſpoken terrour to ſuch as cover their ſins, and comfort to ſuch as confeſſe them, now he ſheweth what ſhall befall Verſ. 14.

them, that harden their hearts againſt confeſſing and ſorrowing for their ſins, and reformation from them, they ſhall finally fall into miſchiefe, they ſhall periſh without remedy for ever; but who ſo is moved by the feare of the Lord, to humble himſelfe, and ſtand in awe of him, and refraineth from all wickedneſſe, and that not by fits, but continually, he is bleſſed and happy.

It is not then the feare of Deſpaire that here is commended unto us, for that is ſervile, from which, all that with penitent hearts confeſſe their ſins, are delivered, but the filiall feare proceeding from reconciliation with God, through his Sonne Jeſus Chriſt, for now he is at peace with God, and his diſpleaſure is turned away, but he feareth by ſinning to incurre it againe, and therefore in feare and trembling labours to keep conſtantly in his wayes all the dayes of his life, and this is his working out his ſalvation with feare and trembling.

Phil. 2. 12.

Verſ. 15. As a roaring Lion, and a ranging Beare, ſo is a wicked ruler over the poore people. The Lion by his roaring makes all the Beaſts of the field afraid, and he makes a prey of them, tearing them with his teeth, and a Beare with his pawes; ſo doth a wicked Tyrant the people under him, being as ſheep, which ſuffer all this, and make no reſiſtance; but by prayers to God, and teares, according to the old Motto of the Church, Prayers and teares are the armes of the Church.

Preces & lachrymæ armi eccleſiæ.

Note. Wouldeſt not thou then that art a King, or Ruler, turne from a man to a Lion, or Beare? flye tyranny, and be a true Shepherd to defend them, both from Lions, Beares, and Wolves, leſt by Gods juſt judgement it comes at length upon thee, as upon them, thy owne Subjects being ſtirred up againſt thee to deſtroy thee, as Tyrants have often been ſerved.

Verſ. 16. The Prince alſo that wanteth underſtanding is a great oppreſſour, but he that hateth covetouſneſſe ſhall prolong his dayes; Jun. A governour without underſtanding, and is much in oppreſſion, ſhall ſhorten his dayes, but he that hateth gaine ſhall prolong his dayes; but New Tranſlation is word for word, according to the Originall, but the meaning is the ſame, it is a deſcription of a fooliſh Prince, for as Jethro counſelled Moſes about Governours, to be ſet over the people, let them be men of underſtanding, and hating covetouſneſſe; whereby is implied, That a covetous Prince wanteth underſtanding, as indeed he doth, otherwiſe he would not preferre gaine before the love of his people, wherein his happineſſe and wealth conſiſteth, they being all ready, if he hath their love, liberally to contribute unto him, and his, as need requireth, whereas if he hath never ſo great treaſures, but not love, they will ſtand him in no ſtead, for the prolonging of his life, but through their hatred he ſhall be in continuall danger of death.

Nothing doth ſo much affect the mindes of men generally, as their profits: oppreſſe them herein, and purchaſe their hatred for ever, as Rehoboam did; Religion indeed goeth nearer to the hearts of ſome, but they are only a few in compariſon of the multitude, who are ſtirred by the world.

Verſ. 17. A man that doth violence to the bloud of any perſon ſhall flye to the pit, let no man ſtay him. The word עשק rendred violence, ſignifieth alſo to calumniate, and it is rendred in vulgar Latine, and expounded as cohering with ver. 16. wherein a Princes covetouſneſſe is taxed, here his picking a quarrell with men that have wealth, and taking away life to ſatisfie his covetous deſire the more; now the prince that doth thus, ſaith he, ſhall flye; That is, come ſoone to deſtruction, his bloud being ſhed for the bloud that he hath ſhed, and none ſhall be able to ſtay him from this his deſerved end; ſo that as he that hates covetouſneſſe ſhall prolong his dayes, ver. 16. ſo the covetous, who is ſo greedy of gaine, that he takes away the life of the owners thereof; although he be a King, ſhall be ſuffered to live but a ſhort time after; and therefore it may be inferred, as by Junius, That he ſhall ſhorten his dayes.

Salazer. Whereas ſome by the pit underſtand the Ciſterne, and expound it of his taking water, and waſhing his hands, to declare his innocency, for which yet he ſhall not be beleeved, although the word בור ſignifieth a Ciſterne, whereinto water is put, or runneth, for it alſo ſignifieth the Grave; it agreeth not with ſence, for although

Pilate cauſed water to be brought unto him in a baſon to waſh his hands therewith to ſuch an end, yet it hath not beene uſuall for Princes to runne to a Ciſterne to doe ſo, and if it were, it cannot be meant here, where the ſhortening of his life is ſpoken of contrary to the prolonging thereof before ſaid, and therefore the former expoſition ſtands firme and ſure.

There be indeed many expoſitions more brought, as that a mans guiltineſſe in his owne conſcience is here meant, which makes him hide himſelfe for feare in ſome ſepulchre or darke cave of the earth, or that after ſo crying a ſinne committed, he ſhall flye and ſeeke to hide himſelfe in ſome ſecret place, but none ſhall be able to ſtay or hold him, ſo as that he ſhall not be brought forth and executed, which laſt of the two is not to be miſliked neither; and what hath beene ſaid of a Prince, ſhall be verified much more in all other men, that imbrue their hands in bloud.

He that maketh haſte to be rich ſhall not be innocent. Touching walking uprightly, Verſ. 18. and a mans tilling his land, whereby plenty comes, it hath beene ſpoken before, and therefore I omit them here. For this 20. Verſ. he that maketh haſte to be rich is oppoſed to a faithfull man, that ſhall have bleſſings abundantly; as therefore by a faithfull man one is meant, that is juſt and true in all his dealings, and without fraud or guile, and that ſo attendeth to his worldly buſineſſe, as that he neglecteth not the worſhip and ſervice of God, who onely is able to bleſſe him; ſo by him that makes haſte to be rich, a man unconſcionable in his dealings, who haſteneth ſo to get the world, that he regards not right or wrong, neither will he loſe ſo much time, as to attend upon God in his ſervice, but ſo ſoone as he is up in the morning haſteneth to his worke, toyling both himſelfe and his ſervants unreaſonably for this end, ſuch an one cannot be innocent, and therefore as Junius hath it, ſhall not goe unpuniſhed. Verſe 20.

To accept of perſons is not good, for a peece of bread that man will tranſgreſſe; ſee before Chap. 18. 5. it is ſpoken here to Judges that are corrupt, and may well be numbred amongſt thoſe that make haſte to be rich, and the meaning is, for any little gaine they will pervert true judgement, ſo doth he prevaile with them that come with bribes. Verſ. 21.

He that haſteth to be rich, hath an evill eye, and conſidereth not that poverty ſhall come upon him; Jun. A man of an evill eye haſteth to be rich, expounded this amongſt thoſe ſpoken of before verſe 20. who make haſte to bee rich; the envious man is here noted to be one, that is, he who is ſo ſparing, that hee grudgeth at that which commers in (whom he biddeth eat at his table) doe eat and drinke, againſt which it was ſpoken before Chap. 23. 6. He is here threatned one day to bee wiped on the ſudden of all that he hath by ſuch unreaſonable parſimony gotten, either by ſome caſualty, or at his death. Verſ. 22.

He that rebukes a man ſhall finde more favour afterwards, then he that flattereth with his tongue; The word rendred afterwards, is אחרי ſignifieth after me, and therefore ſome think it is meant after my example, who ſpare none; ſome by alleadging the ſayings in this my Booke, as need requires, but they expound it moſt rightly, that judge the letter י to be redundant, rendring it therefore alſo afterwards; that is, although it be a thankleſſe office to reprove another, how juſtly ſoever, and at the firſt the party reproved in his heat giveth ill language to his reprover, yet upon further conſideration being moved by his reproofe to repent, whereby ſome good redounds unto him, he will thanke him, and he will count him a better friend then the flatterer, by whoſe flattery being drawne, he meeteth with miſchiefe at the laſt, whereby he ſeeth that he was abuſed by him, but dealt faithfully with by the other. And therefore let him that is wiſe, if he be reproved juſtly, thinke upon this, and heare it with patience, and let us not for the preſent impatience of the reproved, ceaſe from this neceſſary Chriſtian duty. Verſ. 23. Levit. 19 17.

Who ſo robbeth his father and mother, and ſaith, it is no tranſgreſſion is the companion of a deſtroyer; Jun. of a murtherer, reſpecting the ſenſe, which is all one. This is ſo farre from not being the ſinne of theft, as that it is worſe Deut. 21. then any other theft, ſuch a ſonne ſhall bee counted, and ſuffer, amongſt murtherers.

Verſ. 25. Of the proud ſtirring up contention, verſe 25. ſee before Chap. 13.10. for the next words, He that puts his truſt in the Lord ſhall be made fat; this is oppoſed to pride, becauſe the proud man truſteth in his owne ſtrength, wealth, or wit, and not in the Lord, he moveth ſtrife, whereby great matters are brought to ſmall, but he that truſts in God ſhall be fat and full, that is, have a plentifull eſtate. But it is commonly noted by Expoſitors that for theſe words, The proud in heart, Heb. is large, or dilated in heart, whereby R. Levi underſtands both proud and covetous, for he is of a dilated heart alſo, becauſe his deſire is inlarged to worldly goods without meaſure, and covetouſneſſe is as much the cauſe of contention as pride. And he truſts not in God any more then the proud, but in his riches, for which well may he that truſts in God be oppoſed to them both. They may make much ſtriving, the one to get honours, the other worldly goods, but he that truſts in God, takes the right courſe indeed to attaine them.

Verſ. 26. Who ſo truſteth in his owne heart is a foole, but who ſo walketh wiſely ſhall be delivered. He that truſteth in his owne heart, is he that thinkes himſelfe wiſe enough, and that for any thing to be done, he needeth not the counſell or advice of others: Such a man ſhall finde afterward to his coſt, that he hath done fooliſhly, as David confeſſed, when of his owne head, not regarding the good counſell of Joab, he had cauſed the people to be numbred. This was alſo verified much more in Rehoboam, who truſted to his owne heart, and ſuch as he was, and forſooke good counſell: and Jeroboam, who according to the dictate of his owne heart, ſought to eſtabliſh his Kingdome by Idolatrous worſhip of his owne inventions: after whom many Chriſtians have gone ſince, deviſing of their owne head new wayes of worſhipping God, to the corrupting of the Church, and the great diſturbance of the peace thereof. On the other ſide, he walkes wiſely, that takes counſell of the wiſe and doth accordingly, to him it is here promiſed, when others, that truſt to their owne hearts ſhall fall into miſchiefe, that he ſhall be delivered here from, and live in proſperity.

Some underſtand truſting in a mans owne heart, of following the luſts, and deſires thereof, and ſome of his raſhly putting himſelfe upon dangerous enterpriſes, truſting to wade through them well enough by their owne valour; but we may reſt in the firſt, as moſt genuine.

It is the ſureſt way to injoy Gods bleſſing, and be continually ſupplyed with neceſſaries, to give almes; but to be in danger of his curſes, and to be curſed by the poore, to turne from them, and not to look upon their neceſſities, as Dives would not upon Lazarus, to be curſed in their goods and children, in their bodies and ſoules, Math. 25.

In this caſe the Jewes are cenſured cenſured as having a ſinewy necke by the Prophet Eſay, Thou haſt a ſinewy necke of iron, and browes of braſſe. And this is the caſe of wicked ſwearers, drunkards, and whoremongers of theſe times, who are often reproved, but not reformed, nothing is now to bee expected by them, but deſtruction for ever. Eſa. 48. 4.

Verſ. 2. This is the ſame in effect with Chap. 28. 28. and Verſ. 3. with Chap. 10. 1. and Chap. 5. 10. Verſ. 2.

The King by judgement eſtabliſheth the land, but he that receiveth gifts overthroweth it. This hath beene often proved true, becauſe when a good King reigneth, God hath alwayes given him victory, and if enemies have come againſt his Kingdome, they have beene made to returne with loſſe and ſhame, as in the times of Hezekiah, Jehoſaphat, Uzziah, David, and Aſa. Verſ. 4.

The Kings eſtabliſhing the Land by judgement then is not onely by doing right to every one of his ſubjects, whoſe cauſe cometh before him, but doing as a godly, wiſe and judicious King ſhould doe in all other things, eſpecially in purging corruption out of the Church. On the other ſide, the King that is covetous, and preferreth unworthy men to places of judicature for money, layeth a foundation of all wickedneſſe in his land, whereby it is overthrowne; for the Judges that give, will take bribes, and when judgement goeth by bribes, men are bold to commit any wickedneſſe, for they have purſes wherewith to buy off the puniſhment.

A man that flattereth his neighbour, ſpreadeth a net for his feet; even as an Hunter dealeth by beaſts that he may take and kill them, ſo dealeth the flatterer by his neighbour; ſee this notably ſet forth, Mich. 7. 2. Therefore take heed of a flatterer, as of a dangerous perſon, he hunteth to catch and deſtroy thee when hee ſpeaketh thee faire, for he aimeth at ſome advantage for his owne profit, and thy loſſe, or to bring thee into danger of loſing goods or life, or if his flattering bee to draw thee to ſin or errour, into danger of loſing thy ſoule. Verſ. 5. Note.

In the tranſgreſſion of an evill man there is a ſnare, but the righteous ſing and rejoyce. Becauſe he had ſaid before, that the flatterer ſpread a net before the foole, now he ſheweth, that ſuch a flattering deceitfull mans net laid to catch others by their feet, becomes by Gods juſt judgement a ſnare to take him by the necke, and to ſtrangle him; for what meaſure a man metes to another ſhall be meaſured to him againe: but the righteous being by Gods providence delivered from his net, ſhall rejoyce and ſing, as a bird that having beene in the net, and eſcaped out againe, and is at liberty ſingeth chearfully. Some take the ſnare here ſpoken of to be an evill conſcience, taking the wicked, and holding him till he dyeth in deſpaire, and ſometime hang himſelfe. And ſome will have his very ſinne to be a ſnare, ſo that he who falls into, and liveth in ſinne, is in a ſnare which will hold him, till he periſh and come to weeping and gnaſhing his teeth for ſorrow; but the righteous ſhall ſing in the quire of Angels, and praiſe God for ever, which ſhould make us to keep out of the way of ſin, as from a pernicious ſnare. Verſ. 6. Note.

The righteous conſidereth the cauſe of the poore, but the wicked regardeth not to know it. Here a difference is ſhewed betwixt a juſt and wicked Judge, the juſt when a poore mans cauſe cometh before him, conſidereth it, if it be right, to judge on his ſide, as juſtice requireth, but the wicked hath no regard unto it, to conſider whether it be right or wrong, becauſe he is a poore man, and therefore by him not regarded, and becauſe he hath no bribe to give him: ſuch a righteous man was Job, who ſearched into the cauſe of the poore to underſtand it, and ſuch muſt and ought all Judges to be Eſa. 1. 16. otherwiſe they are cenſured as companions of theeves, and ſhall themſelves bee judged accordingly. The word rendred conſidereth, is ידע knoweth, whereby is meant knowing to favour it being juſt, and to defend him from his oppreſſours, as the Lord is ſaid to know thoſe that be his. Verſ. 7. Iob 29. 16. Eſa. 1. 25.

Scornfull men bring a City into a ſnare, but wiſe men turne away wrath; Junius ſet a City on fire; the word יפיחו ſignifieth either to blow up fire, or to inſnare; that of Junius is to be preferred, becauſe wrath, which is as fire, is next Verſ. 8. Junius.

ſpoken of; now ſcorners kindle a fire, as it were, in a City, becauſe they deride and diſgrace the Truth, and magnifie their owne phantaſies, whereby the fire of contention is kindled amongſt many; but this is fore-told by Chriſt to be the iſſue of his coming, I came to ſend fire upon earth; for no ſooner was the Goſpel preached, but by ſcorners, ſuch as are ſpoken of, Acts 2. a fire was kindled, as appeareth, chap. 3. 4. 7. 8. &c and Demetrius ſet all Athens on ſuch a fire, when Paul had preached there. But a wiſe man appeaſeth wrath, for the wiſdome, that is from above, is peaceable.

Iam. 3. 17. 18.

Some of the Rabbins render it, Detractours make the City to fluctuate, becauſe the word ſignifieth to blow, for ſo Winds blowing upon the Sea, make it full of Waves, and unquiet; and this alſo is done by ſtirring up ſedition. A wiſe man turneth away wrath, he appeaſeth ſedition being raiſed, as the Towne-clerke of Athens did, Act. 19. and Menenius Agrippa is ſaid to have done in Rome, when the people mutinyed againſt their Governours; for he made an Oration unto them, ſaying, That the members of the body once mutinyed againſt the belly, becauſe that was idle, and all their labour was ſpent hereupon; the hands would worke no more, nor feet travell for proviſion, by which meanes the belly being in want, all the members waxed feeble, and were forced againe to returne to their labours; In like manner, ſaid he, if yee doe not, ye may bring the ſervant into great ſtreights, but yee ſhall ſoone run into an evill caſe alſo; this being ſaid, they were quieted, and ſo the City was delivered from their rage.

Verſ. 9. If a wiſe man contends with a fooliſh, whether he rage, or laugh, he hath no reſt. Here is an exception to that which was ſaid before, ver. 8. of a wiſe man turning away wrath; if he be a foole, with whom he hath to doe, let him deale how he will, he cannot prevaile to appeaſe ſuch an one; a multitude he may by his wiſdome prevaile with, as the aforeſaid Menenius did, and as the wiſe woman in the City, to which Sheba fled, in Davids time, by her wiſdome prevailed for the turning away of Joabs wrath, by cutting off his head, and caſting it over the wall. But whether he rage, That is, deale furiouſly, and fiercely with a foole by words and ſtripes, or meekly, which is meant by his laughing upon him; (by Chriſt expreſſed by Piping, telling the Jewes, that they were as little children, calling one to another, and ſaying, We have piped unto you, and yee have not danced; and we have mourned unto you, and yee have not lamented) he can prevaile nothing with him, to make him ceaſe from his folly, whereby he doth vexe and diſquiet him, and ſo by all the meanes that he can uſe, cannot come to have reſt. Of this Expoſition Junius layeth the ground in his notes.

Junius.

Vatabl. Vatablus applieth this raging or laughing to the foole, with whom the wiſe man hath to doe, it being meant, that he is ſo raſh, and inconſiderate in his ſpeeches, and actions, that a wiſe man having any commerce with him, whereby he is forced to be in his company, cannot have any reſt in his minde, whilſt he is with him, his ſpeeches and fooliſh doings are ſo irkſome to him; when he laugheth, and is merry, he is ſo vaine; when he is angry, he is ſo furious, that he is intolerable.

Rodolph. But Rodolphus ſomewhat otherwiſe, expounds it thus; A foole being dealt withall by a wiſe man, to amend his manners, either rageth at his reproofes, or laugheth at him, and derideth him for his labour, and this is all the effect of his contending with him, ſo that he muſt be corrected by ſtripes, not by words, as was ſaid before, A rod for the fooles backe, and then he that deales with him may haply have ſome reſt, ſome reformation being wrought, otherwiſe he can have none, the worke being ſtill to doe. And to this Expoſition doe I rather incline, becauſe it agreeth not ſo well, to ſay of a wiſe man, that in contending with one to reforme him, he rageth, or that he laugheth, to expreſſe his milde, and gentle proceedings with him, for this ſtands not with his gravity, nor the other with his moderation.

Verſ. 10. Bloudy men hate the upright, but the righteous ſeeke his ſoule; ſo it is, Hebr. and the meaning is, Whereas a wicked man hateth him to the death, as Cain did Abel, the righteous contrariwiſe ſeeke by all meanes to ſave his life, as

Obadiah

Obadiah did the Prophets in Jezabels time, hiding them in Caves, and feeding them there, and Rahab the life of the Spyes that came to Jericho; and ſo deare ſhould the lives of the Saints be to every one of us, according to that of John, We ought to lay downe our lives for the brethren. 1 Joh. 3. 16.

Some thinke it to be ſpoken of Judges, which are good, they ſeeke to ſave his life, when the wicked come with falſe accuſations againſt him, by ſifting out the truth, and if they have ſhed his bloud, ſeeking them out, to take vengeance upon them. This is alſo true, but the ſence is more generall, ver. 11. Rodolph.

A foole uttereth all his minde, but a wiſe man keepeth it till afterwards Hebr. Keepes it for after; The meaning is, fooles tell their intentions, the laying open of which may be prejudiciall unto them, and diſcover both their owne, and the ſecrets of their friends, to their great damage; but the wiſe ſhew them not, but keep them ſecret, till they ſee a fit opportunity, and then they ſpeake; as David ſaid nothing at the preſent againſt Shimei, and Joab, but afterwards he gave a charge to his Son Salomon touching them. Thus Junius, & Muſſet after him. Verſ. 11.

But becauſe the word here uſed is him; רוח ſpirit, and this is ſometime put for ſtrength, as Pſal. 104. Thou ſhalt take away their ſpirit, and they ſhall faile; Sometime for anger, The Hebrew Rabbins underſtand it of ſtrength, and expound it thus: The foole putteth forth all his ſtrength at the firſt, when he ſetteth upon any good duty, that at length he is conſtrained to give out, as not able to goe on. Junius. Muſſet.

To this effect Baſil ſaith, As a man that puts his ſervant to too much labour, by this meanes bringeth weakneſſe and ſickneſſe upon him, and ſo makes himſelfe of a Maſter, a Servant to his Servant; ſo the body, which is a ſervant to the minde, if it be at the firſt put beyond the ſtrength, waxeth feeble, and is not able to hold out in prayer, and ſtudy, and preaching to the edification of others; the wiſe man therefore moderates himſelfe, and puts forth but part of his ſtrength at the firſt, and reſerveth part for afterwards. Baſil. De vera virgin. Note.

The Septuagint, and Cald. render it, The foole poureth forth all his wrath, but the wiſe diſpenſeth it but in part; That is, refraineth his anger, not ſpeaking, or doing any thing upon the ſudden, but after ſome time interpoſed, wherein his wrath may be mitigated; as Athenodorus the Stoicke counſelled Auguſtus the Emperour, when he was provoked, to deferre ſpeaking, till he had ſaid over the whole Alphabet; and Ambroſe, and Theodoſius likewiſe; and Seneca ſaith, the greateſt remedy againſt anger is delay, for it hath grievous forces at the firſt, but will all be overcome being taken in parts. It may be taken any of theſe wayes. Seneca. L. 2. 28. Maximum remedium iræ mora, graves habet impetus primos, ſed vincetur ſi per partes carpatur.

If a ruler hearkens to lyes, all his ſervants are wicked. Againſt hearing lyes and tales, ſee Exod. 23. one ſaith, It is as bad to carry the Devill in ones eare, as in ones tongue; By rulers underſtand not only Magiſtrates, but alſo Rulers, and Governours of Families; if a Judge will hearken to lyes, all his Servants will turne Lyers, and Tale-bearers; only we read of one Obadiah in Ahabs family, a juſt man, and of Obedmelech in Zedekiah his Court, all Ahabs Prophets were Lyers. Verſ. 12.

And Doeg, the Ziphims, and others, when they knew it would pleaſe Saul, vented their malice againſt David, in bringing lyes and tales againſt him. So in a Family, if the Maſter and Miſtris, or either will hearken to lyes and tales, they that are their ſervants will ſeeke to humour them herein; likewiſe, if they be prophane ſwearers: But if they be godly, this is a great meanes to make ſome of their Family godly alſo. As Cornelius being a man that feared God, had three Souldiers about him that did likewiſe; and Abraham had a faithfull Steward, although by reaſon of mens naturall corruption, there is more power in wicked examples to corrupt, then in godly to ſanctifie; but let all Rulers thinke upon this, and turne ſuch as Abraham was, Gen. 18. and David, Pſal. 101. Act. 10.

And Baſil ſaith well, the Prince that doth not, but hearkens to lyers, cometh in danger to be counted like unto them, and guilty of all the bloud that is unjuſtly ſhed by their falſe ſuggeſtions. Beda.

Verſ. 13. Junius. The poore and the deceitfull man meet together, the Lord lighteneth both their eyes; Jun. He that is rude, and he that is witty; the Vulgar, the poore man, and the Creditor. but Hebr. it is the poor, and אישׁ תכבים the man of deceit; the ſubtle to deceive, for the word is for the moſt part put for the fraudulent, and men of a ſharp wit, who uſe it this way, and then by the poore underſtand ſuch as are poore and weake in wit and judgement. Theſe meet together, that is, theſe two ſorts are in the world, but let not one ſort deſpiſe another, for God is the maker of them both; thou haſt ſo much wit, becauſe God hath indued thee herewith, he hath ſo little, becauſe God hath given him no more, and ſometimes God chuſeth ſuch ſimple ones to grace and life, and not the wiſe of this world, to be ſure not the wiſe to deceive; and it is ſaid, that the word of God giveth wiſdome to the ſimple. And ſuch are here ſet forth by the name of poore, becauſe the poore for the moſt part for want of education, are rude and ignorant, as Joh.7. it is ſaid, Doe any of the Rulers beleeve in him; but this poore people that knoweth not the Law, are accurſed; and Jeremiah ſaith the like touching the poore; and thoſe ſubtle ones are ſaid to bee inlightened by God, becauſe their wit cometh from him, although the abuſe of it to deceit, from themſelves.

1 Cor. 1. 20.

Some will have the meaning of this place to be the ſame with that Chap. 22. 2. The rich and the poore meet together, the borrower and the lender, but neither will the originalls beare this reading; neither is it ſaid, God is the maker, but the inlightener of them both, wherefore others rendring the words, the poore man, the man of contritions, expounding it of one alwayes poore, and another that hath beene rich, but now by ſuffering many loſſes, is made poore alſo, theſe met together now in a like condition, have no cauſe yet to deſpaire, for God can give them both light and comfort; yea, he often doth caſt downe, and raiſe up againe, as hee did Job, and ſetteth the poore with Princes, raiſing them out of the duſt to great dignity. And the word ſignifieth as well contritions as deceits, and it is more genuine to expound it thus, there being more ſenſe in it then in ſaying that God is the inlightener of the poor and the deceitfull, becauſe he that hath more wit then another, but uſeth it to deceit, can have little comfort of it when he lookes up to God, who gave him his wit not to this, but to a better end, and to what good uſe this may be improved I ſee not; but the other to a very good one, as hath beene ſaid.

Verſ. 16. When the wicked are multiplied, tranſgreſſion increaſeth, but the righteous ſhall ſee their fall. Sinne and the ſinner, ſaith one, are twins, and therefore they grow up together, ſinnes are increaſed when ſinners increaſe, both in number, degree or ſtature, as the body of man doth, childrens ſinnes are not ſo great nor hurtfull at the firſt, and it is more eaſie to ſuppreſſe them then afterwards, when they are growne more in ſtature, even as a briar or thorne, in the bud may bee cruſhed with the hand without hurt, but let it alone till it be growne up, and then it cannot without pricking. And being thus underſtood, it cohereth well with verſe 15. where the rod for children is commended, and letting them alone to doe as they luſt, is condemned. And it extendeth alſo to men living in ſin, the more the number of them is increaſed, the more doth ſin increaſe, all men being now made the more bold to doe evill, and more forcibly drawn by ſo many examples. Junius is for the firſt expoſition, and renders the words accordingly, when ſinners increaſe, ſin is increaſed; as if their increaſe in ſtrength and ſtature were meant. But Lavater is for the other, and Heb. word רבב ſignifieth to multiply and increaſe in number, and in bigneſſe and ſtature alſo, therefore, as I ſaid before, it may be taken both wayes. For the juſt ſeeing their fall, this is added for their comfort, when the wicked oppreſſe them by their numbers or power, as the Sodomites did Lot, for he ſaw their fall, and ſo did Noah the ruine of the old world, and the Iſraelites of the Egyptians their oppreſſors.

Verſ. 18. Where there is no viſion the people periſh, but he that keepes the Law is Happy.

happy. Junius, the people are naked, expounded thus, they lye open to Gods judgements, as Aaron is ſaid to have made the people of Iſrael naked, when hee ſet them up a golden Calfe; and how can they but be naked, who want Chriſt, by whoſe righteouſneſſe, as by a robe, wee are covered? and that they want Chriſt, who want Viſion, that is, preaching, appeareth, becauſe they want faith, for faith is by hearing the word preached. The reaſon why preaching or propheſying is ſet forth by the name of Viſion, is becauſe Prophets of old were called Seers, and they had revelations from God many times by viſions. And as the people are ſaid here to be naked that want viſion, ſo Amos ſaith, that they ſuffer by famine, not of bread, but of hearing the word of God, and they are naked alſo, becauſe not having the word preached, they are without a ſword to defend them, yea, or any other Arme, helmet, breaſt-plate, ſhield, the Souldiers girdle, and ſhooes, and ſo they are not only naked for want of a cover from Gods wrath, but alſo the ſpirituall enemies, the armies of devills that are continually fighting againſt them. But if viſion faileth not, yet all not bleſſed in ſuch a land, but onely they that keepe the Law, they that heare the word of God and doe it, as our Lord ſaith, and the Apoſtle James.

Matth. 12.
Jam. 1. 20.

A ſervant will not be corrected with words, for although he underſtandeth, yet he will not anſwer; Jun. When as he underſtanding yet anſwereth not; Heb. becauſe he underſtands, and there is no anſwer; the meaning is, that ſtout ſervants muſt be corrected not with words onely, but with blowes; and they are here ſet forth to be ſtout ſervants, who, when their maſter calleth to them, and although they heare, they make as if they heard not, and ſo anſwer not, or being asked a queſtion, will not anſwer, and anſwer not by doing as they are bidden; and if ſuch be not corrected otherwiſe then by words, as now adayes they are not, God will lay his puniſhments upon them, whom they are ſtout againſt, in being ſtout againſt their Maſters, as they ſerve him, in doing them faithfull ſervice.

Verſ. 19.

Seeſt thou a man that is haſty in his words? there is more hope of a foole then of him. This doth not unfitly follow that of verſe 19. where ſullenneſſe, and ſtoutneſſe is condemned in him that will not anſwer, he being too ready to ſpeake, the tongue running before the wit. It is better to be ſimple, and ſlow of ſpeech then thus ready ſpoken; for both in a multitude of words there is ſinne, and he that ſpeakes ſo much is wiſe in his owne conceit, and therefore he hath neither eare nor heart to heare, and he alone fills up all the time ſo with his prattle, that there is no time for the wiſe to ſpeake, of whom he might learne, whereas a ſimpler man that ſpeakes little, hath time to heare and learne.

Verſ. 20.

He that diligently bringeth up his ſervant from a childe, ſhall have him become his ſonne at length. Here he goeth on ſtill in ſpeaking of ſervants, and the meaning is, if a ſervant be fed and cloathed, and favoured in reſpect of his worke at the firſt, when he is young, and his maſter hath yet had no experience of his nature and good deſerts, but raſhly preferreth him to ſome place of power and authority, he ſhall have cauſe afterwards to repent, when it will be too late. Jun. for theſe words ſhall have him become his ſonne, hath thoſe, ſhall be bereaved of his children, expounding it thus, he will prove at length ſo inſolent and ambitious, that he, as his owne naturall ſonne and heire, he will deſtroy his children and take his inheritance from them, making himſelfe Lord and Maſter of all, they being put downe, and ſometime as a moſt ungracious ſonne killing his father to come before the time to his poſſeſſions. Thus did Zimri to Elah his maſter, King of Iſrael, whom he had favoured ſo farre, as to make him Captaine of halfe his Chariots, he being pricked on with ambition ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead, and then he cut off the ſons of Baaſha his father, who were his brethren, and had the next right to the Kingdome. And Jeroboam advanced by Salomon to be over the houſe of Joſeph, became his ſonne and heire as it were to the farre greateſt part of his Kingdome, his ſonne Reboboam being deprived thereof, and his ſonnes after him. The curſing here ſpoken of, is that of him that ſtealeth, and yet denieth it with oathes and curſing moſt ſtoutly, then which nothing is more common; howſoever he that heares ſwearing, and curſing, and ſaith nothing againſt it, upon what occaſion ſoever they be uttered, ſinneth as well againſt his owne ſoule, as he that is a partner with a thiefe; That is, conſenteth to his theft, and makes himſelfe acceſſary by receiving any part of his ſtolne goods. See Levit. 5. 1. If a ſoule ſinne, and heareth the voyce of ſwearing, and is a witneſſe, whether he hath ſeene or knowne, if he doth not utter it, he ſhall beare his iniquity. It is indeed properly ſpoken of one required to teſtifie againſt a curſer, or blaſphemer, that the Law may paſſe upon him, but he will not in this caſe utter what he knoweth; but here it is extended further, to any man that heares it, and ſaith nothing, for he goeth con-

He that is partner with a thiefe, as hath been ſaid, ſinneth againſt his owne ſoule, becauſe he maketh himſelfe alike guilty, and ſo cometh in danger of loſing his life, as wel as he, and being guilty of ſo foule a ſinne, he is 1 Cor. 5. 11. in danger of loſing his ſoule, becauſe neither thieves, nor any unrighteous perſons ſhall inherit the kingdome of Heaven.

Verſ. 25. The feare of man bringeth a ſnare, but who ſo putteth his truſt in the Lord ſhall be ſafe. Jun. The fearefull man layeth a ſnare before himſelfe, but he who truſteth in the Lord is placed on high. The firſt words may be rendred, either the feare of man, or fearefull man, the laſt properly ſignifieth lifting up on high, and becauſe he that is ſo lifted up is ſafe, New Tranſlation hath it, ſhall be ſafe; yet the word lifting up on high is more ſignificatory, as ſhewing how he cometh to be ſafe from ſuch ſnares, viz. by being lifted up in his minde to things above, ſo that he is above the reach of man herein, and therefore not ſubject to the feare of him; for although he hath power over his body, yet he hath none over his ſoule, and therefore he is not afraid of any thing that he can doe, his body being but a peece of earth, that muſt to the earth howſoever, and the cruelleſt Tyrant can doe no more, but bring it to the earth, and from hence alſo he is ſure, that it ſhall at the laſt riſe againe the more glorious, for that which he hath unjuſtly ſuffered at his hands. But he that feares him and his cruelty, by this his baſe feare, layeth a ſnare to take his ſoule into the deſtruction thereof, being for feare either made to fall from the Truth, or to comply with him in his wicked wayes, to leave his Calling, to truſt to carnall meanes, he makes himſelfe through this his feare weake, and unable to reſiſt them in their wickedneſſe, and ſo giveth them great advantage, and imboldeneth them the more in their wickedneſſe.

Laſtly, being ſo much taken with feare, his ſpirits are infeebled, his ſences dulled, and his death haſtned, it being with feare, as St. Paul ſpeakes of worldly 2 Cor. 7. 10. ſorrow, it cauſeth death.

Verſ. 26. Many ſeeke the rulers favour, but every mans judgement cometh from the Lord. Here is not condemned abſolutely the ſeeking of the favour of an earthly King, or Judge, for Heſter and Nehemiah did ſo, and Daniel for his Brethrens preferment; but a prepoſterous ſeeking of his favour, without firſt ſeeking to the Lord, as Heſter and Nehemiah did, for who ſo doth thus is not like to prevaile, becauſe he acknowledgeth not their inferiority to God, that he both giveth them

power, and can turne their hearts as he pleaseth.

Therefore when the Hebrewes being in Ægypt were oppressed, and sought to Pharaoh for ease, not having first sought unto the Lord, they prevailed nothing for any favour; but the Saints before mentioned, who sought unto God first, had their desires granted, and the reason is here given, the judgement that the Prince giveth, is of the Lord, even as he moveth him to it.

The unjust man is an abomination to the just; and contrariwise, there is just cause given to the just to hate the wicked, because they are Gods enemies, and rebels against him, there is danger in associating with them, of being corrupted by their evill manners; and lastly, they that live amongst them are made liable to great and grievous temporall Judgements by their sins; for the Land mourneth for Oathes, and Adulteries, and the Lord hath a controversie with the Land; yet the just hate, and have them in abomination, only so farre forth, as by their invectives against them to declare how vile and loathsome they are, to separate from them, as filthy, and not to eate with them, as it is noted, that the Ægyptians had the Hebrewes, and all such as killed, and sacrificed Sheep, and Oxen in abomination, and therefore ate not with them; and if they be Magistrates, to cut such of them off as be capitall offenders, and keep others downe, abhorring to preferre any so unworthy to places of power and authority for any gaine; they have them then in abomination so, as that still they love them, and pray for them, and by all meanes seeke their reformation, and salvation; and if at any time they be reformed, they then imbrace them with all love and joy, praising God for them.

Verse. 27.

Ier. 23. 10. Hos. 4. 4.

But on the contrary side, the wicked hate the upright most unjustly, because he will not run to the same excesse of ryot with them; their workes be good, and their owne evill, they are reproved by them, yea, their very lives give them a continuall checke, as the light doth works of darknesse. But there is great reason why they should rather love them, because that by their meanes the Judgements of God are averted from them, and his blessings procured; as it should have been in Sodome, if there had been ten righteous; and in Jerusalem, if one; and Laban found it by experience, by meanes of Jacob, and Potiphar, by meanes of Joseph, and after him the Keepers of the Prison; and lastly, all the people of Ægypt, in the time of seven yeares famine.

Ier. 5.

CHAP. XXX.

THE words of Agur the sonne of Jakeh, the Propheſie the man spake to Ithiel, even to Ithiel and Ucal. The vulgar Latine not taking any of these for proper names, but for appellations, rendereth it according to the signification of the words; The words of one gathering, the sonne of a vomiter, the vision the man spake with whom God is, and God being with him comforted: for Agur signifieth gathering, or gathered, Jakeh, if it be derived from יקה vomiting, but if from יקה as is more probable, for the word here used is Jakeh, not יקה with an א, then it signifieth hearing, or obedience, the sonne of obedience; Ithiel also signifieth God with me, and Ucal to prevaile, and this when a man doth, he is comforted.

Verse 1.

The Hebrewes, and many following them, will have them proper names, and consequently this chapter some other holy mans dictates by this name called, although they know not who he was; but others, most ancient Christian Doctours, render it according to the vulgar Latine, and take it to be Salomons here thus called, as Beda, Lyra, Hugo, Dionysius, Arboreus, Osorius; and the Church generally hath always ascribed this whole Booke, and all the chapters thereof to Salomon, and the Fathers commonly alledge passages in this Chapter, as uttered by Salomon.

Beda. Lyra. Hugo. Dionys.

The reason that moveth some, to thinke that it cannot be Salomons is, because vers. 2. he speakes of himselfe as more bruitish then any man, and one that had not

not the underſtanding of a man in him, therefore it ſeemeth not to be Salomons, for he was the wiſeſt of all other men; but this is eaſily anſwered, he ſpeaketh thus in humility, and becauſe he attained not his great wiſdome by ſtudy, after the manner of other wiſe men, but by inſpiration, which is here by the Septuagint Tranſlation, God taught me wiſdome, and I knew the wiſdome of the Saints; but they reſolve this beſt of all, who ſay, That he uttered theſe words after that he had ſinned ſo foulely by Idolatry, and repented, for herein he might well ſay, that he was more bruitiſh then any man, becauſe that none but a bruitiſh man, and one without the common underſtanding of men, worſhip ſtocks and ſtones.

And whereas it is further objected, that it cannot agree to Salomon, which is ſaid, ver. 8. Give me neither poverty nor riches, it is anſwered, That it agreeth very well; for although he were exceeding rich, yet he never deſired it from the beginning, and therefore he might well ſay, Give me not riches; This is a thing that I never deſired, neither doe I now deſire them, or that I may not for my ſins be deprived of them, thy will be done herein; but puniſh me not contrariwiſe with extreame poverty, as I am well worthy, as ſome, even great Kings have been. as it is ſaid of Henry the fourth Emperour, when his ſonne Rodolphus was by the Pope ſtirred up againſt him, he was not only deprived of his Empire, but brought to ſuch poverty, that he made ſuit for a Prebendary in the Church of Spira, to maintaine him in his old dayes.

Procopius. And Geliner Prince of the Vandals came finally to that poverty, that he writ to a friend of his to ſend him three things; An Harpe to comfort him, a Spunge to dry up his teares, and a loafe of bread to feed him.

Lavater. Lavater thinketh, that this Agur was ſome wiſe man, that lived in the time of Hezekiah, from whom the Proverbs before going from chap. 25. were copied out by his men; but if any ſhal hold Salomon to have been the Author, he ſaith, he will not contend about it, he might be called Agur, gathering together, becauſe he gathered together, and uttered ſo many wiſe ſayings.

If we take him to be Salomon, as it ſeemeth moſt probable to me, and that after his foule falling all things here ſpoken will agree, he was a gatherer of wiſe Sentences to utter them, although not to keep cloſe to them in his doings, for his heart was drawne away by ſtrange women, againſt whom he ſo much inveigheth; and the Sonne of Hearing, or obedience, becauſe he at the firſt hearkened diligently to the Lord, and was moſt exactly obedient, building the Temple, and ordering all things about it according to his will, and executing true judgement, as another Moſes, God was alſo with him extraordinarily, appearing twice unto him, and through God he was inabled, as the word Ucal ſignifieth, to doe ſo worthily, and wiſely, and was exceedingly comforted, and incouraged. He calleth that he ſaith here, Maſſa, a burthen, but rendred Propheſie, becauſe Propheſies of ſad and heavie things were commonly called burthens; and this is an heavie thing that he beginneth withall, his telling how bruitiſh and voyd of underſtanding he was: and in ſaying, the burthen he ſpake to Ithiel and Ucal, he meaneth to himſelfe, according to that which hath been already ſaid of him, in way of lamenting it. That which is ſaid by others, who take theſe for proper names, are but conjectures, that they were two of Agurs Diſciples, whom he here inſtructeth.

Verſ. 2. Surely I am more bruitiſh then any man, and have not the underſtanding of Verſ. 3. a man in me; I neither learned wiſdome, nor have the knowledge of the holy; Heb. and Sept. and I knew the knowledge of the Saints, where the Sept. inſert, as was noted before, God taught me wiſdome; for further explication of the meaning, I am now through my groſſe Idolatry become more bruitiſh then any man, for although other men of Iſrael had beene Idolaters in times paſt, as is ſhewed in the booke of Judges, yet now there was no Idolatry in Iſrael that we read of, either in Salomons time, till he brought it in, nor in all Davids or Sauls, and when any were ſo fooliſh as to ſerve Idols, yet not one was ever to be found before Salomon, that being a wiſe man, and moſt remarkable for his devotion towards the true God, turned Idolater. And if it be thus underſtood, all things here ſpoken agree very well, and it is put out of queſtion, that Salomon repented, and obtained mercy againe to be ſaved; For he that confeſſeth and forſakes his ſinnes ſhall have mercy, as David confeſſed, I have ſinned, and preſently heard, the Lord hath done away thy ſinne; for no man can make a more humble confeſſion then this, the moſt wiſe King to confeſſe, and put it upon record, that he had done the moſt fooliſhly of all other men. And for this obtaining mercy, the word וּאֵכַל before going, he prevailed, ſheweth it. They that take another man called Agur to be here meant, ſay that he ſpake thus in regard of the little knowledge, that is in any man in compariſon of omniſcience, there being far more things both humane and naturall unknowne unto us then knowne, but if we come to ſpeak of divine things, wonderfull is our ignorance. But for ſo much as none of the Prophets ever ſpake thus to detract from himſelfe, but rather to magnifie his Miniſtry, that others might not deſpiſe, but reverence it, as Eſay, who ſaith God, hath given me the tongue of the learned, and the Apoſtle Paul ſaith, that for languages he ſpake more then they all, and derided thoſe that counted him fooliſh; I cannot ſide at all to this, that Agur a new Prophet riſing up after Salomon, ſhould begin his Propheſie in this manner, but take it to be clear, that this is ſpoken by Salomon, as hath beene before ſaid, in humble penitency after his fall. 1 Sam. 12.

Moreover it is to be noted, that he ſaith, that he had not the underſtanding of a man in him, hereby making it plaine, that he meant not, that he was void of knowledge in reſpect of myſticall and hidden things, to the knowledge of which no man attaineth in this life. And whereas New Tranſlation, and Vulgar Latine goe thus, and I know not the knowledge of the Saints; the Hebrew is without a negative, and therefore plainly denoteth one, that although he attained not to knowledge of other men, that is, by ſtudy and labour, yet by inſpiration he had beene filled even with the beſt knowledge, which he ſpeaketh to aggravate his ſinne, that having received ſo extraordinary a meaſure of ſanctified knowledge, he ſhould ſo greatly degenerate into bruitiſh fooliſhneſſe, as he had done. If the other reading be followed, in two words yet there needs correction, 1. For er is to be put nor. 2. For holy, holy ones, for the word is a plurall, and may not unaptly be referred to that which the next verſe ſpeaketh of, touching God and his Almighty power, and his Son, whereupon ſome gather that this confeſſion of his ignorance is made by way of preparative thereunto, and ſo might well be made by any Prophet, the premiſes conſidered, that he ſaid there, that he had not the underſtanding of a man in him; this cannot hold. And it makes the authority of that which is here ſaid to hold it, to have come from one Agur, for ſo much as no mention was ever made elſewhere of ſuch a man, neither doth any man know who he was, whereas all other Prophets were knowne to the people of God, and many of them by their Fathers, their Countries, and the time wherein they lived.

Who hath aſcended up into heaven, or deſcended? who hath gathered the wind in his fiſt, or bound the waters in a garment? who hath eſtabliſhed all the ends of the earth? what is his name, or his Sonnes name? After Salomons humbling himſelfe under the name of Agur, or gatherer together, now follow the profound Riddles and ſentences by him gathered together in this Chapter, wherein being to ſpeak of many wonderfull things, as verſe 18, 19 &c. he here beginneth with the moſt wonderfull of all others. The Rabbins to elude this place, which is ſo plaine for the Sonne of God, ſay, that it is ſpoken of Moſes, who did, as it were goe up to heaven, when he went up to God in Mount Sinai, and then deſcended againe, and came downe to the people; and containe the wind in his fiſt, when by the rod that he held in his hand, and ſtretched it out in the aire, he brought an huge multitude of locuſts upon Egypt by an Eaſt-wind, and ridded the land of them againe by a Weſt; and bound the waters up as in a garment, when he made them gather together into heaps both in the Red-ſea and Jordan on either ſide of the way, that Iſrael was to goe. And laſtly, he ſtirred up all the ends of the earth, when by his miracles he amazed them all ſo every where, that they ſtood in feare of him. But to let this paſſe as a deviliſh device to blinde-fold the Evangelicall truth, it is certaine, that the right reſolution of this Riddle is, That God and his Sonne Verſ. 4. Rabbini.

Sonne Jeſus Chriſt, is he that is here meant: For the like is here ſpoken plainly of God in ſundry other places, but no where of any mortall man; ſo that herein is a Propheſie, for which the words of Agur are ſo called, verſe 1. And it is a Propheſie of the greateſt myſtery, that is, viz. of the incarnation and miracles of the Sonne of God; for he is ſaid to have deſcended, that he might aſcend into heaven; of himſelfe alſo he ſaith to Nicodemus, Who is he that deſcended, but the ſame that aſcended? even the Sonne of man which is in heaven; and he had the winds as it were in his fiſt, when he held them from blowing upon the Sea, which was before tempeſtuous, but then followed a great calme; and he bound the waters in a garment, when he went upon them and ſunke not; and he eſtabliſhed the ends of the earth, when he ſent out the Apoſtles into all parts to preach the Goſpel, whereby all the ends of the earth were converted and ſtabliſhed in the truth, that were before fluctuating, and uncertainly carried after many groſſe errours, as they were blindly lead in all places.

Col. 3. 3. Rom. 6.

Act. 1. 8.

Beda followeth Auguſtine, but yet he partly expoundeth the words literally of God, and ſo doe Expoſitors generally. To God the Father and Sonne doe all the things here ſpoken agree implying their unity, coequality in power and greatneſſe, and coeternity; for which in fine he addeth, What is his name, and his Sonnes name? his name that doth theſe wonderfull things, and his Sonnes name that doth the ſame; for as God the Father is ſaid to have created all, ſo all things were made by God the Son, he is the Wiſdome that was with him from Eternity, whereby Heaven and Earth, and all things were made. And therefore it is a received maxime, All the workes of the Trinity without, are undivided. God is ſaid to have aſcended up to heaven, when by the power of his word he made the heavens, and to deſcend when he made all things here below; for otherwiſe he being infinite and filling all places at once, neither aſcendeth, nor deſcendeth by locall motion. He alſo is ſaid to deſcend, when he came downe upon Sinai, and upon the Tabernacle, and Temple built by Salomon, when he gave a viſible ſigne of his preſence there, and he aſcended, and went away from thence againe, when, as he ſhewed to Ezekiel his glory before the Temple to be deſtroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. Who hath gathered the wind in his fiſt? Heb. in ſecret or an hidden place, rendred therfore by ſome in his boſome, for ſo God doth by the wind, letting it out to blow when he pleaſeth, and holding it in, for which our Lord ſaith, The wind bloweth where it liſteth, thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it cometh, &c. becauſe it is hidden till it bloweth; and there is the like reaſon of the Spirit, which is myſtically to be underſtood here, or elſe we have not the whole Trinity here ſet forth; and aptly is the Spirit ſaid to be in ſecret, or in his boſome, by him underſtanding; both God the Father, and the Sonne, becauſe he proceedeth from them both: and this of the Spirit is ſo great a myſtery, as of the Incarnation of the Sonne of God, that the wiſe men of this world know it not, but count it a monſter in nature, that one ſhould be three, and three one, the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt. And therefore our Lord having ſpoken of the wind ſo occult, as that no man knoweth whence it cometh, addeth, ſo is the Spirit of God: And Chriſt ſhewed the Spirit to be in his boſome, when breathing upon his Diſciples, he ſaid, Receive the Holy Ghoſt. Who hath bound up the water in a garment? that is, as in ſwadling cloaths, ſetting bounds thereunto round about, that it cannot ſwell out any further, but the huge Ocean is kept in a round forme, as a childe by ſwadling cloaths, that all the members thereof may grow right and ſtreight, and be well formed.

Ioh. 20. 22.

Laſtly, Who ſtabliſheth the ends of the earth? that is, ſetteth it firme and unmoveable moveable in the very extreames thereof, the Iſlands, which are very many, and compaſſed on every ſide with the Sea, and therefore it is the more wonderfull that they ſhould ſtand ſo ſure, for which cauſe they are here ſingularly ſpoken of; although the firme ſtanding of the whole continent be alſo a great wonder, for ſo much as it is founded upon the waters, and ſetled upon the flouds, as is elſewhere ſaid, hanging like a ball in the midſt of the water, and aire compaſſing it round, and ſupported by nothing, but the meer word and power of God, holding it to the center, and making all the weighty and moſt heavy parts thereof to be carried thither downward. What ish is name? and what is his Sons name? for they are both one, and therefore tell the name of one, & tel alſo the name of the other; but here by name is not ſo much meant the name יהוה, called by the Hebrewes, nomen tetragrammaton & ineffabile, the foure lettered, and unſpeakable name, which yet I have elſewhere ſhewed, no man knoweth how to pronounce aright; for although we know not how to pronounce it, yet we know the letters thereof, as they were ſet down at the firſt without pricks. But here by name is meant God himſelf, tell what he is, or his Son, for no man can fully do this; for which he ſaith to Manoah, Why doſt thou inquire after my name? which is Wonderfull; and of his Son it is ſaid, they ſhall call his name Wonderfull, the Mighty God, &c. we know this here but in part, we ſhall afterwards know as we are knowne; for which cauſe a wiſe man being once demanded by a King, What God was? anſwered, That he muſt have a dayes liberty to anſwer to this queſtion, and after a day granted, he deſired two more, and then foure, finally profeſſing, that the longer he conſidered, the further he was from knowing this, or being able to anſwer that queſtion. Eſa. 9 6. 1 Cor. 13.

Now if Salomon ſpake theſe words, and that after this groſſe ſinning, as I before ſhewed it to be moſt probable, then it appeareth according to the laſt word of verſe 1. and I prevailed, ואכל, that God reſtored him againe upon his humiliation, and gave him his ſpirit againe in as great meaſure as before, making him thus admirably to propheſie of moſt myſticall things to come, as he doth here, and then it will follow that he was ſaved.

Every word of God is pure, he is a ſhield to them that put their truſt in him. Verſ. 5. After that famous propheſie of the Sonne of God, the ſubſtantial Word of the Father, and eternall and uncreated, now he paſſeth on to ſpeake of the outward created word, as hath beene uſuall with him before, from Wiſdome uncreated, to paſſe on to created wiſdome, or from the wiſdome, which is a grace of God created in man, to the uncreated, as Chap. 3. and 8. and 9. And why doth hee ſpeake of this word here? but to bring in the caveat following, Verſ. 6.

Adde not to his words leſt he reprove thee, and thou beeſt found a lyar. Verſ 6. Is God ſo wonderfull in his Workes, as hath beene ſaid? then he is doubtleſſe alſo wonderfull in his Word, that muſt needs be admirably pure, and of great force to defend him as a ſhield, whoſoever holds it up as a ſhield and buckler againſt his ſpirituall enemy, the Devill, as Chriſt did: and therefore it is ſaid, Above all take the ſhield of faith, whereby yee may be able to quench all the fiery darts of the Devill; And faith cometh by hearing the word of God, therefore the Word producing this bleſſed effect, becomes a ſhield, and ſure defence both againſt dangers ſpirituall and temporall. Matth. 4. Eph. 6. Rom. 10.

The word rendred pure here ſignifieth purified in the fire, as the Word is ſaid to be pure as the ſilver tried in the fire ſeven times by David. It is pure, and admits of no mixture, therefore let every man of God take heed, that he mixe therewith nothing of his owne, and the hearer, that he receive nothing but the pure, or ſincere milke of the word, as St. Peter ſpeaketh. The Prophet that ſpeakes any thing of his owne head is in danger to be found a lyar, when that which hee ſaith in Gods name cometh not to paſſe, and this will be a foule checke and reproach unto him; for every word or promiſe of God ſhall ſurely come to paſſe, as it hath hitherto alwayes done, and therefore ſhineth as pure gold or ſilver tryed in the fire, and is magnified by all his ſervants, and truſted in accordingly, and that not in Pſal. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

vaine, as a man ſhelters himſelfe from Sword and Arrow by a ſhield not in vaine.

And this is alſo ſpoken to purchaſe credit to the words in this chapter uttered, or before by Salomon, for he calls this a Propheſie, or Word of God, and therefore he would not have us take it, as any thing coming from himſelfe, but as the pure and unmixed Word of God, to be reverenced by all men. Of not adding to the Word, ſee alſo Deut. 4. and Revel. 22. under a great curſe.

Verſ. 8. Verſ. 9. Remove farre from me vanity, and lyes, give me neither riches, nor poverty, feed me with food convenient for me, leſt I be full, and deny thee. He ſaith, ver. 7. that he would deſire two things of the Lord, meaning two eſpecially, for every one of us needeth to aske many more; but theſe two are propounded as moſt neceſſary for us all, to requeſt of God in our prayers, as whereupon all other good things concerning the ſoule doe depend; and that is, to have vanity and lyes removed farre away from us. That is, pride and worldly pompe, which dammeth up the current of Grace, for God deſpiſeth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble; and hypocriſie, fraud, and diſſimulation, which infatuate men ſo, that they thinke themſelves hereby ſafe from being detected in any wickedneſſe, and are imboldned to goe on herein, againſt all threatnings thundered out againſt their ſinnes, wherein they live ſo covertly. And as a meanes to be kept from theſe two, he prayeth, that God would neither give him riches, nor poverty, leſt being full I deny thee, and ſay, Who is God? He doth not ſimply pray againſt riches, or poverty, for ſome holy men have been, and are rich, as Abraham, Joſeph, David, Joſeph of Arimathea; ſome againe poore, as Lazarus, and Job, that of rich was made poore; and James ſaith, Let the brother of high degree rejoyce, that he is made low, or poore; and Paul ſaith, that he had nothing, yea, Chriſt had not whereupon to lay his head, and being hungry in the Wilderneſſe, wanted bread to eate, whereupon the Devill tempted him, ſaying, If thou beeſt the Son of God, command theſe ſtones to be made bread. But rather then riches ſhould make me proud, and vaine, and to ſay with Pharaoh, Who is God? or Poverty make me ſteale, and lye, and take Gods name in vaine, by forſwearing it, give me neither; make me not very rich, nor very poore, but give me competent meanes to live.

Iam. 4. 6. Deut. 8. 10, 11. Iam. 1. 9. Matth. 4.

Gen. 28. And Jacob going to Padan Aram, prayed, and ſaid, Lord, if thou wilt give me bread to eate, and cloathes to put on; and our Lord biddeth us to pray, Give us this day our daily bread; for riches, working ſo with men as to make them deny God; it is true, in word they doe not, as Pharaoh, or Sennacherib, ſay, Who is the Lord? but all rich and wealthy men, that live, as if they were not ſubject to any controle of Gods Miniſters, but might doe what they luſt, and hereupon take occaſion to live licentiouſly, in chambering, and wantonneſſe, in revelling and pleaſure, nothing but hunting, hawking, carding, dicing, and whoring, ſay Gods Miniſters what they will here againſt; and now pilling, and polling, oppreſſing, impriſoning, killing, and ſlaying, overturning all things in Church and Commonwealth; all ſuch, although they confeſſe God with their mouthes, yet they deny him, and doe in effect ſay with hard-hearted Pharaoh, Who is the Lord? being for theſe their evill practices cenſured, as abominable and diſobedient, and to every good worke reprobate.

Tit. 1. 16.

And although ſome extreamely poore, as Lazarus, will rather ſtarve then ſteale, yet many more will ſteale, and lye, and forſweare it, to the diſhonour of God, and the incurring of his wrath, who hath forbidden ſtealing, and lying, pronouncing them not ſuch as have God, but the Devill to their father that doe ſo. And this prayer Salomon doth not here make ſo much for himſelfe, as to teach us to pray thus, as knowing, that this grace is not to be obtained but by prayer, and ſeeking to God.

Ioh. 8. 34.

Note. But it is hence to be noted, that pride and vanity are ſo great evils, as that a man had better by farre to be without riches, then to have them to be thus tranſported hereby, for now they become not goods, but evils to him, that hath them; according to the ſaying, Bona hujus mundi ſunt bonis bona, malis mala, The goods of this world are good to good men, but evills to evill men; for we are here directed rected rather, then to have them with theſe curſed effects to pray unto God, not to give them unto us, for in ſuch it ſhall be fulfilled which Chriſt ſaith, Woe to you that be rich and full now, and laugh, for ye ſhall waile and weepe. Luke 6. 24, 25.

Againe, although it be ſaid, God hath choſen the poore of this world to be heires of his Kingdome, yet the poore that ſteale, and lye, and deale unjuſtly, as moſt doe, can have no comfort of this, that they are poore, for ſuch are poore, and miſerable, and naked indeed every way, for their ſins lying open to Gods greater Judgements to come, when this fraile life ſhall be ended, becauſe no unrighteous perſons, no theeves ſhall inherite his kingdome, but be ſhut out with doggs, and witches, and all that worke, and make lyes. 1 Cor. 5. 11. Revel. 22. 15.

Accuſe not a ſervant to his Maſter, leſt he curſe thee, and thou beeſt found guilty, Deut. 23. It is commanded, not to deliver a ſervant to his Maſter, when he flyeth unto thee, It is to be underſtood of a ſervant, that hath an unreaſonable and cruell Maſter, whoſe harſh uſage of him the poore ſervant is not able to beare; according to this precept moſt probably this is ſpoken, diſcover him not to his Maſter, when thou knoweſt that meere neceſſity hath inforced him thus to flye unto thee to ſave his life, and thou findeſt him to be a good ſervant, and worthy to be well uſed and preſerved. Verſ. 10.

The Septuagint hath it expreſly, according to that precept, Deliver not a ſervant into the hands of his Maſter; the Rabbins underſtand it of an Heathen, a ſervant now become a Proſelite, and imbracing the Iſraelites religion, who they thought ſhould hereupon goe free; but this is only their conjecture, and improbable; for a ſervant that is called, being a ſervant, is ſo to continue, unleſſe he can obtaine his freedome by the conſent of his Maſter, for Maſters have ſometimes given their ſervants their freedome upon their good deſerts. Rabbini. 1 Cor. 7. 20. 23, 24.

Some will not have ſervants here properly underſtood, but poore men, who are as inferiour to the rich, as ſervants to their Maſters, taking it to be meant, that we ſhould not ſtirre up a rich man againſt a poore man, who is ready enough through his pride and covetouſneſſe to oppreſſe him upon any little occaſion. And they underſtand the next words, Leſt he curſe thee, leſt he alſo recriminate thee, and lay as great evils to thy charge before the Judge, and ſo thou comeſt to ruine; therefore the vulgar hath it, Ne maledicat tibi & corruas, and the word אשמתה ſignifieth to be deſolate as well as to be a ſinner, and guilty hereof; for few men live ſo innocently, but ſomething by thoſe that obſerve them, may be found againſt them, of which they may be accuſed alſo, and being thus found guilty come to ruine. The very meaning of the words is, doe not maliciouſly accuſe the meaneſt perſon, to him that hath power over him, and will to doe him hurt; for who ſo doth thus, ſhall but ſtir him up to pay him in his owne coyne, by accuſing him likewiſe to his ſuperiours, and then he ſhall get nothing by ſo doing, but ſhame and puniſhment to himſelfe. Or with Junius, we may underſtand curſing, as it is ſaid elſewhere, He that hoordeth up his corne, the poore ſhall curſe him; and this curſing ſhall not be vaine, but come upon him; ſo the curſing of the meaneſt ſervant, upon him that is ſo malicious, as hath been ſaid; for when we are bound upon occaſion of great crimes, we may accuſe others; but in caſes that be not of ſo great concernment, we ought rather for things done, or ſpoken amiſſe, to admoniſh them privately, according to the direction, Mat. 18. *Lyra. There is a generation that curſeth their father, and doth not bleſſe their mother. vaine, as a man ſhelters himſelfe from Sword and Arrow by a ſhield not in vaine.

And this is alſo ſpoken to purchaſe credit to the words in this chapter uttered, or before by Salomon, for he calls this a Propheſie, or Word of God, and therefore he would not have us take it, as any thing coming from himſelfe, but as the pure and unmixed Word of God, to be reverenced by all men. Of not adding to the Word, ſee alſo Deut. 4. and Revel. 22. under a great curſe.

Verſ. 8. Verſ. 9. Remove farre from me vanity, and lyes, give me neither riches, nor poverty, feed me with food convenient for me, leſt I be full, and deny thee. He ſaith, ver. 7. that he would deſire two things of the Lord, meaning two eſpecially, for every one of us needeth to aske many more; but theſe two are propounded as moſt neceſſary for us all, to requeſt of God in our prayers, as whereupon all other good things concerning the ſoule doe depend; and that is, to have vanity and lyes removed farre away from us, That is, pride and worldly pompe, which dammeth up the current of Grace, for God deſpiſeth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble; and hypocriſie, fraud, and diſſimulation, which infatuate men ſo, that they thinke themſelves hereby ſafe from being detected in any wickedneſſe, and are imboldned to goe on herein, againſt all threatnings thundered out againſt their ſinnes, wherein they live ſo covertly. And as a meanes to be kept from theſe two, he prayeth, that God would neither give him riches, nor poverty, leſt being full I deny thee, and ſay, Who is God? He doth not ſimply pray againſt riches, or poverty, for ſome holy men have been, and are rich, as Abraham, Joſeph, David, Joſeph of Arimathea; ſome againe poore, as Lazarus, and Job, that of rich was made poore; and James ſaith, Let the brother of high degree rejoyce, that he is made low, or poore; and Paul ſaith, that he had nothing, yea, Chriſt had not whereupon to lay his head, and being hungry in the Wilderneſſe, wanted bread to eate, whereupon the Devill tempted him, ſaying, If thou beeſt the Son of God, command theſe ſtones to be made bread. But rather then riches ſhould make me proud, and vaine, and to ſay with Pharaoh, Who is God? or Poverty make me ſteale, and lye, and take Gods name in vaine, by forſwearing it, give me neither; make me not very rich, nor very poore, but give me competent meanes to live.

Gen. 28. And Jacob going to Padan Aram, prayed, and ſaid, Lord, if thou wilt give me bread to eate, and cloathes to put on; and our Lord biddeth us to pray, Give us this day our daily bread; for riches, working ſo with men as to make them deny God; it is true, in word they doe not, as Pharaoh, or Sennacherib, ſay, Who is the Lord? but all rich and wealthy men, that live, as if they were not ſubject to any controle of Gods Miniſters, but might doe what they luſt, and hereupon take occaſion to live licentiouſly, in chambering, and wantonneſſe, in revelling and pleaſure, nothing but hunting, hawking, carding, dicing, and whoring, ſay Gods Miniſters what they will here againſt; and now pilling, and polling, oppreſſing, impriſoning, killing, and ſlaying, overturning all things in Church and Commonwealth; all ſuch, although they confeſſe God with their mouthes, yet they deny him, and doe in effect ſay with hard-hearted Pharaoh, Who is the Lord? being for theſe their evill practices cenſured, as abominable and diſobedient, and to every good worke reprobate.

Tit. 1. 16.

And although ſome extreamely poore, as Lazarus, will rather ſtarve then ſteale, yet many more will ſteale, and lye, and forſweare it, to the diſhonour of God, and the incurring of his wrath, who hath forbidden ſtealing, and lying, pronouncing them not ſuch as have God, but the Devill to their father that doe ſo. And this prayer Salomon doth not here make ſo much for himſelfe, as to teach us to pray thus, as knowing, that this grace is not to be obtained but by prayer, and ſeeking to God.

Verſ. 15. The Horſe-leech hath two daughters, which cry, Give, give; This is a further amplification of the unſatiable deſires of Oppreſſours before ſpoken of, ver. 14. they are ſo given by pilling, and polling of poore people, to get the wealth of this world, that whatſoever riches they have thus attained to, they are not ſatisfied, but ſtill moſt earneſtly deſire more; even as the Horſe-leech, which is ſaid to have two daughters, becauſe the mouth thereof hath two tines like a forke, where-with it ſucketh bloud, till the skin can hold no more. And unto theſe two are added three, yea, foure more, unto which the covetous Oppreſſour is alſo compared.

Verſ. 16. The Grave, the barren Wombe, the Earth not filled with water, and the fire; For the Grave, having many thouſands of dead bodies put into it, is yet ready to receive more; the barren Wombe, that can bring forth no Children, moſt earneſtly deſireth to be filled with this fruit; as Rachel, Give me children, or elſe I dye; the Earth, that is ſandy and dry, which receiveth in flouds of water, and yet is ready to receive more; and the Fire, that never ſayes it is enough, when whole Woods have been hereby devoured, but is ready ſtill to burne, and conſume more.

Pliny. Lib. 32. c. 10 Chryſoſt. Hom. 42. De maledi centia.

But to ſpeake ſomewhat more fully of every one of theſe: Pliny in deſcribing the Horſe-leech ſaith, That it ſucketh bloud by two mouthes, like a Fire-forke; but what two things, and in whom are they repreſented hereby? Chryſoſtome ſaith, That the evill tongue is ſet forth by the Horſe-leech, for of this there are theſe two parts, Detraction, and Calumny; and as the Horſe-leech faſtens not, but upon a corrupted body; ſo the Back-biter, and evill-tongued, liveth, as it were, upon the vices and corruptions of others, it is his delight thus to be ſucking their bloud, as it were, and ſticks to this ſo faſt, that he cannot be pulled off againe.

Bernard in Evang.

Bernard underſtandeth by the Horſe-leech a mans owne will, by her two daughters, Covetouſneſſe, and Ambition, for neither is the minde ſatisfied with having, nor the body with pleaſure, for which theſe two are named, the luſt of the heart; That is, Covetouſneſſe; the luſt of the eyes, That is, ambitious deſire of worldly glory.

Beda.

Beda underſtands the Devill by the Horſe-leech, who is unſatiably deſirous to draw to ſinne, by his two daughters, Luxury, and Philargury; That is, the love of money. But beſides theſe there is another agreeing with that, which I ſaid at the firſt, and thus making it out, Covetouſneſſe is the Horſe-leech, and her two daughters are two wayes of getting worldly goods, Deceit and Violence, and theſe are aptly ſet forth by the Horſe-leeches two mouthes, whereby ſhe ſucketh bloud, a little at once, and leaveth a wound in the party ſucked; for ſo the covetous wretch, ſecretly by fraud, and oppreſſion, dreines away a mans goods, whereby he is wounded, as it were, in his eſtate; and herein worſe then the Horſe-leech, becauſe although that leaveth one bleeding, yet after a while it ſtencheth againe, and the body is made more healthfull, becauſe it is the evill and corrupt bloud, that is ſucked out; but he that is ſucked by the covetous, is many times quite ruined, yea, ſo greedy are ſome of gaine, that as Ahab, to get his poſſeſſions, he will take away his life, and if not by murthering him, yet he ſucketh out his heart bloud, as it were, by getting from him his meanes, whereby life is maintained; and this I take to be the beſt, and it beſt agreeth with that which was ſaid before, ver. 14. of greedy cruell Cormorants, with their ſword-like, and knife-like teeth, whereby

they make the poore to faile from off the earth. Chryſoſtome then was deceived, by the compariſon made betwixt their teeth and ſwords, conceiving, that piercing, and cutting tongues are hereby ſet forth, for he ſpeakes not of tongues, but teeth. And Bernard, and Beda, by taking it to be a new Proverb, abſolute in it ſelfe, without coherence with the former verſe, or theſe following, for which the one applieth it to a mans owne will, the fountaine of all ſinne in generall; whereas ſins are here in particular ſet forth, and made odious, one after another, as hath been already noted; the other goeth quite from the thing intended here, which is not to ſet forth the unſatiableneſſe of the Devill, but of covetous men.

And it is to be noted, that the Horſe-leech, from which the compariſon is taken, is naturally poyſonous, and therefore poyſoneth him, whom it ſucketh, unleſſe it be firſt taken and put into ſweet water, whereby the poyſonous nature thereof is ſo qualified, as it now poyſoneth not, but rids a body of poyſonous humors, and heals it; ſo the oppreſſions and wrongs of the covetous being qualified by grace in ſuch as are wronged, and ſuffer thus, turne to their ſalvation; for ſufferings, ſaith the Apoſtle, worke patience, and patience joy, &c. Thy goods thus dreined from thee, although prejudiciall to thy bodily life, yet if thy minde be the more weaned hereby from the love of the world, and raiſed up to the true treaſure, as things worke together for the beſt unto thee, who haply if thou hadſt not beene thus dreined, mighteſt by theſe goods have beene corrupted, and the life of thy ſoule indangered. Note. Rom. 5.

The Sept. The horſ-leech hath three daughters, dearly beloved, and theſe three are never ſatisfied; and Heb. after הב הב give, give, there is no diſtinction, but it followeth in the ſame verſe undiſtinguiſhed, theſe three are never ſatisfied, which made the ſeventy Interpreters doubtleſſe to render the word שתי two three, becauſe ſometime it is uſed not to ſet forth preciſely two but a few, as the widow of Sarepta ſaid to Eliſha, I gather a few ſtickes, where the ſame word is uſed, therefore to make it anſwer to the next words, theſe three, they render it three, and they are herein followed by Nazianzen; and Nicetas, in Orat. 20. ſaith, that theſe three are Luſt, Covetouſneſſe, and Ambition. And for the different rendring of הב הב beloved, they ſeem to take the word to be one verbum quadratum, which is once uſed for acceptable ſacrifice, whereas indeed it is one doubled, to ſhew earneſtneſſe of deſire, and cometh of יהב give, therefore our reading is to be preferred, and ſo is the rendring of it two, not three, for by the ſame reaſon they might as well have rendred it foure, becauſe it followeth immediately in this verſe alſo, yea, foure never ſay it is enough. The wiſe man thought good to goe on by a gradation beginning with two, and then proceeding to three the next number, then to four; thus by many compariſons, the more fully ſetting forth the foule ſin of greedy devourers of other mens goods without end, firſt likening it to an Horſ-leech with her two bloud-ſucking mouths, and if this will not ſuffice to deterre here from, then to three more, the grave, the barren wombe, and the dry earth: Laſtly, to a fourth, the fire, which in devouring is moſt without end; for that ſhall at the laſt devoure and burne up all things. 1 Kirg. 18. Hoſ. 8. 13.

Touching the foure things more here ſpoken of, the Rabbins expound them of the foure Elements, but very improbably. Some as anſwering to the foure Generations before ſpoken. Verſ. 16.

1. Of thoſe that curſe their parents, for them the grave longeth to take them ſoone away, for as honouring parents bringeth long life, ſo curſing them, ſhortneſſe of life.

2. Of thoſe that be like baſtards, pretending to be genuine children of God, but are a baſtardly brood of hypocrites, bred of the devill, who transformeth himſelfe into an Angell of light, and after him they doe likewiſe; therefore they are likened to a barren wombe, wherein the ſeed of generation takes not effect, it is ſtill deſiring; none more forward in going to hear, Sermon after Sermon, but where is the fruit that cometh hereof? as the barren wombe is a puniſhment for incontinency, many times by their being made childleſſe afterwards, or their being ſoone deprived deprived of their children, for ſuch ſlippes ſhall not take rooting, as Wiſdome

Wiſd. 4. 3 4. ſaith, ſo the hypocrite ſhall not continue in eſtimation, although he may for a time be accounted a zealous Chriſtian; for his latent wickedneſſe ſhall be diſcovered, and then his barrenneſſe in reſpect of good ſhall appeare to his ſhame.

3. Of thoſe that be like the dry earth, that is, vain-glorious perſons, whoſe pride and ambition brings them downe, and then they are made poore like unto ſandy earth, which the raine never ſo watereth, as to make it yeeld increaſe, but it is counted poore heath ground, and deſpicable.

4. Of thoſe that have teeth like ſwords and knives, for ſuch are like fire which devours all things, ſo they devoure all the goods of other men, and yet are not ſatisfied, but ſtill covet more.

Some expound all theſe of the covetous, who are unſatiable like hell, like ſuch a wombe, ſuch earth and fire, as I have ſaid before. The Reader may take them either of theſe wayes, for as being taken this way covetouſneſſe is greatly diſgraced, ſo the other way the foure foreſaid generations, that they may be all abhorred. Yet the Expoſition applying them to covetouſneſſe, is to be preferred, becauſe the covetous mans unſatiableneſſe is notorious, and hereby may be underſtood foure ſorts of them; 1. That gather to hoord it up. 2. To ſpend it upon their luſts. 3. In riotouſneſſe and drinking. 4. In ſtrife and contention.

The eye that mocketh at his father, and deſpiſeth to obey his mother, the Verſ. 17. ravens of the valley ſhall picke it out, and the young Eagles ſhall eat it: Hereby is implyed an untimely death that ſuch ſhall come to, as deſpiſe their parents, they are in danger of taking into evill courſes, and proving robbers, and murtherers, for which they ſhall be hanged up in chaines for thoſe birds of prey to feed upon; and theſe are rather named then any other, becauſe that by an inſtinct of nature they come in great flocks about camps, wherein dead carkaſſes uſe to lye in abundance. And this is threatned to be the puniſhment not onely of violence done to parents, but of the leaſt meaſure of deriſion with the eye, although the tongue ſaith nothing, ſo great a care hath the Lord, that the honour due to parents ſhould be preſerved inviolable, as there is great reaſon, ſeeing Parents are the lively image of God unto their children in reſpect of their being, which they take from them, and of their providing for them, and love and tender care over them, and finally their power and authority. For theſe words, That deſpiſeth the obedience of his mother; the vulgar Latine hath partum matris ſuæ, expounded by ſome thy brother or ſiſter, abſurdly enough; by others the wrinkled old age of thy mother coming the ſooner upon her puerpery, and bearing, and bringing thee forth in ſorrow; but the Hebrew word יקה ſignifieth to heare or obey, and the ſenſe is plaine, he deſpiſeth to obey his mother, as moſt children doe, eſpecially if their father be once dead and gone.

Some, by the Ravens and Eagles will have Devills underſtood, who are aptly ſet forth by Ravens, for their blackneſſe, and both by Ravens, and Eagles for their diligent attendance upon the dead to make a prey of them; for ſo the Devill is ready at hand, when diſobedient and contemptuous children dye, to make a prey
Luke 16. of their ſoules, as he did of Dives immediately after his death. And the Ravens picking out of the eye is mentioned, becauſe it is the property of this foule coming to a dead body firſt to picke out the eyes.

Gregor. Gregory maketh a morall of this, ſaying, That he mocketh at his Father, who derideth any of Gods workes or word, and he deſpiſeth to obey his Mother, that mockes at preaching, and ſleighteth the teaching of his Miniſters, who are his Church, his Spouſe. And this anſwereth well to that which was ſaid before of the firſt Generation, verſe 11. and it is not let paſſe without a particular expreſſe threatning above the other three, becauſe he that ſinneth thus exceedeth in wickedneſſe all the reſt.

Verſ. 18. There be three things too wonderfull for me, yea, foure which I know not, the Verſ. 19. way of an Eagle in the aire, of a Serpent on a rocke, of a Ship on the ſea, and of a young man with a maid. Having ſpoken upon the firſt Generation of diſobedient children, now he further deſcribeth the ſecond of the cloſe hypocrite, that would would ſeeme pure, but in ſecret liveth in the foule ſinne of adultery or fornication. Verſe 12. It is as if he had ſaid, there are three things, that paſſe ſo ſwiftly away, that let a man uſe all the care and diligence that he can, yet he is not able to ſhew them, what is the way of the Eagle flying up into the aire, of a Serpent ſwiftly gliding away upon a rocke, and of a Ship on the ſea, after the paſſing away of either of which, no ſignes are left behinde, whereby it may be ſeene which way they went: But there is a fourth as hard to be found even as one of theſe, and that is, the way of adulterers and adultereſſes, and of all whoremongers, as the next words verſe 20. doe declare.

Such is the way of an adulterous woman, ſhe eateth and wipeth her mouth, and ſaith, I have done none evill. The Vulg. for theſe words a man with a maid, hath a man in youth; Heb. it is בעלמה with a woman hidden, whereby one hidden and kept from companying with man, is commonly underſtood, a Virgin; And therefore this reading is commonly followed but then a woman is to be underſtood that is not known to be corrupted, it is ſo cloſely carried, and ſo ſhee paſſeth ſtill for a Virgin; & I ſee no reaſon why it may not be rendred at large, a woman occult, no mortall eye ſeeing her what ſhe doth with the man, whether ſhe be a maid or married. But as ſecret as they be in their wickedneſſe, let them not think, that for this they are unſeen of God, for he both ſeeth and wil find them out therein, as he did David with Bathſhebah, when he had cunningly deviſed to hide that which he had wickedly done by all the meanes that he could. So likewiſe Potiphars wife that tempted Joſeph, and accuſed him not yeelding to her luſt, was afterwards detected. They that follow the Vulgar ſay, that the way of a man in his youth is thus compared for the uncertainty of his future manners, by reaſon that he is ſo mutable. But the words following ſerving to make it more plaine ſhew, that it cannot be ſo underſtood; for if a man in his youth were meant, why is it immediately added, Such is the way of an adultereſſe, &c? when as according to that reading, it ſhould rather have beene ſaid, Such is the way of a young man, whatſoever he ſeemeth for the preſent to be, yet he ſuddenly and unſeene falleth to evill courſes. Verſ. 20. Note.

To conclude therefore, it is doubtleſſe meant of the adulterers, this foule ſinne is carried on ſo cloſely, that no man by any outward ſigne can know it any more, then the way of an Eagle, a Serpent, or of a Ship upon the Sea.

For three things the earth is diſquieted, and for foure, which it cannot bear: For a ſervant when he reigneth; For a foole filled with meat; For an odious woman when ſhe is married; And an handmaid that is heire to her miſtreſſe. This anſwereth to verſe 13. as ſetting forth divers ſorts of men and women, that are ſo proud, and have ſuch lofty lookes, as is there ſaid. Verſ. 21, 22, 23.

1. The ſervant that reigneth as Lord and King over his fellow ſubjects, ſuch for their pride and covetouſneſſe and tyranny are intolerable, the earth or land, that is, the people of the land cannot beare them, as the common Proverb is, When a beggar is ſet on horſe-backe, he will ride, &c. Men of meane birth and quality, that get the Regall power into their hands, who can indure? and much leſſe if they come to power, more then of a wiſe and good King, to rule arbitrarily according to their owne luſts.

2. The foole that is rich and full, for he deſpiſeth all others, cloaths himſelfe moſt ſumptuouſly, fareth deliciouſly every day, eats and drinkes to ſurfeiting and drunkenneſſe; and having thus pampered his body, like an horſe full fed, he neigheth after his neighbours wife, and all his life is ſpent in gaming, and other ſports and pleaſures.

3 The odious woman that is married, for her pride, and other ill qualities hated of her Husband, as it oft times cometh to paſſe; That is, ſhe who having of her owne voluntary accord married an Husband, either is ſo proud, that ſhe will not be, as a wife, ſubject unto him, but becauſe haply all, or moſt of the wealth was hers, uſurpes authority over him, and is imperious, and if ſhe cannot rule as ſhe would, is diſcontented, and frantick, ſo that neither Husband, nor Family can be quiet by her, whereby his love towards her is turned into hatred; or for her pride, and vanity, puts him to unreaſonable charges, for the decking of her body with every new fashion, and most sumptuous cloathes, and other accommodations beyond her degree, that she may goe forth in greater pompe; or if she maketh not her selfe odious this way, yet she doth it by her levity, and incontinency, or by the contentiousnesse of her spirit, whereby his life is made irksome to him.

4 An hand-maid heire to her Mistris, by her becoming wife to her Master, for such commonly are most insolent, as Hagar was towards Sarah; now if the earth canot beare any of these, let none of them looke to continue long, for, as high lookes as they have, they shall effsoones be brought low enough; they are to the Land wherein they live, as abundance of meat overcharging the stomack, to it, and making it sick, and to spue it out; for even so did the Land of Canaan, not able to beare that wicked generation any longer, spue them out; and therefore let all such feare, repent, and be humbled, that they may escape this great Judgement, which will otherwise come suddenly, and there will then be no remedy. This is also by some Expositors Allegorically interpreted thus:

Note.

The Allegory.

The Servant here spoken of that reigneth, setteth forth the appetite, or sensuall part of a man, and so doth the foole full fed, and the odious Woman, and Hand-maid, heire to her Mistris; or as the Septuagint hath it, expelling her Mistris; for as the reigning and ruling of a servant is intolerable; so the flesh, or concupiscence, which should be a servant to reason, ruling in our mortall bodies, disturbeth, and troubleth the whole man, so as that nothing but ruine by Gods just Judgements, for the sins that we run into, can be expected.

2 The flesh is a foole, and therefore being full fed, and pampered, like unto Beasts full fed, which kick up their heeles, and run away, and are unruly, and mischievous, so is the man that eates and drinkes plentifully, he is prone now to all lusts.

3 It is as an odious wife, contrary and crosse to right reason, so that being yoaked, as by marriage, herewith, by meanes thereof there can be no quiet in the soule.

4 As an Hand-maid expelling her Mistris, and so coming to take possession of her right, which as an inheritance belongs unto her, for this is done when the appetite, or lust overcoming reason, the whole man is now carried hereby, and right reason beareth no sway any more.

Others expound it thus; A servant reigning is a King, that is led more by his corrupt will, then by Law, in governing the Common-wealth; for in this case the servant reigneth, and the State is greatly disquieted.

A Foole full fed is a foolish King, who is rich, and full, but wants the discretion and judgement that should be in a King, and by this meanes troubleth the State intolerably.

3 An odious woman married, is the Common-wealth joyned, as it were, to a King in marriage, but makes her selfe odious to him, because she is discontented with his Government, and seekes to be delivered herefrom, as affecting rather another.

4 An Hand-maid coming to be heire, by the expulsion of her Mistris, is that part of the Common-wealth which is worst, consisting of evill men, is rather harkened to by the King, and he is swayed by them, and neglecteth the better part, consisting of such as are more wise and godly; let this place be drawne to either of these, being understood one way or another it is very usefull, as a most apt similitude, more effectually to set forth these things, that neither we may lay the reines loose to our inordinate affections to be carried hereby against the dictate of right reason, for so we shall indanger our soules; neither any King may preferre his will before the setled Lawes of the Kingdome, nor be foolish, but wise, or else be governed by wise Counsell; nor the Common-wealth distaste their King, or grow to an hatred of him; nor lastly, the King, Rehoboam like, forsaking the ancient and wise, hearken to the worst, and most vaine, who indeed love neither the Common-wealth, nor him, but in all things seeke their owne ends, although it tend to his utter ruine and overthrow.

Antes

Ants a people not ſtrong, yet they prepare their meat in ſummer; the Conies feeble folkes, yet make their houſes in the rocks; the Locuſts have no King, yet goe forth by bands; the Spider takes hold with her hands, and is in Kings Palaces. Salomon, who calleth himſelfe Agur, having ſet forth divers vices by ſimilitudes, to make them odious to us all; now on the contrary ſide, commendeth divers vertues to us, in naming ſome creatures, which are worthy to be taken notice of for their ſingularity, each one in its kinde. The Ant for labour, and induſtry, and providence, doing all in due ſeaſon, of which ſee before Chap. 6. 6. the Cony, which becauſe it is weake, burroweth in a Rocke, that there ſhee may be ſafe; the Locuſts alſo, which becauſe, if they ſhould come ſingly, were eaſily deſtroyed, goe forth, as it were, in bands like an Army, and ſo become irreſiſtible, as was ſeene in Egypt, they agree and unite their forces together, and yet have no Leader. Verſ. 25, 26, 27, 28.

Laſtly, the Spider being as weake as any, yet by ſpinning, makes her a web curiouſly wrought to dwell in, and ſo placeth her ſelfe by her art in an houſe like a Kings Palace.

Now the ſcope of all this is to teach, that men much more, whom God hath indued with reaſon, ſhould uſe their hands and limbs to labour, and their wits to build them houſes, that is, to get eſtates to live upon, and not plead infirmity of body, as weakneſſe of underſtanding, for none are ſo infirme as theſe here mentioned, nor more deſtitute of wit and underſtanding. Thus Junius, who alſo for Conies, rendreth it Mures montani, Mice of the mountains, but the word is, שפנים Conies, who, as we all know, may moſt properly be ſaid to make their houſes in a rock, for their Burrowes are in the ſtonieſt ground, the Vulgar rendring it the little Hare or Leverit, was much miſtaken; for it is not the property of Hares to make them houſes in the ground. Here are foure vertues commended unto us in theſe foure little creatures. Junius.

1. Labour, and labouring in ſeaſon, as the Ant doth unwearіably in the Summer, whilſt the Graine is in the field to be gotten, and the Winter is not come to hinder her, that ſhe may have then wherewithall to live, and ſhe laboureth to the uttermoſt of her power, carrying a thing greater then her ſelf. So ought we to do both for our ſuſtenance in this life, and to have food and a treaſure in the life to come. It is not enough, thou poore man, who haſt nothing but thy limbs to live upon, to labour a little, but thou muſt take great paines for thy living, for which it was ſaid to Adam, In the ſweat of thy browes thou ſhalt eat thy bread, and that not onely in youth, but in old age, as long as life laſteth, for which it is added, untill thou returneſt to the duſt, from whence thou wert taken; and as thou muſt labour, ſo thou muſt be provident to lay up what thou canſt ſpare of thy gettings againſt the winter of ſickneſſe, or more decrepit age, and the maintenance of thy family, which who ſo provideth not for, Hath denyed the faith, and is worſe then an Infidell: It is no ſaying for thee, I am weake and weary, and cannot worke ſo much, for God hath made the weakeſt of creatures ſo, the Ant that ſhee can worke enough to get her ſuſtenance, and to lay up for afterwards. And for the food of a better life, we are taught alſo by the Ant to labour much, and to take time whilſt time ſerveth, becauſe that is more excellent and neceſſary then the bodily food, and all treaſures here; and if thou wouldeſt know what the time for this labour is, the Apoſtle reſolveth it, ſaying, Now is the day of ſalvation, now is the acceptable yeare of the Lord; it is τὸ νῦν to day, this houre, not to morrow, or an houre hence; ſo likewiſe Heb. 3 7. Neither is any man to ſay, I am too weak to do any thing towards this, it is God that doth all as he pleaſeth, for it is both given in charge to thee, Worke out thy ſalvation with feare and trembling, and in ſo doing, it is ſaid, thou ſhalt make thine election ſure; thou art to worke then, and as for being able, ſet to the work, and feare not, but he who hath bidden worke, in this worke, will make thee able, yea he immediately promiſeth it, ſaying, It is God that worketh the will and the deed of his owne good pleaſure. Matth. 5. 18. Joh. 6. 27. Note. Gen. 3. 1 Tim. 5. 8. Phil. 2. 12. 2 Pet. 1. 10. Phil. 2. 13.

For the Conies, of them we are to learne to ſtrengthen our ſelves what we can, that we be not wronged by the mighty, or circumvented by the crafty, getting us therefore a guard of the beſt helpes we can about us, of ſtrong places when we are in danger by enemies, and men, horſes, and munition, taking counſell of thoſe that be wiſe, and getting us friends, who may ſtand us inſtead in other caſes of danger to our goods or ſtate, and ſeeking to the skilfull Phyſitian in caſe of ſickneſſe, firſt craving a bleſſing of the Almighty.

Of the Locuſts we are to learne to live in love and unity, whereby we may bee made the ſtronger againſt our common enemies, and be aſhamed, ſeeing they who have no Leader, by whom they may be kept together in unity, yet combine thus cloſely in ſo great multitudes for their owne better preſervation, that weſhould not be ſo divided as we are, but be kept together in more unity by Rulers and Governours by Gods providence ſet over us.

And of the Spider we are to learne to be our Crafts-maſters in any Science, and Profeſſion, that we are of, knowing that they who are, be in the way of preferment to Kings Palaces, as was partly touched before, where he ſaith, that the diligent and wiſe ſhall ſtand before Kings.

And as we are to learne theſe things of theſe little creatures for the body; ſo likewiſe for the ſoule, of the Coney, to burrow in the Rocke Chriſt Jeſus, as it were, which is, when by faith we are ingrafted into him, as into the true olive Tree; and according to the word here uſed, we are elſewhere bidden to hide us in the holes of the rocke, and to make our ſelves as ſtrong as we can againſt our ſpirituall enemies, by taking to us the whole Armour of God, ſet forth Epheſ. 6.12.

Of the Locuſts, to joyn together, and march together, by thinking and ſpeaking the ſame things, leſt by diviſion into divers ſects, by holding ſome one opinion, and ſome another in matters of Religion we make our Religion baſe and contemptible, thus ſcandalizing many, and making them to flye from us to our adverſaries the Papiſts, and hindering thoſe that are without from coming in, and cauſing ſuch as be within to be meer Idols and Pictures of Chriſtians, inſtead of Chriſtians reformed, and thus all true piety to vaniſh.

And of the Spider, to be expert in our Chriſtian profeſſion, Miniſters being all as skilfull Maſter-builders, and all Chriſtians intelligent in the things of God, by their teaching, as they, that are brought up in any Trade under skilfull Maſters, and doing the workes of Chriſtians accurately and exactly, and not to halves, or ſo as to be aſhamed thereof.

Verſ. 29, 30. 31. There are three things which be comely in their goings, yea foure; A Lion, which is ſtrongeſt amongſt the beaſts, and turneth not away for any; A Greyhound, and an He-goat, and a King, againſt whom there is no riſing. Junius for a Greyhound hath an horſe with his loynes girt. The Vulg. Latine, a cocke his loynes girt. Heb. זרזיר girt up. Now becauſe the Greyhound is girt up by nature, and the horſes being ſadled and prepared to the battell, it is thus diverſly rendred; but why it ſhould be a cocke, I know not: I hold with Junius, that an horſe is meant, which is ſtout and full of courage, and feareth not the ſounding of the Trumpet, or ratling of ſpeares, but goeth on couragiouſly in the midſt of deadly dangers; for although the Greyhound is ſo made, that his loynes be girt up, yet he is not a creature ſo fit to repreſent courage, the word alſo ſignifieth Pardus a Leopard.

Now the ſcope of this place is, as before in mentioning little weake creatures but very wiſe, to commend their wiſdome to us in doing likewiſe, ſo in nominating theſe, to commend unto us courage and conſtancy in that which is good.

Epheſ. 6. Touching the Lion, he had ſaid before, That the righteous is bold as a Lion; of having our loynes girt about with the girdle of verity the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; and of the wrath of a King, he ſaid, that it was as the roaring of a Lion: only the Goats undaunted courage to goe before the flocke without feare, climing up the craggy hills is not elſewhere ſpoken of, yet it is a fit Emblem of audacity, and undaunted courage alſo.

Lavater. Lavater agreeing to this of courage and conſtancy here commended, ſaith, that by ſome, by theſe foure, the foure Monarchies of the world are ſet forth, the Aſſyrian by a Lion, the Perſian by a Leopard, or Greyhound, for his velocity in overrunning the Babylonian Kingdome, the Grecian, of Alexander, by a Goat, for the great ſtrength of his hornes, and by a King, againſt whom none riſeth up, the Roman, becauſe after him there comes none other, that prevaileth. Some alſo, hee ſaith, underſtand the Providence of God, which is irreſiſtible. But although Daniel by foure beaſts ſetteth forth the foure Monarchies, yet I ſee not, how that ſhould have any place here, where ſuch vertues are commended to us all, as are moſt neceſſary for us, courage and conſtancy, in fighting againſt ſinne and errour, not fearing any oppugnors; for our life is a continuall warfare, and we are ſouldiers of Chriſt, and there be fleſhly luſts that fight againſt the ſoul; and it is a comely thing in us in this fight to behave our ſelves valiantly, as the Lion, or couragious Horſe, or He-goat, whoſe ſtout fighting is implied in Daniel, ſetting forth Alexander by a Goat, and as a King with his mighty Army about him ſo ſubduing all Rebels, that none dare riſe up againſt him; but to give ground, or flye, or to be overcome, and brought under, is ſhamefull; So to yeeld to perſecutors, and for fear to go from the truth, whether they be heathen or heretical, or to be overcome by our luſts, over which we are by Chriſt made Kings to keepe them under, and Prieſts to ſacrifice them by killing them, which is done when we mortifie our members upon earth, that is, turne from our ſinnes.

Rev. 1.6. Col. 3.5.

Some underſtand all, that is here ſaid, of a King, if he be valiant and couragious as a Lion, expedite and ſwift, as one girt, milde, as an He-goat, that leads the flocke, and is noted to be the mildeſt of all the flocke, then he ſhall be a King, againſt whom none dare to riſe.

Laſtly, ſome hold the foure Cardinall vertues to be here ſet forth, Fortitude in a Lion, Temperance in the girt up, Wiſdome in the Goat, becauſe he wiſely leadeth the flocke, and Juſtice in a King, whom for his juſt proceedings, none can riſe againſt, but hereby his Throne is eſtabliſhed to him and his poſterity.

There is a good uſe to be made of all theſe, and therefore I reject none of them, but leave them all to be conſidered, and inſtructions hereupon to be raiſed more fully.

Verſ. 32.

If thou haſt done fooliſhly in lifting up thy ſelfe, or haſt thought evill, lay thy hand upon thy mouth; The Vulg. There is that hath appeared fooliſh after that he hath beene lifted up on high, but if he had underſtood, he would have put his hand to his mouth. But this is altogether diſagreeing from the Hebrew, for the word אם if, is left in, and the word ſignifying lifting up is in hithpael, and therefore ſignifyeth not being lifted up, but lifting up a mans ſelfe. The words doe plainly cohere with thoſe that went before, verſe 31, and 30. wherein foure things are commended for their comely going; now leſt any man ſhould thinke ſtateline ſſe of gate to be herein commended, and carrying an higher ſaile in pride and pompe then is meet, he oppoſeth here-againſt this admonition, If thou haſt done ſo, or thought to do ſo, for the word is not thought evill, but onely haſt thought, lay thy hand upon thy mouth, utter not this thy thought, but repent of it. There is then a decent carriage of a mans ſelfe which is commendable, according to his degree and quality; but for a man in high place to expreſſe great pride in his carriage and behaviour, is fooliſhneſſe, and not to be proceeded in any further, or if a man hath thought or ſpoken vauntingly.

Verſ. 33.

For as creame being churned is turned into butter, and the noſe being wrung bleedeth, ſo preſſing of anger draweth out ſtrife; that is, the inſolent carriage of one man towards another, that is offended with him, provoketh him the more, ſo that he cannot beare it, but ſtriketh, and ſometimes woundeth and fetcheth blood from him, who thus inſulteth over him: Therefore let us carry our ſelves decently, and as it becometh Chriſtians, indued with all manner of vertue, as was before ſaid, and not inſolently like fooles, and contemptuous perſons upon all occaſions.

Note.

CHAP. XXXI.

THe Propheſie of King Lemuel, the words that his mother taught him.

Verſ. 1. The name Lemuel, doth not much differ from Ithiel, Chap. 30.1. for Lemuel ſignifieth God with him, and Ithiel God with me. Now Salomon might well be called Lemuel, according to the ſignification of the word, becauſe God was extraordinarily with him, as his Hiſtory doth declare; for their conjecture who ſay, that Lemuel is the ſame name with Salomon, onely ש is deducted in the beginning of the word, and אל added at the end, I thinke it not worth the naming, it is ſo farre fetched. It is called a Propheſie, as alſo that Chap. 30.1. is ſaid to be, not that Bathſhebah his mother, from whom he had it, was inſpired, and made a Propheteſſe; but for the Divine doctrine herein contained, as in Propheſies of holy men, and account, wherein her ſonne Salomon had her Precepts, even as if they had beene Propheſies, eſpecially ſeeing now by experience after his foule falling, of what good uſe this might have been unto him, if he had diligently taken heed hereunto, even as to a Propheſie; for it is moſt probable, that this Chapter was written by Salomon after his fall, he riſing againe by repentance, and to aggravate his ſinne, he here publiſheth the effectuall meanes which he had from his mother, to make him take heed of being infatuated, and falling by wine and women, as he had done; ſo that hereby his repentance is further intimated, her commendation in admoniſhing him ſo well and divinely, being his diſpraiſe and ſhame, which he tooke to himſelfe, for his not following her Precepts.

Something was before intimated touching his mothers inſtructing him, Chap. 4.3.4. but now her inſtructions are ſet downe more at large. And it is not to be doubted, but that ſhe gave him theſe inſtructions in the time of his minority, becauſe he ſpeakes Chap. 4. of his mothers teaching him, when he was young and tender, although the Rabbins hold, that this was done after his fall, or when ſhe ſaw him now declining. And her example ſhould be the imitation of other Queens and Ladies, and of all good mothers, to ſpeake betimes likewiſe to inſtill Note. ſome good into their children, for although they may happily neglect them for a time, yet they may come to their mindes againe afterwards, as this did to Salomons to make them aſhamed, and repent of their doing ſo contrary to their Precepts.

This Chapter then containeth altogether the words of Queene Bathſhebah, but penned by Salomon for an everlaſting remembrance of what vices ſhe gave him warning againſt, and what inſtructions ſhe gave him about taking a wife, that both other mothers might learne to charge their ſonnes likewiſe, and ſonnes may lay all theſe things to heart, as coming from the Spirit of God, for which they are called a Propheſie, and that of King Lemuel, to purchaſe the more authority to them, as to other parts of this Booke.

Verſ. 2. What my ſonne! what the ſonne of my wombe, and ſonne of my vowes! This is an elleipticall ſpeech to be thus ſupplyed; What ſhall I deſire of thee above all things in this world, when thou ſitteſt in the Throne of thy Father? verily there is nothing that I deſire in compariſon of the things here following, viz. That thou give not thy ſtrength to women, verſe 3. &c. for her repeating of the word, My ſonne, three times, What my ſonne! Heb. בר dearly beloved ſonne, whom I love and tender above all others, or becauſe ברה ſignifieth to cleanſe, my holy and ſanctified ſonne, whom God hath declared ſo ſoone as thou wert borne, to bee ſuch, calling thee Jedidah. 2. What the ſonne of my wombe! in the bearing and bringing forth of whom, I have had much paine and ſorow. 3. What the ſonne of my vowes! for whom I have often prayed, and that being given me, thou mighteſt live, and be an happy inſtrument of great glory to God, and of good to this Kingdome. And in every one of theſe here is great force to perſwade.

1. Thou art my Sonne, and I thy Mother dearly loving thee, thou oughteſt then in conſcience for this to hearken to my mother-like and good counſell; yea, thou thou art my Sonne, touching whom I have heard from the Divine Oracle, a thing moſt rare, that thou art Jedidah; if then thou loveſt God again, who hath expreſſed ſo great love towards thee, hear my precepts, and obey them, as piety, which is hereby intimated to be in thee, bindeth thee.

2. The Sonne of my wombe: I have ſuffered great paines for thee, doe then at my requiring it of thee, as here followeth.

3. The Sonne of my vowes: make me a joyfull mother by ſeeing thee take this courſe, and ſo my prayers to the Lord for thee granted.

Give not thy ſtrength to women, nor thy wayes to that which deſtroyeth Kings. This is the firſt thing required at his hands, and at the hands of every King, yea, of every man that would not periſh, or be deſtroyed, as here followeth, to take heed of Fornication, and all incontinency, for this is a thing that will deſtroy thee both body and ſoule for ever, as hath been often taught before, eſpecially Chap. 7. Verſ. 3.

Thus Junius and Lavater, ſaith Munſter, underſtand the whole verſe, expounding all of fleſhly luſts, and walking in the wayes thereof, which is enough to deſtroy not onely meaner perſons, but alſo Kings. But he diſtinguiſhing the laſt words from the former, ſaith, it is meant of wayes of deſtroying Kings, that is, either Rulers of Cities under him, by picking quarrels unjuſtly againſt them, and hereupon putting them out of their places, or taking away their lives; or other Kings of other Nations making warre upon them without cauſe: yet he ſaith, ſome underſtand the words thus, walke not in the wayes to deſtroy Kings, that is, in any evill wayes, whereby Kings come to ruine. The Vulg. for wayes hath riches, expounded by ſuch as follow it, although thou haſt great riches, whereby to gather Armies and to invade, and deſtroy other Kings, yet uſe them not this way; and the word ſignifieth wayes, whereby are meant any other evill wayes, whereby Kings overthrow themſelves, as diſſolute living, injuſtice, and wrong, prodigality, and exacting upon their ſubjects to maintaine it, or to ſatisfie their covetouſneſſe; and therefore I reſt in this, as moſt probable; and ſo here is a charge firſt againſt fleſhly luſts, and being carried hereby to Fornication or Adultery, or to take many wives, contrary to Deut. 17. 2. againſt all other vicious wayes, which make Kings odious, and ſo in danger to be deſtroyed. Junius. Lavater.

It is not for Kings (O Lemuel) it is not for Kings to drinke wine, or ſtrong drinke. Having given a charge againſt all wayes that are deſtructive to Kings, now this wiſe Mother Queene, comes in particular to ſhew further another way, wherein if Kings goe, it tendeth to their deſtruction, viz. profuſe drinking of wine and ſtrong drinke, to the intoxicating of the braine, which it greatly concerneth them alwayes to keepe in good temper, becauſe that otherwiſe they ſhall be in danger of being diſguiſed, and turned from men, and to become bruitiſh, and ſo without underſtanding and judgement, to judge of the cauſes that come before them aright, condemning the righteous, and killing their beſt ſubjects and friends, as Alexander in his drunkenneſſe did Clito his faithfull friend, which coſt him much griefe and ſorrow afterward, but in vaine, becauſe that he could not make him alive againe, yea, and hereby he finally killed himſelfe by a violent feaver, into which he fell through exceſſive drinking, and ſo dyed in the midſt of his age. And it is noted of Benhadad, and the two and thirty Kings with him, that they were thus drinking, when they were overcome, and routed by a few men; and Belſhazzar the King of Babylon was thus in his cups, when both he, and his Princes, and City were deſtroyed by the Medes and Perſians; for the perverting of juſtice in drunkenneſſe, Notable was the ſaying of a woman to Philip King of Macedon, who being drunken, gave ſentence againſt her; but ſhe replyed, I appeale to Philip being ſober. Verſ. 4. 1 King. 20. 12. Dan. 5.

Solon made a law, that a Prince being drunken ſhould be puniſhed with death; and Plato ſaith, Drunkenneſſe is more tolerable in any other, then in a Prince, becauſe he overthroweth the Commonwealth committed to his cuſtody, and ſo the Keeper hath need of a keeper; wherefore the Carthaginians had a Law whereby the drinking of wine was altogether forbidden to Princes, and Egyptian Prieſts, ſaith Solon. Plato.

Heckateus. Levit. 10.

ſaith Heckateus, might never drinke any wine, which it may ſeeme, that they learned from that Ordinance amongſt the Iſraelites, that their Prieſts ſhould drink none. And Mahomet that great impoſtor, having beene once drunken, and in his drunkenneſſe killed a man, made a Law, that no Turke ſhould from thenceforth drinke any wine, which they ſay, is obſerved till this day: Yet there is a good uſe of wine doubtleſſe for all ſorts, onely the abuſe by drinking to exceſſe is evill and abominable; but moſt of all in Magiſtrates and Miniſters, as diſabling them to their offices, which be of ſo great concernment, as that the Commonwealth and Church cannot ſtand, if ſuch Magiſtrates and Miniſters bee ſuffered.

Lavater.

Lavater alſo out of the Roman Hiſtory ſaith, that there was ſuch a care had, that women might drinke no wine, which is ſo much againſt the modeſty, and ſobriety requiſite in them, that the uſe of it was altogether unknown to them in Rome:

Note.

and Chriſtian women, eſpecially in their young and childe-bearing time, had need to learne this of the mother of Sampſon, and John the Baptiſt, who were forbidden it, whilſt they were with childe; and through drinking and wine-bibbing of mothers in this time, a like nature is derived to their children, and therefore to abſtaine, conduceth much to the bringing forth of a ſober generation; and to keepe their children from ſuch drinke and wine in their young and tender age, which by ſome over-indulgent parents is greatly neglected to their greater ſorrow afterwards, when as their children being thus brought up get an habit of drinking, not to be left againe, but growing upon them more and more.

Verſ. 5.

Leſt he drinke and forget the Law: Herein reference is had to Deut. 17. where the King is injoyned to read in the booke of the Law continually, that hee may judge according to the ſame; but by drinking of wine, and being drunken, hee becomes forgetfull: for which the Ancients called Bacchus, the God of wine, the ſonne of forgetfulneſſe, and Syracides ſaith, Wine and women take away a wiſe mans heart. Pliny ſaith, Wine darkens the underſtanding, and Seneca, if any drinker of wine ſhall ſay, That he is for this his exceſſive drinking no leſſe wiſe, he may as well ſay, that although he drinkes poyſon, he ſhall not dye; whereas verſe 4. there are two words מלכים and רוזנים Kings and Princes, who are interdicted wine, by the laſt are to be underſtood ſuch perſons, as are next to the King, who have their name from רזה attenuare for their thin and ſubtle braine, but by drinking exceſſively, it is made craſſe and obtuſe; for the words uſed, for Princes אי שכר where ſtrong drinke, it is to be ſupplyed, for Princes to ſay where is ſtrong drinke? ſome thinke אי to be put for אל, not, but if way were to be given to any ſuppoſition, it is rather to be held, that אי is put for אין none, or not; but it is beſt to hold to the word, as it is, where, leſt we yeild to any corruption in the Hebrew Text, which we are by all meanes to maintaine to bee incorrupt in any letter, through Gods great providence over it, when as the Septuagint is ſo various, and in all other Tranſlations there is corruption in many paſſages.

Give ſtrong drinke to him that is ready to periſh, and wine to thoſe that be of heavy heart. Here by ſtrong drinke underſtand hot waters, which are properly to be uſed, in caſe that one is ready to ſwoone and dye; this is therefore ſpoken to teach the right uſe of ſuch waters, which are now by many much abuſed, who, as if Wine or ſtrong Beere were not ſtrong enough for them, get a cuſtome of drinking hot waters; but this falls out to them contrary to the right uſe hereof here preſcribed, which is to be given, when one is ready to dye, in a little quantity, and not to drinke draughts hereof, which burne up the inward parts, and haſten death the ſooner. For wine giving to the heavy hearted, Lavater ſaith, that it hath beene an ancient cuſtome, and ſtill continueth, when a man is condemned to dye, to bring him a cup of wine to drinke to allay his griefe, and ſomewhat to cheare up his ſpirits; and the Pſalmiſt ſaith, God hath given wine to make glad mans heart. But even they that are in a ſad condition, are to take heed of drinking too much, for who ſo doth, inſtead of being cheared up hereby, he is in danger of being made worſe by becoming ſicke through drunkenneſſe, yea, of having wine inſtead of a comfort, to be turned into his bane, by cauſing in him a moſt hot burning Feaver, tormenting and diſtempering the braine, and ſoone killing him. Of wine giving to men condemned to dye, that drinking and being drunken, they might have the leſſe ſenſe of paine, when they are cut off, many Expoſitors ſpeake, and apply that ſaying of the Prophet Amos hereunto, They have drunk the wine of the condemned in the houſe of their gods; but as I have noted upon that place, another thing is there meant. And that of the Pſalmiſt is as ill applyed, Thou haſt made us to drinke of a cup of compunction, and in another place with wine of ſtupifying. It is certaine, that ſuch as are here ſaid to be condemned to dye, or ready to periſh, be the ſame that were ſaid, verſe 5. to bee the ſonnes of the afflicted through the perverting of judgement, that ſuffer injury and wrong by meanes of unjuſt Judges even to the overcoming of their languiſhing ſpirits ſo, that they are now ready to dye, ſtay them by giving them wine or ſtrong drinke liberally to drinke for the time preſent; and then not ſtaying here, open thy mouth for them, as by thy Kingly office thou art bound, that they may be brought out of this danger, as followeth Verſe 8, 9. And thus the ſenſe will be very good, and nothing is here preſcribed but what agreeth with true piety; for as Hippocrates, and other Phyſitians after him ſay, Wine liberally drunke by the ſad and melancholicke, rarely cauſeth drunkenneſſe, but in the merry and ſanguine ſpeedily. But take it the other way, as many doe, as an approbation of the giving of plenty of wine to the condemned to make them drunken, that they may forget their ſorrow, and ſo dye with the leſſe ſenſe of pain, & it is impious; for the man condemned to dye hath a ſoule as well as a body, and therefore to put him into ſuch an humour, when he is ready to dye, that he ſhall be without ſenſe of ſorrow, were to make him ſenſeleſſe of godly ſorrow to ſalvation, and ſo for a little bodily comfort for a moment, to indanger the loſſe of the life of his ſoule, through his impenitent departing out of this life.

Hippocrates.

Some thinke by the wine here bidden to be given to the ſorrowfull, and dying, is meant nothing elſe, but the giving a little wine in way of medicine for neceſſities ſake, holding that this is the onely lawfull uſe of wine, and that it ought not to bee drunke out of this caſe, and that who ſo doth, ſinneth, becauſe Paul preſcribeth to Timothy to drinke a little wine for his ſtomacks ſake, and his often infirmities. So Chryſoſtome, wine is the beſt medicine when it is taken in the meaſure, that is beſt, for wine is given, that we might be delighted, not diſhoneſted, that wee might laugh, and be moderately merry, not to be made ridiculous, that we may be well, and not made ſicke, that we might correct the health of the body, and not overthrow the vertue of the ſoule; for here Paul ſpeaking, as was ſaid before, and this Expoſition I ſee no cauſe to miſlike.

Chryſ. Hom. 1. Hom. 71.

But there is a third, whereby giving wine is referred to that Jerem. 16. where a cup of conſolation is ſpoken of for the dead, Give wine to him that is heavy hearted; that is, who mourneth for his dead wife, or ſonne, or for his mother or father, or childe, as I ſhewed upon that place the manner was to doe; Now although this be one caſe, to which theſe words may be extended alſo, yet more properly they are to be expounded of the unjuſtly condemned, as was ſaid before; and his forgetting his ſorrow, is oppoſed to the Kings or Princes forgetting the Law, which they muſt by no meanes take a courſe to doe, for that were ſhamefull, but to make the grieved to forget his ſorrow commendable.

Open thy mouth for the dumbe in the cauſe of ſuch as are appointed to deſtruction. Judge righteouſly, &c. By the dumbe, ſuch poore wronged perſons are meant, who dare not, or cannot in open Courts ſpeake for themſelves, for ſuch the King ought to ſtand and provide, that unjuſt ſentences given againſt them, bee by no meanes executed, but reverſed, and ſuch Judges diſplaced.

Verſ. 8, 9.

Who ſhall find a vertuous woman? her price is far above pearles, rubies. From hence to the end of this Chapter, the praiſes of a vertuous woman are ſet forth in Verſes beginning each one with a letter of the Hebrew Alphabet in order, as thoſe letters follow one another, and being two and twenty in number, two and twenty twenty as they are, and every verſe conſiſting of equall words, or feet, according to the Hebrew Poetry, as I have alſo noted upon ſome of the Pſalmes, eſpecially the 119. This ſheweth ſome excellent matter to be in this Song ſet forth, worthy the taking notice of by every one. Some underſtanding nothing elſe but ſimply the praiſes of a vertuous woman, ſpeake onely ſo of theſe words according to the letter; but ſome by this woman underſtand the Church of Chriſt; Some a vertuous ſoule, and ſome the naturall Mother of Chriſt, the Virgin Mary; of which underſtandings Beda hath written at large *Tom.*7.

The word rendred vertuous is חיל ſignifying fortis, ſtrong or valiant, or ſubſtantiall; and therefore the Vulg. hath it, mulierem fortem; And for farre above rubies, Who ſhall finde a valiant woman afarre off? and her price is from the furtheſt bounds, but the word פנינים ſignifyeth Unions, as pearles are called, and it is not Heb. Who ſhall finde her afarre off, the conjunction and being not placed before the word rendred pearles, but before this word afarre off, juſtifying New Tranſlation, and her price is farre above, or afarre from, that is, leaving pearles, and all precious things far behinde her.

Some hold it alſo to have beene uttered by the Mother of Lemuel, who having before given him warning againſt giving his ſtrength to women, now commendeth to him the joyning of one woman to him in the honourable eſtate of Matrimony, that is a woman of fortitude, that is, of rare womanly vertue, this being named, becauſe it is one of the foure Cardinall vertues, and induſtry in wiſely managing her houſhold affaires, the feare of God being alſo adjoyned, for which ſhe proſecutes theſe at large in the verſes following: And ſo they underſtand all this according to the letter, as being a deſcription of a good wife, and ſhewing the happineſſe of a man, who is joyned in marriage with ſuch a woman.

Others take it to have beene ſpoken by Salomon, himſelfe called Lemuel, upon occaſion of the words of his Mother before going, wherein her great vertue and piety appeared, although ſhe had formerly beene vicious, and that he in a Propheticall Spirit ſpake this of the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt, or of the vertuous ſoule, or of the Virgin Mary, the moſt bleſſed amongſt women, as was before ſaid, whom he ſetteth forth by a ſimilitude of a good Houſe-wife, as is uſuall in Parables, becauſe it is ſaid verſe 1. The Propheſie of King Lemuel. And if it be thus underſtood, that from which this ſimilitude is taken, is firſt to be looked at, as teaching morall things, then the ſpirituall ſenſe extending it higher to myſticall.

Firſt, therefore to ſpeake of a vertuous woman in generall, in ſaying, who ſhall finde? it is intimated, that ſuch a one is very rare, and therefore a man, eſpecially a King, had need have a great care in ſeeking out, and chooſing her, even as the Merchant man being drawn by a deſire of gain, travelleth to the furtheſt Indies, and there ſeeketh for the beſt Pearles with all diligence; therefore ſhee (to whom none of them is comparable) although fetched ſo farre, which is intimated in the word רחק, afarre off, is much more to be ſought, when a man is to marry; and he ought not raſhly, and unadviſedly to goe about ſo weighty a matter. There be ſo few women good, that they have been all generally condemned by ſome, for evil, as by Euripides, ſaying, If any of the gods made women, he was a worker of the greateſt evills, and malevolous to men.

Menander ſaith, Where women are, there are all evills, and Salomon of all other men, might ſay upon his experience, Who ſhall finde a vertuous woman? as wiſe as I was, I could not, for having a thouſand Wives and Concubines, I had not one good amongſt them all, as he complaineth, *Eccleſ.*7.28. But although women for the moſt part, have beene, and are evill, yet there are ſome good, and propounded as patternes to others, as Sarah and Rebeccah, Hannah, and Elizabeth, &c. ſo that for their rarity there is no cauſe generally to condemne them, and conſequently Marriage, as the Manichees have done, and Popiſh Prieſts, and Votaries doe, or at the leaſt detract here-from moſt ſhamefully; but if a man can obtaine a good wife, to account it a favour of God, as hath beene before ſaid, and therefore to be circumſpect and carefull in wiving, being lead more by vertue, then then by beauty or money, or parentage. And this ſhould ſtir women up to good huſwifery, continency, and piety, that they may come to be thus precious in the account of their husbands, of God, and of all good men, ſuch an one is as a moſt precious ſtone in the ſpirituall building; another but as a common ſtone, ſuch as is in every houſe, but by no man accounted of.

Hitherto of a vertuous woman underſtood according to the letter, now for the ſpirituall underſtanding, here is propheſied of ſuch a woman to come, but yet afarre off, as the word ſignifieth, and it may be rendred, Who ſhall finde a woman of fortitude, and ſhe is afarre off? that is, it will be long before ſhe cometh, but her price is more then of Pearles, not one Pearle, but many put together, and this is the Virgin Mary, of whom the Angel ſaid, Bleſſed art thou amongſt women. And to her Bernard ſeemeth to apply this ſaying, What woman did Salomon inquire after, when he ſaid, Who ſhall finde a woman of fortitude? Bernard. In Prov. 31. Serm. 2.

The wiſe man knew well enough the weake and brittle condition of women, yet he had read, that as the Devill had overcome by a woman, ſo God promiſed, that he ſhould be overcome by a woman, and therefore he thus ſpeaketh, and that we might not deſpaire, but that ſuch a woman ſhould come, he ſpeakes of her as afarre off, but certainly to come; upon this the Jeſuites lay hold, and over-extoll the Virgin Mary, aſcribing more to her, then ever any of the Fathers did, or agreeth to any mortall creature, as if by her in part we were redeemed. To leave this therefore more aptly, and to hold in all things here ſpoken, Jerome, Auguſtine, and Beda, whom Arboreus followeth; by this vertuous Woman underſtand the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt; of her Salomon, with whom God was, ſaith, Who ſhall finde a woman of fortitude? as if he had ſaid, I ſee by the ſpirit of Propheſie ſuch a woman a coming afarre off, becauſe the Church was to be gathered out of the Nations, and happy ſhould he be, that ſhould make one to conſtitute this Church, Eſa. 54. ſhe is ſaid to be built of precious ſtones, but here her price to be more then of precious ſtones; That is, the precious ſtones of this world; and ſhe is called, a ſtrong woman, becauſe ſhe is as a building ſtrongly founded, viz. upon a rock, ſtanding firmely in the midſt of all perſecutions, although the winds blow, the waters beat, and the raine falls upon it. Auguſt. Jerom. Beda. Arbor. Matth. 16.

The heart of her husband doth ſafely truſt in her, ſo that he ſhall have no need of ſpoyle. Shee will doe him good, and not evill, all the dayes of his life. Verſ. 11. Verſ. 12. According to the letter, the good wife is ſo modeſt, and faithfull to her husband in all things, that he is not troubled in his minde when he is at home, or from home, by reaſon of her, as ſuſpecting either her chaſtity, or doing any thing to his hinderance in his outward eſtate, or diſcovering his ſecrets; but contrariwiſe, he is confident, that ſhe will doe him all the good that ſhe can, all the dayes of his life, avoyding all wayes whereby he may be hindered, or diſcontented, and applying her ſelfe to all wayes that may be profitable, and pleaſing to him; he that hath ſuch a wife ſhall not need ſpoyles; That is, to rob, or ſteale for want, for he ſhall be ſufficiently ſupplyed athome with all things neceſſary.

For the Spirituall ſence, the Church of Chriſt doth ſo conſtantly, and carefully cleave to his precepts, and truth in all things, and he knoweth that he hath given her ſuch grace, that ſhe ſhall doe ſo continually, that he doubteth not of her conſtant perſeverance in his faith unto the end. And for the ſpoyles of the enemy, it is ſaid, that he ſhall have no need thereof, it being hereby meant, that his Church will be moſt carefull to convert thoſe, that by infidelity and ſinne are held and poſſeſſed, as the ſpoyles of the Devill, that ſtrong man armed, that he ſhall be abundantly ſupplyed with beleeving ſoules, as ſpoyles recovered unto him.

Shee ſeeketh wooll, and flax, and worketh willingly with her hands. Here a good wife is commended by her paines taking, contrary to the Harlot before ſpoken of, who ſitteth idling at the doore of her houſe, and a young Widow living in pleaſure, for the ſame idleneſſe by St. Paul reproved ſpiritually. Verſ. 13. 1 Tim. 5.

The Church, ſaith Arboreus, getteth wooll, to cloath the naked, and flax alſo, working, and giving both woollen, and linnen to them, for by this the ſheep on the right hand, which are the Church, are commended, and rewarded; by flax alſo, Arbor. Matth. 25.

ſo, which is turned from a darker to a whiter colour, after the plucking of it out of the ground, and taking it out of the water, and laying it a drying, as the earthy moyſture, which was in it, is more and more dryed up; hereby may be underſtood the ſanctifying, and making white of the faithfull, their hearts being taken off from earthly things, and carnall humours, before abounding in them, being dryed up by the fire of the ſpirit in them.

Verſ. 14. Shee is like the Merchants ſhips, ſhe bringeth her food from a farre: Shee having made cloath, as was ſaid before, ſendeth, or carryeth it out to ſell, and ſo buyeth other commodities neceſſary for her, that be brought from other places a farre off, by which meanes her houſe is full of all manner of neceſſary proviſion. Spiritually, as Merchants in their ſhips carry out the commodities of their Country, which be not of ſo great worth, and barter them away in a farre Country, for things much more precious, whereby they are greatly inriched; ſo the Church, and every faithfull member thereof carryeth out, as it were, her good deeds, or by doing good to ſuch as are in neceſſity, both farre and neare ſendeth out that, for which, bleſſings from heaven, a farre Country, ſhall be returned againe in Gods good time, which is a commodity much more precious then this world doth afford; and as the Merchants ſhip for the fetching home of this rich Merchandiſe paſſeth the boyſterous, and tempeſtuous Seas, being often toſſed, and indangered by the ſurging waves, and ſometimes by Pirats; ſo the Church, whilſt ſhe is about this her Merchandiſe, for her doing good, ſuffereth much evill in this wicked world, but at length coming to the haven richly laden, inſtead of any more ſorrow, there is all joy for ever.

Verſ. 15. Shee riſeth whilſt it is yet night, and giveth meat to her houſhold, and a portion to her maidens. Here is another thing, whereby a vertuous woman is commended, viz. her early riſing, and cauſing of her ſervants to riſe betimes to their worke; but to this end, that they may with the more comfort goe about it, ſhe giveth them food, to each one his portion; for ſo they ſay it was done of old, ſervants were not allowed to fill their bellies, by eating ſo much as they would, but it was given unto them by portions, which is intimated, Matth. 24. 45. and ſome other places: thus Muffet.

Muffet Lavatar. But Lavater ſaith, That her liberall giving of meat to them all is meant, the word טרף Hebr. uſed, ſignifying rapine as well as meat, or ſpoyles, of which no ſpare uſeth to be made, and for the portion, or ordinary of her maides, it is Statutum, by Junius rendred Denſum, a taske, ſetting them their taskes what each one ſhould doe, that none might be idle, and to this I rather incline; for ſervants, as Plato ſaith, muſt be well fed, and well wrought; and as Ariſtotle addeth to theſe two, chaſtized, for here is nothing ſpoken that ſavoureth of any ſparing towards her houſhold.

This condemneth ſuch idle Houſwives as lye long in bed, yea ſome ſo long, that they care not to be ready upon the Lords Day time enough to goe to the Aſſemblies, which is both a foule ſhame, and unwholſome for the body, eſpecially in time of youth, or middle age, as all Phiſitians hold, becauſe ill humours are made thus to abound in them. Spiritually, the great diligence of the Church is hereby ſet forth; That is, of Church-men, who like unto the carefull Shepherd, that watcheth his flocke by night, watcheth over Chriſts flock, doing what they can, by giving ſinners often warning, and that moſt earneſtly againſt ſpirituall enemies, for which they are called Watch-men, and are ſaid to watch over mens ſoules; and they give every one his portion, by dividing the word of truth aright; to the inordinate, reproofe, to the orderly, comfort, and to the faint-hearted, cordialls; and the prey of ſpoyles is given to the houſe, as was ſaid before, when more ſoules are by their preaching converted, and brought to the aſſembly of the faithfull, from the ſnare of the Devill, whoſe ſpoyles they were before, for which he triumphed.

Ezek. 3. Heb. 13. 17.

Verſ. 16. Shee conſidereth a field, and buyeth it with the fruit of her hands, ſhe planteth a vine-yard. The vertuous woman having by her induſtry gotten not only neceſſaries, but ſome riches, ſeeing a field lying conveniently for her, which is to be ſold, purchaſeth it, and ſo cometh to inlarge her Husbands, and her poſſeſſions,

by

by the profits ariſing here-from, getting yet more for her ſelfe and children, whereupon to live more plentifully, and to doe the more good by way of charity to the poore; and having gotten ſuch a poſſeſſion, ſhe planteth a Vine-yard here, which in thoſe parts was moſt commonly done by thoſe that had poſſeſſions, and then either let out, as in the Parable of him that planted a Vine-yard, and let it out to Husband-men, to receive the fruits thereof in due ſeaſon, or occupied by the owners; but it is to be noted, that ſhe getteth not a vine-yard by bloud-ſhed, as Jezabel did, but by purchaſing it for a juſt price, the former owner being willing to ſell; and ſo this purchaſing cometh not within the compaſſe of joyning houſe to houſe, and field to field, inveighed againſt by the Prophet Eſay, for that was with monies gotten by oppreſſion, and wrong, or by rich mens having power, and abuſing it, to take other mens inheritances from them. Mat. 21. 33. Eſa. 5.

And it is to be noted, that this Matron growing rich, layeth not out her money in coſtly apparrell, thereby to ſet forth her pride and vanity the more; for the reproofe of all ſuch women, as exceed in bravery, if they be rich; yea, even they that have ſcarce neceſſaries to live upon, are greatly to blame this way, for they will lay all, yea, ſometimes more then all upon their backes, ſetting themſelves in debt for their pride and vanity. Note.

Againe, note that ſhe layeth out her money to ſet her ſelfe and hers aworke, in the moſt honeſt and innocent way of Husbandry, which commonly is counted too baſe for the children of ſuch as be rich, and therefore they put them to Trades rather, which is the eaſieſt courſe of life, and whereby moſt gaine is gotten, but for the moſt part by lying, flattering, and deceiving; or they make them Lawyers, ſo to inrich themſelves more, by craft and ſubtilty to circumvent ſimple men, by incouraging them for large fees in an evill cauſe, and picking holes in their coates, bringing their titles in queſtion, and over-throwing them; which I would not yet have taken as ſpoken to detract from all, or either of theſe profeſſions, but to ſhew the dangerouſneſſe of them in reſpect of Husbandry, that theſe wayes may not be ſo much doted upon, but taken heed of, none being put hereunto but ſuch as probably will keep a good conſcience in all things.

Laſtly, that to purchaſe Land with money lawfully gotten, is the beſt improving of it for this life, and therefore no covetouſneſſe; but to put it to uſury is every where condemned.

Spiritually the Field, which the Church, the Spouſe of Chriſt conſidereth and buyeth, is that field of which he ſpeaketh, ſaying, The Kingdome of Heaven is like unto a treaſure hid in a field, which a man ſeeing, ſelleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field; and this is the heavenly field, affording more induring food, and more delectable by farre, then any field in this world. This then the faithfull conſider, and by departing with their worldly things to the poore, and with all their ſins, upon which they fed with much delight before, come to the poſſeſſion hereof by faith; That is, of the glorious kingdome of Heaven, of which all ſuch are ſure, that they ſhall be actually poſſeſſed, after this fraile life ended, for ever and ever, neither ſhall any elſe attaine unto it, but goe into hell fire for evermore. This treaſure of joyes indeed is hidden here to moſt, and therefore few are affected herewith, to put thus on for the purchaſing of this field; but they whoſe eyes are opened ſee it, and therefore ſpare for no coſt to attaine it; and becauſe it is thus hidden, it is called the myſtery of the kingdome of Heaven, and our life is ſaid to be hidden with God in Chriſt; and, now we are the Sons of God, but it appeareth not what we ſhall be, and the God of this world blindes the eyes of the children of diſobedience. With the fruite of her hands ſhe planteth a vine-yard; That is, Chriſts faithfull Miniſtry by their continuall labours in preaching, and writing upon his holy Word, turne it, as it were, into a vine-yard full of fruit, whereby many ſoules are ſpiritually inebriated and delighted, as they that drinke liberally of the beſt wine; and this is the wine of which Wiſdome ſpake before, ſaying, Eate of my bread, drinke of my wine. And this they doe, that through the earneſtneſſe of their deſire to underſtand, and to be comforted by the Word, read it, and Commentaries upon it very much, and often heare the preaching thereof; but they, The Myſtery. Mat. 13. 44. Col. 3. 1 Joh. 3. 4. 2 Cor. 4. 4. Prov. 9.

who let ſuch bookes lye, and will rather get them Pamphlets, or humane Hiſtories, and eloquent diſcourſes, that are pleaſing to their carnall Phantaſies, ſpending all, or moſt of their reading-time herein, delight themſelves in ſoure Grapes, in compariſon of the ſweeteſt, that come of the beſt Vines, of which, ſee Eſa. 5. 1, 2, 3.

Verſ. 17. She girdeth her loynes with ſtrength, and ſtrengtheneth her armes. This is ſpoken further, to ſet forth her induſtrioufneſſe, as alſo ver. 18, 19. Her candles not going out by night, and her hands-laying upon the ſpindle, and diſtaffe; for both women and men in thoſe Countries ware looſe Garments, but going a journey, or to worke, they girded them to their loynes; according to which cuſtome

Luk. 12. 35. our Lord ſaith, Be like unto ſervants, with their loynes girded, and lights burning. Therefore the vertuous woman girding her loynes is ſpoken of, to ſhew her preparing her ſelfe to her worke, to doe it not lazily, now a little, and then a little, but moſt induſtriouſly putting out her ſtrength to doe it, for which it is further added, ſhe ſtrengtheneth her armes; and as ſhe riſeth early in the morning, ſo ſhe ſitteth up to worke late at night; and what is her chiefe worke? ſhe putteth her hands to the ſpindle, and to the diſtaffe, that ſhe may have linnen before ſpoken of, and woollen, for the one uſing a ſpindle, for the other a diſtaffe.

Verſ. 18. She ſeeth that her merchandize is good, and her candle goeth not out by night; That is, finding great profit to come in by her induſtry, fields, and vineyards, ſhe groweth not the more idle for this, after the manner of ſome, but goeth on in a conſtant way of good Huſwifery ſtill, labouring early and late, and not being growne now richer, altering her trade, but going on in ſpinning ſtill; as we read, that Queenes and great Ladies of old have done; which maketh againſt thoſe, that as riches increaſe, grow the more idle, and having taken profitable paines before, now if they worke, it is about things pertaining to pride and vanity; as alſo againſt them, that now are aſhamed to doe ſuch workes, as they did before, or being women, will take upon them to enter upon buſineſſes, that properly belong to men, as to act either in the Miniſtry, or Magiſtracy.

The Myſtery. Spiritually, the faithfull are ſaid to gird themſelves in their loynes, when they mortifying fleſhly luſts live chaſtly, for the loynes are the ſeat of fleſhly luſt, and they ſtrengthen their armes, when they doe not only live chaſtly, but ſtretch out their hands to doe good workes; and this is to have their lights burning alſo, as our Lord ſpeakes in the place before quoted, your loynes girt, and lights burning; for when a man doth good, he goeth before others in the light of a good example, which may be a meanes to make others to follow him in doing good likewiſe.

Greg. Hom. 13 in Luc. To this effect Gregory ſaith, We gird our loynes, when we reſtraine the luſts of the fleſh, but when we doe ſo, we doe nothing, unleſſe we labour in doing good alſo, and thus ſhew to our neighbours examples of light; for neither is chaſtity any great matter without good workes, nor good workes any thing without chaſtity; Thus by living chaſtly, and doing good, the faithfull are a light, and a light not going out by night; That is, in the night of perſecution, becauſe they continue conſtant in the faith in adverſity, as well as proſperity, being moved hereunto, becauſe ſhe ſeeth, that her Merchandize is good, it is a good way of trafficking that ſhe is in, for departing with temporal things to gaine eternall.

Therefore her light ſtill ſhineth even in the worſt times, and ſhe ſtill conſtantly

Verſ. 19. ſtretcheth out her hands to the ſpindle, as before; That is, goeth on in charity, and chaſtity, in regard of which charity it followeth, Verſ. 20. She openeth her hands to the poore, which is alſo a property of every vertuous woman.

Shee is commended here for her providence for her ſervants in ſummer time, providing them of winter garments; or by double, may be underſtood a double ſuit, one for ſummer, and another for winter; and for her ſelfe, ſhe by her good huſwifery, that ſhe both purchaſeth fields, and ſpareth not from her backe neither, but according to the degree that now ſhe is of, her husband being of an honourable condition, as the next words ſhew, Verſ. 23.

Her husband is knowne in the gate, when he ſitteth amongſt the Elders; He cometh up partly by her induſtry to be one of them, and by his being amongſt them in that honourable place, viz. the ſeat of Judgement, which of old was in the Gate of the City, he is knowne, and becomes famous, all men talking of him by his wives meanes thus advanced, whereby ſhe getteth no ſmall commendation. And hereby it appeareth, that although, as I ſaid before, a good woman waxing rich, purchaſeth a field, and not coſtly apparrell for her pride; yet it is lawfull both for man and woman according to the degree of honour, which they by Gods bleſſing attaine, to apparrell themſelves richly, that hereby they may be diſtinguiſhed from meaner perſons, and have the honour done to them, which is due to Rulers and their wives. Spiritually, becauſe the cold of Winter is a torment to the naked, from which they are ſafe that be well cloathed; The good caſe wherein the faithfull are, is ſet forth, when ſuch as have not a wedding garment, are caſt out of the houſe, and ſo are both harbourleſſe and naked, expoſed to the pinching cold of froſt and ſnow, as it were, or to ſome greater paine; the faithfull Chriſtian being double cloathed by faith and charity ſhall be out of all ſuch danger. Whereas it is ſaid in this regard, ſhe feareth not the ſnow for her houſhold, it is ſo ſpoken, becauſe in the Church by diligent attending upon the word preached, this double cloathing is gotten; For her being cloathed with ſilke and purple &c. the variety of graces ſhining in the Church, is hereby ſet forth, as it is in other places by variety of precious ſtones. Her husband is knowne when he ſitteth with the Elders in the Gate; this is Chriſt, the husband of his Church, who was here deſpicable, and ſtood at the Barre, but at his ſecond coming, he ſhall appeare moſt honourable, as the Vulgar hath it, and glorious, ſitting with his twelve Apoſtles, and the foure and twenty Elders to judge the quick and the dead.

Shee maketh fine linnen, and ſelleth it, and delivereth girdles to the Merchants. For the letter here, I ſhall need to ſay nothing, it is plainly meant of her coming yet by her induſtry to more wealth, and yet going on in paines-taking; now ſhe hath wherewithall to make, and doth make finer ware then when at the firſt ſhe did ſpin ordinary Flaxe and Wool, ſhe makes more coſtly things to ſell and give for gratuities to Merchants, with whom ſhe dealeth, from whom ſhe reapeth more profit. Spiritually, becauſe ſheets are to ſleep in, and being made of fine Linnen a man ſhall lye the ſofter in them, and reſt the better; bauking here the Expoſition of Arboreus, I take it that the ſweet reſt of the ſoule is meant, as in a downe-bed in fine Linnen, by faith, whereby peace with God is attained; and this is ſaid by the Church to be ſold, becauſe no ſoule can come to this, but by departing with all, as hath beene before ſaid. And her giving of Girdles to Merchants, Hebraicè Canaanites, who were Heathens, ſetteth forth her teaching of them chaſtity to flye Fornication, prevailing alſo herein with many of them, amongſt whom ſingle Fornication was before ſcarce counted a ſinne; becauſe girding the loynes, for which the Girdle ſerveth, is an Emblem hereof, as was before ſaid. And the Canaanites who were Heathens, are ſpoken of to ſet forth thoſe, from amongſt whom the Church was gathered, viz. People of all Countries and Nations.

The Preface to the Eccleſiaſtes.

His Booke is called Heb. קהלת a Congregatour, or gatherer together, as Prov.30. The words of Agur, or Gatherer, there are ſentences gathered together. Here obſervations, touching the vanities of this world, and ſentences uttered hereupon, partly as the Authour hereof Salomon, thought in the time of his vanity, and partly after that by repentance he roſe up againe, perſwading to the feare of God, and to the keeping of his Commandements.

Some there are that make queſtion whether he wrote it after his repenting, or not, or whether he repented and recovered the favour of God, and were ſaved, but enough hath been ſaid to that upon Prov.30. and in his Hiſtory 1 King.

Some doubt whether it be Canonical Scripture; But for ſo much as it is, and hath been alwayes received for Canonical by the Church of God, have no reaſon to call it now in queſtion. The name Eccleſiaſtes is given it by the Septuagint, coming of Ἐκκλησία to call out, or to gather together, Anglice the Preacher, becauſe to him the people gather together in the publike place to hear the Word, and therefore the Title implieth, that the things here ſet forth, concern the whole Congregation of Gods people, and therefore are by all to be attended unto. But the word is a feminine, as if he had ſaid, a ſhe gatherer; ſo Pſ.68.11. It is ſaid, The Lord gave the word, great was the company of Preachers, where Preachers are againe put in the feminine, the reaſon is yeelded by ſome, becauſe the greater excellency of Preachers is thus ſet forth, but I rather think, becauſe a Preacher as a mother travelleth, as it were, in bringing forth through much ſolicitude, about the converſion of the people, as Paul ſpeaketh, My little children, of whom I travel again in birth till Chriſt be formed in you; Gal. 4.19. For their tender and motherly affection then towards the people: they are ſet forth as Females ſometimes; But what excellency is in the Female above the Male, I know not, that the gender ſhould be changed for excellencies ſake; and therefore the Jeſuite from whom that reaſon came, was very forgetfull even of the Grammar Rules, which ſay the Maſculine gender is more worthy then the Feminine. For the reaſon that moveth ſome to thinke, that it is not Canonical Scripture, viz. becauſe Chap. 2. and elſewhere, he ſpeaks like a carnall man, it is eaſily anſwered, that he ſuſtained herein a double perſon, of a man fallen and living in ſinne, as he had done, in which perſon he ſpeaketh ſo, and of a man riſen up again by repentance, being now aſhamed of his ſenſuall thoughts and pleaſures then, and condemning them all as vanities, and perſwading to live in the feare of God, as to that of which onely true pleaſure will come at the laſt; For his ſeverall names, Salomon, Jedidiah, and Eccleſiaſtes, ſee before in my Preface to the Proverbs, and for his ſcope of writing theſe three Bookes. Lorinus.

CHAP. I.

Verſ. 1. THE words of the Preacher, the Sonne of David, King of Jeruſalem. Salomon having falne ſo foulely, as hee had done now, intituleth himſelfe no more Salomon, the peaceable, but the gatherer, hereby intimating, what the Reader is to expect to finde in this Booke, viz. Collections of many caſes, wherein men may thinke themſelves happy for carnall and worldly pleaſures, whereof they even take their fill, but they ſhall at length be found no ſubſtances, or durable things, but vaine ſhadowes upon which if ever they have their eyes opened to repent, they will be much aſhamed, that they have ſo greatly doted, and if not, for laughing here, they ſhall weepe and howle hereafter without end.

But why doth he call himſelfe King of Jeruſalem, and not of Iſrael, over all which he reigned? Salonius anſwereth, becauſe Jeruſalem was the Metropolis of his Kingdome, where the Temple ſtood, built by him, whereby he had more glory, and of which he had more joy, then of any other thing in all his Dominions, but Verſe 12. it ſeemeth rather to be ſo ſaid, becauſe he dwelt at Jeruſalem.

Salon. in Eccleſ.

Verſ. 2. Vanity of vanities, ſaith the Preacher, all is vanity; He doubleth the word, ſaith the ſame Authour, to make in us the deeper impreſſion, that if all things here be vaine vanities, we may not have our hearts ſet upon them, or thinke our ſelves happy in having them.

Note.

Lavater. Lavater makes an objection here, Salomon ſeemeth in thus ſaying to be contradictory to Moſes, who ſaith, God ſaw all things that he had made, and they were very good; and if ſo, how doth he call them vanities?

Sol. This was ſpoken before mans fall, but ſince man having ſinned, for whom all things were made, they are all made ſubject to vanity, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and ſo there is no contradiction betwixt this our Preacher, and Moſes. They are vaine now, becauſe they are tranſitory, for heaven and earth, and all ſhall fade away at the day of judgement.

2. Many things are now hurtfull, inſtead of ſweet and wholeſome influences, hurtfull and peſtiferous, ſometimes come from the very heavens, cauſing ſickneſſes and diſeaſes, and much other hurt cometh to man from other things.

3. All things here below are corrupted and decay, and ſuffer for our ſinnes, yea, the beaſts of the field, the fowles of the aire, and fiſhes of the Sea, as the Prophets ſpeake; and for ſinne the earth beares briars and thornes, and is ſometimes barren yee'ding no fruit. And as all theſe things are vaine, ſo and much more men, who by their ſins are the cauſe hereof. This was of old implied in the name of Abel, which ſignifieth vanity, ſo called by his parents, both to ſhew the brevity of his life in this world, and to put his parents and us all in minde of the vanity and ſhort continuance of this life.

Laſtly, all things are ſaid to be vanity, in compariſon of God and his Word, which alone indure for ever, for the heavens are glorious to behold, and the heavenly bodies, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, being ſome glimpſe of the glory of God, and they and the earth are of a long continuance in compariſon of other things, but if their continuance be compared unto God, they are vanity. Pſal. 19. Pſal. 102.

What profit hath a man of all his labour, that he taketh under the Sun? Labour we muſt till we returne to the duſt from which we were taken, but the vanity of this labour appeareth by this, that ſome by all their labour can ſcarce get them neceſſaries, and if any get abundance, they ſhall be ſoone taken away, and then whoſe ſhall theſe things be which they have gotten? as was ſaid to the ſenſuall rich fool in the Goſpel, he ſhal carry nothing with him but as he came naked, ſo hee ſhall goe; and whether wiſe men or fooles, friends or enemies ſhall poſſeſſe it after him, he knoweth not. But it is to be noted, that he ſaith, under the Sunne, according to Hugo Victorinus, who ſaith, That there is a labour, of which profit cometh, but it is above the Sunne, the labour in exerciſes, and doing and ſuffering of thoſe, that looke up yet higher to the Sonne of Righteouſneſſe, for this is labour in the Lord, of which the Apoſtle ſaith, Knowing that your labour is not in vaine in the Lord; and having ſaid, that bodily labour profiteth not, he addeth, But godlineſſe is profitable to all things. Verſ. 3. Gen. 3. Luke 12. 1 Tim. 4. 7. Note. Hugo, Victorinus, 1 Cor. 15. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

One generation paſſeth, and another cometh, but the earth abideth for ever. A generation is a certaine period of time, during which a man commonly liveth, that is, as is ſaid, Pſal. 90. ſeventy yeares, or eighty, or a hundred; the meaning is plaine, all the men of one time dye within the compaſſe of ſo many yeares, a hundred at the moſt, and another generation cometh to inhabit the earth after them, and ſo it is from one generation to another, as long as the world laſteth. As Xerxes is ſaid to have wept, when he beheld his huge Army of ſixteen hundred thouſand men, conſidering that within an hundred yeares they ſhould be all dead and gone. Verſ. 4.

But the earth indureth for ever; that is, ſaith Salonius, becauſe that although it ſhall be burnt with fire at the day of judgement, yet this ſhall be but to purifying, it being then changed to better, of which opinion alſo many others be, drawing that Rom. 8. The creature it ſelfe ſhall be brought into the glorious liberty of the ſonnes of God, to this, and the proving hereof. But touching the meaning of that place, I have ſpoken enough here upon. And this being ſo underſtood, as they would have it, is contradictory to Pſal. 102. where the Heavens and the Earth are oppoſed to God in reſpect of Eternity, They ſhall all waxe old as a garment, and as a veſture ſhalt thou change them, and they ſhall be changed, but thou continueſt ever, &c. For here a change to the better cannot be meant, but a change to corruption and annihilation, becauſe it is oppoſed to the Eternity of God, as it could not be, if after a little purging by fire it ſhould ſtill remaine ever in a more glorious manner. In ſaying then that the earth indureth for ever, he meaneth nothing elſe, but whereas men and other living creatures have but their termes, and having acted their parts upon the earth, as a ſtage, dye and paſſe away, the earth it ſelfe ſtands ſtill generation after generation, as long as there ſhall be any ſuch intercourſe of things here: And therefore it is ſaid, לעולם in ſæculum, and not in ſæculum ſæculorum, for ever and ever; for this word, as I have elſewhere ſhewed, according to Jerome and Auguſtine, ſignifyeth a certaine long period of time, unto which no man knoweth, how long it ſhall be, but God onely: of the paſſing away both of heaven and earth, our Lord ſaith, Heaven and earth ſhall paſſe away, but one iot or tittle of the Law ſhall not paſſe, ſee 2 Pet. 3. Salonius. Matth. 5.

Now for the coherence of theſe words, and thoſe Verſe 3. with Verſe 2. there is generally ſet forth the vanity of all things in this world, Verſe 3, 4. This is more particularly declared, 1 In reſpect of mens workes and gettings by all their induſtry, Verſe 3. 2 In reſpect of the ſhort continuance of men here.

Now Verſ. 5. it is further added in way of demonſtration by another particular, The Sunne ariſeth, and the Sunne goeth downe, and haſteth to the place where he roſe; this riſing, and daily ſetting of the Sunne, is thought by ſome, to bee ſpoken of, as a demonſtration of our mortality, who riſe, as it were, when we come into the world, but ſet, when we dye, going under the earth, and now not ſeene, as the Sunne is not, after that it is gone downe. The Sunne ſhining alſo, we have light and comfort, here below, but this is ſoone gone againe, and turned into darkneſſe, and therefore this is but a vaine and tranſitory thing alſo.

That a mans coming into the world, is ſet forth by the Sunnes riſing, and his growth, to ſome height of honour here, and by the going downe thereof, his departing; hence the common ſaying which we have of Kings and Princes, the one waxing old, the other newly come into the world in compariſon; and in flouriſhing youth ſheweth, Omnes reſpiciunt ſolem orientem, nemo occidentem, All men looke at the Sunne riſing, but none at its going downe. Some apply both this, and that of verſe 4. ſpiritually, one generation of the Jewes, and Idolaters paſſeth away, and another of Chriſtians cometh; and the Sunne riſeth, ſaith Olympiodorus, when the Sonne of God came into the world, and tooke our nature upon him, and ſetteth, or goeth downe at his death; or it riſeth, when grace cometh into the heart, and goeth down, when we dive more deeply into the profound myſteries of the Word: But becauſe it is ſpoken to illuſtrate the matter of vanity, if any application be made ſpiritually, it muſt rather be thus, one generation of good and zealous Chriſtians paſſeth away, and another of luke-warme, worldly and heretical cometh; and the light of the Goſpel ariſeth to the great rejoycing of all men, but after a while it goeth downe in mens eſtimations, who are towards it, as the Iſraelites towards Manna in the wildernesſe, firſt admiring and praiſing, then loathing it, as too light a kinde of food.

Olympiodor.

Verſ. 6. The wind goeth towards the South, and turneth about to the North, it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth againe according to his circuits. Here by the wind which is Heb. רוח Lactantius, ſaith Lavater, underſtandeth the Sunne alſo, hitherto ſpoken of, which for the exceeding ſwift motion in going about the whole world in foure and twenty houres, is called here a Spirit, and the going of it to the South, and then to the North returning againe, and the circular motion thereof at the end of the yeare coming to the place, where it was at the beginning, ſeemeth to make for this underſtanding, as if here were deſcribed the courſe of the whole yeare; for the Sunne coming into the Tropick of Cancer, goeth to the North, and then returning to the Tropick of Capricorne to the South, ſo making Summer and Winter; and this truly hath a circular motion, and comes at the end of the yeare, to be where it was at the beginning againe, which cannot be ſaid touching the wind. But for ſo much as the Sunne is no where ſet forth by this word רוח, but the wind, and the wind alſo whirleth about, and bloweth ſometime Southward, and ſometime Northward, and from other quarters of the heaven, thus going round, till it comes againe to the ſame point where it blew at the firſt, it is rather to be underſtood as ſpoken of the wind.

Lavater.

Verſ. 7. After which, the Rivers are in like manner ſpoken of, going into the Sea, and returning, and yet not filling it, as a fifth particular inſtance: which is underſtood by ſome, of waters running from the Sea in veines within the earth, which coming out againe in ſprings ſupply the Rivers with waters; by others, of waters exhaled by the heat of the Sunne out of the Sea in vapours, whereof the clouds are ingendered, from whence raine comes downe againe, and filleth the Rivers; I take it to be meant, not of one, but both theſe wayes. But whereunto all this tendeth, I have partly ſaid before in ſpeaking of the Sunnes riſing and going downe, viz. to ſhew, that theſe things being ſo moveable, and alwayes paſſing, we that are poore men, wormes in compariſon, might not looke for any durable eſtate here, but to count our living a continuall paſſing on to the earth againe, from whence wee were taken, and therefore as they that doe but paſſe through a place, ſet not their hearts upon it, but onely make uſe of it for the preſent, ſo ſhould we doe of the things of this world; or as Lavater alſo hath it, the Sunne, the Wind, and the the Rivers are thus ſpoken of to aggravate the vanity of mens lives, becauſe theſe have their courſes, and after going to ſuch and ſuch places they are not extinct, but returne againe, the Sunne after the going downe to ſhine the next morning, the Wind having gone from one part, and blowne to another, returneth thither againe, and the Waters likewiſe; but a man going downe into the grave, riſeth againe no more, to live here as formerly he did, howbeit he ſhall at the laſt day ariſe and come to judgement. And to theſe may bee added another compariſon, upon which Job toucheth, with a Tree, which being cut downe, ſpringeth up againe. Job. 19.

All things are full of labour, man cannot utter it, the eye is not ſatisfied with ſeeing, nor the eare with hearing. Verſ. 8. Here is another argument brought to prove the vanity of all things here, there is no true felicity, but vanity, becauſe this world can afford no contentation, but there is labour in ſeeking by ſeeing and hearing to come to knowledge, wherein one Philoſopher Herillus held that felicity conſiſted. But againſt this is Salomon here, becauſe that in ſeeing, and reading, and hearing all that we can to increaſe knowledge, there is no ſatisfaction, therefore no felicity; becauſe there be many things ſtill unknowne in this world, by him that cometh to the higheſt pitch of learning; there be many myſticall things in nature which no man can pry into, and therefore much more in divine things; for which cauſe Pythagoras, who was accounted ſo wiſe, being asked, whom he profeſſed himſelfe to be, anſwered, a Philoſopher, that is, a lover of wiſdome, and that hee thought no man to be wiſe, but God onely; and Socrates profeſſed, that he knew this, that he knew nothing: and from Pythagoras, for that his ſaying, came the name Philoſophus. Lavater.

Thus Jerome, Olympiodorus, and Victorinus alſo expound it of knowledge, with which a man cannot be ſatisfied here, either with things naturall, or morall, ſaith Jerome, of things humane or divine, ſaith Olympiodorus, either in regard of the externall ſhew, or the internall, either by the outward ſenſe, or inward comprehenſion of the underſtanding to conceive, or to utter them; and therefore we ought not to reſt in theſe worldly things, but to ſeeke after thoſe, that the eye hath not ſeene, nor the eare heard, nor have entred into the heart of man to conceive, as the Apoſtle ſaith. Hieron. Olympio. Victor. Note. 1 Cor. 2. 9.

The thing that hath beene, it is that which ſhall be, and that which is done, is that which ſhall be done, and there is no new thing under the Sunne. Verſ. 9. Verſ. 10. Is there any thing of which it may be ſaid, it is new? Having ſhewed before, that the Sunne moves continually alike, and the wind from time to time blows variouſly, ſometime from the South, and ſometimes from the North, and from other parts, and the rivers come and goe into the Sea: Now he hereupon concludeth that thus it ſhall be to the worlds end, the courſe of nature in theſe great things is moſt notable throughout the whole world, being alwayes alike, and no new way to bee expected of inlightening and darkening the earth, or the blowing of the winds, or the running of the waters: and as herein, ſo in that which was before ſpoken, one generation paſſing, and another coming, and the ſucceeding generations acting over againe the good or the evill, which preceding generations having before acted, although happily coming to more perfection in either, the wicked growing more wicked then their forefathers, and the ingenious more witty to invent things not invented before, and the godly reforming things in the worſhip of God and doctrine, which have beene corrupted before, and ſome after them againe depraving and corrupting all more and more, for ſuch, and ſo great wickedneſſes have not beene formerly acted, as now. Some things have been invented either bad or good, which were not before, as Gunpowder, and Printing, and many Manufactures, arguing rare skill, and devilliſh plots, and devices, to ſubvert States and Kingdomes, that never were before. But it is ſaid, that this is ſo under the Sunne, that there is no new thing; Touching Metaphyſicall, and ſuper-humane things, it is not ſo, for touching theſe, the Lord ſaith, I will make a new heaven, and a new earth, and a woman, ſaith Jeremy, ſhall compaſſe a man, which is alſo another new thing, and never done before, or after; And I will, ſaith Eſa. 65. Ierem. 30.

the Lord, make a new Covenant. It cannot from that, which is here ſaid, be gathered, which ſome Philoſophers have held, that after the revolution of many thouſands of yeares, all the ſame things ſhall be acted over againe as they were before; and after another ſpace of time conſiſting of the like number of yeares, they ſhall be done againe; and after that in another, and a fourth for ever and ever, as Plato who would have this great ſpace of time to be fifteen thouſand yeares; ſome ſay ſix and thirty thouſand yeares, ſome nine and forty thouſand yeares, and ſome put other ſummes, but theſe are vaine conjectures, and falſe, and without ground here. Where, as long as this world indureth, it is onely averred, that there ſhall be a viciſſitude and intercourſe of things naturall, they that are now, ſhall alſo be in another generation, and in another after that, the Sunne ſhall ſo goe his circuit, &c. as was before ſaid; and for ſo much as this is brought as an argument to prove the vanity and variableneſſe of all theſe things, it cannot be hence inferred that it ſhall for ever and ever be ſo, but rather on the contrary ſide, the Almighty, who ſetteth them into theſe courſes for the good of man, being by man extreamly offended.

Note. will at length diſſolve all, and then there ſhall be no ſuch revolutions any more; which ſhould make us to looke upon this world, as vaine, and therefore not to ſet our hearts upon it, or upon the things thereof, but upon the things of a better world above, the Son, which is indeed everlaſting.

Verſ. 11. There is no remembrance of former things, neither ſhall there be any remembrance of things to come hereafter, with thoſe that ſhall come. This Verſe, as the two former, further proveth the imperfection of our knowledge whilſt wee live here, for it muſt needs be yeelded to be very imperfect, which extendeth not to things done many hundred years ago, as no mans knowledge doth, that liveth now, neither ſhall any mans doe, if the world ſtill continueth long; for the Generation to come after, ſhall no more know the things done in the next Generation to us, then we who now live know the things that were done long before our time. But this is not to be underſtood of ſuch things, as are committed to writing, and the writings ſtill remaine, but either of thoſe that are not, or if they be, they periſh, and are loſt, and ſo no memoriall of them remaineth, wherein the holy Scriptures are ſingular above all other writings, in that they have beene in all times, and are preſerved not onely from periſhing, but from corruption through the malice of men, who have beene enemies hereunto through ſo many Ages, as none other bookes have beene, thoſe of Moſes being the moſt ancient of them all; which is an evident proofe, that God hath a ſingular care over them, as Writings that come from himſelfe, and the inſpiration of his Spirit, as St. Paul teacheth, ſaying, The whole

2 Tim. 3. 16. Note. Scripture is given by the inſpiration of God; and therefore to be made truly wiſe, let us attend to them, this being not otherwiſe to be found, but we muſt needs labour with great ignorance all our dayes.

Verſ. 12. I the Preacher was King over Iſrael in Jeruſalem, I gave my heart to ſearch and ſeeke out wiſdome, concerning all things that are done under the heaven, &c. Now Eccleſiaſtes proveth by his owne experience, that all things in this world are vanity, and to purchaſe the more credit to this his teſtimony, hee telleth, That he was the King, ſo famous in Scripture for deſiring onely wiſdome of God, and obtaining it above all other men, as is expreſſed verſe 16. all Kings that were before him. He then, that is Salomon, declaring by his owne experience the truth of that which was before ſaid, and having proved it by an high induction of many particulars, under which all other things are comprehended, what doubt can any more be made hereof?

But why doth he ſay, I was King over Iſrael, as ſpeaking of a thing paſt?

Sol. He meaneth nothing elſe, but that he was King, when he gave his minde ſo greatly to the getting of wiſdome, and obtained it, and lived in great pompe and Kingly glory, having about him all worldly comforts, although now for his foule ſinning, hee accounted himſelfe baſe and abject, which argueth his great Rabbini. penitency. The Hebrewes in their Sedar Olum ſay, that he ſpake thus in regard of his being carried away now from his Kingdome, into the wilderneſſe by the evill ſpirit Aſmodai, but this is a Rabbinicall invention without ground. Some, be-

cauſe he had now given over his Kingdome to his ſonne, and this is contrary to the ſacred Hiſtory. Some, becauſe he had laid away his Kingly robes, and was come downe from his Throne, and lay repentantly now in duſt and aſhes, not accounting himſelfe worthy to be King any longer, which doth not diſagree from the firſt Carthuſ. Hugo. Victorinus.

For the next words, wherein he ſaith, that he gave himſelfe to finde out the knowledge of all things under the Sunne, This ſore travell hath God given to the ſonnes of men: Hereby he meaneth, that when he had attained ſo great knowledge, yet hereby he could not finde out all things, and therefore neither can any other man ever attaine unto it, as ſaith the Caldee Paraphraſt, although ſome Expoſitors picke out ſomewhat hence, for which to taxe Salomon for pride and arrogancy, ſaying, that this ſore fruitleſſe labour was by God laid upon him for a puniſhment, as the Gentiles are ſaid, for their doings to have been given over to a reprobate ſenſe. But becauſe it is not unlawfull to goe as farre as a man can, in knowing naturall things, I ſee no reaſon, why they ſhould cenſure Salomon for this, but rather he hereby ſheweth in his owne example, who had ſo extraordinary indowments, that to endeavour to know all things is but vaine, and loſt labour to any man. Verſ. 13. Cald. Paraph. Hugo, Victorinus, Olympiod. Rom. 1.

That which is crooked cannot be made ſtreight, and that which is wanting cannot be numbred. The Vulg. It is hard to make it ſtreight; but Heb. it is, It cannot. Here is another argument of the vanity of all things here, it is refered by ſome to men thus, he that is perverſe cannot be brought from this his perverſneſſe to live righteouſly, and therefore the labour that others beſtow upon him for this end is vaine, as was ſaid before in Proverbs, Bray a foole in a mortar, and his folly will not depart from him; and according to this, ſuch as are wanting, that is in wiſdome and knowledge, having but ſhallow and weake brainos cannot be made wiſe and ſo brought into the number of the wiſe. By others it is referred to States and Commonwealths, they being corrupted or diſordered, are very hardly brought to rights againe, yea, men cannot doe, and a Kingdome, from which part is fallen away, cannot be compleated againe, as it proved by experience in Salomons Kingdome, the number of the twelve Tribes could never after the diviſion, in Rehoboams time, be made up againe. And ſo it is in all other naturall things, a crooked body of man, a crooked tree, a crooked member cannot be made ſtreight by any man, and any defect in the members requiſite to perfection, if one be borne without an arm, or finger, or hand, &c. it cannot be ſupplied, therefore mens labours are vaine. Verſ. 15.

I gave my heart to know wiſdome, and madneſſe, and folly, I perceived that this alſo is vexation of ſpirit. Verſ. 18. For in much wiſdome there is much griefe, and he that increaſeth knowledge, increaſeth ſorrow. Of his ſeeking wiſdome ſee before Verſ. 13. but now he addeth alſo madneſſe and folly; Heb. The knowledge of madneſſe and folly: For by contraries the excellency of the one above the other is the better diſcerned; he that knoweth the madneſſe and fooliſhneſſe of Hereticks, and wicked perſons, is the better fenced againſt theſe evills, which he that knoweth it not, is ready to runne into; but the end of his ſaying thus here, is to ſhew, that although wiſdome and knowledge be more excellent by farre, then folly and ignorance, yet even in wiſdome there is this vanity, that a man getteth vexation and griefe hereby, and ſo all things here are vanity. Verſ. 17, 18. Lavater.

But how, or in what ſenſe is it ſaid, There is much griefe in much wiſdome, and knowledge increaſing, ſorrow increaſeth?

Sol. This is not meant of Divine wiſdome, which is the ſame with the feare of God, for although this be not attained without much toyle and labour in reading and ſtudying, as every true ſtudent findeth by experience, and knowing men ſeeing how ſhort they come of that which they ought to bee, and how little they know in compariſon of that they ſhould, and that knowing, and not doing accordingly, as was the caſe of Salomon, makes their eſtate worſe, becauſe Hee that knoweth his Maſters will, and doth it not, ſhall be beaten with many ſtripes; they have great ſorrow, and the more by reaſon of their knowledge, either coming coming ſhort of that they ſhould doe, when they doe their beſt, or ungraciouſly falling from the good way, wherein they have gone. But this is not the griefe here meant to be counted vanity, for it is a bleſſed ſorrow and mourning to mourne thus, and ſo pronounced by Chriſt, Bleſſed are they that mourne, for they ſhall be comforted; and godly ſorrow, ſaith the Apoſtle, cauſeth repentance to ſalvation never to be repented of. And therefore here is no diſcouragement from labouring to get this knowledge, but rather incouragement, for ſo much as it is but a ſowing in teares, to reape in joy; whereas he that is deſtitute of this knowledge, is without this godly griefe, and therefore although he laugheth, and is merry for a time, woe is to him, for he ſhall waile and weepe; he laugheth, and is without griefe for a moment, but he ſhall weepe for evermore: For all other knowledge, naturall, or politicall, without this, he increaſeth ſorrow onely, that increaſeth it, both becauſe the knowledge of the cauſes of naturall things, or of morall, is not acquired without great ſtudy and labour, and there is much vexation of ſpirit, for that a man cannot attaine to the knowledge of many things, when he hath toyled all that he can, and the more knowledge a man hath either of theſe wayes, the more ſorrow and trouble, becauſe he can never be quiet; but for his eminency herein, either he is troubled by the ſeeking of many unto him, he being thus put to more labour and imployment, or he laboureth the more by writing to communicate his knowledge to others; or laſtly, he hath ſorrow by ſuffering, becauſe that contrary to his knowledge, he will not humour thoſe that be in authority, or comply, but ſpeake againſt them, by which meanes he is put to much ſorrow; whereas ignorant perſons that are wildable to any thing, becauſe they know nothing to the contrary, eſcape theſe dangers: But yet there is a greater cauſe of griefe then all this, to men that have theſe knowledges, but want ſaving knowledge, which is to come, for their finall perdition with their knowledge, yea, although they know divine things alſo, but live not accordingly, for of this the more a man hath, the more tormenting griefe he ſhall have in the world to come, as hath beene touched before.

2 Cor. 7. 10. Note.

Hugo, Victor.

Hugo, Victorinus and ſome others thinke that Salomon in ſaying, that hee gave his minde to wiſdome and madneſſe, and folly, meaneth, that hee ſought not ſo much for divine wiſdome, but for humane, that excelling this way he might have the greater glory, for withall he gave himſelfe to mad and fooliſh wayes. And they take that alſo, which was ſpoken Verſe 16. of his being wiſer then any that were before him, as coming from pride and vaine-glory. But this is not probable, for ſo much as the wiſdome of which hee ſpeaketh in the Proverbs, and ſo highly extolleth, is Divine wiſdome; and in ſeeking to God for wiſdome, he propounded this as his end, that he might know how to judge wiſely, and to goe in and out before that mighty people; therefore certainly he gave not his minde then to folly and wickedneſſe, for this no way pertaineth either to ſuch walking or judging.

CHAP. II.

Verſ. 1.

AND I ſaid in my heart, goe too, now I will prove thee with mirth, therefore injoy pleaſure, this alſo is vanity; Salomon having theorically contemplated the vanity of the things of this world, now he cometh to another thing not yet ſpoken of, and that is pleaſure, and to ſhew how practically, he found that alſo to be vanity.

The vanities before contemplated Chap. 1. were two, viz. of coming into this world, and going out, and the revolutions of things continually here.

Vanity 3.

2. Of wiſdome, which the wiſeſt man of this world attaineth to; now he proceedeth to ſpeake of pleaſure, which many thinke a great happineſſe if they have varieties hereof, but this he ſaith is alſo vanity, verſe 1, 2. and then proveth it in himſelfe in the verſes following; for he ſaith, that he, like a wretched man, let

looſe his affections to all manner of pleaſure, but finally found them all to bee vanity, yea, as he addeth Verſ. 2. madneſſe. For the proofe Verſ. 3,4,5,&c.

I ſought in mine heart to give my ſelfe to wine (yet acquainting mine heart with wiſdome) and to lay hold on folly, till I might ſee, What was that good for the ſonnes of men, which they ſhould doe under the heaven all the dayes of their life. The Vulg. I thought in mine heart to withdraw my ſelfe from wine, or my fleſh, as it is Heb. that I might transfer my mind to wiſdome, and avoid folly. But although the word משׁה ſignifieth as well to draw away, as to draw, yet becauſe the prepoſition affixed to the word יין ſignifying wine, is ב in, not מ from; the New Tranſlation is to be preferred, and it ſtands alſo with better ſenſe; having ſpoken to his ſoule to injoy pleaſure, verſe 1. and now coming to reckon up the pleaſures, to which he gave himſelfe, that he ſhould not ſpeake according to Vulg. of his abſtaining from wine, but rather of his liberall drinking of it, becauſe this is a thing in which moſt men take great pleaſure, even unto drunkenneſſe, although for this they are to be counted worſe then beaſts. Verſ. 3.

But if it be thus taken, how ſhall we underſtand the next words, yet acquainting my heart with wiſdome? Lavater, although hee followeth the Vulg. yet ſaith well to this, acknowledging that Heb. the words goe otherwiſe, to draw my fleſh in wine; Salomon meant not ſo to drinke wine, as to intend the ſeeking of wiſdome no more, as they that give themſelves much to the drinking thereof, cannot, becauſe that hereby they are made like beaſts in underſtanding, but partly to take the pleaſure hereof, and partly to intend the increaſing of his wiſdome, till hee ſhould ſee, whether of theſe would have the beſt iſſue: So that in reckoning up ſenſuall pleaſures, to which he fell, as much underſtanding as he had, the liberall drinking of wine was one, yea, the firſt; that all men might take warning by him not to doe the like, becauſe that addicting himſelfe firſt hereunto, as a moſt pleaſing thing to the fleſh, although he had a care herein, not to runne as others doe, to exceſſe of riot, yet hereby another ſinfull pleaſure was drawne on, which he calleth folly, to lay hold on folly, although the Vulg. hath it, to avoid folly, but the word אחז ſignifieth to apprehend or to hold; and by folly is meant the folly of thoſe that are lead by fleſhly luſts to women, as he was moſt notoriouſly, in that he multiplied his Wives and Concubines in ſo great abundance, contrary to the Law, and tooke for his wives Outlandiſh women, Idolatreſſes, by whom his heart was drawn away from God to Idols. For although all ſin be folly, yet this eſpecially is cenſured as moſt notorious folly, both *Prov.*7. And in many other places of that booke, and *Prov.*31.3.4. giving thy ſtrength to women, and drinking wine are joyned together, to intimate, that the one draweth on the other. And by women, whether many wives or harlots, the moſt intelligent minde is infatuated to fall from the pure worſhip of the true God, to the worſhipping of Idols, as was proved eſpecially in this King, and in the Princes of Iſrael before, who were drawne to Idolatrous feaſts, wherein they drunk liberally, and then to joyn themſelves to Midianitiſh women, and by their meanes to Baal-Peor, their Idol, to worſhip it, and that not a few of them, but a thouſand; for which it is ſaid that ſo many were hanged, as will appeare, if we compare *Num.*25.4.9. and 1 *Cor.*10. together, in the one place it being ſaid, that ſome, that is, the heads were hanged, and then the whole ſumme of thoſe that dyed of the plague alſo, were foure and twenty thouſand, but in the other, three and twenty thouſand fell in one day, therefore they that were hanged to make up the number of foure and twenty thouſand muſt be one thouſand. Whereas then ſome have doubted whether Salomon wrote this Booke in way of penitency, or not, becauſe he ſpeaketh nothing herein of his great ſinne of taking to him ſo many wives, whereby his heart was drawn away, they may by this his confeſſion of giving himſelfe to this folly be ſatisfied herein: For if we take this together with other things, which I have before noted, and upon *Prov.*30. I was more bruitiſh then any man, and *Prov.*31. it will plainly appeare, that this was his Booke of repentance, whereby others that have fallen into foule ſinnes may learne in humbling themſelves therefore, to proceed in like manner in the ingenious confeſſion of them all both to God and to men, that they may have pardon for

1 King. 11.5.

Note.

for both he doth ſo, and his Father David before Pſal. 51. and the like is ſaid of thoſe that heard John the Baptiſt preaching repentance they were there confeſſing their ſinnes, and of the Converts at Epheſus, they confeſſed their deeds, and burnt their bookes, and confeſſe your ſinnes one to another, ſaith James. If it be ſaid, Davids confeſſion was made onely to God, it is true, but to take the more ſhame to himſelf, he publiſhed it to the world alſo. Now Salomon having confeſſed, that he divided himſelfe betweene wiſdome, and wine, and folly, to prove what would come of either, yet not meaning by wiſdome here any other then naturall and politicall wiſdome, wherewith the wiſe of this world are indued; for no man, that is divinely wiſe, of which verſe 26. doth ſo: he cometh verſe 4. to ſhew when his minde was ſo given, what he did further to pleaſe and content the outward man.

Matth. 3. 6. Act. 19. 18. Iam. 5.

Verſ. 4, 5. 6, 7. 8. 9, 10. 11.

I made me great workes, I builded me houſes, I planted me Vineyards, I made me pooles of water, I gat me ſervants and maidens, and cattell above all in Jeruſalem before me, and ſilver and gold, men-ſingers, and women-ſingers, and the delights of the ſonnes of men, alſo my wiſdome remained with me, and if there were any other pleaſure in this world to be had, he ſaith, that he had it alſo, yea, and rejoyced herein: but coming to conſider all this, he found all to bee vanity, which is not to be conceived, that he did, till that his heart was touched with repentance. Before this he was highly pleaſed with the wayes of pleaſure in which he was, thinking that the injoying of her was a great portion of happineſſe, and that none were happy in this life that did not. And thus it is with moſt carnall men, all their joy is in wine and women, in magnificent buildings, ſinging and muſicke and dancing, and getting gold and ſilver, and poſſeſſions, wherewith to maintaine them. But would yee know (O ye Swine of the herde of the Epicures!) that doe thus, Salomon, the wiſeſt man, that ever was, having more pleaſures theſe wayes, then yee have, or can have, who thought himſelfe happy herein, at laſt found them all to be vanity and vexation of ſpirit, and altogether unprofitable and therefore never by any wiſe man to be ſought after any more; For if it be ſo to a King, incomparable for the affluence of all worldly things, and for wiſdome alſo, to moderate himſelfe in his cups, how much more muſt it needs be ſo in the end with you, that are fooliſh, and can keepe no meaſure in your drinking, but continue at it till all your wits be gone? For the hiſtoricall explication of that, which Salomon ſaith of his gueſts, I ſhall not need to ſay any thing, becauſe the Hiſtory written of him doth ſo fully declare them.

Note.

Epicuri de grege porci.

Verſ. 12.

And I turned my ſelfe to behold wiſdome, and madneſſe, and folly, &c. Having hitherto ſhewed what a vanity it is for a man to give himſelfe to ſenſuall pleaſures, now he cometh to compare this folly and madneſſe, as he calleth it, and wiſdome together, that is, worldly wiſdome, to ſee, whether a man indued with ſuch wiſdome above others, doing thus, be the more happy for this; and herein although he putteth ſome difference, viz. by comparing one wiſe to a man in light, the unwiſe ſenſuall liver to a man in darkneſſe, yet he concludeth them both as vaine in their wayes, and alike in their deaths, for ſo much as both are given to carnall pleaſure, the one by corruption of nature, as knowing nothing better, the other knowing more, but wanting grace to live better, and for want of a right judgement, preferring that kinde of living as the beſt, ſo that by exceſſe he transformes not himſelfe into a beaſt, as the unwiſe and ſottiſh commonly doe.

Verſ. 13, 14, 15. 16.

Note.

He then that is a knowing man, having ſo much government of himſelfe, as that when others coming to good liquor, have none, but drinke drunken like fooles and ſots, yet he will drinke with them very liberally alſo, but either through the ſtrength of his braine, or by taking ſomething to keep him from being drunke, he drinkes not his wits away as they doe; he, I ſay, ſhall in the end notwithſtanding dye, as they do, from the corporeall death, paſſing to that ever-tormenting death in hell fire, although by the way he be in the light of underſtanding, when their underſtandings are darkened through exceſſe, and he hath his eyes ſtill in his head, when they have them ſhut up. And the like is to be held touching them, that follow fleſhly pleaſure with women, ſome are ſo wiſe, that they will not commit Adultery, tery, or Fornication, for which they may be brought in question, and put to shame or charge, but having one wife in one place, they will eftsoones betake themselves to another place, and there get another, and elsewhere another, so cunningly carrying the matter, that they cannot be found out; and likewise cheaters, who live by their wits, will not commit plaine theft, but by cunning devices, get mens goods and estates away from them, as Jezabel did Naboths Vineyard. They shall notwithstanding this their wisdome, meet in death together with the Adulterer, and right-downe simple theft, who have not wit enough many times to hide their wickednesse, but are taken in it by men, and suffer therefore; yea, although a man be so wise that he keeps himselfe from all these abominations, yet if he setteth his minde by his wit to gather worldly goods, having this end, when he hath done, to live in pleasures, although the pleasures, to which he is addicted, bee not taxable amongst men, he shall yet dye, as the foole, that hath kept no moderation, but in all things hath laid loose the reines to his inordinate affection. For the foole, who was so rich, of whom we read in the Gospel, did no more then such wise men, he gave his minde to gather goods, and then to live at ease, to eat, drinke, and be merry all his life after. Luke 12. As Pyrrhus the King of the Epirots, who fought against the Romans, and gat many victories, being asked by Cyneas the Philosopher, what he would do, if he should once have subdued the Romans, and added their Territories to his Dominions? answered, That he would goe on, and subdue other Nations to inlarge his Empire yet more, all over the world: and being asked, What he would doe then? he answered, sit downe and be merry. But of such followers of pleasure and mirth, what shall be the end, we may read in the story of him before spoken of by Luke, to whom it was said, when he was in the midst of his meditations, Thou foole, this night shall they fetch away thy soule from thee, then whose shall those things be which thou hast prepared? And Paul saith, They that live in pleasure, are dead whilst they are alive. 1 Tim. 5. For in our endeavouring to get worldly goods, our mindes must be still alwayes more intent to the getting of heavenly, according to that of our Lord, Lay not up for your selves treasures upon earth, where moth and canker corrupt, but in heaven; Matth. 6. 18. And labour not for the food that perisheth, but that which indureth to everlasting life; Ioh. 6. 27. and if we be not, we shall be judged, as the fore-said foole was, touching whom it is concluded, So are they that are rich in this world, and are not rich in God, they likewise shall lose their soules, if they have but given their mindes to worldly things, and not to heavenly, to take pleasure of that they have themselves, but never studying how to improve it so, as that they may be bidden another day, Enter into your Masters joy, or come ye blessed of my Father, into the Kingdome prepared for you, for I was hungry and ye fed me, &c. Most Expositors. I know, by the wise, understand the wise without the fore-said limitation, holding the meaning to be, that in regard of outward things, there is no more profit in wisdome then in folly, in godlinesse, then in wickednesse, as is further expressed Eccles.9.2. and that so farre forth as man can discerne, they dye alike, if the godly dye comfortably, so many times the wicked dye also, departing like Lambs.

But for so much as Salomon in all this discourse is acting the part of a most wise carnall man, and speakes not, as when he was himselfe before his fall, or after his rising againe by repentance, and such as carnall men call wise, are not the godly wise, for they count them fooles; but the wise in respect of naturall or politicall wisdome, it seemeth cleare to me, that the wise here spoken of, are but the wise according to such wisdome, as he spake of verse 9. saying, also my wisdome remained with me; the wisdome which is in a man, that giveth his minde to the taking of all worldly pleasure, and this doubtlesse is not godly wisdome, but such as carnall men are capable of.

Thus also Olympiodorus, who saith upon those words, that wisdome stood so with him, that he failed not through the same of accomplishing all things, that he propounded to himselfe tending to luxury, pompe and carnall pleasure. Olympiod. One understanding the best wisdome, yet giveth the same sense, Wisdome stood to me, as the word עמד ſignifieth, and what meaneth he by ſaying, it ſtood, but that it ſtood at a ſtay and fructified not; and if ſo, then during the time that a man indued with the beſt wiſdome doth the like, this is but as a cypher in him, and he is not wiſe now but by natural wiſdome, as hath been ſaid, and he that is but thus wiſe, ſhall dye as a foole, that hath not the wit to governe himſelfe, like a man, but doth like a beaſt in following ſenſuall pleaſure.

Verſ. 17. Therefore I hated life, becauſe all the worke that is wrought under the Sunne is grievous to mee. Salomon having by experience found, that there is no felicity in pleaſure, or in worldly wiſdome to manage things ſo as to bring them to ſuch ends, as a man deſireth, becauſe that when death comes, there is no difference between ſuch a wiſe man, and a fool, that hath not knowne how to order and manage things for the beſt, and ſo hath not attained to that which the wiſer man hath done, becauſe death makes them both alike, the one now hath no more wealth, or pleaſure, or wiſdome then the other: he ſaith, that he hated, that is, loved not his very naturall life in this reſpect, nor tooke any pleaſure in it, whereby he intimateth, that no man of the like minde ever ſhall, if he doth but take the ſame, that he did into ſerious conſideration; for although there be ſome joy for a time, yet this joy is nothing, becauſe but momentany, being all ended, when death cometh at the furtheſt; he that hath gotten moſt, either of the gifts of nature, or of fortune, as we ſay, having no more, then he that had leaſt; and if it ſhall ſeem otherwiſe, becauſe he that hath gotten much here, hath much to leave to his childe, when he is Verſ. 18,19 dead and gone, but a poore man hath nothing, this he ſheweth Verſ. 18. is oft-times none advantage, becauſe he cannot tell, whether he will be a wiſe man, or a fool, as his ſonne Rehoboam was; Therefore he ſaith, He hated all his labour, which hee had taken under the Sunne; that is, he had no pleaſure of the great abundance, that he had gotten.

Verſ. 20. Then he putteth a caſe of one that hath laboured in wiſdome, knowledge, and equity, yet to a man that hath not laboured therein, he ſhall leave it for his portion, and ſaith, this alſo is vanity, and a great evill. Thus it happeneth not onely to wretched Miſers, who get their worldly goods by rapine and fraud, but even to righteous dealers, they labour diligently in their vocations, and with much trouble many times get in monies that are due unto them, and when they have thus increaſed their meanes, their heires after their death coming to their poſſeſſions, live thereupon in idleneſſe, pride, and prodigality. And therefore there is no ſort of men, of whom it can be ſaid, that their labours here, for any more then neceſſaries, are not vanity.

But if it be thus, it may be demanded, whether parents ought not to gather, if they can, in the way of righteouſneſſe, for their children?

1 Tim. 5. 8. Sol. Doubtleſſe they may, and ought, if God will, becauſe he that provideth not for his owne, is worſe then an Infidel; onely a meaſure is to be kept, and not ſo great abundance to be laboured after, and if riches well gotten flow in, a man

Note. ought not for this to thinke himſelfe happy, becauſe all is vanity, and as it may fall out, it may prove a great evill, becauſe that by his ſon that ſhall come after him, it may be turned to an occaſion of riot and exceſſe.

Verſ. 22. For what hath a man of all his labour, &c? Here followeth a reaſon, why he pronounced all toyling to get worldly goods vanity, which is further added, he that thus laboureth, hath ſorrow and care all his dayes, and his reſt in the night is many times hindered, and ſo in the end he goeth away from all, that hee hath laboured for.

Verſ. 24. And hereupon he concludeth, There is nothing better for a man, then that he ſhould eat and drinke, and make his ſoule injoy good in his labour. This alſo I ſaw that it was from the hand of God. This is underſtood by Jerom, Albinus, Lyra, and Arboreus, of a ſober and moderate uſe of meat and drinke, for he that

Hieron. Albin. Lyra, Arbor. thus liveth comfortably upon his gettings, and mingleth mirth and pleaſure with his labours, eating and drinking more liberally, ſometimes, with his friends, injoyeth ſome good here of that which he hath gotten; and becauſe many, that toile much to get the world are ſlaves to their wealth, and ſo their covetouſneſſe will not permit them to spend of it upon themselves, he saith to eat and drinke, and to rejoyce thus, is the gift of God; But Hugo, Victorinus, Olympiodorus, Thaumaturgus, and Gregory understand this, as spoken in the person of a carnall Epicure, who setteth his minde to live in mirth and pleasure, freely spending upon himselfe what he hath gotten, thus making sure that he will injoy it whilst he liveth, and so he shall not be troubled at his end to think of leaving so much behinde him, hee knoweth not to whom. And to incourage himselfe in this Sardanapalus-like life, he saith, This is the gift of God, he hath given him wealth to this end, that he might be merry with it whilst he liveth, and this Salomon confesseth, was his minde, Vers. 25. Hugo, Victor. Olympiod. Gregory.

Who can eat, and who can hasten more hereunto then I? And thus these words answer to vers. 1. where he setteth loose himselfe to mirth and pleasure, and to the pleasure of drinking and folly, vers. 3. wherefore I take this to be the best understanding, holding with Victorin. that all which is spoken hitherto, tendeth to the setting forth of the condition of voluptuous men, amongst whom he was a chiefe; profit, and toyling for it night and day, being set forth by the way, and the consideration of the worse case of such men, as are wholly addicted thereunto, putting him on the more thus to satiate himselfe with carnall pleasures. Now having finished this Discourse or Confession of the bruitishnesse of his minde, then he concludeth with a divine sentence, into the consideration whereof he entred upon his repentance, Vers. 26. Vers. 25.

God giveth to a man that is good in his sight, wisdome and knowledge, and joy; but to the sinner he giveth travell, to gather, and to heape up, that he may give to him that is good before God. This also is vanity and vexation of spirit. A man good in the sight of God, is one, that is sincere, and of a good heart, for before men, and in their sight many be good, who are hypocrites, and have foule and evill hearts. To him then that hath a good heart, and truly feareth God, he giveth wisdome, knowledge, and joy; that is, understanding even to manage his worldly affaires for the best, that he may have wherewithall to live comfortably, and he hath joy of it, because he is not so sparing of what he hath, but he spends of it so, as that he wants neither good meat, nor drink, nor apparrell, but liveth plentifully, and is with his worldly goods beneficiall to others that want, whereof he hath true joy, knowing, that what he layeth out so, he putteth into faithfull hands to be one day repaid againe with abundant interest. Vers. 26.

Thus touching the good man; but for the sinner, that is, the covetous wretch, that either getteth his goods by hooke or crooke, or is without end of his greedy desiring of more, so that all his delight is to get abundance, but liveth miserably, pinching his belly, denying to his body or minde competent rest, whilst he is pursuing his covetous ends, upon such a man the Lord layeth this burthen, that he shall heap up great store of wealth, but God by his providence will finally order and dispose of it so, as that it shall come into the hands of him, that is good before God, he sometimes being so over-ruled by Gods providence, that he giveth it to such, and sometime he being by Gods just judgement stript of it, and a better coming to injoy it, as Mordecai did the house of Haman, and the Hebrewes the goods of the Egyptians, and afterward the wealth of the Canaanites. See before Chap. 13. 22. The wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just. This also is vanity, &c. that is, as it is a vanity to gather wealth with much labour, as was before said, and to leave it to one, whom he knoweth not whether he will be a wise man, or a foole, so it is vanity, although he, to whom it is voluntarily left, be wise and good before God; because the getter had nothing all his life long, but travell and griefe, and no comfort of all his gettings, but onely his heire after him hath. Some by the joy before spoken of, which God giveth to him that is good in his sight, understand the joy which he hath of his wisdome and knowledge of God, and of his Sonne Jesus Christ, whom to know is life eternall, and this joy indeed he must have, and heavenly joyes hereafter at Gods right hand, or else he cannot be perfectly blessed, so that his joy of these worldy things is but a part, and the least part of the joy given him, the perfection of his joy lying in things spirituall and Prov. 13. 22. Joh. 17. 3.

and heavenly. Lastly, some by the last words, this also is vanity, understand the good mans having the wealth of another, it may seeme indeed a great benefit to him, but for so much as it is but a worldly and transitory thing, it is but vanity.

CHAP. III.

Vers. 1. TO every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven; A time to be borne, and a time to dye, a time to plant, and a time to plucke up. Salomon having in the two former Chapters shewed all things to be vanity that be under the Sunne, by enumerating some particulars, which are most remarkable, Chap. 1. and further approving the same Chapter 2. in his owne experience in the point of pleasure and profit; now he further illustrates the same by shewing many vicissitudes of things here, which are common, all evincing, things done in this world to be but vanity; for that which is borne, and soone after dyeth, is but vaine, and so is that which is planted, and eftsoones plucked up againe, and the like is to be held of all the other interchanges here enumerated; for those things that are so variable, and of so short continuance are all vaine.

Lavater. Lavater saith, that having before spoken of Gods giving wisdome and joy to the good, and the wealth of sinners unto them, now to make us not to be solicitous about the time, when this shall be, but to depend upon his providence, he saith There is an appointed time for all things. But I rest rather in the coherence going before, this enumeration of particular appointed times for all things, sheweth both that all things here are transitory, and that God makes it to be so, who hath appointed the times of all these changes, and therefore the terme of every mans life is appointed by him, and of planting and plucking up both Trees, and Men, and Cities, and States, for by this phrase, Kingdomes and Nations setting up, or destroying, are spoken of by Jeremiah.

Ier. 18. 10. For the other times, which are twelve more, one opposite to another, Vers. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. I shall need to say nothing, but that the providence of God extendeth to all passages of this life even of least moment, for he setteth a time for all; and that against the opinion of the Stoickes, men may be diversly affected upon divers occasions, sometime with joy to laugh, and some time with sorrow to weepe, Vers. 9, 10. Vers. 9. 10. &c. After these divers vicissitudes or interchanges of times, he falleth upon his old theame againe which he had in hand, Chap. 2. that a man hath no profit of all his labour in this world, yet there is much labour, wherein God would have the sonnes of men exercised, and such a labour, as of which they can finde no end, whereof Vers. 11.

Vers. 11. He hath made all things beautifull in the time thereof, and hath set the world in their heart, so that no man can finde out the worke that God maketh from the beginning to the end. This is one great labour of wise men, they have the world in their heart to inquire into, and to search out the wonderfull things therein, but in many they are puzled so, as that they can never finde them out as long as they live. The Vulg. for these words, He hath set the world in their heart, hath it, He hath delivered the world to their disputation, which is the same in sense. There is two Expositions made hereof:

1. That which hath beene named, from whence we may gather, that it is lawfull for men to set their hearts to study about the wonderfull things in the world, so that herein they goe no further then God permitteth, but make this the end of their study, herein as in a Booke, to see the wonderfull wisdome and power of God to glorifie him accordingly, which because the Gentiles did not, but were vaine in their imaginations, they were given over to a reprobate sense. The things not to be inquired into by men are, the time of the day of judgement, when this world shall be destroyed, or to finde out any naturall causes hereof, or what shall bee done when this time is paſt, for theſe are ſecrets reſerved to God alone, and not belonging to us, as Moſes ſpeaketh. Deut. 29. 39.

2. He hath ſet the world in their heart; that is, to injoy it and the things thereof, but this cannot ſtand, becauſe our hearts muſt not be ſet thus upon worldly things, but heavenly, and we ought to uſe theſe as if we uſed them not. Moreover the word finding out, agreeth not to this Expoſition. But according to the other it is true, mens hearts are ſet both to finde out the wonders of the world, and the parts thereof, but it is ſo large and ſpacious, that they cannot from one end thereof to the other, there being ſtill ſo much of the new-found world unknowne unto us, and great hath beene the toyle of ſome to finde out ſo much, as they have done. Col. 3. 1. 1 Cor. 7.

I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoyce, and to doe good in his life. And that he ſhould alſo eat and drink, and injoy the good of all his labour, this is the gift of God; See the ſame before, Chap. 2. 24. but it is againe inſerted here after the endleſſe labour in prying into the workes of God, without ſatisfaction, verſe 11. to call men off from being unreaſonably ſtudious about things ſo abſtruſe and hidden, the depth whereof they cannot ſound: and if it be ſpoken in the perſon of one living in pleaſure, and placing his felicity herein, as it is moſt commonly held; the meaning when he ſaith, to doe good, is to doe this good to himſelfe, to live merrily upon that which he hath, as if this were the beſt uſe-making of theſe worldly things, it being conceived by ſuch, that they were all made, and were given by God unto man for this end. If in the perſon of a man more intelligent, after his finding out of the vanity and tranſitory condition of all worldly things, as ſome will have it, the meaning is, not to over toile a mans ſelfe, or to diſtract his minde with cares about getting and keeping theſe worldly things, but knowing that he muſt ſhortly leave them all againe, whilſt his life laſteth, to uſe them, as he lawfully may, by living plentifully upon them, and herewith doing good to ſuch as are in want. But becauſe this is not the lot of all men, but of a few, who have this conſideration, he ſaith, This is the gift of God. And for curious prying with ſo much labour and ſtudy into the ſecrets of nature, to give that over as fruitleſſe and endleſſe, being content to know ſo much hereof, as we can, and conduceth moſt to the glorifying of God, who hath made them all, and continueth them in that ornate and beautifull ſtate, wherein they were made, from the beginning, to the end. Verſ. 12, 13.

Now although it be beſt to take the ſame ſpoken Chap. 2. 24. the firſt way, yet here it may beſt be underſtood this way, for all that Chapter to verſe 26. was ſpent in ſpeaking in the perſon of one given to worldly and carnall pleaſure. But verſe 26. of one awakened herefrom, and riſen up by repentance, and ſo proceeding to ſpeake divinely of the times and ſeaſons of all things, and the inſcrutability of Gods workes, and here determining ſeriouſly what is beſt to be done as touching theſe worldly things; and therefore in this ſenſe it is to be taken, as good counſell, and by all rich men to be followed, the reſt of the holy Scriptures, alſo ſpeaking the ſame, where we are ſtreightly forbidden ſo much toyling and caring for worldly things, and bidden to diſtribute, and to doe good with that which we have. And as hitherto in this Chapter, ſo verſe 14. he proceedeth to ſpeak moſt divinely reproving injuſtice and wrong-doing in Judges, and threatning them with Gods judgement, which the ſenſuall liver never taketh into conſideration to ſtand in any awe thereof, Verſ. 14. Note. Matth. 6. 1 Tim. 6. 17. Heb. 13. 15. Verſ. 14.

I know that whatſoever God doth, it ſhall be for ever, nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it, and God doth it, that men ſhould feare before him. This is neither meant of the worlds continuance for ever, as R. Moſes hence inferreth, nor of all particular things, which God doth; for as was ſaid before, verſe, 1, 2, &c. many things, that he doth by men, as inſtruments, continue but their terme or time by him ſet, hee giveth life, and at the time by himſelfe appointed, taketh it away againe; ſo likewiſe for planting and building, &c. But it is meant partly of his great workes of Creation done without the concurrence of ſecondary cauſes, the Heaven, the Earth, the Seas, Verſ. 16, 17. R. Moſes.

Seas, the Sunne, Moone, and Starres ſet to move, as he hath appointed, orderly or circularly, the Angels and Soules of men, they all continue for ever; the ſe two laſt everlaſtingly, the other whilſt the will of God ſhall be for the ſinnes of men, to deſtroy all againe; and it is partly, yea chiefly meant of the Lords doings in moderating and ruling all things here, for he ſaith not, hath done, as ſpeaking of the time paſt, but doth, as of the time preſent, or as it is Heb. יעשה ſhall doe, either now, or hereafter. Whatſoever God ſets himſelfe to doe, in ſetting up, or pulling downe Nations, or particular perſons, in altering the Governments of the world, ſometime giving the Empire of all to one, ſometime to another, the former vaniſhing and being brought to nothing, in ſtirring up warre; and cauſing it to ceaſe againe, in bringing famines and peſtilences, giving health and plenty; And in things of more ſpeciall grace, the going out and prevailing of his Word in Countries and Nations, the converſion of ſoules, and finall ſaving of them for ever; the ſetling of his Church, as upon a Rocke never to be overthrowne, and touching particular perſons ſet into the ſtate of Grace never to fall finally therefrom again; For the gifts and calling of God are without repentance. In all theſe, and the like, what God doth, ſtands ſo firme in all times and ages, as that no contrary power of men, or devills can hinder it, but it is done as he decreeth, as alſo David teacheth, ſaying, His counſels ſtand for ever, the thoughts of his heart to all generations. No man can adde hereunto, neither can it be taken from it; according to this, our Lord ſaith, Which of you by taking care, can adde one cubit unto his ſtature, or make one haire white or blacke? beyond the meaſure or proportion, that God hath gone, in framing our bodies it cannot be gone, do all creatures what they can; neither can we live beyond the time by him ſet, nor can any thing be prevented, which he decreeth and makes knowne by Propheſie, that it ſhall come whether it be good or evill; as David could not by Saul and all his Sycophants be prevented from coming to the Kingdome, neither could the captivity of Judah into Babylon be hindred, and after abiding there ſeventy yeares, none could hinder them from returning; neither could Nebuchadnezzars ſo ſtrong building of Babylon keepe it from being deſtroyed with the King thereof at the time, which God had ſet. To paſſe over many more examples that might bee brought of the Hebrewes being delivered out of Egypt, the Canaanites expelled out of that land, &c. And all this God doth to make us to feare him, for who feareth not him, who hath all power in his hands for ever, in all times and ages, who onely doth what he pleaſeth, and is irreſiſtible in his Decrees, but onely by fearing before him with a filiall feare, to turne from all our ſinnes, at which he is offended, and to enſue all righteouſneſſe; for who ſo doth thus, ſhall be ſure, that hee will doe nothing for his hurt, but make all things worke together for his good alwayes.

Rom. 11. 29.

Verſ. 15. That which hath beene is now, and that which is to be, hath already beene, and God requireth that which is paſt. See the ſame Chap. 1. 9. onely here this clauſe more is added, God requireth that which is paſt. It is ſpoken here next after thoſe words, That which God doth, continueth for ever, &c. as a further illuſtration of the ſame, for that continueth ever, which is, and is done over and over in all times and ages, as the revolution of the Sunne about the world, the blowing of the winds, and the running of the rivers into the Sea, of which alſo Chap. 1.

Lavater. Touching this clauſe added, Lavater ſaith, Gods ſeeing of all things done in times long agoe paſt, as if they were now preſent, is meant: for all things paſt, preſent, and to come, are preſent to him; and hereby his infinite knowledge is ſet forth, whereas we know not things done long before, but onely ſome few of them, which we read of in Hiſtory, Heb. it is, God ſeeketh the perſecuted, the Vulg. Deus inſtaurat quod obiit, according to both theſe the ſenſe is given thus, God will ſeeke up, and reſtore againe the poore perſecuted man, that was, as it were, loſt, and being thus expounded, herein way is made to that which followeth.

Note. Verſ. 16. touching wickedneſſe in the place of judgement, for the comfort of thoſe that ſuffer wrongfully, although in reſpect of men they are in a deſperate con-condition, yet this Almighty and All-ſeeing God will ſee to finde, and bring them to light againe, when their wicked perſecutors ſhall lye in everlaſting darkneſſe, as Verſ.17. implieth.

I ſaid in my heart, God ſhall judge the righteous and the wicked, for there is a time there for every purpoſe, and for every worke. A famous paſſage to ſhew the faith of Salomon touching the laſt day of judgement, when God ſhall right every mans wrongs, remunerating the righteous, who have unjuſtly ſuffered, with glory and joy, and the wicked with deſtruction; and then not onely mens workes, but the evill thoughts and purpoſes of their hearts ſhall be laid open to their everlaſting confuſion, and the good workes, and honeſt uptight hearts of Gods ſervants ſhall be alſo made manifeſt to their everlaſting praiſe; ſee the like after Chap.12.14. and 1 *Cor.*4.4. *Revel.*20.12. For the word there, hereby is meant the place, to which God will come to judgement, whereunto all, both great and ſmall, be gathered from all parts to be judged, which is by many thought to be the valley of Jehoſhaphat, becauſe the Prophet ſpeaks of this. Verſ. 17.

I ſaid in my heart concerning the ſtate of the ſonnes of men, that God might manifeſt them, that they might ſee that they are beaſts. Here Salomon returnes againe, according to the opinion of ſome, to ſpeake in the perſon of a carnall man, living in the pleaſure of ſinne, and without the underſtanding of ſpirituall things; for ſuch men thinke men to be but as beaſts, becauſe they dye as they dye, and when they dye, although they heare of a mans ſpirits returning to God that gave it, as is ſaid Chap.12. yet they not being able to perceive any ſuch thing, take this to be but a phantaſie, and therefore whatſoever pleaſure or joy is to be had of a mans worldly goods, they ſeeke it here, not making account of any to come hereafter. But Lavater takes this to be ſpoken by Salomon, not as lead ſometime away with fleſhly pleaſure drowning his underſtanding, but being wiſe, and having light from the Spirit of God; yet not ſpeaking thus now ex animi ſententia, as he thought indeed, but as it ſeemeth to be to the outward ſenſes and reaſon of a naturall man; For he that immediately before ſpake of all mens coming to judgement, and againe after Chap.12. could not poſſibly ſpeake thus, but in ſuch a way, as hath beene ſaid. For to the outward ſenſes there is a great ſimilitude betwixt men and beaſts divers wayes. Verſ.18. Lavater.

1. Becauſe as the beaſt cometh from the earth, ſo doth man, and at his firſt coming into the world is leſſe able to helpe himſelfe, then a beaſt is.

2. As the beaſt feeds upon things that grow out of the earth, ſo doth man.

3. As the beaſt ſuffers by hunger, and heat, and cold, ſo doth man.

4. Men have diſeaſes, and dye, as beaſts.

5. Many men have evill qualities, as beaſts, one to fight againſt, and to devoure another, Heb. the words are עַל דִּבְרַת which is rendred concerning the ſtate, of דָּבָר a word, but it indifferently ſignifyeth a word, or matter; yet ſome thinke, that the difference, which God hath put between man and beaſt is here pointed at, that a man ſpeakes, but the beaſt is dumbe, and by the ſonnes of men, they underſtand the wicked; and ſo it is, as if he had ſaid, I thought with my ſelfe, that even the wicked before ſpoken of, when he ſaid that wickedneſſe was in the place of judgement, have the gift of ſpeaking, although they groſly abuſe it to pronounce unrighteous judgement, upon this matter I thought, that God will manifeſt them at that time, and judge them according to their doings.

And that by the ſonnes of men the wicked are meant, may well be gathered becauſe when the righteous are ſpoken of, it is ſaid, the Sonnes of God, and here it is Heb. The ſonnes of Adam, that is of the old Adam in the ſtate of ſinne, as is further ſet forth *Rom.*5.14. And he will make them know then, that they are but as beaſts, made to be deſtroyed, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, and Pſal.49. Man being in honour underſtandeth not, but is like unto the beaſt that periſheth. And then that which is ſpoken, Verſ.19. Gen. 6. Jud. Epiſt. v.10. Verſ. 19.

That which befalleth the ſonnes of men befalleth the beaſt, as the one dyeth, ſo dyeth the other, they have all one breath, ſo that a man hath no prehemineence above a beaſt, is ſpoken of wicked men, in what high place or dignity ſo ever they be be in this world, they are qualified like beasts without respect of right or wrong, unreasonably tearing and devouring the guiltlesse, as they doe, abusing their strength one over another. As the beasts therefore dye, and utterly perish when they dye, so doe the wicked without all hope in respect of the life to come, and if any of them have hope they shall be deceived. They doe but live and breath here, as beasts doe, making no better use of their spirit and life then they, and therefore they shall likewise perish for ever. And well were it with wicked men if they might but perish as they, but lye alwayes in the dust, and never come forth againe to judgement, and so suffer endlesse torments, as they shall certainly doe, both according to Vers. 17. and Rom. 10. 14. Matth. 25. but because it was so lately spoken of, it is passed over in silence here; And this of the similitude betwixt a wicked man and a beast, further prosecuted, Vers. 20.

Vers. 20. All goe to one place, all are of the dust, and all turne to the dust; that is in respect of the body, and if they shall thinke, they are of more excellency yet in respect of their soules, it followeth Vers. 21.

Vers. 21. Who knoweth the spirit of man, that goeth upward, and the spirit of a beast, that goeth downward to the earth? where againe for these words, of man, it is Heb. of the sonnes of man, or Adam, that is, how doe such men know it, or can have this hope, seeing they are in all things lead by sense, whereby no such matter can be perceived, but onely by faith, which they want, because they doe not the workes hereof. No argument then can be drawne from hence, that according to Ecclesiastes, men have not immortall soules, for he both speaketh evidently hereof elsewhere, as hath been already shewed, and Chap. 12. 7. and the whole drift of his speaking here, is to debase the wicked, and to shew them both in their life and death to be like unto bruit beasts, howsoever they be promoted in this world, that they might be ashamed and repent.

Iam. 2.

Note.

Vers. 22. Wherefore I perceive, that nothing is better then that a man should rejoyce in his own workes, for that is his portion for who shall bring him to see what shall be after him? As he concluded upon the consideration of mans labour and study to know things without satisfaction, vers. 13. and before upon the consideration of the vanity of profit, Chap. 2. 24. so now upon consideration of the bruitish condition both in life and death of wicked men, who have no regard of right or wrong, so that they may increase their wealth, he concludeth, that such had need to rejoyce, and make merry here with that which they have wickedly gotten, for this is their portion and David likewise saith, that they have their portion in this life, if it be gone, all is gone with them, they shall never see any good afterwards, as the righteous shall, that dye in the Lord; For they rest from their labours, and their workes follow them, and they have comfort thereof. Some expound it otherwise, as that verse 13. of a lawfull taking pleasure of that, which a man hath; but I rest in the Exposition made already, as best agreeing with the premises.

Rev. 14. 13.

CHAP. IV.

Vers. 1. SO I returned and considered all the oppressions that are done under the Sun, and behold the teares of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter, &c. Having spoken of injustice in the place of judgement before, Chap. 3. 17. and after that of the reckoning, to which unjust Judges and Potentates shall one day be called; now, after something touching their bruitishnesse further added, he returneth againe to speake of their oppressions more at large, the oppressed, he saith, had no comforter, and their oppressors had all the power, as it sometimes falleth out, and our Nation above others hath wofull experience of it.

Vers. 2, 3. Wherefore I praised the dead, that are already dead, more then the living. Vers. 3. Yea, better then both, is he that hath not yet been. This is spoken to make us the more out of love with this world, and in love with the world to come, for if there be so much vexation here through oppressions and wrongs, making men weary weary of their lives, who can count it an happineſſe to live here, or be grieved when death approacheth, that he may depart from theſe miſeries? but it is not ſpoken to incourage any man to lay violent hands upon himſelfe, when he is moſt oppreſſed, for he that dyeth ſo, is ſo farre from being better, then one ſtill living, as that his caſe is much worſe, becauſe he dyeth in the devils worke, who was a murtherer from the beginning, and therefore of him they undoubtedly receive their wages: But how is he ſaid to be better then either, that hath not yet beene? Whom doth he meane by him, that hath not yet been? And how can one dead in his ſins, be better then a Saint living? Note.

Divers anſwer diverſly, but the beſt is that of Thaumaturgus of the oppreſſours before ſpoken of, the dead are better then the living, becauſe they ceaſe from ſinning thus any more; but a wicked oppreſſour living ſtill, increaſeth his ſinnes, and conſequently his condemnation, and he that is not yet come into the world, but is to come, is better then both yet, becauſe he is not guilty of ſuch foule ſinnes. Thaumaturgus.

Olympiodorus ſaith, by one dead, is meant one dead unto ſinne, by one living, one living ſtill therein, but before both theſe he is preferred, that hath not yet been, becauſe he hath no ſinne, but the beſt of theſe hath, although not reigning in him, which is a good allegoricall ſenſe, but not literall. Olympiodor.

Lyra by him that is not yet, underſtands an Embrio dying in the womb, or in the birth, becauſe he hath none but originall ſinne, all others actuall alſo. Lyra.

Jerome according to Origen, underſtands it of a ſoule not yet infuſed into the body, becauſe that before this, mens ſoules are in an happy eſtate amongſt thoſe bleſſed Spirits the Angels of God: but this it is ſuppoſed, which cannot be granted, that ſoules were all made at the beginning, and ſucceſſively come into bodies, and ſo from bleſſedneſſe, and purity, to miſery and ſinne. Hieron.

Laſtly, ſome underſtand it onely as a paſſionate ſpeech, and hyperbolicall, as there are many others at ſundry times uttered by ſundry holy men.

And I conſidered againe all travel, and every right worke, that a man is envyed for this of his neighbour, this alſo is vanity; He goeth on to reckon up more things, for which he ſaid at the firſt, All here is vanity. Before went the vanity of pleaſure; 2 Of wiſdome; 3 Of profit Chap.2. 4 The vanity of mutability of things through their entercourſe; 5 The vanity of ſtudy about matters of the world; 6 The vanity of unjuſt Judges, Chap.3. their oppreſſions being further aggravated, Chap.4. 1,2,3. All which he found to be vanities in his owne experience, beſides the vanity of the greateſt worldly things, Chap.1. Verſ. 4.

Now the ſeventh followeth, the vanity of this world, becauſe when a man doth a good worke, for which he expects rather to have love and praiſe amongſt his neighbours, there are ſome yet that envy him therefore, his ingenuity, goodneſſe, and induſtry being counted by them their diſparagement, who either doe nothing, or whoſe workes are evill, as Cains were, when his brother Abels were good, and he hated him therefore.

An eighth particular vanity followeth of an idle fooliſh man, who pineth away for hunger, rather then he will worke, which is meant by eating his owne fleſh. Verſ. 5. Prov.6.10.

A ninth is implied, Verſ.6. Better is an handfull with quietneſſe, then both the hands full with travell, and vexation of ſpirit; that is, contention and trouble to get it, ſee Prov.15.16. Verſ. 6.

A tenth vanity is, There is one alone, and there is not a ſecond, he hath neither childe, nor brother, yet there is no end of all his labour, &c. When he hath more then enough, yet he toyleth, and tarketh, and careth to get more, although he cannot tell for whom: this is a great vanity. Verſ. 8.

Two are better then one, becauſe they have a better reward for their labour, &c. Having ſpoken Verſ.8. of one alone, now he inlargeth himſelfe hereupon, ſhewing in divers caſes that two are better then one. Lavater thinkes it to be ſpecially meant of marriage, in preparing to which the Lord ſaid, It is not good for man to be himſelfe alone, I will therefore make him an helpe meet for him; a true friend, that is, alter idem, another ſelfe, not being yet excluded here, if there be any ſuch to be found, beſides a wife. Verſ. 9. Lavater. Gen.2.

Here is therefore ſome taxation laid upon the man, who being fit for Marriage, preferreth rather to goe alwayes on in a ſingle life to avoid the charge of wife and children, although for the want of chaſtity he burneth with fleſhly luſts, and cannot live continently, he may by this meanes haply grow the richer, and be the more free from the cares belonging to the married, but either his greedy deſire of wealth inſnares him no leſſe with worldly cares, he taking them all now alone, and 1 Tim.6.9. there being none other to beare them with him, and ſo falls into many noyſome and fooliſh luſts, yea, more fooliſh then the married, becauſe he hath none to gather for; or if he be prodigally given, he ſpends both his ſtrength and wealth upon Whores and Wine, and ſo like the Prodigall in the Goſpel, in fine cometh to miſery. I would not yet in laying a taxation of ſuch lone men be underſtood, as if in no caſe I thought it not better to live ſingle, for then I ſhould think contrary to that
1 Cor.7. dictate of our Lord, He that can containe, let him, and to the wiſh of the Apoſtle, that all men would continue as he did, that is, in a ſingle eſtate, being ſingle, or in widowhood, being a Widow or Widower; but where this gift is not given, it is better to marry then to burn. But in neither place is it commended to live ſingle, when the inclination of nature preſſeth to Marriage for the avoiding of Fornication.

Touching the point in hand, That two are beter then one, it is ſhewed, 1. Becauſe they have a better reward for their labour, which holdeth either in the married couple by helping one the other, they get the more, or in two friends of a Trade, the workes whereof one cannot well doe alone.

Verſ. 10. 2. If one falleth, the other is ready to helpe him up, which is alſo true in both wayes before ſpoken of.

Verſ. 11. 3. With two there is heat, ſpecially meant of man and wife, and is ſome reproofe of thoſe, that without neceſſary cauſe get a cuſtome of lying apart the one from the other.

Verſ. 12. If any one prevailes over him, two ſhall riſe up againſt him, and a threefold cord is not eaſily broken, that is, both wife and childe, if hee hath any able, for which he ſpeakes of a threefold cord, and after ones prevailing againſt him, of two more withſtanding him. According to this it is ſaid in the Pſalmes of one that hath ſonnes, Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of them, he ſhall not be aſhamed when he ſpeaketh with his enemy in the gate. If two alſo travell together, a Robber by the high way will not be ſo ready to ſet upon them, as upon one alone. Herein is alſo commended unity and concord, and ſociableneſſe amongſt men in a good way, although not as ſociableneſſe, or good fellowſhip in drinking to exceſſe is now adayes accounted. A people living in unity is ſtrong againſt the common enemy, but a Kingdome divided againſt it ſelfe cannot ſtand; ſo likewiſe an houſe or family, brethren living together in unity, are as many ſticks bound together which cannot be broken, but being divided any man may eaſily breake them one by one.

Verſ. 13. Better is a poore and wiſe childe, then an old and fooliſh King, who will not be Verſ. 14. admoniſhed. Verſ. 14. For out of the priſon, he cometh to reign, whereas alſo hee that is born in his Kingdome becometh poor. Here is the eleventh particular vanity, of a fooliſh man advanced to the dignity of a King. To be in higheſt place and dignity is counted the greateſt happineſſe in this world, but if one be ſo dignified, who is fooliſh, but ſo wiſe in his owne conceit, as that he diſdaineth all counſell and admonition of others, as taking himſelfe to be wiſer then they all, a poore wiſe childe is better then he, although he be old, becauſe he receiveth inſtruction from his teachers, and increaſeth in wiſdome, ſuch a King deſpiſeth inſtruction, and ſo goeth on in his owne fooliſh wayes, whereupon he is hated of his ſubjects, and in time deturbed from his Kingdome, and either caſt out, or be deſtroyed, as the next words ſhew, For out of the priſon he cometh to reigne, whereas he that is borne in his Kingdome becometh poore; that is, the foreſaid poore wiſe childe, although he be for a time held in a very low condition, yea be caſt into priſon, as Joſeph was, cometh to reigne, and the fooliſh old King, though borne a King, becometh poore, being for his fooliſhneſſe and tyranny, pride, and obſtinacy, put downe and ſtript both of his dignity and wealth, as Manaſſeh was, and as ſome Kings of England, Edward the ſecond, and Richard the ſecond have been: and ſome are ſometimes ſo ſerved without any juſt cauſe, as Henry the fourth, Emperour, againſt whom his ſonne Rodolphus, by the inſtigation of the Pope, rebelled, and brought him at length to ſuch poverty, that he wanted wherewithall to ſuſtaine his life. And contrariwiſe godly Valentinian was brought out of the priſon and made Emperour; as for poore men, and of infirme condition, David was ſuch an one, and Jeroboam, and divers Roman Emperours, one a Potter, one a Cow-herd; ſome common ſouldiers before, were afterwards choſen, and made Emperours. A place to be ſeriouſly thought upon by all Kings, that they may above all things begge wiſdome of God, as Salomon did, to rule aright, and not be proud or ſelf-conceited, but hearken to good counſell of their faithfull ſubjects, duly conſidering, that no King ſitteth ſo ſure upon his Throne, but that if he hath not a care, he may ſoon be brought down, that he may never be high-minded, but alwayes fear, as he is pronounced bleſſed, that feareth alwayes, for this is true, not onely in meaner perſons, but even in Kings and Emperours. Popiſh writers, ſaith Lavater, expound it allegorically of ſoules going from the priſon of purgatory to reigne in the Kingdome of heaven; but none of the Ancients expound it otherwiſe, then hath beene ſaid, Gregorius, Neoceſarienſis, Gregor. Antiochen. Olympiodorus: and although Origen and Victorinus allegorize hereupon, yet they have not a ſyllable touching Purgatory, which ſheweth that this was a later invention.

Note.

Lavater.

To conclude, Job 36.8. it is ſaid of Kings, that are in fetters, and then learne diſcipline, that God bringeth them againe to a proſperous eſtate, but if not, hee deſtroyeth them, according to which ſome underſtand this, of a Kings coming out of priſon to reigne, whereas through his folly before, hee was brought downe and became poore, and I ſee not but that it may be underſtood either way.

I conſidered all the living that walke under the Sunne, and the ſecond childe that ſhall ſtand up in his ſtead. Verſ. 16. There is no end of all the people, even of all that have beene before them, they alſo that come after, ſhall not rejoyce in him, this alſo is vanity &c. He goeth on to ſhew, that it is not happineſſe, but vanity and vexation to be a King, I conſidered all the living, &c. Hereby it appeareth what a vaine and vexatious thing it is to be a King, for whether we conſider the people now living, or thoſe that are to come, and their divers judgements and affections towards the Kings ſon, who reigneth in his ſtead, or any other ſet up in his place, when he for his fooliſhneſſe and obſtinacy is put downe, both they that goe before this, who then cryed him up, after a while ſpeak againſt him alſo, and they that come after, are not ſatisfied with him, they all generally yet had rather be at liberty to doe every one what is good in his owne eyes. The conſideration of this, made one King, of whom Valerius Maximus writeth, to cry out, O infælicem pannum, &c. O unhappy cloath! ſpeaking of his Royall Robes, thou art not worthy to be taken up, if any man knew, to what evils thou art obnoxious, thus Lavater; Junius rendring it, the people joyning themſelves to that ſecond childe ſet in his place; that is the poore wiſe childe, ſaid before to be better then a fooliſh old King, and coming out of priſon, that is, greateſt obſcurity, to reigne; I have ſeene them, ſaith he, when the old King was put downe, and hee was thus advanced, yet not long rejoycing in him neither, ſo mutable in their mindes are people, and ſo miſerable in this reſpect are Kings that reigne over them. And this is not a thing that comes to paſſe for a time, and away, it being otherwiſe afterwards, but in all times and ages, for which it is added, Verſ. 16.

Lavater.

Junius.

There is no end of all the people; that is, they who are thus diſpoſed cannot be ſaid to have been, or that they will hereafter be of another minde, when the preſent generation is worne out, and another cometh on, for as they that were before, have beene in this reſpect, ſo will they be that come after in all times and ages.

CHAP. V.

Verſ. 1. KEepe thy foot when thou goeſt to the houſe of God, and be more ready to heare, then to give the ſacrifice of fooles, for they conſider not that they doe evill. In the Hebrew this verſe is joyned to Chap. 4. and this not begun till the next words; thus alſo Vulg. and Lavater, but Cajetan and Junius, whom New Tranſlation herein followeth, beginneth this Chapter thus, becauſe theſe words are of the ſame argument with Chap 5. For the coherence, having ſpoken of Kings, and their vanity, who are the higheſt amongſt men, now that we may attaine a better Kingdome in Heaven, he teacheth us how to ſeek this by coming to the houſe of God, wherein, as Olympiodorus noteth, he implicitly taxeth another vanity, that is, of hypocrites, who ſhall be as ſure to fall from their hopes of that Kingdome, as a fooliſh King that will heare no admonition from his earthly Kingdome; for who are hypocrites? but they that come to the houſe of God without an heart to learne his will, and to become obedient thereunto, pleaſing themſelves highly in a ſhew of piety, when wickedneſſe is in their hearts and lives: If thou wouldeſt doe thy ſelfe more good by coming, and indeed attain this Kingdome, take heed unto, or keepe thy foot, that is, from going in any evill way, contrary to that which becometh a worſhipper of God; For he that calleth upon the name of the Lord muſt depart from iniquity, therefore be more ready to heare, have more care of hearing the word there taught, and obeying it, then of bringing ſacrifices, which they that hearing and obey not, doe fooliſhly: as Samuel told Saul, when he ſpared the beſt cattell of the Amalekites, as he ſaid, for ſacrifice, For obedience is better then ſacrifice; Therefore he calleth the ſacrifice of evill doers, the ſacrifice of fooles, and although they conſider it not, their doing of evill in thus bringing them by ſacrificing, thinking to amend their evill doing, ſaith Jerome, and not by obeying.

Olympiod. Note.

1 Sam. 15.

Verſ. 2. Be not raſh with thy mouth, nor be haſty in thy heart to utter any thing before God, for God is in heaven, thou upon earth, therefore let thy words be few. This is firſt, and moſt properly to be underſtood of ſpeeches uttered in the houſe of God, of which he ſpake verſe 1. And becauſe all that we ſpeake is before God, for we can goe no whither from his preſence, it may be extended to ſpeaking any where in generall. Here then warning is given firſt to thoſe that teach in the Congregation not to utter any thing of their owne heads, but what they bring good proofe for out of the word of God, they that doe otherwiſe, and obtrude their owne imaginations to the people for doctrines may ſay, that they are Apoſtles of Chriſt, but they ſhall be found lyars, as the Church of Epheſus is ſaid to have found ſome to be. And as he that teacheth, muſt not be raſh to utter his owne phantaſies, ſo not to ſpeake in the Church without premeditation, leſt he through his idle multiplying of words without matter, or any regard to decency of phraſe, be counted an unworthy Preacher, and a fooliſh babler.

2 Here is an item for us, when we pray, to keep us to our Patterne, the Lords Prayer, neither asking any thing that we cannot ground hereupon, nor multiplying words by drawing out our Prayers into a great length, after the manner of heathens, and hypocrites, of the one of which, it is ſaid, They thinke to be heard for their much babling, of the other, They devoure widowes houſes, and for a colour make long prayers: And againſt unpremeditated preaching, Study, ſaith Paul to Timothy, to ſhew thy ſelfe a work-man, that needeth not to be aſhamed dividing the word of truth aright.

Matth. 6.

Matth. 23.

2 Tim. 2. 15.

3 Judges alſo ought not to be raſh in paſſing ſentence upon any caſe, that cometh before them, for they judge for God, and God is preſent amongſt them, and ſo, they alſo ſpeake before God in a ſpeciall manner.

4 In our making vowes, or ſwearing, we muſt not be raſh, but proceed with due conſideration, as Jeremiah teacheth, ſaying. Thou ſhalt ſweare the Lord liveth in truth, in judgement, and in righteouſneſſe.

Jer. 4. 4.

5 In our common talke, he that is raſh and haſty to ſpeake, uttereth a multitude of words, and a multitude of words cannot be without ſinne, as hath beene taught before in Proverbs; wherefore let every one ſaith James be ſwift to heare, ſlow to ſpeak, and our Lord ſaith, Of every idle word men ſhall give account at the day of judgement, and if of idle words, much more of blaſphemies, curſings, railings, lying, and filthy talking. Iam. 1. 19. Matth. 12. 36.

6 Here is a warning againſt ſpeaking unreverently of the Word or Workes of God, or cenſuring his doings either in judgement or mercy, as if any Act, Word, or Decree of his were unjuſt, or untrue, who is Truth, Goodneſſe, and Righteouſneſſe it ſelfe. And yet we in our haſte are ready to fault every of theſe wayes, for which we have need to be thus warned, and to thinke upon this warning to repent, and not to doe ſo any more. God is in heaven, &c. It ſtands thee in hand to be ſparing of ſpeech, and not to let thy tongue runne riot, and ſo thou hereby increaſeſt thy ſinnes before God, who will judge thee for thy very words, as Chriſt ſaith, By thy words thou ſhalt be juſtified, and by thy words thou ſhalt be condemned. God is in heaven thence to behold thee upon earth, and to take notice of all thy ungodly ſayings, he is not to be dealt withall, as an earthly judge, who may be corrupted, as being an earthly man like thy ſelfe, and ſo made to connive at thy evill ſpeeches, therefore uſe few words, and then thou ſhalt have the fewer ſinnes; and as in thy common talke, ſo in thy prayers, becauſe he reproveth much babling, and vaine repeatings of the ſame words for want of other matter, there being ſtill a deſire to hold out long in praying, as an inſeparable accident of zeale; but this is not zeale according to knowledge, but a blinde zeale, and therefore vainly gloried in, although zeale and fervency of ſpirit ſometimes cauſeth the doubling and trebling of the ſame petitions and words, as our Saviour Chriſt in extremity prayed in the ſame words three times over a little before his Paſſion, and Daniel iterateth the word Lord often in the ſame Prayer. Dan. 9.

Moreover, God is ſaid to be in Heaven, in reſpect of his infinite Glory, able to ſtrike fear and reverence into any man that ſpeakes before him, and to make him uſe few words, as the Majeſty of a King cauſeth reverence in thoſe that are before him.

Laſtly, to intimate his power to puniſh ſuch as any way offend him, ſeeing there is not an Angel in heaven, but is of wonderfull great power to deſtroy great numbers and hoaſts of men, as was proved upon the hoaſt of proud and blaſphemous Sennacherib, and upon Pharaoh, and his people. And for uſing few words, there is a common ſaying, That man is wiſe that ſpeaketh few words, and Xenocrates, a wiſe Philoſopher, being amongſt others, that ſpake many evill words, was ſilent all the while, and being asked the reaſon, he ſaid, That he had often repented, that he had ſpoken, but never that he held his peace. And to prove that few words are a ſigne of a wiſe man, it is added on the contrary ſide, Verſ. 3. Vir ſapit qui pauca loquitur. Nunquam tacuiſſe nocet, nocet eſſe locutum. Verſ. 3.

For dreames come by the multitude of buſineſſe, and a fooles voyce is knowne by the multitude of words. That which a man is buſied about in the day time, is oftimes repreſented to his phantaſie in the night in ſleeping; ſo a foole, and one that hath fooliſh thoughts in his minde, breakes forth into fooliſh ſpeeches, through his being given to talke much, and ſo his folly is knowne, which if hee did hold his peace, would be concealed, and he would ſeeme wiſe, as hath been before taught.

When thou voweſt a vow to God, deferre not to pay it, for he hath no pleaſure in fooles, pay that which thou haſt vowed. Verſ. 5. Better is it that thou ſhouldeſt not vow, then that thou ſhouldeſt vow, and not pay it. Verſ. 6. Suffer not thy mouth to cauſe thy fleſh to ſinne, neither ſay before the Angel, it was an errour, wherefore ſhould God be angry at thy vow, and deſtroy the worke of thy hands? Having commended ſpeaking few words before God in generall, now he giveth a charge according to the expreſſe Law of God againſt vowing, or in word promiſing any thing to God, and not performing it. Verſ. 4, 5, 6. Num. 30.

Lavater underſtandeth this as concerning onely the time, whilſt they lived under the law of Ceremonies, ſaying, That the Ceremonies of the Law may as well be continued under the Goſpel, as making vowes. For things, about which Lavater.

vowes are converſant, are either duties commanded, and to theſe we are all bound by our generall vow in Baptiſme, and if that, and Gods Commandements be not of force to make us doe them, other vowing certainly will not; or they be about indifferent things, the nature whereof is altered by vowing, they being made now neceſſary, which ought not to be; or laſtly, they are about things unlawfull, as was that vow of David to kill Nabal, and all his males, and of thoſe forty men, that vowed not to eat or drink, till they had killed Paul, and the vows that are now made by ſuperſtitious Papiſts to merit ſalvation, as to live a Monaſticall or eremiticall life alwayes, to obey their Abbot, or Prior in all things; although in ſo doing, Parents be diſobeyed by their children, and Maſters by their ſervants, and Magiſtrates by their ſubjects, from under whoſe power theſe Votaries thinke, that they are now gotten. Hitherto Lavater, who referreth alſo for this matter to Peter Martyr in his Common-places, and Wolfgangus Muſculus in his Common-places. But I ſee no ſtrength of reaſon in all that which he ſaith againſt making of vowes now, and performing them, any more then under the Law, onely ſuch things as properly pertained to the Ceremonial law, are not now to be vowed, nor any thing unlawfull, which might never bee done either under the Law or Goſpel, and of this ſort I grant, are Monaſticall vowes, and vowes made to Saints, for it is to God, that we are bidden to vow and performe it, and not to any other; ſo likewiſe Pſal. 51.

And for ſo much as the Old Teſtament is the word of God, and herein it is often preſcribed, and there is nothing ſaid in the New to put an end to this Precept, it is of force ſtill, and not to be counted as ceremonies of the Law aboliſhed by Chriſts fulfilling the things therein prefigured; For the reaſons brought, they are of little force:

For firſt, Although things commanded have a ſufficient tye put upon them, in that they are by God commanded, yet it ſeemed good to his divine Wiſdome to require his people to enter into a Covenant with him by bloud, the more ſtrongly to binde themſelves to keepe them, and as they covenanted, they promiſed and vowed to keep all Gods Commandements alwayes. And whereas he ſaith, our vow made in Baptiſme tyeth us to all things commanded, and therefore particular vowes making after this, are ſuperfluous; he firſt hereby confoundeth himſelfe in his owne ground, that vowes are not to be made, under the New Teſtament, any more then ceremonies of the Law to be held, in that he juſtifieth this vowing. Secondly, if a generall vow once made, it were not lawfull to make particulars after this, then they that lived under the Old Teſtament did an unlawfull thing alſo, becauſe they had all before made a generall, as hath been declared.

Exod. 24. Deut. 5. 27.

2 What reaſon there is, why things indifferent may not be made neceſſary by promiſing them to God upon condition, I ſee not, any more now then in times of old, when they vowed in time of danger, if God would preſerve them, to give ſuch land, or ſuch beaſts unto him, which they needed not to have done, but they being vowed, a neceſſity lay upon them to doe ſo, and likewiſe to abſtaine from wine and ſtrong drinke, haply becauſe they had hereby formerly offended. Only ſuperſtitious vowing is to be condemned, as hath beene aforeſaid, as being a renewing of the Ceremoniall law, and that with additions, of which there is no ground. But for vowing that which is lawful and good, when this is done, we muſt not deferre to pay it; it is ingratitude, ſaith Ambroſe, when God hath done that for thee which thou deſireſt, not to performe that to him which thou promiſedſt.

Verſ. 6. Junius.

Verſ. 6. Suffer not thy mouth to cauſe thy fleſh to ſinne; that is, ſaith Junius, to cauſe thee to ſinne, for in reſpect of nature, we are fleſh, and being regenerate, we are compoſed of fleſh and ſpirit, the one leading to ſinne, the other to righteouſneſſe, and when we ſinne, this is cauſed by the fleſh; and in vowing the mouth, from which the vow or promiſe made to God cometh, but is not performed, cauſeth ſinne through the fleſh prevailing againſt the ſpirit, and hindring a man from doing the good, that he ſhould, and is by ſo ſacred a Bond bound unto. Before the Angel, ſay not it was an errour; that is, before Chriſt the Sonne of God,

God. who is the Angel of the Covenant, before whom all that is vowed is vowed, and if it be not performed, he that ſinneth thus, muſt looke for deſtruction at his hands. Lavater agreeth with Junius about the fleſh put for a mans ſelf, the part for the whole, but by fleſh, he alſo underſtandeth wife or children, who are ſaid to be thy owne fleſh, and by the mouth cauſing thy fleſh to ſinne, he underſtandeth not onely by vowing, and not performing, but alſo by obſcene talke, by curſing, ſwearing, blaſpheming, and lying, and railing, to all which men are moſt apt in drunkenneſſe; and a mans mouth cauſeth him to ſinne, or maketh him guilty of ſinne, when his tongue, as a fire out of the place, ſetteth all things on fire. And by fleſh underſtanding his children, or wife, he ſaith, his fleſh is made in this ſenſe to ſinne, when by his ill example they are corrupted, and doe the like alſo. Say not before the Angel, that is, before the Angels, whom God hath ſet about his people to guard and keepe them, and ſo are alwayes neare unto them, either in their Aſſemblies, or elſewhere, as they are ſeverally aſſigned by their Guardians, which is to be conſidered of, as the forcible motive to take heed of ſinning in failing, eſpecially in our promiſes made to God, which ſuch holy Spirits cannot indure, but will be hereby chaſed away from us, as Bees are by ſmoak, and this I take to be the right meaning of this; And for the meaning of the words following, Deſtroy the workes of thy hands, it is leſt God being offended, curſe thy labours, and ſo in keeping backe a little which thou haſt vowed, all that thou haſt got by the laborious working of thy hand, or forefathers for thee, come to ruine, as it is often ſeene, that devouring things devoted, bringeth a curſe upon a mans whole eſtate to conſume it, and the like is true touching Tythes with-holding, and letting the houſe of God lye waſte through covetouſneſſe, as both the Prophets Haggai and Malachi teach.

Mal. 3. Lavater. 1 Cor. 11. Matth. 18. Hag. 1. Mal. 3.

Forſterus by the Angel here underſtandeth the Prieſt, who is alſo called the Angel of the Lord, where it is ſaid, The Prieſts lips ſhall preſerve knowledge, for he is the Angel or meſſenger of the Lord. Say not it is an error, hereby is noted the manner of men, when they have ſinned, to excuſe even the fouleſt fault, it was my infirmity, I ſpake thus, or thus indeed in my haſte, or in my drinke, but no ſuch excuſes will be taken for breaking of a vow, but deſtruction ſhall goe on notwithſtanding; wherefore let us not extenuate, but aggravate our ſinnes againſt our ſelves, as David did, that we may finde grace and pardon, as he did. Cajetan ſaith, there be three properties of the mouth, to eat, to kiſſe, and to ſpeake; by eating, the mouth cauſeth the fleſh to ſinne through gluttony and drunkenneſſe, when a man being drawne by his taſte running into exceſſe of riot; by kiſſing, when carnall pleaſure carrieth him to adultery, or fornication, or laſciviouſneſſe; and ſpeaking, when either he performeth not his vow, is raſh, and inconſiderate in making it, or any other way, he offendeth with his tongue. Some ſay the fleſh is ſaid to be cauſed to ſinne to imply the weakneſſe thereof, whereby the ſinner excuſeth himſelfe, laying the fault upon his nature, yea, and upon God that hath made him ſo.

Verſ. 7. Is nothing elſe but a concluſion in generall againſt loquacity impugned, verſe 2. and that by comparing a multitude of words for the vanity thereof to dreames.

Verſ. 7.

If thou ſeeſt the oppreſſion of the poore, and violent perverting of juſtice and judgement in a Province, marvell not at it, for he that is higher then the higheſt, regardeth, and there be higher then they. Chap. 3. 16. Having ſpoken of wickedneſſe in the place of judgement, as a great vanity; now after ſome other vanities he reſumeth the ſame argument againe, as thinking that he had not ſpoken enough before, to comfort and confirm us againſt the temptation, wherewith we may bee tempted, that God careth not for the affaires of men, nor what wrongs be done by one unto another, becauſe revenge is not ſpeedily taken upon the wrong doers. But this ſhould ſtay our mindes in this regard, that as amongſt men ſome are higher then others, who oftimes doe afterwards call to account, and puniſh inferiour Magiſtrates; ſo none are ſo high upon earth, that doe wrong, but God, who is above all, conſidereth it, and he hath his Angels, that be higher, then they, ready preſt to doe execution upon them, when the time cometh, that he hath appointed, as upon Pharaoh and his people, that wronged the Children of Iſrael ſo notoriouſly riously, whose first-borne were therefore destroyed all in one night by an Angel, and they were delivered from their sufferings and oppressions. Thus Jerome, Vatablus, Cajetan, Arborensis, Lavater, &c. but Lyra, because it is said in a Province, will have by the higher then they, the King understood, who reigneth over many Provinces: but what if he be unjust also, as he may be, and often is, what a comfort were there to the wronged, if there were none above him to animadvert against his injustice and violence? and if there be no such man higher, as sometimes it falleth out, as when Rebels prevaile, and there is no King, who then shall punish the wrong doers, but God?

Hieron. Vatabl.

Vers. 9. Moreover the profit of the earth is for all, the King himselfe is served by the field. This seemeth to have coherence with Vers. 8. thus, whereas Kings and Judges wrong poore men in judgement, by whom the ground is tilled, to their great discouragement; they doe herein they know not what; for the King and all his subjects must sustaine want of things most necessary, that is, bread, if husbandry be hindred, either by committing to prison husbandmen, or violently taking away their cattell, wherewith this worke is to be done, or unjustly cutting them off, or destroying their corne, as is too much practiced, when violence is exercised, as in Civill wars in a Land.

Vers. 10. He that loveth silver, shall not be satisfied with silver &c. Here the same argument is still continued, as if he had said, there is no reason, why poore men should be oppressed by the high and great ones, as was complained of verse 8. for all this is to get riches to themselves; but herein they shall faile of their end, that is, of being satisfied herewith, as all shall be, that so love riches, that they will get them by right or wrong. Therefore he concludeth this to be a vanity, to get goods together in abundance by hooke and crooke to the indangering of a mans selfe in respect of Gods judgement, and yet not be able to attaine the end of his so doing, viz. satisfaction herewith, as the hydropicall man, that drinketh much and often, and yet is not satisfied, for the love of money increaseth, as much as money it selfe is increased.

Vers. 11. When goods increase, they are increased, that eat them, and what good is there to the owner, saving the beholding of them with their eyes? Here is another reason against unjust getting of worldly goods, as the owners thereof, when they have abundance, are not satisfied, which is one misery; so they have not of them all any more good, but the beholding of great heapes of treasure: but the wealthier and the greater they are, the more servants they must keep about them to devoure them, and then more resort of friends, and for the most part but of Trencher-friends, that love them for that which they have, and the good food which they eat at their charge, but let their goods be gone, and then such friends will come no more at them and much must also be given away. For a full Comment upon this, we may take that speech of Xenophon, of one Pheraulas speaking to Saca, and saying, Doest thou indeed thinke, that I live the more pleasantly, because I possesse more? know, that I never did eat, or drinke, or sleep more sweetly, then when I was poore; Now that I have gotten much, what doth it profit me, onely that I have more to keepe, more to give to others, and the more I keepe, the more businesse I have; For now, many servants looke for meat and drinke from me, many for cloathing, some must have the Physitian. Moreover, one comes and brings me word of my Sheepe devoured by Wolves, another that my Oxen falling from a steepe place perished, or that some disease hath set in amongst my Cattell, therefore I seeme now to my selfe, to be in a more sad condition then formerly, when I had but little.

Lavater. Xenophon Cyropædi.

Vers. 12. The sleepe of him that laboureth is sweet, whether it be little or much that hee eateth; but the fulnesse of the rich suffereth him not to sleepe. Here is a third reason against covetous scraping together of worldly goods, hereby men lose their sleepe many times, when poore men that labour, and have but little to eat, sleep full sweetly; for either their excessive eating and drinking makes them stomacke-sicke in the night, according to Schola Salerni, saying, That thou mayest be light in the night, eat a light supper; and againe, Let thy supper be be light and short, because a great supper hurteth, &c. or their worldly cares, lest they should be robbed, vexation at losses, or studying to increase their wealth, and what fraud to use to this purpose, and the conscience of gaine unjustly gotten sometimes exercises them so, that they cannot rest, and who doth not prize sleep as a great benefit? and if so, why are riches so eagerly sought after? Cœna levis, cœnaq; brevis tibi sit quia magna cœna nocet, &c.

There is a soare travell which I have seen under the Sunne, riches kept for the Owners thereof to their hurt. But those riches perish by evill travell and he begetteth a sonne, and there is nothing in his hand. Here is a fourth reason against getting riches unjustly, they that doe so, get them to their own hurt, for whether are Theeves and Robbers bent to breake through and steale, and sometimes to murther, but to rich men? upon whom is the eye of Tyrants, but upon them, to pick quarrels against them, and to imprison sometimes, and slay them? the low shrubs and sailes escape the dint of stormy winds, when the tall Cedars, and high-hoysed up sailes are blowne downe. Sometimes, a mans owne Children and Servants, for his wealth prove treacherous to him, and make him away; to say nothing of the losse of their precious soules coming hereby, covetousnesse in them being an incurable disease, continuing even to old age, and then increasing more. And some there have been, who have had abundance of Corne covetously hoarded up by them, expecting a dearth, but it proving a plenty, have for griefe and vexation hanged themselves. For the next words, Those riches perish by evill travell, hereby is meant, either by prodigality in sumptuous feasting, or buildings, costly Houshold-stuffe, and apparrel, or in company-keeping, and drinking, gaming, or whoring, or following other Pastimes, or bringing up Children in a prodigall way, or Surety-ship, whereby all is consumed, and so his Heire coming hath nothing, but is poore, and so in worse condition, then the sonne of a poore man, because not used to labour, as he hath been, nor brought up in any course of life to get his living. Oft-times also rich men are proud, and bearing themselves upon their wealth, despise others, and are contentious in Suits of Law, whereby much of their estate is also wasted. Vers. 13. Vers. 14.

As he came forth of his Mothers wombe, so shall he returne to goe as he came, &c. In this, and vers. 16. is a fifth reason; put case that a rich man consumeth not, but increaseth his wealth to the end of his dayes, yet then he goeth naked out of the world, as he came into it, and shall carry nothing away, as Job also saith; He goeth in all points as he came, and what profit hath he, that he hath laboured for the wind? There is no difference, saith Ambrose, betwixt the dead bodies of the rich and the poor, but that those of the rich haply stink more, as being fuller of putrifying matter, through their full & dainty diet: therefore labouring for riches is labouring for the wind, or empty aire. If a rich man hath more cost put about his dead body, when he goeth to the Grave, and some of his money put in together with him, as some have had, yet all this is nothing to him now. because he hath no benefit hereby, and he shall at the last day rise as naked, as the poorest, and come to Judgement. Vers. 15. Iob. 1. Vers. 16. Ambros.

All his dayes he eateth in darkenesse, and hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickenesse. By darkenesse here, as commonly in other places, misery is to be understood, and the rich man is said to eate, and drinke in misery, because there is alwaies something or other to vexe him about his worldly goods; either he hath been robbed, and cannot eate his meat cheerfully for that, or Servants idle out their time, and purloyne from him, which is another vexation, or his Children are too wastfull, or his Wife, or she giveth too much to the poore, or he heareth of losses, or debtors keep not touch with him, or he is by others defrauded of his due, &c. Vers. 17.

Again, it may be also taken, as Lavater hath both, of his retired living, keeping out of company, or so that men may not know where to have him, for feare of being charged by them; or he obscures and hides his wealth, keeping it from the knowledge of men, by pretending that he is poore, and habiting himselfe accordingly; for the sorrow and wrath, which he hath with his sickenesse at the last, whereof he dyeth, it is not only in regard of his pangs, but the troubles about his Lavater.

estate, which then he hath to dispose of; or because he perceiveth his Children, or friends, to stand gaping after his goods, thinking long for his death, by all which he is so troubled, that now, when he hath most need to prepare for his departing, he is most intangled with the world, to the great prejudice of his soule; and this is a sixth reason against greedy gathering of worldly goods, they doe but cause the more sorrow and vexation, even in eating, when all men are wont to be merry, and in sickneſſe, when we have no need of a further burthen to be added by other sorrowes.

The vulgar Latine for sickneſſe hath sadneſſe, but חלי signifieth his sickneſſe, or infirmity, and it may be understood of sickneſſe coming by vexation, and trouble about earthly things; if then there be so many reasons against so earneſtly desiring to gather the goods of this world, what remaineth; but,

Verſ. 18. It is good and comely for one to eate, and drinke, and to enjoy the good of all his labour, that he hath taken under the Sun, &c. which hath been so often spoken of already, that I need not to say any more upon it.

CHAP. VI.

THis Chapter beginneth as the other ended, for there he having pronounced it to be a rich mans portion, to live comfortably upon his wealth in this life; now on the contrary side, he sheweth it to be a great misery not to doe so, but to live sparingly, and at the last to dye full of wealth, and honour, his goods coming into the hands of strangers, as it often falleth out, which is to be understood for want of Children of his owne to inherite them, for which he saith:

Verſ. 1.

Verſ. 3. If a man beget an hundred Children, and liveth many yeares, and his soule be not filled with good, and also that he hath no buriall, an untimely birth is better then he; For hitherto, since Chap. 4. 8. he hath spoken of a covetous man without Children, now he speakes of one, that hath many Children, and he speakes of it, as a great blessing, for so specially under the Law it was, and to be without Children, a reproach; but he that injoyeth this blessing, and the blessing of long life also, if he be a covetous wretch, and cannot bestow a sufficient part of his goods upon himselfe, to live joyfully hereupon, and when he dyeth, to spare charges of a Funerall, will be put into the ground, without any solemne meeting of friends and neighbours to accompany him to his Grave, an untimely birth is better then he; or as some expound it, is so deale withall by his Children, or falling into enemies hands, and being slaine, and let lye in the fields without any buriall: Jerome expounds it either way; for such, as God honoured of old, were honourably buried, as Abraham buried Sarah, his two sonnes, Isaac and Ishmael buried him, and Jacob and Esau, Isaac, all the sonnes of Jacob, him, all Israel, Samuel, &c. therefore it is some part of unhappineſſe in this world, in an ordinary course to be without a buriall; but if extraordinarily through persecution the Saints of God for his sake suffer this reproach, it is an honour unto them, wherein they may glory, if they know that they shall be thus used, as the Apostle Paul gloried in his sufferings, and said, God forbid that I should glory in any thing, but the Crosse of Christ, to be hanged upon which, in an ordinary course, was a curse: but for his sake to be thus, or otherwise disgraced any way, a great favour of God, and an honour.

Lavater.

Gal. 6.

Verſ. 4. For he cometh in with vanity and departeth in darkneſſe, and his name shall be covered with darkneſſe. This and verſ. 5. are generally understood alike of Abortives; but Carthusianus and Hugo understand this, as spoken of the covetous mentioned before, that wanteth a buriall, he cometh into the world with vanity, or in vaine, according to the vulgar, for what vainer thing can there be then such a man? his coming into the world, but living altogether in a toylsome course of life, and then departing in such a manner, is worse then if he had been an Abortive; and that it is spoken of the covetous Miser appeares, because he saith, Carthuſ.

Hugo Card.

His

His name is covered in darkneſſe, whereas untimely births, or ſtill borne Children have no names, neither can they be ſaid to come into the world in vanity, and to depart, for they depart before they come in; it is therefore moſt probably ſpoken of ſuch a Miſer, further to ſet forth his miſery and baſeneſſe in life and death, being without a buriall, when he hath lived long, and laboured for goods, as taking no pleaſure of his gettings; for a life ſo led is in vanity, and ſuch a departing is in darkneſſe, according to the letter, becauſe he is ſo put into the ground in the night, and there being no Sepulchre provided for him, he lyeth in obſcurity, as if he had never been, not ſo much as his name being remembred a ſhort time after, no more then an Abortive that had no name. Verſ. 4.

Moreover he hath not ſeene the Sunne, neither knoweth any thing, this hath more reſt then the other; That is, herein is the wretched man before ſpoken of worſe then an Abortive, not only that he cometh in vaine, and departeth in darkneſſe, and now hath no name, or is not remembred any more then ſuch an one, but alſo for that the Abortive never ſaw the Sunne, nor knew any miſeries of this life, as he hath long done, but beginning to live, and then dying againe, it is at reſt; whereas ſuch a man never reſted, but alwayes toyled and travelled, neither being dead hath he reſt, but is in that utter darkneſſe of the damned, in weeping and gnaſhing of his teeth through torment without end in that burning Lake of fire, and this may goe for a twelfth vanity, further amplified, verſ. 6. Verſ. 5.

Yea, though he live a thouſand yeares twice told, yet hath he ſeen no good, doe not all goe to one place? He had before ſpoken of a covetous mans living long, but not being filled with good, now he mentioneth a farre longer time, then ever any lived here, or can live, two thouſand yeares, if his many yeares before ſpoken of could be ſo many, yet in all this time he ſeeing, that is, injoying no good, through the miſerableneſſe of his minde, why he is now worſe then an Abortive Childe? for all, both long livers, and ſuch as inſtantly dye, after life received, goe to one place; That is, to the earth, and he goeth not thither without much ſorrow and labour firſt indured, this untimely birth without any. Verſ. 6.

All the labour of a man is for his mouth, yet the ſoule is not filled; That is, for meat and drinke, and other neceſſaries of this life, for which a moderate eſtate will ſuffice; but the covetous man, as if he might want hereafter, is not ſatisfied, although he be well provided for, but ſtill would have more, yet he makes no liberall uſe of that which he hath, he eates and drinkes ſo ſparingly, that he dares not fill his belly for feare of want afterwards, and ſo he is unſatisfied two wayes; 1. In reſpect of his appetite, which by reaſon of his empty belly is ever craveing. 2. Of his minde, which is ſtill deſirous of more. Verſ. 7.

What hath the poore, that knoweth to walke before the living? Having ſhewed the end of all mens labour about worldly things, to what end it is, viz. for their bodie, in getting which things yet the ſoule is not ſatisfied; now he cometh to diſtinguiſh men into wiſe and fooliſh; further deſcribing the wiſe man, who notwithſtanding his wiſdome may be poore, although he knoweth how to carry himſelfe diſcreetly before the living; That is, men living together with him, and by an interrogative he doth moſt earneſtly aſſevere, that neither of them hath ought but vanity, if things here below be their only ayme; for a man may be wiſe this way, and yet poore, although of a very civil and commendable carriage amongſt men, and a Foole may be rich; That is, one that knoweth nothing but how to get riches, or hath them left him by his friends, to keep and increaſe them by injuſtice, and wrong, or to ſpend them upon ſenſuall pleaſure, which being ſo, it followeth, that one is not more happy then another for theſe tranſitory goods, that we may not eſteeme of them any otherwiſe, then as of vanities; and if we deſire to be happy indeed, ſeeke after the true treaſure, which will make us perfectly happy, of which our Lord ſpeaketh, ſaying, Lay up for your ſelves treaſures in heaven. Verſ. 8.

Better is the ſight of the eyes, then the wandring of the deſire, this alſo is vanity. The vulgar, It is better to ſee that which thou deſireſt, then to deſire that which thou knoweſt not; but this is altogether from the Hebrew, and agreeth Verſ. 9.

agreeth not to the ſence of the place, New Tranſlation is word for word according to the Hebrew, only הלך walking is rendred wandring, but it is all one, the meaning is, it is better to reſt contented with that which a man hath, although he ſeeth that he hath but little, then to be covetous of more, which not being able to attaine unto he is diſcontented; or if he attaineth to it, his deſire ſtill goeth after more without end.

Lavater.

Thus Lavater, who alſo ſaith; That ſome underſtand it of knowledge in things Spiritual that is ſound, that a man plainly ſeeth by the word, that this is the truth, then a fond deſire after new revelations, which is in phanaticall men, who thinke, that there are other truthes yet unrevealed in the word, whereby they are miſerably carried away into groſſe and pernicious errours, a thing too common in theſe our miſerable times, heretofore in other Countries, now in England, to the making of infinite Schiſmes in the Church, which ſhould be all as one, and walke by one rule.

Note.

Bibliander.

Laſtly, Some take it to be an Objection, is not the ſight, that is, a mans foreſight and providence, againſt the time of old age, to lay up ſomewhat againſt that time, better then to deſire only to be then provided for, that a man may not want, without this providence, which is wanting in many, and ſo in old age they come to miſery? To this Salomon anſwereth, this is vanity, becauſe it is but a pretext of covetous men to colour over their covetouſneſſe; this is a truth, but the words will not beare it here, becauſe they are plainly an affirmation, not an interrogation, and here is no word ſignifying not; for the former, it is alſo a truth; but whether theſe words be ſo to be extended I make a queſtion, becauſe he ſpeaketh here only of worldly things, and not of Spirituall, otherwiſe there will be no coherence with the former, whereas it being the firſt way underſtood, cohereth very well, for ſo much as no man hath in the end more then another of theſe worldly goods, for all came naked, and ſhal goe naked; therefore it is beſt to be content with that which we have, and not covetouſly ſtill wander in out deſires after more and more, for this, as hath been before ſhewed, is vanity, and vexation.

1 Tim. 6. 6.

Verſ. 10.

That which hath been is named already, and it is knowne that it is man, neither may he contend with him that is mightier then he. Againſt that which hath been ſaid of the vanity of the Covetous, that is never content, but ſtill deſireth more, theſe words are oppoſed, as if he had ſaid; It is vaine and impotent man, that wandreth ſo in his deſire of worldly goods, with whom the Lord by his Spirit in me, ſtriveth to take him off from this his Covetouſneſſe, by right and wrong ſtirring him up to increaſe his wealth; neither ought he by going on in this evil courſe, to ſtrive againſt God, who is mightier then he, whoſe wrath he incurreth by ſo doing. And to imply his weakneſſe, he ſpeakes of his name Adam, earth, wherein what ſtrength is there, when a veſſel is made out of it, in reſpect of the Potter that maketh, and breaketh it at his pleaſure.

Lavater.

Upon this Lavater briefly toucheth, but he followeth another, namely, that every man is knowne unto God by name before he is, and therefore having made him, he will doubtleſſe take care to provide for him, and therefore he ſhall not need ſo greedily to deſire and ſeeke after worldly meanes; and if he doth contrary to his will, as the covetous Oppreſſour doth, he greatly over-ſeeth himſelfe, for in ſo doing he ſtriveth againſt one mightier then he, which no wiſe man will doe, for then he ſhall be ſure to goe by the worſt. That when the Lord ſpeaketh of knowing man by his name, he meaneth, that he takes care to provide for him, he proveth by Eſa. 43. Feare not (O Iſrael) for I have redeemed, and called thee by thy name, thou art mine. And Eſa. 40. He calleth all things by their name; and here he alledgeth the example of great men amongſt the Romans, who had their Nomenclatores, or remembrancers of mens names of the City, that they might call every one by his name, the more to ingratiate themſelves with them, and to draw their affections to them; and of Auguſtus Caſar in particular, who uſed to ſalute every Senatour, when he came to their houſe, by their names; but for ſo much as not names, but one name, only Adam, Hebr. (which is the common name of all men, and hath been of old ever ſince the Creation) is ſpoken of, I rather preferre the firſt expoſition, only I adde in ſaying, It is knowne that it is man, Adam, it is man in the ſtate of corruption, that doth, as hath been before ſaid, becauſe that by Adam comes ſinne upon all men, and till we be regenerated, corruption of Nature hath the predominancy in us, to make us in ſeeking to get worldly goods to goe even againſt the Almighty.

Seeing there be many things that increaſe vanity, what is man the better? For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, &c. for who can tell what ſhall be after him under the Sunne? The vulgar, There are many words, and that having much vanity in diſputation; and then it ſeparateth, ver. 12. from this Chapter, making it the beginning of Chap. 7. but Hebr. it is both diſtinguiſhed from Chap. 7. and made part of Chap. 6. and although the word דברים be uſed, ſignifying as well words as matters, yet there is no ground of making out the Tranſlation ſo, it being word for word, for there is a multiplication of words, multiplications of vanity, what remaineth to man? the meaning being in reference to ver. 10. Neither may he contend with him that is mightier then he; if any man ſhal dare to contend with that mightier, who is the Almighty, he may indeed in ſo doing multiply words, but in ſo doing he doth but ſhew himſelfe the more vaine, that will thus take upon him to diſpute with God, and what will remaine, or come hereof to fraile man? ſurely nothing, but the more wrath and indignation from God.

Verſ. 11. Verſ. 12. Rom. 9.

Then another reaſon is added, ver. 12. For who knoweth what is good for man? That is, what man, that ſtriveth, as was ſaid before, knoweth, whether it will be good for him, if by hooke and crooke he could get a great eſtate in this world, labouring in this way all the dayes of his life, which is but as a ſhadow, that ſoone vaniſheth, for he haply makes account thus; That he ſhal ſet up his houſe to ſtand, and flouriſh after his deceaſe: but who can tell him whether it ſhall be ſo or no, ſeeing all things to come are to us uncertaine, and many times the Father increaſeth to very great wealth, but his Children coming after him waſt and conſume all.

CHAP. VII.

A Good name is better then precious oyntment, and the day of death better then the day of ones birth. Here he proceedeth to other things needfull to be knowne, and for our inſtruction, and direction, giving many Morall Precepts, as in the Proverbs, yet not receding from his common theame of vanity to the end of the Booke. Of the preciouſneſſe of a good name ſee before, Prov. 22. 1. where it is preferred before riches, ſo that by all good meanes it is begotten, and preſerved, and he is worſe then a Thiefe, that robbeth a man of his good name, but of this ſee more there; for the next words, it is not to be underſtood, that to all men the day of their death is better, for Dives dyed and went to Hell, and all the wicked dying, death hath dominion over them, as ſaith the Pſalmiſt: but of the righteous, with whom it is, as with Lazarus, that dying was carried by the Angels into Abrahams boſome. And when the faithfull ſuffered Martyrdome, the day wherein was celebrated as their Birth-day, as appeareth by the forme of Prayer then uſed: Grant (O God) that we may imitate their vertues, whoſe Birth-dayes we celebrate; becauſe then they began to live indeed a life laſting for ever, but being borne to live here, is beginning to live a dying life, full of ſinne, and full of miſery.

Verſ. 1.

Concedeo Deus ut quorum natalitia celebramus eorum virtutes imitemur.

The Thracians being Heathens, followed their dead friends to the Grave with Muſick, meerely becauſe they were delivered from the miſeries of this life, out of an imagination of happineſſe to follow after, yet having no knowledge thereof, as the faithfull have.

Amongſt the ancient People of God, the Jewes, we may ſee that they did likewiſe, in the example of Jayrus, when his daughter was dead, he had Muſicians, whom whom Chriſt cauſed to be put out, when he raiſed her to life: And this may be a great comfort to us, when our time draweth near to dye, and keep us from being affected with horror at it, as naturally we be; for when a ſonne is borne unto a man he hath great joy, but the day that a man dyeth is better then that; and being duly conſidered, the righteous ſervants of God have more cauſe of joy, then of ſorrow.

Verſ. 2. It is better to goe to the houſe of mourning, then of feaſting, for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart. This is but a repeating almoſt of the ſame thing; for where the dead lyeth, there is mourning; where a childe is well borne into the world, there is ſome time kept ſoone after with feaſting, for joy thereof; but to that houſe of mourning it is better to goe, becauſe we muſt all come to the ſame: and ſo here is occaſion given to every man to thinke upon his owne death, and to prepare for it by turning now from all his ſinnes, and ſtanding with his light burning, and his loines girt about by holineſſe of life, and heavenlineſſe of mind; as a ſervant that waiteth by night for the coming of his maſter, and by laying up a treaſure in heaven by almeſ-deeds.

Verſ. 3. Sorrow is better then laughter, for by the ſadneſſe of the countenance the heart is made better. This is a further confirmation of that which he ſaid before, that it is better to goe into the houſe of mourning, then of feaſting; for there is mirth, here ſorrow, for the friend departed, and they that are now affected with ſorrow, thinke of their owne death, and therefore prepare for it by repentance, and beginning leſſe to ſet by the tranſitory pleaſures and profits of this life; and ſo their hearts, that were before taken up with theſe vanities, are bettered; of earthly, being now made ſpiritual and heavenly: for this it is, that our Lord bleſſeth thoſe that mourn, for they ſhall be comforted; but againſt thoſe that laugh, he ſaith, Woe to you that laugh now, for yee ſhall waile and weep.

Mat. 5.

Lavater. Lavater, (although for ſorrow, he hath [anger] as the vulgar alſo hath, and the word כַּעַס ſignifieth, and ſo expounds it firſt of anger at ſin) yet he alſo concludeth with that which hath been ſaid. And it is properly meant of a mans owne ſins, at which he that is godly ſorrowfull, hath indignation firſt and chiefly, and then at the ſins of others, looking upon them with an angry countenance: For of this indignation at ſin the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, as an effect of godly ſorrow, ſaying, What carefulneſſe hath it wrought in you? Yea, what clearing of your ſelves? yea, what indignation?

2 Cor. 7.11.

Verſ. 4. The heart of the wiſe is in the houſe of mourning; the heart of fooles in the houſe of mirth. Still hee goeth on to prefer ſorrow, and to condemn laughter; he is not a wiſe man, that thinkes it beſt to ſpend his time in mirth, and pleaſure; but that upon conſideration of his mortality, and coming to an account of that, which hee hath done in the fleſh, wherein he findeth himſelfe very faulty, is ſorrowfull and mourneth therefore: But he that doeth contrariwiſe, taking no care about his being delivered from ſinne; but ſpends his time in jollity and mirth, is a fool, and with the fool in the Goſpell ſhall looſe his ſoule.

Luk. 12.

Verſ. 5. It is better to heare the rebuke of the wiſe, then the ſong of fooles. Some are greatly taken with the flattering ſpeeches of thoſe that ſpeak them alwaies faire, but if any dare be ſo bold, as to reprove them for their ſins, they have indignation and wrath at it; but this is better for them, if their eyes were opened to ſee it; becauſe that by fooliſh flatterers they are made to pleaſe themſelves in their evill wayes, till ſudden deſtruction cometh upon them; but being reprooved, if they be not ſtout and proud, but will hearken to it, there is ſome relenting and amendment of their lives wrought in them. It is the ſame in effect with that, which was ſaid before in the Proverbes, He that rebukes a man ſhall finde more favour at the laſt, then he that flattereth with his tongue.

As

As the crackling of thornes under a pot, so is the laughter of a foole, Having spoken much in the commendation of sorrow, and against laughter, now he concludes, shewing how vaine all the mirth and pleasure of the wicked is, it is but as the crackling of thornes, when they are set on fire, and flame out; for as this is over againe in a short time, but makes a great shew for the present; so the prosperity and merry life of the wicked shal soone have an end, howsoever they have flanted it out in bravery and feasting for a time, and in worldly pomp and glory; that we looke no otherwise upon them in the midst of all their honour and pleasure to envie them, as happy, and to be discontented with our mediocrity: but considering how soone this their pleasant life fadeth, count it as nothing; but if we have Grace, though we be poore, rejoyce herein, for the riches of our faith, which indure for ever. Vers. 6. Jam. 2.5 Mat. 6. 18.

Surely oppression maketh a wise man mad, and a gift destroyeth the heart. Having commended the reproaches of the wise, now he cometh to shew, that wise men have so little thankes sometimes at the hands of those, that they justly reprove, and seeke to turne from their evil wayes, that they are oppressed by them, either having mulcts of the Purse laid upon them, or being imprisoned, or otherwise debased therefore: but in such case to be oppressed makes a wise man mad. Vers. 7.

The vulgar, Calumny troubleth a wise man, and destroyeth his strength: but the Hebrew word העשק signifieth first, to oppresse by force, then to calumnate; and in the next clause, a gift is wholly omitted, which is Hebrew, and so it is rendred, as if one thing only were pointed at here, which troubleth a wise mans minde, and makes him do things unseemly, whereas they be two, Oppression and Gifts; for as some being reproved, oppresse, or calumniate, so others to mitigate this austerity, and to worke upon the wise so, as that they may not once open their mouthes to speake against them, give gifts unto them, and then they can have no heart to doe it; as in the other case, they grow sometimes outrageous, and doe like Mad-men: As Moses, when the people oppressed him with their calumnies for want of water, brake out into such impatience, that God was offended with him therefore, and gave sentence against him and Aaron, that they should not come into the Land of Canaan; it is not then here said, that Oppression makes a wise man mad, as if he might be so, but that through infirmity of nature they are so, although generally never so meeke, as Moses is commended to have been; that we may labour to be more strengthened, and neither be overcome and made to desist from our duty of reproving, although we reap nothing but hatred and reproach for our labour, nor for any provocation by wicked oppugners breake the bounds of moderation, howsoever we be offended; Nor lastly, by gifts have our hearts so taken, as not to have any heart now more to reprove so good and beneficiall friends; for if we doe the one, we shal no more be counted wise before God, but mad and phantastick; if the other, not to have an understanding heart, but an heart destroyed, and consequently life, because the heart is the seat of life, and so the wise, that was alive before, is dead, and in danger to dye eternally. Hieron. Note.

Some understand it, as meant of distraction for the oppressions of others, through sympathie, and fellow-feeling of their miseries, for which their hearts faile them, as it is commanded, that we should be affected to those in bonds, as if we were in bonds with them; but howsoever the first of these may stand, the godly-wise are extreamly passionate at the miseries of their fellow members; and he is not truly godly, that is not. The second yet cannot be made good, because the effect of a gift, and not of oppression is secondly spoken of, and therefore the first exposition is to be preferred in both clauses, and not this, that holdeth not so well in either. Olympiodorus. Hebr. 13.

The end of a thing is better then the beginning of it, and the patient in spirit, then the proud in spirit. This I take not to be spoken without some coherence with vers. 7. where the infirmities of wise men are laid open, that betray themselves at the last, although they appeare not a long time, yet being provoked unreasonably, or dealt withall by gifts, to stop their mouthes, they are at length through the impatience of their natures, either made mad, or luke-warme, that Vers. 8.

were before diſcreet in reproving, and would not ſpare in this way, when need was, either friend or foe. Now touching theſe, he ſaith, The end of a thing is better then the beginning; ſuch a man did well at the firſt, but in the end he foulely falleth. Therefore to be patient in ſpirit is better then to be proud, that will not beare much, but thinkes it the more credit to be revenged; and if we could get this ſpirit of patience, we ſhould never be mad at the wrong-doer, whatſoever we ſuffer, Mat. 23. 13. and ſo the end would be with us, as the beginning, and he that in a good way indureth to the end ſhal be ſaved. Some begin in the ſpirit, but end in the fleſh, as the Apoſtle complaineth, they run wel at the firſt, but not to obtaine; therefore let no

Verſ. 10. fooles; of which ſee before, Prov. 14. 17. 16. 32. Say not thou, what is the cauſe that the former dayes were better then theſe, for thou doſt not inquire wiſely concerning this. Having ſhewed it to be one point of wiſdome not to be impatient, now he toucheth upon another, for in ſaying, thou doſt not wiſely to inquire after this, he intimateth, that it is wiſdome not to inquire, why the former times were better, theſe worſe, as we are ready to complaine; Oh the miſerable times that we are falne into, as challenging God therefore, and not conſidering the cauſe to be in our ſelves, by reaſon of our ſins; he that is wiſe, doth not thus, but lookes at his owne and the ſinnes of others in theſe worſt times, as the cauſe of all our miſeries. It is true, our oppreſſions are greater by farre then in former times, but they are no greater then our ſinnes deſerve, all things be dearer, the hearts of the rich are more hardened againſt acts of charity, and communicating their goods
Note. to their inſtructours. But it is no wiſdome to inquire what is the cauſe, as ſome doe, imputing it to the change of religion: but it is true wiſdome to take notice, how much in Morall things we are degenerated, in the midſt of our light, from that, which our fore-fathers were, in the midſt of darkneſſe, they were pious according to their knowledge, we prophane, or hypocriticall; they plaine dealing, we fraudulent; they hoſpitable, we unhoſpitable; they loving to one another; we malicious; they very abſtemious, and faſting often, we riotous, and intemperate. To looke at theſe things, that every one may amend one, is wiſdome indeed, but not otherwiſe to inquire what is the cauſe, without making further uſe of this our inquiry, as moſt doe, yea, although they come to the acknowledging, that ſinne is the cauſe; for as much as this is all the effect of their inquiry, but no reformation here-from followeth.

Mat. 25. payed, an infinite reward at the laſt, and they that doe ſo, may be ſaid to ſee the Sunne, it being meant the Sonne of Righteouſneſſe in the poore, that repreſent him, craving releife for his ſake.

Some underſtanding the profit here ſpoken of, to be the profit, which the poore have from rich men, that are charitable, expound theſe words, It is profit to them
Hieron. that ſee the Sunne thus, to the living in this world; for they that live here, ſee it, Albinus. they that are dead ſee it no more: but Jerom, and Albinus, and moſt are for the former, and it agreeth beſt, and in the words ſo underſtood there is moſt incourage-

ment to rich men to diſtribute, and give hereof to the poore; or if by ſeeing the Sunne, we underſtand the living here, it profiteth them, but not the dead; if thou wouldeſt beſtow thy whole inheritance upon ſuch, as would pray for thee, thou ſhouldeſt be nothing profited hereby; and therefore we may ſee, what fooles the Popiſh Prieſts make their Proſelytes, in perſwading them to beſtow much upon them to ſay Maſſe for them, and to pray for them from time to time, after their departure out of this life. Note.

It may alſo be rightly inferred, if it profits only the living, a courſe is to be taken whilſt we live, thus to benefit our ſelves, now giving, and not keeping all, as long as we can, and then by our laſt Wills bequeathing it to the poore: we muſt give, what we wil give, in our life time, and ſo if a man ſhall leave ſomething Annuall alſo to them afterwards, it will be to the profit of his ſoule; now an inheritance is ſaid to profit them that ſee the Sunne, implying, that to fooliſh and blinde men, ſuch as the wicked are, it is no profit, but an hurt, they are hereby ſome of them made more covetous, ſome prodigall and vaine in the courſe of their lives, ſo as they would not have been, if they had been poore. And laſtly, Wiſdome is not ſaid to be good with an inheritance excluſivè, as if that wiſdome, which is in a poore man, were not good, for the contrary hath been taught before; but it is ſaid to be ſpecially good, when riches are added for the reaſons before ſaid, and becauſe the rich beare great ſway in the Common-wealth, and therefore being wiſe he may by his power and countenance be a meanes of much good, for the keeping of men in good order, and ſuppreſſing ſinne.

Wiſdome is a defence, and money a defence; Here it is proved otherwiſe, that wiſdome and riches concurring are a great benefit, they are a double guard, as it were, about a man; by wiſdome a man fore-ſeeth dangers, for a prudent man ſeeth the plague, and hideth himſelfe, When fooles goe on and are puniſhed, and riches are as a ſtrong City, as hath been taught before in the Proverbs, Hebr. it is in the ſhadow of wiſdome, and in the ſhadow of money; but the word ſhadow is put for a defence, as where it is ſaid, He ſhall be under the ſhadow of the Almighty, but the excellency of wiſdome is in this, that it giveth life; riches of themſelves are not good to any man, but evil, if he, that hath them, wanteth wiſdome, that is, Grace; For as Auguſtine ſaith well, the goods of this world are good to the good, but evil to the evil, but when a wiſe man hath them, he improveth them ſo, as that he hereby layeth a foundation of living happily for ever, by doing good herewith; as the unjuſt Steward, when he ſaw that he muſt be put out of his Stewardſhip, dealt wiſely with his Maſters Debtors, by forgiving to one ſo much, to another ſo much, and ſo provided well for himſelfe to live, his Stewardſhip being ended. But if any man thinketh hereby to merit life, he not following the rule given by Chriſt, When yee have done all theſe things, ſay, we are unprofitable ſervants, we have done but that which was commanded; he is a foole, and not wiſe, ſeeing life cometh not for doing good, as a reward of our merit, but ex abundanti, out of Gods infinite mercy, that he may therefore be for ever glorified, and praiſed. Conſider the worke of God, who can make that ſtreight, which he hath made crooked? Of this ſee before, Chap. 1. 15. Now it is againe propounded to our conſideration, that God only may be acknowledged to have power, and all men infirme and impotent, to humble us, and to make us ſeeke to him, when any thing is perverſe, or crooked, in the Church, or Common-wealth, in the body, or minde, to rectifie, and ſet it to rights. But it is to be underſtood, that God maketh no man to be of crooked and perverſe manners, only he is ſaid to harden, and to give over to a reprobate ſence, by with-drawing his Grace upon mens voluntary taking into abominable courſes, againſt the light which they have, which being done, they have evil concupiſcence enough naturally in them, to draw them away to ſinne, and to obſtinate going on herein, turning the goodneſſe of God, which ſhould move them to repentance, into an occaſion of hardening, as Pharaoh did, of which I have ſaid more, Rom. 9. In the day of proſperity rejoyce, but in the day of adverſity conſider; God Verſ. 14.

hath alſo ſet the one againſt the other, that man ſhould finde nothing after him. The ſcope of this place is, to teach us in all eſtates to carry our ſelves well, in proſperity joyfully praiſing God, and being comfortable, taking part of that, which God hath given us, to make our hearts merry withall, ſo farre as ſtands with temperance, and chriſtian moderation, of which the Apoſtle ſaith; Rejoyce alwayes in the Lord, let your moderation be known to all men; we are not then bidden to be merry to exceſſe, as if God had proſpered us to this end, but in proſperity remembring, that adverſity is at hand, and that theſe two have their turnes, that we may ſo rejoyce in the one, as not even then to forget the other, but by thinking upon our fickle condition here, through the feare of God moderate our ſelves, leaſt our proſperity be the ſooner turned into adverſity; and if we doe ſo, when adverſity cometh, let us not be dejected, as men without hope, but conſidering the intercourſe of proſperity and adverſity, one being eft-ſoones ſet againſt the other; ſo that he, who is in adverſity now, may hope through Gods mercy ere long to come out of it, and live proſperouſly againe, as Job, Joſeph, and David did; be comforted in our adverſity, in expectation of the like favour, and ſo be kept from evill courſes, which the wicked take into being in miſery, either ſtealing, or ſeeking to the Devil, or making themſelves away through deſpaire and diſcontent. For the laſt words, that man might not know any thing after him; That is, ſaith Lavater, after this viciſſitude of things made by God, man might not finde any juſt cauſe of complaint, he might not know any thing to ſay againſt God, although he endureth much miſery here: for who can ſpeake againſt him, that if he ſendeth adverſity for his ſinnes or triall, is ready againe eft-ſoones, if he be ſought unto, and truſted in, to ſend proſperity?

Lavater.

Hieron. Jerom, God ſends adverſity and miſery, and bringeth downe from proſperity, when he is offended, ſetting the one againſt the other, that man might not know any thing, but what he hereby learneth of him, that proſperity ſhall be to ſuch, as feare and love him, but adverſity to ſuch, as ſinne againſt him, that he may, by ſeeing this to have been his courſe of proceeding in all times and ages, be ſtirred up to live in his feare, and deterred from evil, and thus this verſe cohereth with the former, None can make right that, which God hath made crooked; man knoweth not any meanes how to doe this, that is, when all is miſerable, and diſorderly, ſo that he hath no pleaſure herein, but all griefe and ſorrow, he knoweth not how to rectifie things, but becauſe God knoweth, and doth it, upon mans repentance, turning adverſity into proſperity, he is taught hereby to conſider, how this favour may be obtained, and doe accordingly.

Olympiod. But of all others that is beſt, which Olympiodorus hath, That man might not know after the manner of God things to come, proſperous, or adverſe, which he hath appointed to come by turnes; for if he ſhould, he would not feare God, or being in adverſity ſeeke to him, but looke for proſperity after this by courſe; and if no man hath this knowledge of what ſhall be, but God only, and what he foreknoweth, and fore-ordaineth ſhall come, whether it be proſperity, or adverſity, which may be taken for the crooked before ſpoken of, ſurely man knoweth not how to righten it, but God only, that we may feare before him; only ſupply this expoſition thus, God in his ſecret counſell hath ſet one againſt the other, and not revealed this to men in common, that he might be kept ignorant, of what ſhal happen in this world, and ſo ſtand in continuall awe of God, who alone hath power to make his eſtate proſperous or miſerable, for who ſo doth thus, ſhal be ſure, that all ſhal worke for the beſt unto him.

Verſ. 15. There is a juſt man that periſheth in his righteouſneſſe, and a wicked man that prolongeth his life in his wickedneſſe; That is (ſaith Lavater) the juſt often ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake by the hands of perſecutors, as Cain was ſlaine by Abel, the Prophets by Jezabell, and other perſecutors; contrariwiſe, the wicked, that comply with ſuch wicked rulers, doing what they will have them, eſcape this danger, and live ſtill. And for the next words, ver. 16. Be not righteous over much, and make not thy ſelfe over wiſe, why ſhouldeſt thou deſtroy thy elfe, he ſaith, it is meant of ſtanding more exactly upon juſtice in all things towards wards others, then agreeth with mercy, it is to be rigorouſly juſt, and ſo indeed inſtead of being juſt, injurious, according to the ſaying, extreame right is extreame wrong, and he that is injurious, although but thus to others, bringeth Gods wrath upon him to his owne deſtruction, as we ſee in the example of that ſervant, who ſtood ſo upon juſtice, in exacting the money that was owing, preſently of his fellow; and he makes himſelfe over wiſe, that inquireth, and would pry into things, that God hath not revealed in his Word, againſt that determination of Moſes, the ſecret things of the Lord belong to the Lord, the revealed to us and our children; and they are ſuch, as inquire what God did before he made the world, why he made man fallable, why he pre-ordained ſome to life, and ſome to death, &c. for they doe but by this meanes puzzle themſelves with inextricable queſtions, to the diſtracting ſometimes of their minds whereby their death is haſtened, and offend God, as the men of Bethſhemeſh, in looking into the Arke to ſee things, which he forbad all people, yea, and the Levites alſo, to behold upon paine of death, and therefore they may feare cutting off, as it befell them; and ſo may preſumptuous judiciary Aſtrologers, that pretend the knowledge of things to come by the booke of Heaven, whereas the Lord ſaith, Let them tell what ſhall come, and ſay, that they are gods; they may conjecture, they cannot tell certainly, and they that goe about to doe ſo, make themſelves over wiſe, and hereby tempt God. For the phraſe here uſed, why ſhouldeſt thou dye before thy time? it is certaine, that no man ſhal dye before the time by God appointed, but he is ſaid to dye before his time, that dyeth before the time, that men attaine to by the courſe of Nature, that is, ſeventy yeares of age; ſo the wicked and bloud-thirſty are threatned, that they ſhall not live out halfe their dayes.

Deut. 29. 29.

For the next words, Be not wicked over much, nor fooliſh, the meaning is, if thou haſt been wicked and fooliſh, yet put now an end to thy wickedneſſe and folly, goe not on ſtill thus to provoke God to thy deſtruction, as all they doe, that will not heare of leaving their ſinnes preſently, but they will repent afterwards, thus Lavater; and in the expoſition of theſe two verſes, I ſhall not much diſſent from him, and therefore I have made the expoſition upon verſe ſixteen more full: but for that upon verſe fifteen I rather hold, that in ſaying, I have ſeene the juſt man periſhing in his righteouſneſſe, &c. he meaneth, one juſtifying himſelfe, and very ſtrict towards others, as the Phariſee, that was proud hereof, and was ſo exact, that nothing muſt be left undone by his Proſelytes of all the traditions of the Fathers, thus laying heavie burthens upon mens ſhoulders; by the wicked prolonging his life, the penitent ſinner ſtill counted by ſuch a Phariſee, one that is in his wickedneſſe; for that Publican, that went to pray together with that Phariſee, although by him ſo debaſed, went away juſtified, and thus having his life prolonged; but the Phariſee, for want of ſuch acceptation, periſhed. And being thus expounded it followeth aptly, be not therefore over juſt, or exact, propounding thy ſelfe as a Maſter, and Patterne of righteouſneſſe, being but an out-ſide, as a whited Sepulchre; neither make thy ſelfe over wiſe, as both Phariſees did, and Papiſts doe, who take upon them to preſcribe rules of greater perfection, then God hath done, this they thinke out of their blindneſſe to be a more certaine way to ſalvation, but it is to their deſtruction; when as on the contrary ſide he ſaith, be not over much, it may alſo have this ſence, thinke not thy ſelfe ſo wicked, as that there can be no hope of mercy for thee repenting, nor ſo fooliſh and ſhallow witted to apprehend the things of God, as for thy want of capacity, to give over the care of getting knowledge, ſaying, this is for the Booke-learned, and for ſuch as be wiſer then thou, for ſo thou ſhalt as well be in danger of periſhing for want of knowledge, as the Phariſaicall for the over-weening conceit of their owne wiſdome: underſtand the words of verſe fifteene, as Lavater doth, and what inference to this effect can be made thereupon, be not juſt over much, why? becauſe I have ſeene the juſt periſhing in their righteouſneſſe, being therefore cut off by Perſecutors, I ſhould rather thinke upon this ground it ſhould be inferred, be not thou ſo cowardly, as for feare of ſuffering a bodily death, to ſhrinke from perfect righteouſneſſe in any particular, and not conſidering this, Be not over righteous, leſt thou come to the

the like end; for, Bleſſed are they, ſaith Chriſt, that ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake, great is their reward in heaven, for ſo perſecuted they the Prophets that were before you, making the killing of them an argument to perſwade patiently, and joyfully to ſuffer likewiſe, this being the way to come, as they did, to an incorruptible crowne of glory. Hieron. Jerome, I confeſſe, doth ſometime expound it, as Lavater hath done, but then he cometh to that which I have ſaid, that they, who ſeeme righteous to themſelves, are meant, but moſt follow the firſt.

Verſ. 18. It is good that thou ſhouldeſt lay hold upon this, and from this alſo withdraw not thy hand, for he that feareth God ſhall come forth of them all; That is, whereas I have charged thee not to make thy ſelfe over wiſe, nor to be over fooliſh, for feare of deſtruction to come upon thoſe, that doe either; I have not done it, that thou ſhouldeſt not therefore take any further care to get wiſdome, and righteouſneſſe, leſt in labouring much after theſe thou ſhouldeſt be judged, as making thy ſelfe over wiſe; but notwithſtanding that which hath been ſaid, lay hold upon true righteouſneſſe, and with-draw not thy hand, or ceaſe not to labour to get more ſaving knowledge, being wiſe only, according to that which is written, as it becometh one fearing God, and then thou ſhalt by his goodneſſe be kept from the danger of deſtruction, that is, in every nimiety, of which it hath been ſpoken, for, omne nimium vertitur in vitium, & aureum medium, in medio conſiſtit virtus, vertue is in the midſt, but every too much is vicious.

Verſ. 19. Wiſedome ſtrengtheneth the wiſe more then ten mighty men, that are in the City. This is further added, to put us on to lay hold upon wiſdome, becauſe thus we ſhal be more ſtrengthened againſt our Spirituall enemies, then a City, that hath many mighty men in it, the number of ten, a perfect number, being put for a ſufficient number for defence: to this effect it was ſaid before, that wiſdome is a defence, ver. 12.

Verſ. 20. For there is not a juſt man upon earth that doth good, and ſinneth not. Having ſaid, that there is a juſt man, who periſheth in his righteouſneſſe, ver. 15. whereupon he hath diſcourſed hitherto; now leſt any man ſhould hereupon take exception, underſtanding one truly juſt, ſaying then, God deſtroyeth even righteous men, as well as the wicked, how ſtands this with the juſtice of the righteous God, Judge of all the world? it is here reſolved, there is no man juſt and ſinneth not, therefore if the moſt juſt be ſmitten by him, he cannot complaine of wrong done him.

Verſ. 21. Alſo take no heed to all words that are ſpoken, leſt thou heare thy ſervant curſing thee. Here is an admonition againſt being troubled at the evil tongues of men, that ſpeake evil of us without cauſe. Sometimes we muſt heare, and not heare, our very ſervants ſpeaking evil of us, as Frederick the third was wont often to ſay, He that knoweth not to diſſemble, knoweth not to reigne; That is, to make as if he heard not, or ſaw not many things tending to his diſgrace, ſo that his life or good name be not indangered: but againſt ſuch ſpeakers, he that hath authority may and ought to uſe it; otherwiſe to be troubled at every rumour that we heare of things ſaid againſt us, is both vaine and endleſſe, we being not hurt hereby.

Verſ. 22. For oft times thy heart alſo knoweth that thou thy ſelfe haſt curſed others; The conſideration of our owne weakneſſe ſhould make us to beare with the weakneſſes of others in their carriages towards us; and this is an argument uſed by the Apoſtle, to move us to reſtore with the ſpirit of meekneſſe thoſe that are faine, Gal. 6. 1. conſidering thy ſelfe, leſt thou alſo be tempted. And this is a neceſſary conſideration to bridle our impatience, and rigidity againſt others, that we our ſelves are not guiltleſſe before God, and our owne conſciences. And hereby Chriſt confounded thoſe, that brought the woman taken in Adultery before him to be cenſured, Note. Ioh. 8. He that is without ſinne amongſt you, caſt the firſt ſtone at her.

Verſ. 23. All this have I proved by wiſdome, and I ſaid, I will be wiſe, but it was farre from me; That is, for all things before going, by the wiſdome given unto me I have found them to be ſo; but when I thought to be yet wiſer then God had made me, and to pry into the ſecrets of God, I confeſſe I did fooliſhly, and that herein I was farre from being wiſe, as is manifeſt by the next words.

That

That which is farre off, and exceeding deep, who can finde it out? in which saying he toucheth againe upon that, vers. 16. Make not thy selfe over wise. Lavater also, though he giveth this for the sence first, saith, That man, having knowledge, may thinke to doe wisely, but herein we depend upon God, who must supply us with more grace, after that of illumination in our understandings, or else we shall still doe foolishly, as Salomon found by experience, to his great griefe in the end, as he also confesseth, that he was more bruitish then any man. Vers. 24. Lavater. Prov. 30. 2.

I applied mine heart to know, and to search, and seeke out wisdome, and the reason of things, and the wickednesse of folly, &c. Having shewed, vers. 23, 24. what a lost labour it is to pry into the secrets of God, now he sheweth, that he diligently applied himselfe to search into other things, that are commonly done amongst men, and the reasons thereof, they might be able to judge hereof aright; and in this search he found the woman to be more bitter then death, whose hands are as bands, and her heart as snares, and nets, but whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her, but the sinner shall be taken by her. For the explication of this, enough hath been said, Prov. 2. 16. 5. 3. 7. 5. &c. where an whorish woman is more fully described, and the danger of her shewed. And this is true also touching Wives, that be Idolatresses, as Salomons were, and Jezabell was such to Ahab, making him worse, that every one may take heed of being thus yoaked, according to the charge given by the Apostle, Be not unequally yoaked with Infidels. Vers. 25. Vers. 26. 2 Cor. 6. 16.

Behold, this have I found, counting one by one, &c. one man among a thousand have I found, but a woman amongst all these have I not found. Having spoken bitterly against women, that are Idolatresses, and so Spiritual adultresses, or Corporeal, now he saith, that he endeavoured to find out the abundance of wickednesse that is in such women, and their many sinful wayes, as also of men, counting from one sin to another: but he found the sinnes both of women and men to be innumerable, so that he could not finde them all out: only he saith, that he found one man amongst a thousand, but not a woman amongst all these; which is spoken Hyperbolically, the number of a thousand, being commonly mentioned in Scripture, to set forth very many, and one, very few: yea, sometimes it is said of men, they are all corrupt and become abominable, there is none that doth good, no not one; which must needs also be yeelded to be an Hyperbole, because there have been some godly men in all Ages, as Abel, and Enoch, and Noah; Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; Joseph, Moses, and David; some godly Kings and Prophets; in saying then one of a thousand, he meaneth a very few amongst great multitudes: and in speaking of man, he excludeth not every woman, for which it is to be noted, that the word אדם here used, is the common name of man and woman, as it is said, In the day that God made them both, he called their name Adam; by one Adam then here are to be understood, as a very few men, so a very few women, for as hath been said of men, so it may be of women, that there had been some also, before the writing of this, very vertuous, as Sarah, and Rebecca, Debora, and Bathsheba, Rahab, and Ruth, and Abigail, and Hannah; in the New Testament, the blessed Virgin Mary, Elizabeth the wife of Zechariah, Hannah, another Mary, the women that followed Christ, and ministred to him of their goods, &c. but amongst all these, that is, the women before spoken of, as bitter as death, not one good, but all abominable, being snares and nets unto men, and therefore by all men to be taken heed of. Vers. 27. Vers. 28. Psal. 14. Gen. 4. 2. Luke 8. 1.

There is no Expositor that I know of, that goeth this way in expounding it, but altogether upon the paucity of men, and women, taking it to be thus comparatively spoken, to shew the weaknesses of women more then of men; only Olympiodorus saith, It is to be understood mystically, by women, they being meant that be effeminate, and weake; by men, they that are masculine and strong; but let the judicious Reader consider, and if more light be now given into this darke place, follow it. Olymp.

This only have I found, God made man upright, but they have sought out many inventions; That is, inquiring further into the cause of this, I finde, that Vers. 29.

God

God made not man ſo at the firſt, but perfectly righteous, but he fell into ſinne, and ſo both he and all other men, his ſinfull Poſterity, have proved infinitely various in their evill devices, and wayes of ſinning, that cannot by man be found out; and touching the number of a thouſand before ſpoken of, I doubt not, but that Salomon in naming this number, had reſpect to the number of his Wives, and Concubines, which were ſo many, but amongſt them all, there was not one good, but all moſt probably joyned together to corrupt him.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſ. 1. VVHo is as the wiſe man, and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing, mans wiſdome maketh his face to ſhine, and the boldneſſe of his face ſhall be changed. Salomon having ſpoken much before of his ſtudy to get wiſdome, and moſt highly commended it to others, now he breaketh out into this commendation hereof, that no man, of what eſtate or degree ſoever, is comparable to the wiſe man, and to prove this, he ſaith, that Wiſdome hath theſe two effects;

Lavater.

1 It makes the face to ſhine, the wiſe man lowreth not, as diſcontented and angry fooles doe at every croſſe, or loſſe, but lookes cheerfully in tribulation, through the joy that is in his heart by faith.

Rom 5.

2 Although he be wiſer then others, yet he thinketh not ſo of himſelfe, neither doth he ſhew it by a bold and proud looke, but the more wiſe and learned he is, the more demiſſe and lowly he is in his countenance, according to the ſaying, Quanto doctior es, tanto te geras ſubmiſſius, the more learned, the more lowly carry thy ſelfe; and as his countenance is not now proud, nor fierce, no more are his manners, but gentle, and milde, according to that of Ovid; Faithfully to have learned the Arts, mollifieth the manners, and ſuffereth not to be rough, or harſh, as fooles are.

Ovid. Didiciſſe fideliter artes, emollit mores, nec ſinit eſſe feros.

And it is to be noted here, that wiſdome is ſaid to be the knowledge of the interpretation of a thing, and if ſo, then of the interpretation of the holy Scriptures, which ſhould make us all to ſtudy after this, and to read for this end that which is written conducing to this knowledge.

Note.

Some render עז ſtrength, and ſo expound it of his changing, when he cometh to have ſtrength and power, ſaying, that even wiſe men, when they are inveſted with power, are changed, looking now more diſdainfully upon others; but I rather prefer the former, for as עז ſignifieth ſtrength, ſo it alſo ſignifieth hardneſſe, and pertinacy, and ſo underſtood, it agreeth better with the words before going, ſomewhat more being ſaid here for the further commendation of wiſdome, and not any way a detracting from the wiſe coming to power, for if he had meant ſo, he would not have joyned it with the former by a conjunction copulative, as he doth, but inſtead of and, he would have ſaid, but ſtrength changeth: yet it were better rendred hardneſſe, or harſhneſſe, then boldneſſe, becauſe boldneſſe is elſewhere by Salomon ſpoken of in a good ſence, the righteous is bold as a Lion.

Cajetan.

Prov. 28. 1.

Verſ. 2. I counſell thee to keep the Kings commandement, and that in regard of the Oath of God. After the commendation of wiſdome, he teacheth men how to doe wiſely in their carriage towards their King, or ſupreame Magiſtrates, to give allegeance to whom they are bound by Oath. This is the ſame with that of the Apoſtle, Let every ſoule be ſubject to the higher powers.

Rom. 13. 1 Pet. 2. 13.

Verſ. 3. Be not haſty to goe out of his ſight, ſtand not in an evill thing, for he will doe whatſoever pleaſeth him; That is, when thou art diſpleaſed at that which hee commandeth thee, ſet him not light, thinking by going away, ſo that he may not ſee thee, to eſcape his wrath, for a King hath many eyes, and eares, and long hands, to fetch thee againe whereſoever thou art; ſtand not in an evill thing, attempt not by joyning forces to thee to rebell, although the King be evill, for this courſe ſhall never be long proſpered, as we may ſee in manifold examples; and juſtly juſtly it may be expected, that it ſhould be ſo, becauſe to rebell is a great evill, it is to reſiſt Gods Ordinance, and to breake the Oath before ſpoken of, the fruit whereof ſhall be damnation in the end, as the Apoſtle teacheth; and to diſſwade from ſtanding in ſuch an evil, he ſaith, The King will doe whatſoever pleaſeth him; yet not meaning that he may doe ſo, but he hath ſtrength enough to ſubdue rebels, and will quell them at his pleaſure, or ſuch as offend againſt his Lawes; for that Kings may not doe what they pleaſe without rule, appeareth, where it is commanded, That the King ſhould read in the Booke of the Law continually, that he might learne to judge rightly; and if he goeth here-from, in commanding ought, the precept of verſ. 2. holdeth not, Obey his commandement; but we muſt rather follow the example of the Apoſtles, who ſaid, We ought rather to obey God, then you. Deut. 17. Acts 4.

Where the word of a King is, there is power, and who may ſay to him, What doſt thou? Hereby is not meant, that he may not be reproved, for John the Baptiſt reproved Herod, Elijah Ahab, and ſo alſo did Michaiah, and Iſaiah, Jeremiah, and other Prophets, other Kings, and Ambroſe, Theodoſius: but who ſhall be ſo hardy as to oppoſe him, and his power, being provoked to wrath, and in his wrath to puniſh the miſdemeanours of his Subjects? yea, although he rageth unjuſtly againſt any of them, who can call him in queſtion for it, but God only, unleſſe it be in ſuch a Kingdome, as wherein the King comes in by election, or is made upon conditions? otherwiſe ſubjects can doe no more lawfully with him, but by petitioning, and perſwadingly ſeek to win him, or crying to God to reforme him, or rid them ſoone of ſuch a Tyrant. Verſ. 4.

Who ſo keepeth the Commandement, that is, of the King, whereof we ſpake before, ſhall feele no evill thing, and a wiſe mans heart diſcerneth both time and judgement; for, wouldeſt not thou feare, ſaith Paul? Doe no evill; breake not the Kings Lawes, for he beareth not the ſword in vaine, but for the puniſhment of evill doers. If it be ſaid, we may ſuffer evill enough, and that too long under a Tyrant, if we doe nothing for our deliverance, but ſeeke to pleaſe him by ſubmitting in all things to his will; he anſwereth, If thou beeſt of a wiſe heart, thou knoweſt, that the time of his tyranizing will not laſt alwayes, God will not ſuffer him but for a time, and then ſhall come his Judgement, and thou ſhalt be delivered. Verſ. 5. Rom. 13.

Becauſe to every purpoſe there is time, and judgement, therefore the miſery of man is great upon him. For he knoweth not that, which ſhall be, and who can tell him when it ſhall be? The wiſe in heart, as he ſaid before, diſcerneth both time and judgement. Now he addeth further, that there is to every purpoſe time and judgement; the word חפץ rendred purpoſe, ſignifieth either inſtitution, purpoſe, or will, or complacency, but being taken either of theſe wayes, how is it hereupon inferred, that the miſery of man is great upon him? Verſ. 6. Verſ. 7.

Sol. Great is the miſery even of Kings, that tyranize over their Subjects, they ſhall doe thus, and pleaſe themſelves in ſo doing for a time, but then their judgement ſhall come, and for their exorbitancies, through pride, and covetouſneſſe, wherein they have lived, they ſhall periſh miſerably, according to that which is ſaid, Tophet is wide and large, it is prepared for the King, &c. Eſa. 30. ult.

Againe, the miſeries of poore Subjects living under ſuch Kings, who have not wiſdome to know, as was aforeſaid, are great, becauſe they know not that their ſufferings are but for a time, and then judgement ſhall rid them of ſuch Tyrants, and for want of this knowledge are impatient, and rebell, and ſo make their ſufferings greater, when by their puiſſance they are ſharply caſtigated.

There is no man that hath power over the ſpirit to retaine the ſpirit, neither hath he power in the day of death, there is no diſcharge in that warre, neither ſhall wickedneſſe deliver thoſe that are given to it. Here by ſpirit the life of man is to be underſtood, as is plaine, in ſaying, He hath no power in the day of death; he goeth on in the argument in hand, viz. the Time, and Judgement before ſpoken of, which the wiſe diſcerne to be coming upon Kings that tyranize, and doe what they luſt in oppreſſing their Subjects, and therefore patiently beareth Verſ. 8.

all things, for now to prove that judgement ſhall come upon ſuch, notwithſtanding their great power, he ſaith, that the King hath no more power to reſiſt, when death cometh, which is the time of his judgement, then the poore man, there is no diſcharge in that warre: in warre that he makes againſt his Subjects unjuſtly, to bring both them and their goods into Vaſſalage, who were free before, he may haply come ſafely off, and put them to the worſt; but Death coming with his dart, to peirce him to the heart, he muſt needs before this all-conquering Champion fall, neither ſhall his wickedneſſe deliver him; That is, his wicked arming of himſelfe thus, to ſubjugate his faithfull and innocent Subjects, although he giveth himſelfe with all his might to proceed this way.

pallida mors æquo pede pulſat pauperum tabernas regumq; turres.

And according to this the Poet ſaith well, Pale Death knocks alike at the Gates of Kings, and the doores of poore men. And this is not ſo ſpoken of Kings, as if it concerned them alone, becoming Tyrants, whereby Salomons Sonne Rehoboam might have taken warning; but concerneth all others, that have wealth, and power and abuſe it to oppreſſion of the poore, as is commonly done, the time of every ſuch mans judgement ſhall come, and then he ſhall meet with his match, as we ſay, Death, that will hold him up, though his poore neighbours could not, and overthrow him. Be wiſe now therefore O yee Kings, and great men, be learned, O yee Judges of the earth; as David that pious King exhorteth you; alſo in ſaying, that wickedneſſe ſhall not deliver, he hath reference to verſe 15. a wicked mans prolonging his life hereby.

Note.

Pſal. 2.

Verſ. 9. All this have I ſeene, and applied my heart to every worke that is done under the Sunne, there is a time wherein one man ruleth over another to his owne hurt. It being ſo, as was before ſaid, it followeth, that ſome, even Kings have no great cauſe of joying in their ſupremacies, their dominion being at length turned into their ruine, as hath unhappily often faln out in this our Nation, and of late more then ever; to ſay nothing of Saul, Amaziah, Joaſh, and Athaliah, Ahab, and Jezabel, with many more recorded in ſacred Hiſtory, or of Julius Cæſar, or other Roman Emperours in the Roman Hiſtory. For his ſaying, that he applied his heart to every worke done under the Sunne, he ſpake in like manner before, Chap. 7. 25.

Verſ. 10. I ſaw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the City, where they had ſo done, this alſo is vanity. Vulg. who whilſt they yet lived, were in the holy place, and were praiſed, as it were in the City of juſt works, Hebr. They ſhall come, and from the holy place they ſhall walke; but the future tenſe may be taken here for the preterperfect, and the meaning is, becauſe he had before ſpoken of the death and judgement of Tyrants, and Oppreſſours, that abuſe their power, but in fine to their owne hurt; I have ſeene ſuch wicked ones yet have an honourable buriall, for ſo had Saul, his body being by night fetcht by the men of Jabeſh Gilead from the Philiſtims, and buried in their City. Thus they goe and paſſe away in an honourable manner, as worthy perſons, but this honour done to them laſteth not long, for all good remembrance of them is ſoone buried in perpetuall oblivion in the City, where they have done ſo ill, there is after this no mention more made of them, as of the juſt, whoſe memory is bleſſed. And ſuch are ſaid to walke from the holy place, becauſe from the moſt eminent in the holy City, the Kings Palace, or from the Sanctuary, which, though they were wicked, for a ſhew of piety they frequented; but now notwithſtanding their good buriall, their fame dyeth with them, they that flattered, and praiſed them in their life time, to curry favour with them, are after their death all whiſt, and praiſe them no more. Therefore this is a vanity, for Kings to be praiſed, who are wicked, and tyrannicall, all ſuch praiſe ending with their death; yea, they that durſt not before, being now bold to ſpeake of them according to their demerits, or by their going, and in the holy place walking, underſtand, that he obſerved not only that ſuch were buried well, but alſo whilſt they lived pretended piety, going and coming often from the holy place, but being afterwards diſcovered to be Hypocrites, an end is put to all their honour, and now contrariwiſe they are reproached.

Prov. 10. 7.

Lavater either underſtands it thus, or diſtinguiſhing betwixt the wicked that are buried, and ſuch as goe and come from the holy place ſaith, that by theſe are meant men deſerving well, being either of the Church, or Common-wealth, (for he will have the ſeat of Judgement as well meant by the holy place, as the Sanctuary) yet they are not ſpoken, or eſteemed of, according to their deſerts; when as the wicked have ſome honour done to them at their death, by being well buried, and having Monuments for a remembrance ſet up unto them; but for as much as worthy men are thus remembred alſo, for the Prophets after their death had Sepulchers built them, when in their life time they had been unworthily uſed, and were at laſt cruelly ſlaine, it cannot be underſtood, as if two ſorts of men were here ſpoken of, but only one, as hath been ſaid; neither doth the word forgotten agree to any, but to ſuch as are dead and buried. I have ſeene alſo divers other expoſitions, but I will not trouble the Reader with any more, ſith this may abundantly ſatisfie. Lavater.

Becauſe ſentence againſt an evill worke is not executed ſpeedily, the heart of the ſonnes of men is wholly ſet in them to doe evill. Having ſhewed, that wicked men although never ſo powerfull, ſhall dye, and then although they may have a buriall, yet no good remembrance ſhall be kept of them any more; now becauſe judgement-executing upon ſuch is not preſent, but to come afterwards, he ſheweth to what hardneſſe of heart, and boldneſſe in ſinning they grow, as if Judgement ſhould never come. But the next words ſhew, that quod defertur non aufertur, and God compenſateth the ſlowneſſe of his coming with the weightineſſe of his puniſhments. Verſ. 11. Tarditatem veniendi compenſat gravitate poena.

Though a ſinner ſinneth an hundred times, and his dayes be prolonged, yet ſurely I know it ſhall be well with them that feare God; But it ſhall not be well with the wicked, neither ſhall he prolong his dayes, which are as a ſhadow, &c. but how ſaith he ſhall not a ſinner prolong his dayes, and yet they be prolonged? Verſ. 12. Verſ. 13.

Sol. The dayes of his naturall life may be prolonged, and yet not prolonged in a well being, for this is in the words to be noted, it ſhall not goe well with him, neither ſhall he prolong his dayes; they are prolonged in vanity, but not in any true comfortable being; as it is with them that feare God, be their lives ſhort, or long, a wicked mans life is but a death, for ſo it is ſaid, dead in ſinnes and treſpaſſes; neither can any man be ſaid to live, till he be inlivened by being converted. The ſinners many dayes, and long life here then, are nothing, for which they are ſaid to be as a ſhadow, dead images or ſhadowes repreſenting living men, out-ſides of men only, but nothing within, for which they may be worthy to be called living men, or women. And this is the deſcription of a ſinner, not that he hath done wickedly, or ſinneth in ſome things ſtill, but he feareth not before God, his feare doth not awe him to keepe him from ſinning; but if there be any ſinne from which he refraineth, it is either becauſe his nature ſtands not towards it, or it ſtands not with his profit, health, or credit, or he is kept in awe for feare of men; contrariwiſe, the righteous feare God, and feare before him; That is, remembring that he is about all their pathes and wayes, and that they can goe no whither, but they are before him; they doe as Servants in their Maſters ſight, not faulting in any thing as neare as they can, in this regard only, though no mortall eye can ſee them, or wit of man finde them out, their hearts being hereby continually awed, and not their bodies, or members only, as it is with painted Hypocrites. Ephes. 2. Note. Pſal. 139.

There be juſt men, to whom it happeneth according to the worke of the wicked; againe, there be wicked, to whom it happeneth according to the righteous mans worke. Having conſidered the prolonging of the dayes of the wicked, whereas oft times the righteous have but ſhort lives, and having ſaid yet, that it ſhall goe well with the righteous, whereas indeed many times the wicked live in proſperity, and they in adverſity; now leſt he ſhould be miſtaken, he ſaith, that ſome juſt men endure grievous things, ſo that if one ſhould judge of them by their ſufferings, he could not thinke but that they were men of wicked workes, although making a good ſhew before men, and ſo well is it with many wicked men, that Verſ. 14.

either one ſeeing it would thinke that God regardeth not humane affaires, or elſe that he liketh not ſo well of thoſe preciſe and ſtrict courſes of life, but rather of them that live, as wee count it, diſſolutely. But it is to be noted, that he ſaith, it is a vanity, which I ſaw done upon earth, it ſhall not alwayes be ſo, but for a ſhort time, a moment, whilſt ſome part of this tranſitory life laſteth, and whilſt it is thus, the righteous cannot be counted truly miſerable, becauſe they ſuffer ſo. For,

1. They acknowledge that they are not without ſin enough, to bring upon them whatſoever they ſuffer, and more alſo.

Heb. 12. 9. 1 Cor. 11.

2. That ſufferings here are tokens of Gods fatherly love, that they may not be judged with the world, they ſuffer a little, but are exempt from the great ſufferings, which ſhall indure for ever.

3. That the beſt of Gods ſervants have ſuffered as much, if not more, yea, Chriſt himſelfe, and that as our ranſome.

4 They have a Comforter within them, by whom they have joy in tribulation, and their ſufferings are ſo ſweetned, that although they be cruel torments, to which they are put by perſecutors, they are to them as things moſt comfortable, as appeared by the ſpeech of one Martyr, who being in the middeſt of the fiery flames, ſaid, I lye here as in a bed of downe, and others that ſmiled upon the Rack, and were grieved, when they were looſed therefrom againe. As for the good things for a time injoyed by the wicked, they are but common things, and flitting, and therefore there can be no ſolid joy in them: wherefore let not us envy them for theſe, nor be grieved or thinke our ſelves unhappy for our own croſſes, which are common, as alſo good things are to good and bad, neither let us ſo much affect the goods of this world, but thoſe good things, that bee proper to the righteous, as Auguſtine ſaith.

Verſ. 15.

Then I commended mirth, becauſe a man hath no better thing under the ſun then to eat, and drink, and be merry. Divers expoſitors hereupon ſpeak diverſly, ſome, that it is ſpiritually to be underſtood, ſeeing that in reſpect of worldly things, it goeth no better with the righteous then with the wicked, yea, many times worſe, the beſt that we can doe is to eat, and drink, and rejoyce in ſpiritual things, as wiſedome is brought in inviting us to doe, Prov. 9. Some, that Salomon ſpeaketh thus in the perſon of wicked and carnall men, as chap. 3. according to the mind that he was of, when he lived in ſenſual pleaſure. But Lava. who mentioneth theſe, followeth another, I preferred honeſt mirth, & liberally uſing the things of this world, wherwith God hath bleſſed a man, ſo farre as lawfully he may, all anxious and diſtracting cares being put away, for ſo much as hereby no man can make his eſtate better or worſe, in reſpect of worldly proſperity or adverſity; of all theſe I preferre the firſt, becauſe it is counſell given to a man upon due conſideration of nothing to be found here, affording any true joy to the righteous, whoſe caſe is many times worſe in worldly reſpects, then that of the wicked. Moreover he hath before pronounced it to be better to goe into the houſe of mourning, then of mirth, therefore it is not probable that after this he would any more preferre worldly mirth, but ſpirituall and heavenly; only it ſeemes to make againſt it that followeth, For that ſhall abide with him of his labour the days of his life, which God giveth him under the ſun; but indeed it agreeth very well and confirmeth this expoſition yet more, that it is ſubſtantiall and permanent mirth, which he here preferreth, and what mirth can be counted ſuch, but the ſpirituall, comming by eating and drinking ſpiritually? and it is added, the dayes of his life under the ſun, not that this mirth ſhall then have end, but in the dayes of this life, wherein he hath need of this joy to beare him up in the midſt of all ſufferings here, for who ſo thus rejoyceth, ſhall have the joy in believing, thus begun, continued to eternity, by his poſſeſſing that he hoped for. And according to this, the Pſalmiſt biddeth us to be merry in the Lord, and the Apoſtle, rejoyce in the Lord alwaies; If the words be taken otherwiſe of lawfull mirth, in corporeal eating and drinking, how the inference therefore can be made from the words before going, I ſee not, ſhall men ſay therefore becauſe it fals out to the righteous, as to the wicked in reſpect of worldly miſeries, it is good for him to be merry? this is both againſt reaſon, and that which he ſaid before chap. 7. 14. or becauſe the wicked wicked injoy proſperity, it is good for them to be merry, and this abideth by them, when as he ſaid before, that ſuch mirth, is as the crackling of Thornes under a pot, and that it is madneſſe.

When I applyed my heart to know wiſedome, and to ſee that which is done upon the earth (for there is that neither day nor night ſeeth ſleep with his eyes.) Then I beheld all the work of God, that a man cannot find out, &c. This differeth little from v. 23. 24 25. of chap. 7. and therefore the expoſition may be ſeen there, but it is here repeated againe in relation to v. 14. where Gods dealings in this world are ſet forth, as more harſh towards the righteous, then towards the wicked. This is a thing that man by his owne wiſedome cannot find out; for the parentheſis interpoſed here, the meaning is, he that ſearcheth to find out the reaſon of al things, may ſtudy in the day, and break his ſleep about them in the night, and yet never attain to this knowledge. CHAP. IX.

THe righteous and the wiſe, their works are in the hands of God, no man knoweth love or hatred, by all that is before them, The Vulg. every thing to come is kept uncertaine; or all things are kept uncertaine till afterwards, and hence it is gathered by our adverſaries of the Church of Rome, that no man can be certaine, whilſt he liveth here of his ſalvation; but the words Hebrew are הכל לפניהם all that is before their faces, and the plaine meaning is, all that which they ſee befalling one or another here, ſheweth not, whether this man be elect, or that man reprobate, as both may be gathered by that which went before, chap. 8. 14. It befalleth the righteous as the wicked, &c. and by that which followeth after, v. 2. All things fall out alike unto all. It is meant then, that as all men are at Gods diſpoſing, ſo it is the part of wiſe and righteous men, whoſe workes are good, to reſt herein ſatisfied and contented with the eſtates wherein they are, whether adverſe or proſperous in this world, ſeeing to be in proſperity is no ſigne of his love, wherein our everlaſting happineſſe conſiſteth, neither to be in adverſity any ſigne of his hatred, wherein ſtands everlaſting miſerie. He may be beloved of God, as Jaacob was, that liveth in exile and ſervitude a long time, when as he that liveth as a Prince, as Eſau, and is the father of Dukes, as he was, is hated, according to that, Jacob have I loved, and Eſau have I hated. The Vulg. latine then is here intolerably corrupted, becauſe that upon it ſo groſſe an errour is raiſed touching every mans uncertainty, in reſpect of election, and reprobation for his own particular, for the like is no where taught in all the word of God, but the contrary, as where it is ſaid, Now we know that we are the ſons of God, &c. and we have received the Spirit of God, whereby wee know things that are given us of God: although I grant, that touching one another, this cannot be knowne to man in this life, ſeeing the Miniſters of Satan can transforme themſelves into Angels of light, and he that is now a perſecutor may be turned, and become a preacher, yea, many deceive themſelves, thinking that they know they are elected, when they are, Reprobates, for which the Apoſtle ſaith, Try your ſelves, prove your ſelves, know you not that Chriſt is in you, unleſſe ye be Reprobates? And to this tendeth that ſaying of the Spirit of a white ſtone, given to a man overcomming, with a new name written upon it, which no man knoweth, but he that hath it, therefore it is only knowne to a mans ſelfe, whether he hath a name written in Heaven or no, and hereby many are deceived in themſelves, for that they know it not by the Spirit of God, but only it is a conception of their owne, and by this Spirit they know it not, becauſe they have not received it; and that they have not received it, appeareth, becauſe as the fleſh, ſo the Spirit hath its fruits, love, joy, peace, &c. which they have not, love, the mother of the reſt, being ſuch a fruit, as that he, who hath true love, cannot be deceived, when as one going by faith, knowledge, Almes-deeds, tongues, and patience to ſuffer a moſt cruell death, may, becauſe the Devill and his Miniſters can doe all other things, but love they cannot, He that loveth, dwelleth Verſ. 1. 1 Joh. 3. 3. 1 Cor. 2. 12. 2 Cor. 13. 5. Verſ. 4. For to him that is joyned to all the living there is hope, for a living dog is better then a dead Lyon. Thus the wicked ſay, Let us, whilſt we live, gather wealth, and make merry herewith, hoping ſtill to come one day to greater matters, and tell me not of the baſeneſs of the wicked, and the excellencie of the righteous, and in what happineſſe they are in, when they dye; ſo the Lyon is the King of Beaſts, but when he is dead, the dogge ſtill living, which is ſo much deſpiſed, is better then he; Let them all ſpeak, what they will, againſt us, we injoying good things here, and they being in miſerie, but pleaſing themſelves in this, that they are juſtified, in reſpect of the good that ſhall come after death, are in a better caſe then they. For, we know, that wee ſhall one day dye, Oh! that wee never might, although wee live but as dogs, or other vileſt beaſts, as I have heard ſome wicked men have ſaid, and becauſe we know that we ſhal dy, we wil be merry whilſt we live, as not making account, but Verſ. 7. Lavater. Goe thy way, eate thy bread with joy, and drinke thy wine with a merry heart for God now accepteth thy works. Here he goeth on ſtill, ſaith Lavater, to ſpeak in the perſon of the wicked ſenſual man, that placeth al his felicity in carnal things, and the pleaſure which he hath in this life, as making none account of any happineſſe or miſerie to come after death, either to the righteous or the wicked. And becauſe he enjoyeth proſperity now, he gathereth, that God accepteth of his doings, as well as of theirs, who live in his feare continually. And this is more at large expreſſed, Wiſd. 2. 7. where he is brought in, ſpeaking againſt the righteous, and deriding them as fools, for their impugning of them in their ways. Jun. alſo ſaith the ſame, &

And according to this is the ſaying of James, Count all things

Olympiodorus. as upon chap. 8. 15. but let the judicious Reader follow whether he pleaſeth, for my part, that which is ſpoken of his rejoycing with his wife alwaies, ſeemeth to me not to agree, if it be taken as ſpoken in the perſon of the wicked: for his pleaſure in the dayes of his vanity, is not ſo reſtreined, as that it ſhould be only in his wife, for his luſts carry him more after Harlots; therefore I preferre that of Jerom. and the Chald. joyning that of Olymp. hereunto, Be chearfull thou righteous man in thy ordinary eating and drinking, and take thy lawfull pleaſure, being nothing diſmayed at thy ſufferings; but moſt of all, eate that bread, and drinke that wine, in receiving which thy ſoule is fed to eternall life, and then that which followeth.

Verſ. 10. Whatſoever thy hand finds to doe, doe it with thy might, for there is no device, &c. agreeth very well, for ſo much as righteouſneſſe conſiſteth in doing good and and not believing alone, put thy hand diligently to this, whilſt thou haſt time, for if death commeth, the time of doing is over, as our Lord ſpeaketh, the night commeth when no man can worke, that is death, therefore now doe all acts of love and charity to thy power, and worke out thy ſalvation, doing whatſoever perteineth to love, and to the feeding of thy ſoule, both in reſpect of the word, and worthy often receiving of this Lords ſupper, in regard of which laſt, I can but admire, and condemne the ſtupiditie, and remiſſneſſe of many Chriſtians now a dayes, that paſſe over yeare after yeare, under I know not what pretences, without celebrating or receiving this holy feaſt. Doth the Spirit of God bid thee do whatſoever is to be done for the good of thy ſoule inſtantly, before death commeth, and doſt thou acknowledge this to be one maine good thing to be done, and deaths ſtriking thee uncertaine, when it will be too late to doe, Oh then repent of this thy remiſſneſſe! and ſo doe what elſe is good, as not to neglect this any longer.

Joh. 9.4.

Note.

I returned and ſaw under the ſun, that the race is not to the ſwift, nor the battaile to the ſtrong, nor bread to the wiſe, nor riches to men of underſtanding, nor favour to men of skill, but time and chance happeneth to them all. Here he further inlargeth himſelfe in the argument, which hee had in hand before, of all things falling out alike unto all, by propounding caſes, wherein greateſt probability is of a deſired event, but yet it proveth not as is expected. For who lookes not that the ſwift ſhould overcome in running, the ſtrong in battaile, and that the wiſe, intelligent, and skilfull ſhould, if any, get neceſſaries for this life, yea, riches and eſtimation amongſt all men, but it oftentimes falleth out to the contrary, and therefore to men all things are contingent, but it is not from hence to be inferred, but that it commeth thus to paſſe by Gods providence, to whom nothing is caſuall, that the ſtrong man might not glory in his ſtrength, nor the rich man in his riches, nor the wiſe in his wiſedome, but aſcribe all things, happening wel or ill, to God, wee acknowledging the indowments, which wee have in us to be nothing, to the attaining of this or that, but that God is all in all, to feare alwayes before him, and to be humble, and not to ſacrifice either to our owne nets, or to fortune, as the Heathen have done. And in matters perteining to the ſoule, neither to be remiſſe nor careleſſe, becauſe God doth all, but put on what wee can towards the attaining of ſalvation, as was before commanded, Doe it with thy might, neither when wee have done and prevailed, aſcribe any thing to our ſelves, but all the praiſe unto God, who giveth ſucceſſe to our indeavours.

Verſ. 11.

Some expound it as relating to verſe 10. where death is ſpoken of, after the ſtroake whereof there is no device, or wiſdome any more; the ſwift that have run, cannot now runne away from death, nor the ſtrong make his part good againſt this mighty warrier, or the intelligent have bread now any longer to ſuſteine his life, nor the wiſe, who by his wiſedome hath gathered riches in abundance can herewith wage him to forbeare, nor the skilfull find favour to be ſpared.

Thaumaturgus.

And with this, verſe 12. agreeth well, where men are compared to fiſhes and birds, that are taken upon the ſudden, and then their ſwiftneſſe will not help them in that evill day; of the evill day comming upon men as a ſnare, Chriſt ſpeaketh, ſaying, It ſhall come as a ſnare upon all the inhabitants of the earth, and as a Theife in the night.

2 Pet. 3.

This wiſedome alſo have I ſeen under the Sun, and it ſeemed great unto me: There was a little City, and a few men in it, and there came a great King againſt it &c. Jerom ſaith, that his Hebrew Maſter was wont to expound this place thus unto him, man is this little City, the great King comming againſt him, the Devil, the few men in this City, the little ſtrength that fleſhly man hath to reſiſt his temptations, whereby he tempteth him to ſinne to his deſtruction, if there were nothing in him, but the ſenſuall part, which inclineth him to pleaſure, and worldly profit, but there is a wiſe poor man, that is, underſtanding, or the inner intellectuall part, whereby he is delivered, or elſe he is deſtroyed without remedy, yet this by moſt men is not regarded, they being much more taken up with that, which is ſenſuall, and ſo although ſome few, that hearken to reaſon be delivered, the farre greateſt part are not.

But

But he by the poore wiſe man underſtandeth Chriſt, the wiſedome of God, and ſo the greateſt wiſedome, as Salomon ſaith, verſe. 13. and by the little City the Church, which is as a City ſet upon an hill; and he calleth it little in compariſon of the reſt of the men of the world; by the great King the Devil, that fighteth continually againſt us, and is called for his mighty forces Principalities, this City Chriſt yet delivereth by deſtroying him through his death, but the wicked of the world regard him not for all this.

Matth. 5. Ephel. 6. 12. Heb. 2. 15.

Verſ. 16. But Salomon hereupon inferreth, that, Wiſdome is better then ſtrength; although his words that is moſt wiſe, if he be poore, be not hearkened to by the wicked world, for Chriſt was poore, and although he were moſt wiſe, yet the wicked Jewes for his poverty deſpiſed him.

Verſ. 17. But the words of the wiſe are heard more in quiet, then the cry of him, that ruleth amongſt fooles; That is, although the wicked world, of whom the Prophet Iſaiah ſaith, There is no quiet to the wicked, heareth not the voyce of wiſdome, yet ſuch as are ordained to life, in whom the clamours, that were made by the wicked, ſaying of Chriſt, Crucifie him, are ſtilled; or thoſe that were made againſt his ſervant Paul, when ſome cryed out one thing againſt him, ſome another; and they being reverently ſilent, doe heare the diſcreet Preachers of the Word, and are ruled by them, more then the loud and earneſt crying out of a Prince upon his rebellious people, that are fooliſh, and obſtinate, is heard by them. Herein the ſoft and ſtill voyce ſpoken of, 1 King. 19. is pointed at, and that which is ſaid of Chriſt, that he ſhould not cry, nor lift up his voyce in the ſtreets, becauſe all being whiſt and quiet, a moderate voyce is more heard, then a loud cry, where fooles are together, who are tumultuous, and make a noyſe; and herein that commendable ſilence, that is uſed in our Congregations, is praiſed, as making the Auditors more capable of hearing and learning wiſdome.

Eſa. 57.

Lavater. And they are alſo commended that are ſo docible, as that without ſtriving, or crying, are readily made obedient; or we may take it thus, The words of the wiſe quietly and gravely uttered, with a moderate voyce are heard, and they prevaile more with the Hearers, if they be likewiſe of a quiet, and not of a turbulent ſpirit, then the cry of a mighty man, or ruler, amongſt fooles, of whom he is one; ſo that the word quiet hath reference both to Speaker, and Hearers, and likewiſe the word fooles; and ſo it is confirmed here which was ſaid before, at ſome times men finde, that the wiſdome of men, though poore, is worth the hearkening to, however moſt commonly it is neglected, and that only is regarded, which was ſpoken by the rich and mighty.

This was verified in poore Joſeph, who was brought out of priſon to ſpeake unto King Pharaoh, and to counſell him; and he with great ſilence, and attention heard him, and followed his counſell, to Joſephs great honour; and in Daniel a poore Captive, that ſtood before Nebuchadnezzar to tell him his Dreame, and the interpretation thereof, and was heard with the like ſilence and attention; wherefore it is worth the while even for poore men, to get wiſdome, for it may ſo fall out, that they may be ſought unto, and then hereby attaine great preferment. In briefe then take the ſence thus; The words of the wiſe poor man are heard, when men being in danger, have their hearts through fear humbled, becauſe then they are willing to heare good counſell from any man, although poore and deſpicable before; and that more then fools, who feare nothing, will the voyce of a Prince, although he extends it to the uttermoſt, by charging and threatning them, in caſe they be not obedient; and becauſe words are here oppoſed to crying, it is rather meant, that the loudneſſe of the voyce, and vehement preſſing of things, prevaile not ſo much as words fortified with reaſon, although not in ſo loud a tone, ſo that they be ſpoke loud enough for others to heare; and therefore they are compared to ſharp Goads, and Nailes, Chap. 12. 11. which enter without any great noyſe.

2 Sam. 20. But neareſt unto the Hiſtory here related cometh that, which befell the City of Abel, wherein there was a wiſe woman, that when Joab beſieged it, ſaved it by her wiſdome.

Lavater alſo underſtandeth that of the poore wiſe man, delivering the City, according cording to the Letter only, bringing examples of thoſe, that have wrought great deliverances for a people, but have not been regarded for it; as David was not, a while after his killing of Goliah, and delivering Iſrael from his feare, for there were few that ſtood for him after this, againſt the fury of Saul, that unjuſtly ſought to murther him. But as it is true according to the Letter, ſo it is according to the Myſtery before going.

Wiſdome is better then weapons of warre, but one ſinner deſtroyeth much good. For the former words here, they are to the ſame effect with thoſe, verſ. 16. for the latter the meaning is, That as by a poore wiſe man a City is delivered, ſo by a King, who is but one, if he be wicked and fooliſh, warres come to be raiſed, and many good things are by this meanes deſtroyed, as woefull experience teacheth, when Civil warres, through diſcontent of the Subjects are made in any Land: yea, one other man, or a few ſometimes bring deſtruction upon the people, amongſt whom they live; as Achan upon the Hoſt of Iſrael, and thoſe few men, that abuſed the Levites Concubine to the death in Gibeah, the whole City, and almoſt the whole Tribe of Benjamin were brought to deſtruction hereby; and ſometime a City being in danger, one treacherous perſon therein lets in the Enemy, and it is deſtroyed. Verſ. 18.

CHAP. X.

Dead flyes cauſe the oyntment of the Apothecary to ſend forth a ſtinking ſavour, ſo doth a little folly him, that is in reputation for wiſdome and honour. Here by Oyntment we are to underſtand moſt ſweet Oyntment, compounded of precious things, like that which the woman poured upon the head of Chriſt againſt his buriall, into this flyes falling, although they be little, and dying, of ſweet, make it ſtinking; ſo a man that is delighted in, and eſteemed of for his wiſdome, if there be but one little ſinne, or point of fooliſhneſſe in him, is no more eſteemed, but vilipended and baſely accounted of. Verſ. 1.

So Aſa, a zealous and godly King, for confederating with Benhadad, the King of Syria, in the time of his danger, being reproved by a Prophet, and putting him in the Stocks, therefore loſt all his reputation, and became a deſpicable Cripple all his life after; and Uzziah, a moſt godly and zealous King, through pride became a ſtinking Leaper. Wherefore let him that is wiſe be circumſpect, and as he doth many things commendably, ſo take heed that he doe fooliſhly in nothing, either through diſtruſt in God, pride, covetouſneſſe, fleſhly luſt, or intemperance, for who ſo doth, is falne from his excellency of what eſtate or degree ſoever he be; for he is now but as Herod, who heard John Baptiſt gladly, and did many things, but in one ſinne, which he thought little, he lived ſtill: and Saul by one fooliſh act of ſparing Agag, was put downe from his Kingdome. 2 Chron. 15. Note.

A wiſe mans heart is at his right hand, but a fooles at his left. Alſo when a foole walketh by the way, his wiſdome faileth him, and he ſaith to every one, that he is a foole; the Vulgar, he accounteth all men fooles, Hebr. it is as in New Tranſlation. Verſ. 2. Verſ. 3.

Lavater, for to every one, hath it, of every one, expounding it of the high conceit that he hath of himſelfe, through which he diſgraceth others, calling them fooles, as it is common with the wicked, and with Hereticks; they ſay of a man, that is ſtrict in the courſe of his life, he is a foole, and of him that ſpeakes againſt their errours, and confuteth them, although he be a moſt wiſe and learned man, yet becauſe he thinketh not with them, he is a foole; and likewiſe if one wil rather ſuffer, then obey his King againſt God, for ſo the holy Martyrs have been counted by cruel Perſecutors, fooles, and ſtubborne perſons; and this I take to be the true meaning, whether it be rendred of, or to every one, and not that he by his ſpeech declares to every one his folly, as ſome underſtand it. By his walking in the way, underſtand his doings, which are fooliſh, he either getteth him a lamp without Oyle, Lavater.

Oyle, as the fooliſh Virgins, or is openly prophane and diſſolute, and ſo wiſdome faileth him, in his way to Whore-houſes, to Tipling-houſes, to Gaming, or other vanities, to which he giveth himſelfe. And his heart is ſaid to be on his left hand, as the wiſe mans is on his right, becauſe whereas the wiſe doe all things well and rightly, he doth all ill, and aukly; if he dealeth with men he is fraudulent, and oppreſſive; if with God, in the duties of his Worſhip, he is only formall, exhibiting unto him groſſe, outward, and corporeall ſervice, and none other in ſpirit and truth, as is commanded, and true worſhippers doe.

Ioh. 4. 24.

Verſ. 4. If the ſpirit of the Ruler riſeth up againſt thee, leave not thy place, for yeelding pacifieth great offences. For the laſt words here, they are the ſame in effect with thoſe, a ſoft anſwer putteth away ſtrife; For the former, the meaning is, If the Prince, or he that is much thy ſuperiour be angry with thee, for ſetting thy ſelfe for good, and againſt evil, in thy place and calling, leave it not therefore, but hold it, if thou canſt, and doe ſo ſtill.

Prov. 15. 1.

Lavater. It is a phraſe, as Lavater noteth, taken from Souldiers, who are to keep their ſtanding; thus the Apoſtles left not their Calling, but went on to preach the Goſpel, notwithſtanding the ſtreight charge given them to the contrary; or it may be taken, in caſe that a man hath a place about the King, therein to ſerve him, although he be offended, yet run not away, leave not his ſervice in diſcontent, but if he be offended with thee for thy faults, yeeld, or ſubmit unto him, and thus he may be pacified againe, although thine offences have been great; and the like is to be done by children towards their Parents, and by ſervants towards their Maſters, and by Wives towards their Husbands.

Munſter. Munſter hath both a different tranſlation; If the ſpirit of one that hath dominion riſeth upon thee, leave not thy place, for he that healeth himſelfe diſmiſſeth great ſins; and interpretation, if by thy wiſdome thou comeſt to have dominion, forget not, but remember thy former low condition, and by this meanes thou ſhalt be kept from many great ſins, which otherwiſe pride may make thee fall into. And this is not diſagreeable to the Hebrew text, in which it is עַל, upon, and מַרְפֵּא an healing.

Verſ. 5. There is an evill which I have ſeene under the Sunne, as an errour, that proceedeth from the ruler.

Verſ. 6. Folly is ſet in great dignity, and the rich ſet in low places;

Verſ. 7. Servants riding on horſe-backe, and Princes going on foot. Having begun to ſpeake of Rulers, verſ. 4. here he proceedeth to declaime againſt a great fault, that is common amongſt them, viz. Fooles, that is, men of no parts or indowments, fit for it, ſet in places of rule and authority, and men rich in knowledge, and wiſdome, left in a meane condition, without any ſuch preferment, although they be more worthy, by which meanes all places of judgement are filled with injuſtice and wrong; but when the King, the ſupreame Ruler is fooliſh, and covetous, thus it is.

Some by the Ruler underſtand God, but this is incongruous, becauſe God doth nothing through errour; ſome underſtand the Devil, but although he bragged once, that he had all the Kingdomes of the world to diſpoſe of, yet he hath not, but is himſelfe a baſe vaſſall. But it may ſeeme ſtrange, that by the rich here, ſhould be meant the rich in wiſdome; for ſo much as wiſdome hath been often before Gold and Silver preferred, and we read of thoſe that are rich in faith, and rich in God; and of them that want theſe riches, as poore, and miſerable; we may well by the rich here underſtand the wiſe, and the rather, becauſe they are oppoſed to fooles. And likewiſe by Princes, are meant the wiſe and prime men, in this regard, and by ſervants underlings in wiſdome, and abilities, and gifts of the minde, wherein they, who be defective being contrariwiſe ignorant, and vitious, are not only fooles, but ſlaves, and ſervants of ſinne. Of riding on horſe-back, put for being in honour, ſee, Jer. 22. 4. There ſhall be Princes ſitting upon Thrones, and riding on Horſes.

1 Pet. 1. 7.
Revel. 3.

Verſ. 8. He that diggeth a pit ſhall fall into it, and he that breaketh an hedge, a Serpent ſhall bite him.

Verſ. 9. Who ſo removeth ſtones ſhall be hurt there-with, and he that cleaveth wood ſhall be indangered thereby. Here by ſimilitudes he ſheweth the evils evils that a Ruler bringeth upon himſelfe, that preferreth Fooles, and Knaves, by whom the welfare of the Kingdome is overthrowne.

1 He is herein as one that diggeth a pit, and ſoone falleth himſelfe into it, and ſo periſheth; thus ſome Kings of this Land, by preferring baſe conditioned men to honour, have laid a foundation of their owne ruine, as Edward the ſecond, and Richard the ſecond.

2 As one that breaketh an Hedge, where-with a Vine-yard, or Corne-field is fenced, and in ſo doing meeteth with ſome venemous Serpent, that biteth him, whereof he dyeth, which is ſo ſpoken, becauſe Serpents lurke about hedges. And by the Hedge here, Lavater underſtandeth good Lawes, which are as a fence to a Kingdome, which being broken, as they are, when fooles are in authority, wilde beaſts are let in, whereby great deſtruction is made in a City. Lavater.

Heraclitus Epheſius compareth a Kingdome, wherein good Lawes are broken, to a City, the wall whereof is broken downe; Demoſthenes, to a Body, from which the ſoule is departed. And as in buildings, if ſome ſtones, or peices of timber, whereupon the reſt is founded, be taken away, the whole building cometh to ruine; ſo by the ceaſing of ſome moſt neceſſary Lawes, the frame of the Kingdome. By ſtaves he underſtandeth Land-markes, which if any man removed, Numa Pompilius made a Law, that any man might kill him for ſo doing, and that this fact of his ſhould be expiatory: and allegorically, he removeth ſtones, that takes away the good Cuſtoms of a Land, either in Church, or Common-wealth, he ſhall not impunè ferre. Laſtly, he that cleaveth, or cutteth downe Wood, is one that doth it in another mans ground, this brings him in danger of a treſpaſſe; ſo he that takes away any common benefit, that the poore have in waſt grounds, as in many places they have, both of Wood, and feed, as men of power often doe, ſhal be in danger of their curſes.

Bibliander otherwiſe ſaith, that hereby warning is given, that men ſhould in all things that they goe about, looke for croſſes, but not be diſcouraged hereby; as a man that diggeth a pit, and falleth into it, if it be for a good end, is not diſcouraged hereby, but as occaſion ſerveth diggeth more; ſo likewiſe he that breakes downe an old Hedge to make a new, although a Serpent biteth him, if he eſcapeth, will not for this give over his worke, nor he that removeth ſtones from one place to another for building, &c. no more ought we, if we be about the workes of our ordinary, or Chriſtian callings, to be diſcouraged at croſſes and hurts, that we get hereby, as not, if indeavouring to reclaime any from ſinne, we be for our labour bitten with their venemous tongues, as of Serpents, this is good; but the former to be preferred, becauſe cohering with the argument in hand, as I have before ſhewed. Bibliander.

If the iron be blunt, and he doth not whet the edge, then he muſt put to more ſtrength, but wiſedome is profitable to direct. Verſ. 10. By iron, underſtand a toole made of iron, if it be blunt and not ſharpened, he that will cut with it, muſt uſe more ſtrength to doe it, but it being ſharpened, leſſe ſtrength or labour will ſuffice: ſo although when wiſedome is wanting, no good can be done by a few men in a City, to defend it againſt a mighty army aſſaulting it, for then the iron tooles, wherewith they are to fight want an edge, as it were, but if there be a man of wiſedome amongſt them, he can direct them ſo, as that they ſhall be brought out of danger, wherein he alludeth to that, which was ſaid before of a little City, in which was a poore wiſe man, that by his wiſedome delivered it. Some, becauſe the word חיל ſignifieth as well Army, as edge, render it Army, giving this for the ſenſe, if the weapons, wherewith men are to fight againſt their enemies be blunt, then greater Forces muſt be added to prevaile, but wiſedome is more then equivalent to all Forces for getting the victorie, according to which the ſaying is, Armes are of little force abroad, unleſſe there be counſell at home, but the ſenſe is good if wee ſhould hold us to N. Tr. and that ſenſe. Chap. 9. Parva ſunt foris arma niſi ſit conſilium domi.

Surely the Serpent will bite without inchantment, and a babler is no better. Verſ. 11. There are certaine verſes familiar amongſt Magicians, whereby Serpents are charmed, and ſo they are not poyſonous, nor bite, not venome ſuch as come neer them. This is intimated Jer. 8. where the Chaldeans are compared to Serpents, that could not be charmed, and Pſal. 58. complaining of mens poyſonous tongues, he ſaith, they will not be charmed, as the deafe Adder will not; but hereby incantations are not approved, as Auguſt. noteth, no more then an unjuſt Steward imbezeling his Maſters goods to his own benefit is approved, by the ſimilitude taken from ſuch an one, or one that puts his money to uſury by another ſimilitude, where one ſervant is reproved by his Maſter for not ſo doing with his Talent. The ſcope of this ſimilitude is to aggravate the ſinne of a babler, and the miſchiefe comming by him, by a Serpent not charmed: for as the one biteth and killeth, ſo the other by his back-biting deſtroyeth his neighbours good name, yea, and ſometimes layeth a foundation to take away his life; wherefore that rule would be followed,

Note. Quid de quoque viro, & cui dicas ſæpe caveto.

Which they that are delighted to prate much, doe not. Some obſerve that he is worſe then a Serpent, becauſe he biteth and indangereth three by one biting, the Pſal. 5. party ſlandered, the perſon to whom, if he believeth it, and himſelfe, becauſe the Lord will deſtroy them that ſpeak leaſing.

Verſ. 12. The words of a wiſe mans mouth are gracious, but the lips of a foole will ſwallow up himſelfe, according to others, deſtroy himſelfe, which is his meaning, for, many by their own words, are intangled and cut off, if they ſpeake againſt their King, and many more for blaſpheming God ſhall periſh for ever; but the words of the wiſe are gracious, they ſpeake not but to edification, and although for their tartneſſe againſt ſinne many diſtaſte them, yet to the godly or docible, thoſe words of theirs are gracious, but of this before.

Verſ. 13. The beginning of the words of his mouth is fooliſhneſſe, and the end of his talke is miſchievous madneſſe. Here that is further amplified, which was ſaid of a fooles lips, as he beginneth ſo he endeth, take all his ſpeeches from the firſt to the laſt, none ſavour of wiſdome more then other, but all of folly and miſchievous madneſſe, if he beginneth to detract, curſe, or blaſpheme, he goeth on like a madman, and no end is to be expected of his ſo doing.

Verſ. 14. A foole alſo is full of words, a man cannot tell what ſhall be; and what ſhall be after him who can tell? Againſt multiplying words Salomon ſpake often before, in the Booke of the Proverbs, and verſ. 11. he calleth this babling; The Philoſophers note, that God hath given a man one mouth, but two eares, to ſhew that a man ſhould heare more then ſpeak; and Virgil was wont to ſay, That a man ſhould not ſpeake, but either when taciturnity will hurt, or by ſpeaking he may profit others. For the next clauſe, of no mans knowing what ſhall be, enough hath been ſaid before, upon Chap. 8. 7. Here it is repeated againe, in reference to that which is ſaid, of fooles deſtroying themſelves by their owne ſpeeches; this admonition is by them deſpiſed, becauſe no man knoweth what ſhall be hereafter, and therefore not that any ſuch thing ſhall befall them, for the making of which the more plaine, Lavater inſerteth, he ſaith, None can tell.

Verſ. 15. The labour of the fooliſh wearieth every one of them, becauſe he knoweth not how to goe to the City; That is, they toyle themſelves about getting the knowledge of Naturall and Worldly things; for ſo did the Philoſophers to finde out the ſecrets of Nature, and ſome the Philoſophers Stone, to the perfection of which knowledge yet they can never attaine; but herein their fooliſhneſſe appeares, that in the midſt of all their ſtudies, they indeavour not to know the way into the City, the new Jeruſalem, in entring into which, true happineſſe conſiſteth;

1 Cor. 1. for even the wiſe of this world are fooliſh in regard of Divine knowledge, which yet every one knoweth ſo farre forth as conduceth to his Salvation, that is preordained unto life. To this effect it is ſaid, Pſal. 107. 4. They wandred in the Wilderneſſe, and found no City to dwell in.

Hierom. Olympiod. Thus Jerom, Olympiodorus, and other ancients, and Lavater; The City is the Church, ſaith Jerom, the way to which the Philoſophers of the Heathen, and the wiſe of this world, and Hereticks know not.

Cajetan. Cajetan ſaith, that a fooliſh and wicked Ruler is here meant, by whom all are troubled wonderfully; and in ſaying, He knoweth not to goe into the City, he knoweth not how to goe in and out; That is, to governe as he ſhould doe, which the next words ſo ſeeme to favour.

Woe

Woe to thee (O Land) when thy King is a childe, and eateth in the morning, &c. Here are two evils in Kings denoted, which make a people miſerable. Verſ. 16.

Firſt, want of diſcretion, or of yeares, for not only he is a childe that is very young, but that is of little underſtanding and judgement; ſometimes the want of yeares is no prejudice to the Kingdome, for Solomon was but twelve yeares old when he began to reigne, Joaſh began at ſix, and godly Joſiah at eight, and both Solomon and Joaſh did worſe in their old age; Rehoboam had yeares enough, for he was forty, but yet he was as a childe for wiſdome, but many times children in yeares coming to this high dignity are a great curſe to a Land, for they will not be ruled by the counſell of the wiſe.

The ſecond evil is exceſſe in eating, and drinking, in the King, and his Princes; by eating in a morning is meant, both intentiveneſſe to things pertaining to gluttony and drunkenneſſe, for it is a phraſe familiar with the Hebrewes, to expreſſe a mans doing any thing with all earneſtneſſe, to ſay, doe it in the morning, and unſeaſonableneſſe, being occupied about things pertaining to the belly, when they ſhould be hearing and judging of Cauſes; for of old they uſed to come and ſit in the Gate in the morning, and the Romans followed this order; Firſt in the morning to heare Cauſes, then to attend upon Divine things, hereby to be the better prepared, and after this to ſit in Judgement. On the contrary ſide, there is a time when a Land is happy in the King, and Magiſtrates under him, for they are meant by Princes, viz. Lavater.

When the King is the ſonne of Nobles, and the Princes eate for ſtrength, and not for drunkenneſſe. Here by the Son of Nobles underſtand, not ſo much one deſcended from Kings, from whom he can draw a long pedigree, but the vertuous Sonne of a vertuous Father, for vertue, and not the high parentage of which a man cometh, innobles him; for what was Solomons owne Father David, but a Shepheard, and a younger Brother? yet for his vertue a moſt noble King; and it was Solomons wiſdome, wherein his glory principally lay, for temperance in eating and drinking, as it is to be enſued by all, ſo ſpecially by Chriſtian Kings and Princes, as is alſo ſaid, Prov. 31. in Bathſheba her inſtructions. Verſ. 17.

Through much ſlothfulneſſe the building decayeth, and through idleneſſe of the hands the houſe droppeth through. Of the loſſe and hurt coming by idleneſſe it hath been often ſpoken before, Prov. 6. and 24, &c. here another loſſe is mentioned, to ſtirre up all men to diligence, and induſtrioufneſſe in his place and calling, he that is not, if a little decay be begun in his houſe, ſhall have it in time all ruined. Verſ. 18.

A feaſt is made for laughter, and wine maketh merry, but merey anſwereth all things. This, ſaith Lavater, is ſpoken to ſtirre men up to be induſtrious, for as idleneſſe brings to poverty, and all things to ruine; ſo induſtry and diligence bringeth in riches through Gods bleſſing, ſo that a man may now feaſt and be merry, as having his purſe full of money, whereby both wine and good cheere may be bought. Of the diligent hand making rich, and plenty in the houſe of the diligent, it was ſpoken before in the Proverbs. Some, he ſaith, expound it of Kings, who live in idleneſſe and pleaſure, feaſting, and making merry out of the monies which they unjuſtly exact of their Subjects, till their houſes goe to ruine; and thus it anſwereth well to that which was ſaid againſt Kings and Princes being Children, and eating in the morning, verſ. 16, 17. But it may alſo be extended to all men that live in idleneſſe, and making merry, for by this meanes their houſes goe to ruine, and the money which ſhould repaire them, is thus waſted, and their families are brought to great want. Verſ. 19. Lavater. Prov. 19. 10. 21

Curſe not the King, no not in thy thought, and curſe not the rich in thy Bedchamber, for a bird of the aire will carry the voyce, and that which hath wings ſhall tell the matter. Having admoniſhed us to yeeld, and not to be haſty, when great men are offended with us, ver. 4. now he reſumes the ſame argument againe, and giveth us warning againſt curſing, or ſpeaking evill againſt ſuch in the greateſt privacie that may be, for it ſhall ſoone be diſcovered by one meanes or other, and then what can be expected but ruine through their power. And the birds Verſ. 20.

revealing, it is ſpoken of to ſhew, that great ſinnes cannot be ſo ſecretly committed, but when God will, the very birds ſhall be a meanes of bringing them to light, and the man that ſinneth ſo, to condigne puniſhment.

Note.

Plutarch. As for Murther, Plutarch telleth of one Beſſus, that had murthered his Father, and afterwards going to Supper, he ſaw a Swallowes Neſt with young in it, and killed them with his ſpeare, and being for this blamed by the ſtanders by as cruell, he replyed; That Swallowes once accuſed him falſly, for murthering his Father, but it was ſoone by this meanes proved to be true, he was apprehended, and brought before the Magiſtrate, and was found guilty, and executed therefore. And many other murthers have likewiſe by birds been diſcovered, and by other miraculous meanes, and the Murtherers therefore cut off; and becauſe he forbiddeth curſing of them in the very thought, it appeareth to be a great ſinne before God, if there be an evill intention againſt rulers in the mind, although it cometh not to execution; for this is a degree to rebellion, that howſoever we be by rulers provoked, we may refreine our very ſpirits, and much more our tongues from reviling them for Gods ſake, whoſe vice-gerents they are, and ſo that which is thought or done againſt them, in a rebellious way, is done againſt God, who will be revenged; yet this is not ſo ſaid to tye up the tongues of godly Miniſters from ſpeaking, as their duty is, againſt their ſins, that they may be reformed; for John Baptiſt ſpared not thus to ſpeake againſt Herod, nor Elijah againſt Ahab, nor other Prophets againſt other Kings, yea the Lord threatens Jeremiah, if he ſpake not all that he commanded againſt wicked Kings, or Peoples, that he would ſlay him. And this charge againſt curſing the King followeth well after that of houſes coming to ruine, as idleneſſe, and prodigall ſpending; ſo this being one meanes of overthrowing and bringing to ruine great houſes, as experience hath formerly taught in the time of ſundry Kings in this Land, and it would be inculcated into the eares of all that take the like rebellious courſes at any time, to make them to feare, and repent; for if curſing with the tongue ſtirres up God miraculouſly to bring it to light, and to puniſhment, much more is he provoked by violence done to their perſons; and although their judgement that doe ſo be deferred, the time ſhall come, that they ſhall not be acquitted as guiltleſſe, unleſſe they be extraordinarily by God ſtirred up, as Jehu againſt Jehoram; or in caſe that an Uſurper reigneth, as Jehojadah againſt Athaliah.

CHAP. XI.

Verſ. 1. CAſt thy bread upon the waters, for thou ſhalt finde it after many dayes; It was a Proverb amongſt the Greekes touching one that beſtowed his coſt upon that, from which he was never like to reape any anſwerable benefit againe, he hath caſt it into the waters; and likewiſe ſaith Lavater, amongſt the Germans, and it ſeemeth that the Hebrewes had ſuch a Proverb alſo.

Lavater.

Verſ. 2. And Salomon in ſaying ſo, meaneth, Give thy bread to the poore, for ſo ver. 2. explaineth it, Give a portion to ſeven, and alſo to eight; for he that giveth his bread to the poore, who eate it, and are not able to repay it him againe, doth like a man, that caſteth it into the Sea, where it ſinketh, and is never ſeene more; for ſo it ſeemeth to bee if it be looked upon with a carnall eye, which is given to the poore; but the Lord promiſeth here, and in ſundry other places, that it ſhall not be ſo, if it be done, the left hand not knowing what the right hand doth, if in ſecret, the praiſe of man not being thus hanked after, and as it here followeth, not a few, but many be relieved, no difference being put by ſaying, I will give to ſuch or ſuch poore, but not to ſuch, if they be all in extreame want, and cannot helpe themſelves to bread by their owne labour, and not in the morning only, but alſo in the evening, holding out in beneficence from the morning of our youth, to the evening of our old age, provided alſo that wee give of our owne bread, which wee have gotten by our honeſt labour, not purloined, or ſtolne, or gotten by fraud, or oppreſoppression, as is intimated in the first words, cast thy bread. For men must worke with their hands the thing that is good, that they may have to give to the necessities of others, and not to steale. For it is to be noted, that Zacheus first cleared his hands of all goods ill gotten, and then gave halfe his goods to the poore. Eph. 4. 28. Luke 19.

And in exhorting thus to give, without putting difference, I plead not for sturdy beggars, or unlicensed vagabonds, but for widdows and fatherlesse Children, for the blind and the lame, whom wee know to be such, or sick by our owne sight, or the credible information of others not counterfeited, because if any can by working get his owne bread, and will not, he must not eate; and this was the first decree, which God made after mans fall, in the sweat of thy browes, thou shalt eate thy bread, till thou returnest to the earth from whence thou wert taken: After many days it shall returne to thee againe. Although the bread which is given, may seeme to be lost, yet it is not, but shall certainly be repayed thee againe, if not in this world, yet in the world to come, according to that, Labour not for the food that perisheth, but for that which indureth to eternall life, which the Son of man will give unto you, of which it is said, It is good to eate bread in the Kingdome of Heaven, and this is implied in that saying, They shall sit down with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in the Kingdome of Heaven, and in that, I will drinke no more of the fruit of the Vine, till I drink it new with you in the Kingdome of Heaven. For, where there is sitting downe and drinking, there is also eating bread, although by neither it be meant according to the letter, but the allegory, that there shall be as great joy, as in feasting with bread and wine, all manner of delicious meats and drinks. And this of casting thy bread upon the waters, commeth well in after that which was said a little before, of feasting and making merry, ch. 10. 19. whereas that is only for a little vain and transitory mirth, this is for joy that passeth understanding, when it commeth to be remunerated in Heaven, For thou knowest not what evill shall be upon the earth, this is added, as a reason of giving to the poore; there may some evill accident befal thee, whereby thy worldly goods may goe away, as by Theeves, by enemies making war in thy country, or by casualty, of fire, water or tempests, and so thou mayst be brought to extream povertie thy self, then who will relieve thee, who hast shut up the bowels of thy compassion against others? or how grievous will it be to think, how little good thou didst with thy goods, whilst thou hadst them, and therefore that thou art now thus worthily stript of al. For giving a portion to seven and to eight it is to be noted, that he saith not all a mans goods, but some part as he can spare, although in the primitive Church, they sold, and brought in the price of all, and who so sold, and brought in, but kept back part, he was judged therefore, as Ananias and Saphira; for Christ accepted of half the goods of Zacheus, who had gotten much by forged cavillation after restitution made, and Paul saith not, that others may be eased and you grieved, and our Lord again, Give alms of that ye have. By seven and eight understand many, an uncertaine number being understood by a certain, yet one going precisely upon the number of seven saith, every of the seven dayes of the week, but why then is eight added, and what if more needy persons come in one day? Gen. 3. Joh. 6. 26. Note. 2 Cor. 8.

If the Clouds be full of raine, they empty themselves upon the earth, and if a Tree falleth towards the South and North, where it falleth, there it shall be. Vers. 3. He goeth on here in the same argument, the meaning is, as the clouds being full, cannot hold the waters in them alwayes, but must ere long empty themselves, and those waters fall to the earth, neither doth any Tree stand, but for a time, and then it is either cut or blown down, so is it with rich men, they cannot hold their goods alwayes, but they will go from them neither can they stand nor live always, but their lives indeed are very brittle and when they dye, if they fal Southward or Northward that is, on the right or left side, that is, into an happy estate or a miserable, in it they must abide for ever, therefore let men be liberall now towards the poore, whilst life lasteth, and so they shall be as the gratefull clouds in the time of drought, watering the earth, and satisfying the thirst thereof, and making it fruitfull, which is to the benefit of the waterer considered properly, as a man, fruit and benefit coming hereby hereby to him, both temporall and eternall from the poores prayers, and praiſes given to God, and prevailing for his bleſſing upon him: or if wee conſider him metaphorically, as a cloud; he ſhall by the ſuns exhaling of vapours from the ſame earth, be repleniſhed againe. And then being conſidered, as a tree to which man is often compared, when he commeth to be cut downe, he ſhall fall to the right hand of everlaſting felicity. Thus Thaumaturgus, Olympiodorus, Jerom, Lavater, ſome in one part, and ſome in another. Hence alſo it appeareth, that after death, there is no paſſing from one place to another, and therefore not from Hell or Purgatorie, to Heaven, the one of which is commonly taught by the popiſh, and the other related of one, namely Trajan the Emperour brought out of Hell, by the unceſſant prayers of Gregory; and if rich men be as clouds, the raine of their charity falleth upon the good and the bad, as raine commonly doth upon cleare, and briary, and thorny ground, that they may be ſtirred up to give, and not to be hindred by the unworthineſſe of ſome that crave of them.

Thaumatur.
Olympiodor.

Laſtly, Clouds ſending down raine, ſet forth Preachers; as Moſes ſpeakes of himſelfe, ſaying, My doctrine ſhall drop downe as the raine, and likewiſe the Pſalmes, and the Lord threatning his Vineyard degenerating, ſaith, that he will command the clouds not to raine upon it.

Deut. 3. 2.
Iſa. 5.

As rich men then muſt give almes, ſo Preachers ought to fill themſelves by ſtudy, and then raine largely by preaching, conſidering that they alſo are as Trees, that ſhall fall, when death commeth, and then woe will be to them, if they have not done ſo, they ſhall fall to the North, or if having preached, they have not lived accordingly. For, ſome clouds are without water, carryed about of the winds, being as empty caskes, making a ſound with tautologies, inke-horne phraſes, or home-ſpun words through ignorance or pride, and little or no raine to the refreſhing of Gods inheritance, when it is drie, commeth from them, they muſt looke for a heavy fall.

Verſ. 4. He that obſerveth the wind ſhall not ſow, and he that regardeth the clouds ſhall not reap. Here by a compariſon taken from an Husbandman, he ſheweth, that we muſt not be deterred from Alms-deeds, or diſcouraged, from any good doing, that we are able, and have a calling to; we may happily meet with pull-backs that may blow us back, and ſee ſome thing comming to hinder us from giving, as the ingratitude of thoſe, that wee have given unto, want, which we may feare will come afterwards to us, or ours, or wee may be traduced by men, as doing it out of the affectation of praiſe, and this makes us ſo liberall, &c.

Again, In doing other good, or ſtanding for it, we may meet with checks and reproofs, yea, ſtormes and clouds of trouble, and threatnings for our labour. It may be thought not ſo fit now, to intermeddle about reformation of religion, but to expect the decrees of generall Councels, when many ſoules are in preſent danger in reſpect of their Idolatries and ſuperſtitions, in which they are nuzled. He that thus fore-caſts dangers to come, or fears terriculaments, is like unto an Husbandman that goeth ſlowly on in his courſe of Husbandrie, being hindred one while by the wind, another while by ſhewes of raine, and ſo cannot expect to reape a good crop. It is a Proverb among Husbandmen, although wee have had an eaſie crop, yet we muſt ſowe againe: ſo the ſeed of charity muſt be ſowne againe, although wee have ſown and ſee no good yet come of it; thus Lavater, and it is the true ſenſe.

Lavater.

Verſ. 5. As thou knoweſt not the way of the Spirit, nor wind, nor how the bones grow in the womb of her that is with child: ſo thou knoweſt not the workes of God, who maketh all things. Some, by the Spirit here underſtand the wind, of which it is ſaid, Joh. 3. Thou heareſt the ſound thereof, but canſt not tell whence it commeth, nor whither it goeth. Some, the ſoule inlivening a childe in the mothers womb, becauſe it is added, nor how the bones grow in the womb of her that is with child. And as theſe things are unknowne, ſo are the works of God, that is, his doings towards men, which are to come. Its unknowne to us when he will take any of us out of this life, or our worldly goods away from us, by caſualties, by enemies, by robbers, or other croſſes, for none of them come to paſſe according to the will of men, but of God, who worketh or doth all things. According to this it is ſaid, not only that God hath numbred our dayes, but that a ſparrow falleth not to the ground without his will, and God pulleth downe one, and ſetteth up another, that wee may referre all events to his providence, and be humbled before him by our ſufferings, be alwayes preparing for death, and doe the good that wee are able, whilſt we have time, leſt wee be p'evented. But wee muſt take heed, that wee inferre not hereupon, that God is the Author of ſinne, for although they that maliciouſly miſchieve us, or unjuſtly calumniate us, cannot doe it without God; Shimei could not curſe David, but that God bad him curſe, yet the ſinne is only theirs, God tempteth no man, but he is drawne away by his owne concupiſcence. They that doe us miſchiefe by word or deed, are ſtirred up hereunto by their own malicious minds, but forſomuch as in him wee all live, move, and have our being, they cannot doe it, but by power received from him, and by his permiſſion and providence ſecretly directing them for ends beſt knowne unto himſelfe, ſometime for our puniſhment, and ſometime for our triall; as the Devill was permitted to miſchiefe Job, and ſent in to the falſe Prophets of Baal to ſeduce Ahab, that he might fall at Ramoth Gilead; and an evil ſpirit from the Lord entred into Saul, whereby he being moved, envied David, and ſought continually his deſtruction.

Act. 17.

In the morning ſow thy ſeed, and in the evening with-hold not thy hand, for thou knoweſt not whether ſhall proſper, this or that, or both be alike good. Having condemned them that obſerve the wind for ſowing, that is, upon ſome pretence or other, delay the exerciſing of charity, ver. 4. now he giveth a charge to doe this betimes, and having begun, to hold out to the end of their lives. And as we muſt be free in giving betimes, ſo we muſt betimes apply our mindes to all goodneſſe, leaving ſinne, and fulfilling all righteouſneſſe, and frequently exerciſing our ſelves in the Word and Prayer. So that here are condemned ſuch as will give nothing willingly before they dye, and ſuch as ſay in their hearts, it is time enough to apply our ſelves to ſeeke the Kingdome of God, to leave our ſins, and to call upon God for pardon, we will doe this before we dye, and then it ſhall be well with us; but this is the Devils prompting, and they that thinke ſo, are rather taught of him then of God, who chargeth us to begin betimes, and expreſly, chap. 12. 1. in youth, threatning ſuch as in their younger time follow the luſts of their hearts, and the delight of their eyes, verſ. 9. Laſtly, they are condemned, that having begun well perſevere not unto the end; all ſuch loſe all their labour and coſt, as is taught, Ezek. 36. and Gal. 6. 9. And the ſimilitude, by which he here goeth, is of great force to move us, our Almeſ-giving, and endeavouring after good, is as the Husband-mans ſowing, from which he hopeth for great benefit; and who would not betimes goe about that, whereby great benefit will probably come, and perſevere in ſo doing, but of this the greateſt benefit that is, will come a reward in Heaven, and that not probably, but moſt certainly, becauſe God, that cannot lye, hath promiſed it; Be not weary of well-doing, for yee ſhall reap in due time, if ye faint not.

Verſ. 6.

Note.

Gal. 6. 9.

Truly the light is ſweet, and a pleaſant thing it is for the eyes to behold the Sun. But if a man liveth many yeares, and rejoyce in them all, yet let him remember the dayes of darkneſſe, for they ſhall be many, all that cometh is vanity. Here to ſtirre us up the more to begin, and to perſevere in all goodneſſe, it is commended unto us to conſider the dayes of darkneſſe to come to thoſe, that are taken in their hearts with theſe worldly things, pleaſures, or profits, but have no hearts to doe, as was given in charge before; for yet a little while, and theſe dayes of darkneſſe ſhall come; That is, dayes of miſery, and torment, which will be many more then all the dayes of the longeſt Livers here, that is, for ever and ever. And then, what will it benefit us, that we have ſeene the light? That is, lived, and lived long in this world, in all pleaſure, when it is once paſt and gone, ſurely there is no ſenſuall man, but then will ſay, all this was vanity, which is the meaning of the laſt words, All that cometh is vanity; to expreſſe which Lavater hath it, Whatſoever happeneth, he will judge to be vanity.

Verſ. 7.
Verſ. 8.

And the vulgar Latine, Quæ cum venerint, vanitatis arguentur præterita; which when they come, things paſt ſhall be reproved as vaine; the Epicures, and

Mammo-

Mammonites of this world themselves crying out upon them, as whereby they were so infatuated, and finally brought to such extreame misery; then hereupon he turneth himselfe to the sensuall young man in an ironicall manner, saying;

Vers. 9. Rejoyce (O young man.) in thy youth, and cheere thee in the dayes of thy youth, and walke in the wayes of thy heart, and in the sight of thine eyes, but know, that for all these things God will bring thee to judgement; That is, doe thus, if thou wilt, but be sure, if thou dost, that after thy pleasure thus taken, thou shalt suffer paine, when the time of thy judgement cometh, as every wicked man shall, for we must all appeare before Gods Judgement Seat.

Rom. 10. 14.

Vers. 10. Therefore remove sorrow, or anger, from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh, for childhood and youth are vanity. Here are two things particularly taxed in youth, which they considering the judgement to come, and all others have need to beware of, and that is wrath, and fleshly lusts. To wrath young men are most prone, so that if they be but a little provoked by words, they are presently on a fire, through rage, and they will be revenged; and to fleshly lusts, so as that of lusts it is said, as peculiar to this age, fly the lusts of youth.

For these words, Child-hood and youth, the vulgar hath, Child-hood and pleasure are vaine; and old Translation, Childe-hood and Ignorance; the word שחר signifieth nigrescere, to wax blacke, and is rendred either youth, compared to the Morning, when it first dawneth; or Ignorance, in which who so is, is in darknesse; or pleasure, in which he that liveth, walketh in the darke: and I see not but that old age may be better meant hereby, when the eyes, the light of the body grow dim, and darke, and so both ages of man are here meant; and so the first verse of Chapter twelve answereth well hereunto, where he exhorteth men to remember their Creator in the time of youth, and then proceeding to describe old age, he saith, Whilst the Sun, or the light, or the Moon, or Stars be not darkned; and if it be so taken, it is concluded, that man in his prime and wane is vanity; to which adde that of David, Man in his best estate is altogether vanity; and we see what little cause any man hath to be proud, and vaine-glorious, that we may all learne to be humble, and feare before God, and abhorre from sinne, for which we are said to be so vaine, and light, and ensue vertue, whereby, when we come to be weighed in the ballance, we may not be found light, as the chaffe, to be blowne away by the wind of Gods wrath, but solid as wheat, or gold, and be established in his Kingdome for ever and ever.

Note.

CHAP. XII.

Vers. 1. REmember thy Creator in the dayes of thy youth, whilst the evill dayes come not, nor the yeares draw nigh, wherein thou shalt say, I have no pleasure. By evill dayes here are meant dayes of misery, when the body is decayed, and oppressed with many infirmities and diseases, which are so grievous to old age, that a man no more takes pleasure of his life, but had rather dye, and depart from it to be rid of them. If in youth this be not thought upon to stirre thee up now to feare God, and to fly sinnes incident especially to youth, but passest thy time in vanity, pleasure, and revenge-taking, against which he gave warning before; thou shalt finde to thy cost, that thy youth is meere vanity, and when thou comest to judgement, thou shalt be found to be vaine and light. Now is the time, or it will never be, for it is the time here set by God, who will now be ready by his Spirit to help thee; but tarry thy owne time, thinking to doe it afterwards, and put thy Salvation upon a most dangerous adventure; as he that having a limited time to come in, and submit to his Prince, that hath been a Rebell, if he comes not in the time limited, is unlikely after this to finde mercy, but shall dye a cruel death; so he that cometh not in to God, by turning from his sinnes, in the time set by him, can have no hope after this time expired; his accustoming himselfe to sinne in youth, makes his conversion in old age impossible: As it is impossible to wash the Black-black Moore white, or the ſpots of the Leopard away. Some indeed are called at the eleventh houre of the day to labour in the Vine-yard; That is, in old age, but what is this to them that are called at the third, or ſixth, and will not heare? it is ſpoken only for the comfort of ſuch, as amongſt whom the voyce of the Goſpel cometh not, till they be old; as it was with Nicodemus, and Ananias, that was ſent to Saul, who is ſaid to have been an old Diſciple, that is, called in his old age; they that are called then in youth, and charged to remember God now, and will not, have no pretext for their going on in ſinne. Jer. 23. 13. Matth. 20. Acts 9.

Whilſt the Sun, the Light, the Moone, or the Stars be not darkned, nor the clouds returne after the raine. Here he goeth on more particularly, to deſcribe old age, and to ſhew how unfit it is for converſion, the Sun, Moone, and Starres, and all light is now darkned, he that turneth muſt have light from thence-forth to walke by in the ſtreight and narrow way, but the aged, as the light of the world, are now darkned to them through the dimneſſe of their ſight, through the decaying of their ſences, underſtanding, and memory, have the Preachers, the Lights of the world darkned unto them, they being not now able through deafneſſe to heare, through blindneſſe to read that, whereby they might be inlightned; or if they can, not be able ſo readily to remember, or underſtand, as in their younger time. Verſ. 2. Mat. 5. 14.

Jerom will have the darkning of the Sunne, Moone, and Starres, meant atthe laſt day, and the darkning by death; but becauſe that, which is here ſaid, is oppoſed to youth, and other parts of this deſcription ſet forth men continuing ſtill in this world, I rather hold, that this is ſpoken of old age, and ſo doe moſt Expoſitours; neither the clouds return after the raine; That is, cloudineſſe to clearneſſe of the Heaven againe, as is commonly done, but it ſtill continueth darke and cloudy, as in time of raine; That is, it is thus to them that be aged, whoſe ſight decayeth; the Sky, that after raine groweth cleare againe, becometh now alſo cloudy to them. Hieron.

In the day, when the keepers of the houſe ſhall tremble, and the ſtrong men bow themſelves, and the grinders ceaſe, becauſe they are few, and the lookers out at the windowes be darkned; By the keepers of the houſe, underſtand the armes, and hands, whereby the houſe of the body is defended, and maintained, for the body is called an houſe, 2 Cor. 5. and with the hands a man laboureth to keep it, and with the ſtrength of his armes defends it, but when he is very aged, theſe keepers ſhake through Palſies; the grinders be the teeth, which are then moſt of them gone out, and the lookers out at the windowes, the eyes, the dimneſſe of the ſight being hereby further ſet forth. Verſ. 3.

And the doores ſhall be ſhut in the ſtreet, when the ſound of the grinding is low, and he ſhall riſe up at the voyce of the Bird, and all the daughters of Muſick ſhall be brought low. By the doores underſtand with Lavater, and Bonaventure, the lips, which through feebleneſſe in old age are ſhut up, as it were in the ſtreets, where others are heard ſpeaking loud, they ſcarce walking out, when youthes are playing, and ſhouting, or crying out there one to another. Verſ. 4. Lavater. Bonavent.

By a phraſe like this it is ſaid of Chriſt, he ſhall not cry, nor lift up his voyce in the ſtreets, when the ſound of the grinding is low; this may either be applied to the ſame, the voyce is low, which is uttered by the tongue, throat, lips, and teeth; for as the lips, ſo the teeth, which are grinders, move in ſpeaking. Jerom and Albinus will have their keeping within meant, cauſing the doores to be ſhut, and not walking abroad now in the ſtreets, as in former times; he is ſaid to riſe up at the voyce of the Bird, becauſe he is very wakey, and ſleepeth now but a little, and the noyſe of the Cock-crowing awaketh him, and the daughters of Muſick be the Organs of ſinging, which now faile in him, or make ſo low a ſound, that his muſicke is ſcarce heard. Some expound it of his not delighting in muſick. Vox eſt ſonus linguæ gutture labijs, & dentibus prolatus. Cald. Paraphraſt. Hieron.

When they ſhall be afraid of that which is high, and feare ſhall be in the way, and the Almond-tree ſhall flouriſh, and the Graſ-hopper ſhall be a burthen, and deſire ſhall faile, &c. old men are afraid of that which is high, when they feare to goe up to high places, to looke downe from thence, leſt they ſhould be Verſ. 5.

made dizzie, and they feare in the way, leſt they ſhould ſtumble and fall through their weakneſſe, and want of ſight, to keep them from going into miſchiefe.

The Almond Trees flouriſhing, and blowing white, ſetteth forth grey haires, on his head, and beard; the vulgar for theſe words, the Graſhopper ſhall be a burthen, hath, the Graſhopper ſhall be fatted; and Jerom hereby underſtands the ankles ſwelled with the Gout, becauſe the word rendred Graſhopper, ſignifieth alſo talus, the ankle, for the Gout is a grievous paine to men in old age; but why יתו חבל ſhould be rendred fatned, I ſee no reaſon, for it ſignifieth burthened; and if the tranſlation Graſhopper be held, the ſence will be good thus, his crookedneſſe in his backe, like the Graſhoppers, wil be a burthen to him.

Some expound it of every little thing making a noyſe, although but ſmall; and when he is come to this luſt and pleaſure, that way ceaſeth, and he dyeth; that is,
Jer. 22. 18. his going to his long home, which now followeth, and the mourners goe about the ſtreets, as the manner is at great Funerals; contrary to which it is ſaid of Jehoiakim, that they ſhould not lament or mourne for him.

Verſ. 6. Or ever the ſilver cord be looſed, or the golden bowle broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountaine, or the wheele at the ciſterne. By the ſilver cord moſt probably is meant the Spina dorſi, or pith in the backe bone, which looketh white; by the golden bowle, the filme about the Braine, which is according to ſome, of a yellow colour, according to others not, but called golden for the preciouſneſſe thereof, in death both theſe are diſſolved; by the pitcher broken at the fountaine, the Liver decaying, which is a fountaine of bloud; the wheele at the ciſterne, the heart compared to a ciſterne, becauſe as water through a Pipe runneth into a ciſterne, ſo the bloud in great danger runneth thither, and the life, that is alwayes turning round like a wheele from the earth, and having fetcht a circuit here a while, returning to the earth againe; or the living man is as this wheele in reſpect of his body, as verſ. 7.

Verſ. 7. Duſt returneth to the duſt, and the Spirit to God that gave it. Here drawing to an end of this tract, he ſpeakes againe as he began, Vanity of vanities, all is vanity.

Verſ. 8. Verſ. 9. Moreover, becauſe the Preacher was wiſe, he ſtill taught the people knowledge, he gave good heed, and ſought out, &c. Here the example of Salomon is commended, to the imitation of all wiſe and learned Preachers, for why elſe doth he ſay thus of himſelfe, but to ſtirre up all the wiſe to doe likewiſe? for certainly being ſo humbled, as he was for his foule falling, he ſpake it not in vaine-glory, and therefore to whet on others to uſe their talents of learning, and knowledge, and to improve them for the inſtruction of Gods people, by preaching and writing, as where neceſſity of the Church requireth, and to this end we muſt ſtudy to finde out that which may give light, and not to ſet forth any thing pertaining to inſtruction in godlineſſe, in word, or writing confuſedly, but in order holding us to a method in all things that we teach, whereby our Hearers or Readers may be the moſt benefited; neither is it enough for the Learned, that they have attained to ſuch a meaſure of knowledge as they have, but they muſt ſtill labour to increaſe it, for even inſpired men, Salomon, and Paul did thus, as may be gathered from that which Paul ſpeaketh of himſelfe to Timothy, ſaying Bring the bookes with thee, and eſpecially the Parchments, for what would he doe with bookes, but read, and ſtudy upon them?

Note.

Laſtly, becauſe Salomon calleth himſelfe a Preacher, becauſe he wrot ſo many good Proverbs, and Sentences for inſtruction, although he never went up into a Pulpit, as Ezra a Prieſt, to preach; that writing is a preaching, as well as publick ſpeaking, and it is a farre more durable preaching; for thus Moſes, ſo long agoe dead, yet preacheth, as may be gathered from the words in the Parable
Luke 16. of Dives and Lazarus, where it is ſaid, They have Moſes and the Prophets, let them heare them; therefore they ſtill teach to be heard, when they are read, as it Acts 15. is elſewhere expreſly ſaid of Moſes, he is preached, when he is read in their Sinagogues every Sabbath day. But let not this be taken as ſpoken in favour of writing, and not preaching in the Congregation, if he be a preacher by calling, for he ought to doe doe that ſpecially, much leſſe in favour of ſuch idle Miniſters, as will not take the paines to doe any thing, but read other mens writings, as any one that hath learned to read engliſh may doe.

And that which was written was upright, even words of truth; which is true not only of Salomons words, but of all things contained in the Canonicall Scriptures. Verſ. 10.

The words of the wiſe are like goads, or nailes faſtned by the Maſters of the aſſembly, which are given from one ſhepheard. Verſ. 11. Here by two compariſons Divine inſtructions are ſet forth, according to their efficacy in the hearts of the Hearers with whom they take; 1. They are compared to Goads, whereby Oxen are pricked on to draw, ſo by propounding Gods promiſes and threatnings, and exhortations made hereupon, men are pricked on to the workes of God, which otherwiſe they would never doe. 2. To Nailes, which being ſharpe alſo are driven into Boards, or other things, and by this meanes they are firmly faſtened; ſo by theſe the good Hearers of the Word are faſtened in Grace, and fall not therefrom, their hearts are alſo peirced as by a ſword, making them full of ſorrow for their ſinnes, to repentance unto ſalvation, never to be repented of. And theſe Goads and Nailes they have from one Shepheard Chriſt Jeſus, who ſaith, that he is the true Shepheard, for no teaching is thus penetrative, or efficacious to ſtirre up to worke the workes of God, unleſſe the Lord putteth to his power, according to that, Paul planteth, and Apollo watereth, but God giveth the bleſſing; without which neither is he any thing that planteth, nor he that watereth. Moreover, hereby is intimated, that Preachers have their faculty of teaching from him, and not of themſelves, for which he ſaith, Without me yee can doe nothing, and that the true Preachers of the Word teach not their owne phantaſies, or any thing diverſe from his word, but that only.

Heb. 4. 12. Joh. 10. 1 Cor. 3.

And further by theſe (my ſonne) be admoniſhed: of making many bookes there is no end, and much ſtudy is a wearineſſe of the fleſh. Verſ. 12. Seeing the words of the wiſe, which they have from God, be ſo peircing and efficacious, let them enter into thy heart, whoſoever thou art that readeſt, or heareſt them ſet forth by vocall preaching, and doe accordingly; for many buſie themſelves in writing Bookes, wherein they ſet forth errours to ſeduce thee, or full of thorny queſtions, exerciſing mens heads much, but to little purpoſe, as many writings of the Schoole-men doe, and ſome write Bookes of vaine things, invented to draw the Reader to ſpend his time in them; thus neglecting to read the Word, and the explanations hereof, whereby they doe but weary themſelves without profit; for it is not to be conceived, that it is ſpoken againſt much reading, and writing, for edification in knowledge and grace, becauſe even Kings are commanded to read thus continually; for this muſt be done, that we may learne to feare God, and to keep his Commandements alwayes, which is the whole duty of man, and that upon paine of being ſeverely judged, if we doe not, but ſin here againſt, although never ſo ſecretly, yea, if but in our thoughts.

A THREE-FOLD COMMENTARY

upon the moſt excellent

Song of Salomon.

The Firſt, by way of Expoſition, making all things obſcure, more and more cleare to the underſtanding of every intelligent Reader.

The Second, by way of Paraphraſe, in Meeter.

The Third, by way of obſervation, for the further edification of the Reader in the knowledge, and grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

A WORKE,

By the reading and ſerious conſideration whereof, the Soule not given over to a reprobate ſence, cannot but be raviſhed with the Love of Chriſt, and joy of the Holy Ghoſt, and moved to repent of Sin, and ſo elevated to things above, as to ſet light by afflictions, or pleaſures, or profits here below.

BY

JOHN MAYER, Doctor in Divinity.

LONDON:

Printed for Robert Ibbitſon, and Thomas Roycroft. 1652.

To the Vertuous, and his very good Friend, the Lady Poines, Wife to my much honoured Patron, Maurice Barrow, of Beningham Eſquire, grace and peace from Jeſus Chriſt.

HAving by Gods aſſiſtance (moſt worthy Lady) finiſhed this difficult, but moſt profitable worke, upon a Booke of holy Scripture, wherein abundance of Divine treaſure lyeth hid, beyond that, which one by the bare reading thereof would conceive; I thought it would not be unacceptable to your Ladiſhip to commend it, as to all Chriſtians in generall, for the light, and inſtructions contained herein, ſo to your ſelfe in ſpeciall, as a teſtimony of my beſt reſpects unto you, for your undeſerved favour towards me, ever ſince you firſt knew me. After my writing upon the whole Bible, firſt upon the New Teſtament, and then upon the Old, and on the Bookes therein contained, wherein I laboured many yeares (and that, I hope not unprofitably to thoſe, that make uſe of my Labours) the good God that ſtrengthened me, a moſt infirme man, to that great work, ſtill prolonging this my fraile life; I thought that it would much more availe for the edification of the Reader, to adde upon ſome of the moſt uſefull Bookes of Scripture to the light given in the Expoſition, profitable obſervations, moſt genuinely flowing here-from; and therefore finding this little booke, being rightly underſtood, to be full hereof, but by almoſt all men paſſed over, without finding them out, I have alſo obtained help from above, to make my worke hereupon yet more compleat, by raiſing; and proſecuting ſomewhat largely many good inſtructions throughout all this Song, and by turning it into Engliſh Meeter, and that ſo, as by the helpe hereof it may be underſtood in every paſſage; and if any ſhall delight to ſing ſuch holy Hymnes, he may now ſing them with underſtanding; For the matter herein contained, although it be a Love-Song, there is nothing in it vaine, or carnall, but Spirituall, and heavenly, all of the greateſt moment in the world, viz. the Incarnation of Chriſt, whereby two Natures were joyned in one Perſon, the one unſeen, and the other ſeen; the excellency of Chriſt in all his parts, and the excellency of the Church, or faithfull Soule in all hers; the ſweet ſavour made by the Apoſtles going out to preach the Goſpel, the ſpreading of Chriſts name; the converſion of the Gentiles, then of the Jewes, and after that againe of more Gentiles; the mutuall love and delight, which Chriſt and his Church take in each other; and laſtly, Chriſts coming the ſecond time to Judgement, the conſummation of this world, and the the everlaſting Life to come, as appeareth in briefe, in the method ſet forth at the end of this Booke; and now what is my deſire, but that the People of God may injoy the benefit hereof, they that hitherto have not taſted of the ſweetneſſe of Divine contemplations, having their mindes now elevated hereunto, and they that have, being more raiſed up, and through the joy and comfort found herein, the better able to beware ~~the~~ of ſad condition of theſe troubleſome times, for which we have need of all helps, that though the earth ſhake, and the mountaines be caſt into the midſt of the Sea, as the Pſalmiſt ſpeaketh, yet we through patience, and comfort of the Scriptures, may be eſtabliſhed in the good way, and ſo have hope that maketh not aſhamed.

Amongſt the many miſeries of theſe times it is not the leaſt, that the ſtudy of the holy Scriptures, which is now moſt neceſſary, is moſt neglected, to the great diſcouragement both of Writers and Printers, and the great detriment of the Soule, becauſe as Chryſoſtom ſaith of worldly men, that pleaded their many worldly buſineſſes, as a Superſedeas to the reading of the Scriptures; what ſayeſt thou (O Man) haſt thou no need to read the Scriptures, becauſe thou art full of worldly imployments, let Clerkes read them, who have nothing elſe to doe? Thou haſt moſt need of all others to read them, becauſe thou art, as one upon the Sea, toſſed with tempeſts, and in continuall hazzard of drowning, that hereby thou maiſt have comfort; ſo I may ſay to thoſe that live in theſe times, will yee lay the holy Scriptures, and Bookes written hereupon aſide, becauſe the times are troubleſome? the more troubles we are intangled withall, the more need we have to pray, and read, that through Spirituall joy in ſo doing, our mindes may be eaſed of our griefe, at the hearing, and ſeeing, and feeling thereof, and we may the more patiently beare all our oppreſſions, and miſeries, and be kept on in the right way, without declining to the right hand, or to the left, till we come at the end hereof, the ſalvation of our ſoules; To which ſalvation that we may come in his good time, the Lord ſanctifie us by his Truth, his Word, through the daily exerciſing of our ſelves in the reading, hearing, and meditating thereupon, and by his grace ordering our lives and actions accordingly to the end of our dayes.

Now the God of all grace and mercy make this a meanes to confirme, inlighten, ſtrengthen, and ſtabliſh you in every good way and worke, to the coming of our Lord Jeſus, that your ſoule may then be found to be one of thoſe, in this Booke ſo highly commended, to his glory, and your everlaſting bliſſe.

Yours in the Lord

John Mayer.

The Preface.

THe Hebrewes, when they would ſet forth a moſt excellent thing, doe it by doubling the word; and ſo Salomon intituling this his Booke, A Song of Songs, prepareth the Reader to expect not a Song, like unto other amorous Songs, made by vaine men, to pleaſe the fleſhly minded, but a moſt excellent and Divine Song, things pertaining to fleſhly love being mentioned, but thoſe that pertaine to Spirituall love allegorically ſet forth hereby.

By deſcending, ſaith Gregory, to baſe carnall love of Breaſts, and other parts of the body beloved, he ſeeketh to draw us up to Holy love, under the chaffe he hideth the good Corne; and if any man in reading this, lookes to the Letter and no further, and derideth it, as unworthy to come into the number of holy Writings, he eates but the chaffe with the Beaſt; he that is a man will finde out the Corne under the chaffe, and feed thereupon. The Letter killeth, but the Spirit giveth life, and ſo doth this Song, being Spiritually underſtood, it quickneth the Soule to the love of Chriſt; but literally, it carryeth away to fleſhly Luſt, which is to deſtruction. And it is thus ſet forth, and not plainly, becauſe things only plainly taught affect us not ſo much, as ordinary a matter, which may eaſily be had, but that which is fetcht out of the hidden parts of a rock; neither are Divine things ſo well underſtood, but by things ſenſible; wherefore he ſpeaketh according to that which we know by ſence, that we may the better attaine to the knowledge of that which tranſcendeth all Humane ſence and reaſon; as Chriſt taught all things concerning the Kingdome of Heaven by Parables, we muſt imitate the Lord therefore in his Reſurrection, becoming now a new Creature, and not taſting things pertaining to the body, as before; ſo we in reading this moſt excellent Song muſt riſe up above carnall ſence, taſting all that is here ſaid by a new kind of taſte, old things being paſt with us, and all things now becoming new. He that doth not thus, cometh to the great Kings Nuptiall feaſt without a wedding Garment, and ſo inſtead of being inlightned hereby, incurreth the danger of being caſt into utter darkneſſe for ever. Greg. Magnus.

And it is worth the noting, that this Booke is placed after Eccleſiaſtes, and the Proverbs, upon good reaſon, becauſe in the Proverbs are ſet forth things Morall, wherein it is needfull for a man to be firſt inſtructed, that he may learne to be wiſe, both in things Divine and Humane; in Eccleſiaſtes, the vanity of all worldly things, both profits, pleaſures, and knowledge, if the feare and love of God concurreth not here-with. Then the Soule being thus prepared, in this Song he ſetteth forth matters of Divine contemplation, for the raviſhing thereof with the love of Chriſt, as that ſhe may, in reſpect of this, deſpiſe all other things, and be even in this life incomparably ſolaced herewith; which cannot be but in him, that well digeſteth Eccleſiaſtes, and ſo is in his ſoule gone from theſe fading vanities.

CHAP. I.

Verſ. 2. The Bride. Juſtus Orgel.

LEt him kiſſe me with the kiſſes of his mouth, for thy love is better then wine. This is the voyce of the Church, or of the Soule touching Chriſt, ſaith Juſtus Orgelitanus, being ſenſible of Gods wrath for our ſinnes, and deſirous of the reconciliation, which is by him offered, 2 Cor. 5. 20. O, ſaith the ſoule of the penitent Sinner, let God bee friends with me againe through his Chriſt, and kiſſe me, as the Father of the prodigall did him, returning with a kiſſe of the greateſt love; as when man and wife have been at variance, and the fault hath been only in the wife, if ſhe can get a kiſſe of him, a reconcilement is made, and this cheareth the heart more then wine, although it be ſpecially given to cheare mans heart. Therefore man being exhorted to reconcile himſelfe to God, is exhorted in theſe words, kiſſe the Son leſt he be angry.

Luk. 15.

Gregory. Gregory ſaith, he kiſſeth us, when he inſpireth his grace and love into our hearts, for by thus doing, he maketh us, through the delight that we have herein, to come out of our ſelves, joying now in nothing elſe, but in him, and deſiring nothing elſe; as Paul ſaid of himſelfe, when he was thus inſpired, that he eſteemed the things, which before he highly accounted of, yea, all of them, but as droſſe, and dung. And the ſoule ſaith, Let him kiſſe me, becauſe that unleſſe he preventeth me with his inſpirations, I cannot move towards him to kiſſe him.

Phil. 3. 7, 8.

Note.

The beginning of the love and grace of God in us then, is in his love towards us, according to that of John, we love him, becauſe he loved us firſt; but although there be no good motions in us towards our Saviour, of any availe to make us to goe unto him, yet we muſt deſire him, as we are able, and ſay, Let him kiſſe me, that we may be thus inſpired, as we are ſtirred up to doe continually, by the Word, where he is ſet forth to be the faireſt of all men, and his lips full of grace, and he that thirſteth, let him come unto me; and taught exemplarily in David, ſaying, As the heart panteth after the rivers of water, ſo my ſoule thirſteth after thee, O God. And when the ſoule doth thus, then Chriſt, her moſt loving Husband, is ready to anſwer her deſire, to intimate which, the ſoule, as being here-with refreſhed, ſaith, thy love is better then wine; Gregor. Thy dugges are better, out of which milke cometh, to nouriſh the faithfull in all piety, to the great refreſhing thereof; and the word Hebr. is דדי by Jerom commonly rendred Dugges; and Gregory ſaith, that theſe two Dugges are the love of God, and of our Neighbour, which we have from Chriſt, and have more refreſhing hereby, then by all the things of the world, becauſe theſe nouriſh, the cares of the world kill.

Gregor.

Juſtus Orgel. Juſtus by theſe Dugges; and the Milke coming here-from, underſtandeth the Doctrine of the Goſpel, ſet forth by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, which excelleth that of the Law, becauſe it teacheth more perfect love, not only of our neighbours, but even of our enemies; whereas the Law ſaith, Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour,

and hate thine enemy. But neither the Law, nor worldly cares are here related to, but the moſt chearing thing to the heart, which is wine; but the love of Chriſt ſhed abroad in the heart, makes it more glad, then the beſt wine in the world, when once by faith the ſoule comes to be made ſenſible hereof; for it pacifieth the mind, and ſtrengthens it to beare all tentations, and it giveth quiet thereunto, it being thus made the ſeat of wiſdome. It ſeemes to me, that it is better rendred Loves, as by Ainſworth, becauſe it is the ſpeech of a Bride to her Bride-groom, as Chriſt and his Church are compared, Joh. 3. and therefore theſe two are the interlocutours throughout all this Song; and to a Bride-groome it is improper, to aſcribe Dugges, as to a woman.

Becauſe of the ſavour of thy good oyntments, thy name is as an oyntment poured forth, therefore doe the virgins love thee; That is, becauſe of the gifts and graces of thy Spirit given to thy faithfull people, making them gratefull, whereſoever the fame hereof is diffuſed, thy name Jeſus cometh to be famous every where, for this name is delectable above all names, and hereunto all things doe reverence by bowing the knee. The oyntments giving ſo gratefull a ſavour, were gifts of miraculous operations, Faith, Patience, Meekneſſe, Righteouſneſſe, Love, and Joy, for which the ſoules of theſe, to whom the ſweet ſmell hereof came in every Nation that loved Chriſt; according to this the Apoſtle ſaith, We are a ſweet ſmelling ſavour to God in every place. Verſ. 3. Phil. 2. 9. 2 Cor. 2. 15.

Draw me, we will run after thee, the King brought me into his chambers, we will be glad, and rejoyce in thee, we will remember thy love more then wine, the upright love thee. Here is further implyed, where the love of the Soule to Chriſt beginneth, and what is the efficient cauſe hereof, viz. his drawing of it by his unſpeakeable love, and by his Spirit unto him, according to which he ſaith, No man can come to me, except the Father draweth him. But being thus drawne, all beleevers, as one, not only goe, but run after him, which is implyed by the change of the number, draw me, and we will run. Verſ. 4. Joh. 6. 44.

They that are taken with the true love of Chriſt cannot by any impediment be ſtayed from following him, ſo farre doth their love of him exceed the love of all worldly things, ſo that they now delay not the time of following him; Father and Mother, and Wife and Children, Brethren and Siſters, Houſe or Land cannot ſtay them, nor the love of worldly pleaſures, or profits, one day or houre from beginning this their happy race, the end whereof will be a Crowne incorruptible. And this makes againſt thoſe, that like Lot and his Wife, and Daughters, linger ſtill in Sodom, and make no haſte to turne from their ſinnes, as thinking that they may doe this time enough afterwards. But Paul according to that which is here, ſaith, I have fought a good fight, and run a good race, and ſo was ſure of the Crowne; the King brought me into his chambers. Note. 2 Tim. 4. 8.

What are theſe chambers, ſaith Gregory, or cellars, as he calleth them, but the Myſteries of the holy Scriptures, into which Chriſt, the King, bringeth the Soule, when he giveth it the underſtanding hereof, as he ſaid to his Apoſtles, To you it is given to know the myſteries of the kingdome of Heaven, who ſo is brought hither, immediatly cryeth out, we will be glad and rejoyce in thee. Now it being knowne what the incomparable love of Chriſt is towards us, in ſhedding his bloud for us, we have joy herein above all joyes, even above that which is in wine, all worldly things being deſpiſed in compariſon, the upright ſhall love thee; That is, all who walke not in crooked wayes of ſinne, but in the right and ſtreight way, underſtanding this, will love thee with the like love of the higheſt degree, and worldly things no more; ſo that if he, who ſo liveth in ſinne, hath not the love of Chriſt in him, although outwardly he carrieth the matter never ſo cloſely, as Hypocrites doe, that live in ſinne, but it cometh not out till afterwards, as the Apoſtle ſaith, Some mens ſins goe before, and in ſome they follow after. They ſay, they love him, but in their deeds denying him they are proved lyars, for the upright only love him, becauſe no man can love ſinne and Chriſt alſo, for what agreement betwixt righteouſneſſe and unrighteouſneſſe? Gregor. Matth. 13. 11, 12. Note. 1 Tim. 5. 24. 2 Cor. 6. 17.

I am blacke, but comly (O yee Daughters of Jeruſalem,) as the tents of Verſ. 5.

Kedar, and as the curtaines of Salomon. Becauſe it was before ſaid, the upright wil love thee, leſt for this it ſhould be thought, that the righteous and faithfull Servants of God are without ſinne, and might thinke themſelves ſo, the Church here confeſſeth; I am blacke, yet comly; the vulgar, faire, and as the skin of Salomon.

Gregor. Kedar, ſaith Gregory, ſetteth forth blackneſſe, for ſo it ſignifieth; Salomon is pacifique; That is, Chriſt who maketh peace betwixt God and man. I am black then, ſaith the faithfull ſoule, by reaſon of my ſinnes, as Kedar, but comly, or faire Epheſ. 5. through the love of this Salomon, who hath waſhed us with his bloud from every ſpot and wrinckle; through the corruption then that ſtill remaineth in us, we that beleeve, and love Chriſt, are blacke, but through Chriſts righteouſneſſe, made ours by faith, we are faire, as one ſaith well; Chriſt loved a filthy and foul Church, that he might make her faire. Now for as much as the true faithfull ſoule confeſſeth her ſelfe to be black, through ſinne ſtill cleaving unto her, what is to be thought of the Antinomians, who ſay, that they are without ſinne, and God can ſee no ſin in them, and therefore they condemne in the juſtified all confeſſing of ſins? Surely they are not led by the Spirit, whereby the truly faithfull are led, and therefore are not of that body; and ſo whilſt they are this conceitedly righteous, they have no true righteouſneſſe at all; and whilſt they ſay they are without ſinne, they have in them nothing but ſinne, inſtead of their imagined righteouſneſſe.

Eccleſiam fœdam & turpem amavit, ut Pulchram redderet. Note.

Juſtus Orgel. ſaith the ſame with Gregory, touching the Churches confeſſing her ſelfe black by ſinne; but he further ſaith, Shee calls her ſelfe blacke for Perſecutions, and ſufferings, and debaſements by Tyrants, of which Paul ſaith, We are made the off-ſcouring of all things; and the Pſalmiſt, Though yee have laine among the pots, and have been black, yet yee ſhall be as a Dove, that hath ſilver wings, and her feathers of gold. Pſal. 68. 13.

Where both black and faire is ſpoken of, and by the skin of Salomon, he underſtandeth death, in which, as Beaſts that be killed and flayed, Chriſtians were in the Primitive Church continually, according to that alſo of the Apoſtle, who further ſaith, in ſpeaking of the ſufferings of the Church, We beare about in our bodies the death of our Lord Jeſus. And this ſpeech is directed to the daughters of Jeruſalem to intimate, that the Goſpel ſhould goe firſt out from thence, but by the Jewes be rejected, and perſecuted, and by the Heathen alſo, whereby the Jewes were more hardned, as judging the Chriſtian religion hated of God, ſith the profeſſours thereof were ſo perſecuted, and mocked.

The word here uſed, יריעות ſignifieth either skin, or curtaine, which may be thought to be all one, becauſe the Tabernacle was covered with skins, and hereby hidden, as a roome with Curtaines drawne: but by Salomons skin I cannot underſtand another compariſon that ſetteth forth blackneſſe, but becauſe all things about him were faire and glorious, beauty, and this beſt anſwereth to theſe words, but comly, or faire, as the tents of Kedar to theſe, I am blacke; the Arabians tents, meant by the tents of Kedar, being black and foule, as beſt fitted a rude and poore people, ſuch as they were in Arabia Petræa.

Verſ. 6. Looke not upon me becauſe I am blacke, becauſe the Sun hath looked upon me, my mothers children were angry with me, they made me the keeper of the Vine-yards, but mine own Vine-yard have I not kept. Here by the Sun, Gregory underſtands Chriſt, in compariſon of whom the Soule of the moſt holy man is black, and by mothers children, the Apoſtles, the children of the Jewiſh Church; and he will have her that ſpeaketh, the Church, or Congregation of them that firſt imbraced the Goſpel, whether Jewes or Gentiles, and their anger againſt this Church, their anger at their Idolatries, and Superſtitions, from which yet the Apoſtles having converted them, ſet them up, to keep and ſtabliſh them in the faith, whereinto they had converted them, many Nations; but ſaith he, that was a Jew by nature, but now faithfull, Mine owne vine-yard have I not kept; That is, the Jewiſh Church, which ſtill remained in infidelity, and put the Goſpel away from her. But in this Expoſition things are much forced, in that the Sun making blacke is here expounded of Chriſt, and the Brethren of the Church, or her mothers ſons angry angry with her, of the Apoſtles: I rather conceive that by the ſunne is meant heat of perſecution, as in the parable, for that tanneth and maketh blacke, and ſo this blackneſſe anſwereth to that, verſ. 5. according to one expoſition thereupon; and then in ſaying, Look not upon me becauſe I am black, ſhe meaneth to deſpiſe me, for her Mothers children that were angry with her, and ſet her to keep the Vine-yards, theſe more probably were enemies then friends, for brethren are angry with their brethren, that are not of their owne minde; but contrary, although their wayes be never ſo evill, as David ſaith, that his brethren ſtood afarre off from him, and the Scribes and Phariſees were angry at any Diſciples that followed Chriſt, and Heretickes with the Orthodox, that oppoſed them in their Hereſies. And it is here to be noted, that he ſaith, My mothers children, implying hereby ſuch as were of Iſrael, but not Iſrael, or Jews indeed, as the Apoſtle ſaith, All are not Iſrael, that be of Iſrael &c he is not a Jew that is one outward, but he that is one within, and therefore it is not ſaid, My Fathers Children; that is, Gods children, and therefore they were not the Apoſtles, but the ſuperſtitious Jewes, the Phariſees. Then in ſaying, they ſet me to keep the vine-yards, it muſt be meant, by their wrath againſt me, and unkinde uſage of me, they put me from them, and taking care any more about their converſion, that going from them I might keep other Vine-yards; That is, teach the Goſpel amongſt the Gentiles for their converſion, and then watch over and keep them; yet this is my griefe, My owne vine-yard I have not kept; That is, the Congregation or Church of the Jewes, which the Prophet Eſay ſetteth forth, as the Vine-yard of the Lord of Hoſts, and this is ſpoken in the perſon of any Apoſtle ſent out by our Lord Chriſt then, to preach only to the Jewes, but not to the Gentiles, or Samaritans, which therefore either of them calleth his owne Vine-yard; and what a griefe it was to them that they could not keep this, and dreſſe it to fructification, we may ſee by the Apoſtle Paul, who profeſſed, that he had continuall heavineſſe for thoſe his brethren in the fleſh.

In all this Ainſworth agreeth, except in that of their ſetting her to keep the Vine-yards, which he underſtandeth of agreeing to Superſtitions, and Hereſies, which becauſe the truly faithfull would not doe, they were angry with them.

Ainſw.

Juſtus Orgel. agreeth with him in this alſo, but he ſaith the ſame in the premiſes with that which went before, and addeth, that they alſo are meant who imbraced the Goſpel, but not ſo ſincerely, that ſtood for the ceremonies of the Law, as neceſſary to be obſerved, as appeareth, Act. 15. and in the Epiſtle to the Galathians, for they were angry with ſuch as would not obſerve them, and made contention hereabout. Bernard followeth Gregory, to me it ſeemeth cleare, that this ſetting of her to keep the Vine-yards is, as I before ſaid. Thus the Jewes raiſing perſecution againſt Chriſtians, cauſed their flying from Jeruſalem, and ſcattering amongſt the Gentiles, by meanes whereof both Vine-yards were planted, and kept in other places.

Acts 8.

7 Tell me (O thou) whom my ſoule loveth, where thou feedeſt, where thou makeſt thy flock to reſt at noon? for why ſhould I be as one that turneth aſide by the flocks of thy companions? All ſuch as are without Chriſt, are without reſt, or ſhadow, in the heat of the day at noon, becauſe they live in ſin, which burneth in them by divers luſts, they are toſſed with many evill cogitations, as the waves of the Sea, that never is quiet, only when the ſpirit of faith, and the feare of God cometh into the heart, there is ſhadow, and reſt under this ſhadow, being juſtified by faith we have peace with God; where the Flock of Chriſt reſteth, there the ſoule inquireth, that knowing it, ſhe may with all ſpeed come hither, and reſt ſecurely, being delivered from the dominion of ſinne, which cauſeth torment in the conſcience, as by the heat of fire in ſuch as are without the grace of Sanctification, to lead holy and new lives. In particular, an evill tongue is a fire, and by fleſhly luſts men are ſaid to burne, where reſt in this ſhadow is to be had none knoweth, but he that is come to it; till this time we inquire, and are ſeeking, and who ſo doth, is happy, for he beginneth to be the Spouſe, if he doth it with an heart deſirous hereof above all other things, and Chriſt will anſwer the deſire of his ſoule, as appeareth, verſ. 8.

But

But who are the Flocks of his companions, of turning aſide, by whom the ſoule is ſo much afraid? they are degenerated Chriſtians, who ſometime joyned themſelves to Chriſt, by profeſſing his faith, and ſo in outward appearance were his brethren, and companions, or friends, as he told his Diſciples that they were, but falling into divers errours, their chiefe indeavour after this is to corrupt and ſeduce others into the ſame errours. And it is to be noted, that having ſpoken of Chriſts Flock as one, of theſe, it is ſpoken as divided into divers Sects, as Hereticks alwayes are, and ſo they make not one, but many flocks, ſome holding ſome errours, and ſome others, as the Sectaries of theſe times doe, ſome being Anabaptiſts, ſome Browniſts, ſome Antinomians, &c. the true reformed Proteſtant Religion being forſaken. And this is a manifeſt ſigne of degenerated Chriſtians, that they who are gone out from us, are at ſuch difference amongſt themſelves, ſome being for Presbytery, and ſome for Independency, even at daggers drawing, as we ſay; at this the Romane Catholicks rejoyce, nothing doubting now, but that all we Proteſtants are the Apoſtatizing companions here meant, and that they are the true Catholike Church of Chriſt.

But although falling from the true faith, and ſo of a flock being turned to be divers flocks, argueth apoſtatizers, and degenerating companions, yet this ſpeakes not for the foreſaid Catholicks, in what unity ſoever they agree amongſt themſelves, they having made ſo foule a defection from the true faith in many things, no more then the unity, into which Herod and Pontius Pilate came, when they agreed together againſt Chriſt, ſpake for them; but thoſe amongſt us, that doe ſo degenerate, may well be confounded, to thinke into what a predicament they have brought themſelves by their new Opinions, and repent.

Ainſworth. Ainſworth by the reſting at noone here ſpoken of, underſtandeth in time of perſecution, according to the allegory of the Sun before going; the Cald. Paraphraſt, and other Rabbins underſtand it of the time of the Jewes captivity, as here Propheſied of, the Church living amongſt Idolaters, then being ſollicitous about her being directed ſo, as ſhe might not be drawne away by the errours of Heathen Idolaters.

Juſtus Orgel. Juſtus Orgel. by reſting at noon day, underſtandeth the light of the Goſpell brightly ſhining, the ſoule deſireth to be directed to the true Church, that ſhe may not erre after flocks of Hereticks, called Chriſts companions, becauſe for their beleeving of Chriſts Nativity, Death, Reſurrection, and Aſcenſion aright, they are taken to be true Chriſtians, and ſo there is danger of being deceived by them, without good direction from Chriſt.

Verſ. 8. The Bridegroome. If thou knoweſt not (O thou faireſt among women) goe thy way forth by the foot-ſteps of the Flock, and feed thy Kids beſides the tents of the ſhepheards. As the Church, the Bride, ſpake hitherto, and ſaid: Although I be black, yet I am comly; ſo now the Bridegroom ſaith, (O thou faireſt amongſt Women) That is, by the beauty by me given unto thee, as was noted before; and he giveth her direction how to know aſſuredly where he feeds his flocke, that ſhe may not be turned aſide by the inticements of the flockes of his counterfeit companions. Goe thy way forth by the foot-ſteps of the Flocke, and feed thy Kids beſides the tents of the ſhepheards; That is, goe in the way of the faith and obedience, wherein other ſervants of mine of old have gone, and yee that are ſhepheards now, feed your Kids; that is, young and tender Chriſtians, beſides, or nigh to the tents of the ancient Shepheards, the Prophets, under the Old Teſtament, and the Apoſtles under the New, teaching nothing, but what they have taught, and laid thee downe ſure grounds for, he that doth thus, pitcheth his tents nigh their tents, and ſhall be ſure not to erre. Of walking in the ſteps of the obedience of Abrahams faith, ſee Heb. 11. Rom. 4. 12. and 2 Cor. 12. 18 Walke in the ſame Spirit, in the ſame foot ſteps; and for Kids figuring out the beſt, as well as the worſt, ſee Exod. 12. 5. where a Lambe or Kid is indifferently appointed to be taken for the Paſſe-over, typifying Chriſt, and two Goates in the day of expiation, the one taken and Sacrificed, the other the ſcape Goat let goe into the Wilderneſſe, repreſented him more fully, both in his Humanity and Divinity. Laſtly, for having regard to the Shepheards, or Teachers, who are approved for ſound, to follow, and to keep our tents near theirs, or upon theirs. as the word alſo ſignifieth, Epheſ. 2. 20. Built upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, &c. Heb. 13. 7. Looke at them that preach the Word unto you, to follow them, &c. 1 Cor. 11. Follow me, ſaith Paul, as I follow Chriſt.

Hitherto Ainſworth agreeth, who alſo alledgeth Salom. Jarchi, and the Chalde Paraphraſt ſpeaking to the ſame effect. But whereas he rather by the tents of the Shepheards, underſtands ſuch Miniſters of Satan, as transforme themſelves into Angels of Light, the companions before ſpoken of, verſ. 7. I can by no meanes aſſent unto him, or the ſaid Jarchi, who ſaith the ſame, becauſe ſuch are no where ſimply called ſhepheards, but with ſome further addition, expreſſing them to be evil, as Joh. 10. and in many other places. Much leſſe can I aſcribe to Gregory, or Juſtus here, who underſtand theſe words, as no direction to keepe them from errour, but as if he had ſaid; If thou knoweſt not, goe forth by the ſteps of the Flocks, or Herds of Sinners, and Hereticks, and feed thy uncleane young ones by the tents of ſuch ſhepheards. But ſaith Gregory, the faithfull ſoule ſhall never be left thus without direction, as being in a dangerous warfare, but ſhall be as courageous Horſes, prepared to the Battell, to ſhew which, it followeth, verſ. 9.

Ainſw.

Gregor. Juſtus Orgel.

I have compared thee (O my ſoule) to a company of Horſes in Pharaohs Chariots; But although this implieth warre indeed, yet I cannot ſee how the Spouſe without direction by externall meanes, only through internall inſpirations, ſhould be ſtrengthened like Warre-Horſes againſt Seducers, ſith that wicked Hereticks themſelves pretend inſpirations alſo. Therefore this cometh in aptly according to the ſence before given, it implyeth warre, and oppoſition, preſently to be made after her going in the ſteps of the Flock, not Flocks, which is alſo to be noted againſt that of Gregory, as evincing the Flock of Chriſt to be meant, which is one, and not the flockes of Hereticks, which be many.

Verſ. 9.

Now the Spouſe of Chriſt, to animate her here-againſt, is compared to a company of Warre-Horſes with Chariots, and the beſt, ſuch as the Horſes of Ægypt, where Pharaoh reigned were, for which they are often moſt highly commended in the holy Scripture. And here by victory, to follow to the Church, is intimated, as alſo Zech. 10. 3, 4, 5. The Lord hath viſited his flocke, the houſe of Judah, and made them as his goodly Horſe in the Battell, and they ſhall be as mighty men, that tread downe their enemies as the mire in the ſtreets, Habac. 3. 8. 15. Thou didſt walke through the Sea with thine Horſes, ſpeaking of the victory gotten over Pharaoh at the red Sea. See alſo of Horſes conquering, Revelations 19.

2 Chron. 1. 17

Exod. 14.

And to thoſe inviſible Horſes over-throwing Pharaohs Horſes and Chariots, Gregory ſeemeth to thinke it to have been alluded here, adding further, that as the Iſraelites then, after this exploit done, came not preſently into the Land of Canaan, but wandred firſt in the Wildemeſſe many yeares, and then fighting againſt many enemies, and over-coming them alſo, inherited the Land; ſo the faithfull ſoule having eſcaped Pharaohs Chariots through the red Sea of Baptiſme, wherein her ſinnes are forgiven her, muſt incounter with more enemies in a Spirituall fight, and we meet with many miſeries in this world by reaſon of her renewed ſinnes, but in fine, over-coming them all by faith, and patience, ſhe ſhall attaine the heavenly inheritance for ever, and ſo be perfectly bleſſed. And for this expoſition maketh the word לסוסתי leſuſathito my troop of Horſes; That is, Gods inviſible power, whereby he fought for Iſrael, being here-with againſt Pharaohs Chariots, and confounding them in the red Sea: Or my horſe, Equitatui meo.

Gregor.

Thy cheekes are comly, with rowes of jewels, thy neck with chaines of gold. The vulgar, for rowes of jewels, hath it, as the Turtles; ſo likewiſe the Sept. and the Hebr. word is בתרים, and תורים, ſignifieth either Turtles, or Statutes, or Ordinances: as other women to make their faces appeare the more comly hang Jewels at their eares, which hang downe to their cheekes, and put chaines of gold about their necks; ſo the Spouſe of Chriſt is adorned with chaſtity, as the Turtle Dove, and with the golden chaine of wiſdome, and all her graces, making her

1 Pet. 3. 3, 4.

Ainſworth.

Although Ainſworth doubteth, whether he goeth not on in the compariſon of Horſes, becauſe the Horſes of Kings uſed to be adorned on their Bridles with precious ſtones, and their neckes with chaines of gold; but it is moſt probable, that this is another ſimilitude taken from a glorious woman, becauſe although the Bride be compared to a company of Warre-Horſes for ſtrength, and victory, yet the compariſon with Horſes in reſpect of beauty and ornament were too meane to ſet her forth, and the word תוריים agreeth not; her comlineſſe lyeth in Statutes, and Ordinances of God, according to which ſhe walketh, and this is the greateſt grace that can be to any ſoule.

Verſ. 11.

We will make thee borders of gold, with ſtuds of ſilver; by borders, which Gregory rendreth murenulas, he underſtands the Holy Scriptures, whereby the Preachers tye the gold chaine before ſpoken of: they are, according to Ainſworth, further additions, and increaſes of Grace wrought by God in the faithfull, who giveth to him that hath, and it is ſaid we, to intimate the Trinity.

CHAP. II.

I Am the Roſe of Sharon, as the Lilly of the vallies; Gregory, for the roſe of Sharon, hath, the flower of the field, and takes this as ſpoken by Chriſt; but the Chaldee Paraphraſt wil have the Church to goe on ſpeaking in this verſe, and Chriſt in the next, and this Ainſworth followeth, I ſubſcribe to Gregory, becauſe the humility of the faithfull is ſuch, that ſhe never praiſeth her ſelfe without ſaying ſomething of her own foulneſſe, as verſ. 5. and it is commanded, let another praiſe thee, not thine owne lips; he calleth himſelfe the flower, or chiefe flower of the field, which is the Roſe, becauſe moſt ſweet, and fragrant, by reaſon of the fulneſſe of grace in him, and the Lilly for his beauty to make us in love with him, as the Church before compared him to a bundle of Myrrhe, and to a cluſter of Camphire, and ſaid, Thou art faire and pleaſant; but Sharon was a proper name of a place, where Davids flocks or Heards were fed, being a plain, neare unto which was a valley of Lillies, the Roſes in the one, and the Lillies in the other, being the faireſt that were, becauſe it was moiſt and fat ground, and שרון ſignifieth a field, or fat ſoyle. And to the roſe doth our Lord compare himſelfe alſo, becauſe of the prickles of the Roſe-buſh upon which it groweth, and flouriſheth; ſo he being amongſt the prickes of the Crowne of Thornes, and ſharp nailes, piercing his hands and feet, flouriſhed and triumphed, then drawing all men unto him, as he had before ſaid. to that in her Magnificat, He hath regarded the lowlineſſe of his hand-maid.n, becauſe vallies are low.

Verſ. 2. As the Lilly among the thornes, ſo is my love amongſt the daughters. Here Chriſt further commendeth his Spouſe, by comparing her with other Daughters, that is, the unbeleeving, and Hereticall Congregations, ſhe is as the Lilly for whiteneſſe, through his beauty, by faith communicated unto her, and the graces of his Spirit in her; they as thornes, the fruits of Gods curſe upon the earth, being of harſh and pricking conditions; now, Thornes and Briars are for the fire, ſo are they for the fire of Hell; Thornes prick, and pierce, and fetch bloud of thoſe that are amongſt them, ſo it is hereby meant, that the wicked Jewes, and Gentiles, and Hereticks, ſhould perſecute, and ſhed the bloud of the faithfull. The Lilly hath no prickes thus to doe, no more hath the true Church of God, for religions ſake, although they erre, to cut off any; and therefore hereby the Roman Catholicks notoriouſly ſhew themſelves to be as thornes, but they of the reformed religion to be as the Lilly, and ſo to be glorious; as it is ſaid of the Lilly, that Salomon in all his royall apparrell was not ſo glorious.

But the fruit of this Apple-tree feedeth with hope, and joy, and love, meekneſſe, peace, and patience, againſt which there is no Law; I ſate downe under his ſhadow, under this tree is ſhadow, when the heat of perſecution ariſeth, delighting the ſoule even in the midſt of fiery flames; of ſuch a ſhadow by a cloud Eſay ſpeaketh, ſaying, I will create over every tabernacle a cloud by day, &c.

Verſ. 4. Gregon. He brought me into the Banqueting-houſe, and his banner over me was love. For Banqueting-houſe, Gregory hath, Cellar of Wine, expounding it of the holy Scriptures, and the myſticall things concerning our ſalvation therein ſet forth, into which we are brought, when to the underſtanding of theſe ſecrets. Juſtus Orgel. Juſtus underſtands this as a Propheſie, which was fulfilled, Act. 1. & 2. when the Apoſtles, and the reſt of the faithfull were brought together into one place, it being made unto them, as a Councellet, for the joy which they had by the coming downe of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, and filling them with knowledge and ability to utter in all tongues the wonderfull things of God. He hath ordained love upon, or over me; ſo the vulgar, for theſe words, his banner over me was love, but the Hebr. word is נס a banner, the meaning is all one, the Banner or Enſigne of the Church is Love, or Love is the grace which he hath ordained to manifeſt his Church by, as he ſaith, Hereby ſhall men know that yee are my Diſciples, if yee love one another; but for Banqueting-houſe, Hebr. is, houſe of wine, to which effect it was ſpoken before.

Ioh. 14.

And the Wine-cellar is ſpoken of next, after the fruit of the Apple-tree, which is ſweet, becauſe Chriſt is to his Spouſe not only ſweet, but chearing, and making glad the heart, like wine, when ſhe is ſorrowfull and heavie, ſo that hereby is implyed more need that the Church ſhould have of refreſhing from Chriſt, the heat of perſecution increaſing, and a ſupply to be made accordingly.

Prov. 31.

And

And now it is alſo a comfort to heare of his Banner, or Standard over her, under which ſhe fighting againſt ſinne, the world, and the Devill, ſhall be ſure to overcome, and that only through his love on our parts, altogether undeſerved, out of which he ſaith, In the world yee ſhall have trouble, but be of good comfort, I have overcome the world: Thus Ainſworth. And of his love the Lord ſaith, or it is ſaid of him, he loved his owne, unto the end he loved them; to ſhew, that this Standard alwayes ſtands for their defence, and is never taken downe. Joh. 13. 1.

Stay me with flaggons, comfort me with apples, for I am ſick of love; this is the voyce of a poore ſoule, ſick for want of the ſence of the comfort of Chriſts love, and now ready to ſwoone away; for as in this caſe ſome comfortable and reviving thing is with all earneſtneſſe called for ſpeedily, ſo ſhe deſireth comfort from the Miniſters of the Word by the wine and apples before ſpoken of; That is, comfortable and chearing promiſes of the Word, whereby although ſhe be brought never ſo low, ſhe may be raiſed up to life againe; and therefore the word, ſtay me, is a plurall, as if ſhe had ſaid O friends, ſtay yee me. Verſ. 5. Note.

And hereby we are directed in time of diſtreſſe in our mindes, what to doe, viz. to deſire ſpirituall comfort from ſpirituall Paſtors, and Paſtors in this caſe are not to ſhew themſelves difficult towards them that ſeek unto them for it.

His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth imbrace me. The faithfull ſoule having called for comfort in her perplexity, ver. 5. now to ſhew the effect that ſhall follow upon thus doing, declareth to all men, that ſhe had comfort from her Husband Chriſt both by his left hand being put under her head; that is, from his paſſions, and infirmities of his humane nature, which he tooke upon him, and ſuffered; and by his right hand imbracing her, That is, the power of his Divinity making his Paſſions meritorious, and effectually ſpeaking comfort unto her, to the freeing of her from all her feares and troubles. Even as ſhe, that hath a loving husband, if he ſeeth her to faint, and ready to dye, for want of his expreſſions of love towards her, if he preſently imbraceth her with one hand, and holdeth her head with the other, being much weakned through her ſad apprehenſions of his diſlike, is recreated and revived againe; for by the right hand power and ſtrength is commonly ſet forth, and by the left, weakneſſe, and infirmity, but by both together, all that one is able to doe for another in diſtreſſe; whence note, that it is not in vaine for the diſtreſſed in minde to ſeeke to Gods Miniſters for comfort, but a ſpeedy way to attaine unto it, yet it lyeth not in any of them to make their inſtructions and conſolations thus effectuall, but in Chriſt Jeſus alone. Verſ. 6. Note.

Gregory by the left hand, underſtands comforts temporall, and the right, eternall, and thoſe are ſaid to be under the head, becauſe the heart, the principall part of man, which the head is, hath them, as it were, under, in her eſtimation, but eternal above all thoſe of this world. Gregor.

And this is confirmed by Juſtus, ſaying that Salomon ſaith of wiſdome, Shee hath on her right hand long life, and on her left riches, and honour; and what are riches, and honour, but things temporal? which the faithfull under-value and long life, but life for evermore? as in the Pſalmes is further expreſſed; He asked life of thee, and thou gaveſt him long life, even for evermore. Juſtus Orgel.

But I rather preferre the Expoſition before going, which is Ainſworths, becauſe ſpirituall comforts only are here ſpoken of, as which alone can comfort the diſtreſſed ſoule, but I take it not as he doth, for a Petition, but a Declaration, as is aforeſaid, and thus it agreeth beſt with the Hebrew, being verbatim; his left hand under my head, and his right hand ſhall ſuſtaine me; ſo that it is declared, what was now done, and further expected to be done, by a ſure and certaine faith. It may alſo be conſidered whether it be not meant, I have already a little comfort, after my ſeeking to Chriſts Miniſters as before was ſaid, and am nothing doubtfull, but that I ſhall have his Spirit coming into my heart more powerfully, and bringing me plenary comfort, becauſe that although by the right hand is often ſet forth power, yet by the left weakneſſe never, and both hands are not here ſpoken of together but firſt, the left as preſent, then the right in future. Ainſworth.

I charge you (O yee daughters of Jeruſalem) by the Roes, and the Hindes Verſ. 7.

of the field, that yee ſtirre not up, nor awake my Love, till he pleaſeth. The ſoule having met with comfort after her being in perplexity, now is very carefull, that this comfort and quiet thus attained, be by no meanes diſturbed againe, and therefore ſhe layeth a charge under an Oath upon the daughters of Jeruſalem, by the Hindes, and the Roes; That is, calling the Hindes and Roes of the field to witneſſe againſt them, as both Moſes ſometime called heaven and earth to record, againſt the people of Iſrael, and Iſaiah ſaid, Heare (O Heavens) and hearken (O Earth) And the Hindes and Roes rather then other Beaſts of the field are mentioned, becauſe their love is ſingular towards one another, as hath been ſhewed before upon Proverbs, where the Husband is bidden to let his wife be to him as the Hinde, ſo loving, and the pleaſant Roe.

By daughters of Jeruſalem, underſtand the ſoules of the faithfull; That is, of all that profeſſe the faith of Chriſt, theſe are all here adjured (for ſo the vulgar renders it, and that rightly, becauſe the word rendred) I charge you, cometh from השבע an Oath, or ſwearing, not to ſtirre, or wake Chriſt; That is, by their ſinnes not to provoke him, to the diſturbance of the peace before mentioned, coming by his left hand, under the head and ſo forth. And if it be thus underſtood, it is the voyce of one faithfull ſoule after trouble in minde, injoying reſt by Chriſt, unto others having part in this reſt alſo, deeply charging them to take heed of doing any thing, whereby this reſt may be broken off, and that this may appeare more clearly, it is to be noted, that the word rendred my love, is Hebr. the love, awake not the love, untill it pleaſeth; That is, untill it pleaſeth him to lye no longer thus with his left hand under my head, and his right hand imbracing me, and that will be never, if he be not ſtirred by our ſinnes, but the love and reſt in him, which I and you injoy, ſhal be everlaſting.

Gregory, and Juſtus, and other Ancients following the vulgar, Awake not my love, untill ſhe pleaſeth, underſtandeth this, as ſpoken by Chriſt, who having imbraced a ſoule in the armes of his mercy, and given her joy in Divine contemplations, and being ſequeſtred from imployment amongſt others, chargeth them, although they earneſtly deſire ſuch a mans coming amongſt them for their Spirituall good, yet to permit him to goe on in this his ſequeſtered courſe of life, untill that he will voluntarily breake off, and apply himſelfe by his gifts, to ſerve publickly the neceſſities of others; and by the daughters of Jeruſalem, he will have effeminate Chriſtians meant, who are not worthy the name of men, becauſe they thinke the contemplative life too auſtere for them, or for any other man, doing therefore what they can to pull ſuch, as are denoted unto it, here-from. Thus Gregory.

Juſtus underſtandeth it, of the counſels given by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles about chaſtity, and voluntary poverty, and not urging any man hereunto, but permitting every one to doe in regard of theſe what he pleaſeth; but the laſt word תחפץ is a Maſculine, and therefore it cannot be rendred by ſhe, but he, and ſo the ſence given hereupon falleth, and the firſt ſtandeth firme, the Church continueth ſtill ſpeaking of Chriſt, as carefull to continue her reſt begun in him alwayes without interruption, which ſhould be the care of us all, and therefore to fly ſinne, whereby alone this reſt is broken, otherwiſe the Roes, and the Hindes of the field ſhall riſe up againſt us, and condemne us, for our injury about that love and peace, whereupon all our felicity dependeth, when as they are ſo tender of their love towards one another, to preſerve and continue in it all their dayes.

Note.

Of the love of the Hinde and Roe, ſee upon Prov 5 19.

Verſ. 8. The voyce of my beloved, behold he cometh leaping upon the Mountaines, and skipping upon the hills. After the comfort coming to the faithful ſoul by Chriſt, by that which he did with his hands, both the left and the right, now followeth the comfort which ſhe taketh in his voyce, that is, his Word preached, and therefore according to that which is here ſaid, leaping upon the Mountaines, it is elſewhere Propheſied; How beautifull upon the Mountaines are the feet of thoſe, that bring glad tidings of peace! and he is ſaid to come leaping, when the Goſpel is preached, for the celerity of the Goſpels going forth into all Countries, and Nations, as the Hinde and Roe, whereunto he is compared, verſ. 9. goeth not, but leapeth, and skippeth, and ſo riddeth the ground away faſter then Beaſts that goe, or run, and the word עַל upon, may alſo be rendred over, he leapeth over Mountaines, as over plaine places, no obſtacle or let in the way, by the hotteſt perſecution, can hinder him from going on in his Goſpel. And as his voyce is ſpoken of here, to ſet forth his Word preached, ſo Eſa. 40. The voyce of the Cryer in the wildernesse, and Joh. 10. My ſheep heare my voyce, &c.

And oppoſitions made againſt the Word, are well ſet forth by Mountaines, becauſe men travelling upon the way, when they come at ſome high and ſteep Mountaines, they are invincible impediments unto them, to ſtay them from going further, but if one had this faculty of leaping over them, they would be no let, or impediment unto him, and this faculty it is ſhewed Chriſt ſhould have at his going forth by his Word.

My Wel-beloved is like unto a Roe, or a young Hart, behold, he ſtandeth behinde our wall, he looketh out at a window, ſhewing himſelfe through the Lattice. Here is a reaſon why Chriſt was before ſpoken of, as leaping over the Mountaines, the Hinde or Hart uſeth to doe ſo, and he is herein like a young Hart or Roe; He ſtands behinde our wall, ſaith Gregory, when he hid his Divinity in our Humane nature, by taking fleſh of the Virgin Mary, and looked out at a window through a Lattice, when he was partly ſeene as man, and partly unſeen, That is, as God; and he expoundeth that before going of his leaping, of his deſcending from heaven to earth in his Incarnation.

Ainſworth hath either this, as touching our wall, or his nearer approaches to us by degrees, then when he was firſt ſeene leaping upon the Mountaines, and his looking in at a window, and through the Lattice, was his ſhining in here, as the Sunne ariſing in the morning, and by looking in at the window inlightening the houſe; So Chriſt ſtood firſt, as it were, behind our wall of partition, when he was ſet forth only under darke types; and figures of the Law; he looked in at the window, when the ſunne-ſhine of the Goſpel aroſe, but through the Lattice, when revealing himſelfe in many myſteries to his people, he yet concealeth himſelfe in ſome; for we know, and ſee but in part.

And looking through the window alſo, intimateth his ſeeing of us, both to obſerve our doings, whether good or evil, and to protect his Church; as God is ſaid to have looked upon the Hoaſts of Iſrael, purſued by Pharaohs, and as a man looking out at a window, through a Lattice, is ſcarce ſeene of thoſe without, but he ſeeth all things; ſo although we ſee not Chriſt ready to protect us in danger, yet he ſeeth us, and the ſecreteſt plottings of our enemies, to diſappoint them of their purpoſes, and to deliver his out of dangers, that we may both ſtand in awe of him in all places, and doing ſo, be confident of his protection at all times, againſt all that machinate miſchiefe againſt us. Of looking out at a window and ſeeing, although unſeene, ſee Prov. 7. I looked out at my window, &c.

My Beloved ſpake, and ſaid unto me, Riſe up my love, my faire one, and come away; Hebr. for riſe up, is, riſe for thy ſelfe, and for (come away) come for thy ſelfe; That is, ſaith Ainſworth, Riſe, and come for thy owne benefit. Or, it may be thus underſtood, whatſoever others doe, continuing, when they heare my Word, in ſinne, or infidelity, doe thou for thy part ariſe, and come to me; looke not at the moſt, to be drawne by their example, to the doing of evil, to ſinne againſt thy owne ſoule, by ſitting, or lying ſtill in the ſtate of Nature, as they doe; but enter in at the ſtreight gate, and walke in the narrow way, which a few only finde, the moſt going in the broad way, notwithſtanding their hearing of my voyce, for that leadeth to death; but to enter thus into the narrow way, by beleeving, and obeying me, is to come into the way of life.

Here then the Church telleth, to what effect Chriſt ſpeaketh in his Word, viz. to move every ſoule that would be ſaved, not to ſit, or lye ſtill in ſinne or unbeliefe, but to riſe by repentance, and turning from ſinne, and to come to him by beleeving; ſo that this is the ſame in effect with that, Matth. 11. 28. Come to me, all yee that are weary, and heavie laden, &c. and of the ſoule that doth ſo, he ſaith, My love, my faire one; That is, through the beauty and bright luſtre of Grace, where-with thou art now inſtantly indued, one that I cannot but dearly love, according Verſ. 12. For loe, the winter is paſt, the raine is over, and gone; The flowers appeare in the earth, the time of the ſinging of birds is come, and the voyce of the turtle is heard in our Land. Here the Church ſheweth, how the Lord went on to move her to come, by telling of the opportunity now being under the Goſpel, which is deſcribed as the ſpring-time; therefore by the winter, Gregory underſtandeth the time of the ceremoniall Law, which was as a winter, dead, and without fruit, and raine, filling the earth with cold water, for ſo by the Law cometh death and condemnation, for which the Apoſtle calleth it, the miniſtry of condemnation, and they were ſubject to Ordinances of divers waſhings, wherein yet there was but cold comfort, they being not to the cleanſing from ſinne, but only of legall uncleanneſſe, for the very bloud of Bulls and Goates offered in ſacrifice could doe no more.

But the time of the Goſpel is the Spring-time, as Chriſt having ſuffered death for our ſinnes, roſe in the ſpring, the moneth of Abib, anſwering in part to March, and in part to April; and now flowers appeare, graſſe groweth g een and through the pleaſantneſſe hereof the Birds ſing, and the Turtle, gone in winter, cometh againe, and uttereth her voyce; and therefore if ever thou wilt come (my love) come now, and delay not, this is the beſt time to travell in; in winter, for the raine, and cold, and ſhortneſſe of the dayes, it being almoſt a continuall night in ſome places, thou couldeſt not, and if thou delayeſt a while thou ſhalt not be able, for the ſcorching heat of ſummer burning up all things, as in the torrid Zoane, and changing the very face into black, as the Æthiopians; for ſo he that delayeth his comming now, ſhall become more and more black through ſinnes increaſing and is daily in danger, not of being ſcorched only, but burnt by the flaming fire in which Chriſt ſhall come, to render vengeance to all that know not God. (Flowers appeare.) Ainſworth by winter, underſtands troublous times, as thoſe of Antichriſt; or troubles of minde, and by the Flowers appearing, Graces abounding in the Church under the Goſpel, ſome having the gift of Prophecying, ſome of ſpeaking with Tongues, ſome of Interpretation, and ſome of Healing, all of knowledge and faith, and ſome of faith to worke Miracles. Thus, it was promiſed according to this Allegory, Iſrael ſhall bloſſome, and bud, and fill the earth with fruit, and they of the City ſhall flouriſh like graſſe of the earth. And as to Pharaohs Butler, the lifting up of his head was ſhewed by a Vine, ſpringing, and bearing bunches of Grapes, which he dreamed that he wrung into Pharaohs Cup; ſo by Flowers appearing here, the reſtitution of man by Chriſt to Gods favour is ſet forth, which is, when by his Spirit Graces are wrought, and appeare in him.

Of this Eſay propheſieth, ſaying, They ſhall ſing for the majeſty of the Lord, from the uttermoſt parts of the earth have we heard Songs, glory to the righteous. And the Apoſtle biddeth, Sing to your ſelves in Hymnes, and Pſalmes, and Spirituall ſongs. By the Turtle uttering her voyce, the whole Congregation of the faithfull is ſet forth together, praiſing God out of pure and chaſte mindes; or by the Turtle, underſtand the Holy Ghoſt inſpiring men extraordinarily, to utter the wonderfull things of God, becauſe the Spirit appeared in the likeneſſe of a Dove; ſo Ainſworth. But the Church is alſo ſet forth by a Dove, verſ. 14. and as ſhe is compared to Birds for her many members, ſo to a Turtle for her unity, being as one pure, and ſpotleſſe Virgin, keeping her alwayes to her one husband Chriſt. Churches of Chriſt by their Hereticall Doctrine, for in ſubtlety and diſſimulation they are like unto Foxes, and ſometimes they are alſo compared to Wolves in Matth. 7. ſheeps cloathing; they are taken, when confuted by plaine evidence of the Word, and digged out of their holes, when put from darke paſſages of Scripture, whereupon they found their Hereticall Doctrines; therefore to them that preach the Word, and are learned, this charge is given by Chriſt.

2 Tim. 3. 1 Tim. 1. 3. Tit. 1. 11. Note. It is not our only imployment to preach, and inſtruct, and exhort, and reprove, but alſo to convince gaine-ſayers, and ſtop their mouthes, by ſhewing the falſneſs of their Doctrine, as Timothy was by Paul required to doe, and Titus likewiſe; and therefore it is the part and duty of Chriſtian Magiſtrates to take order, that ſuch Foxes be not let goe at liberty, but being diſcovered who they be, firſt to reſtraine them under a great penalty, from teaching either in Church, Chappell, or private Houſe, and then to compell them to heare their errours by the learned confuted; which being done, if they perſiſt ſtill in this wicked way, and recant not, to chaſe them out of the Land, as dangerous Foxes, or Wolves, to the flocke of Chriſts ſheep, whom to preſerve ſhould be the chiefe care of Magiſtrates, and Miniſters, and not of Miniſters only, who can doe no more, but as their Shepheard with his Dogge, ſcare them away by barking, therefore it is their parts after this to rid the Land of them, much more then it was once done here by a King of England, to rid this Land of Wolves; and theſe Foxes are called little, becauſe for the moſt part they be not great, but poore, and obſcure, ariſing Ex fece populi. Which ſpoile our vines; That is, corrupt whole Churches, where it is to be noted, that to be infected with Hereſie, is to be ſpoyled. And he ſaith, our Vines have tender Grapes; That is, our Churches have weake and tender Chriſtians, eaſie by their ſubleties to be drawne to errour, for the ſtrong are not in danger, but the weake in knowledge, and children this way. Pierius expounding it, ſaith; That by little Foxes evil cogitations are ſet forth, which muſt be ſuppreſſed, whilſt they are little, in the very beginning, otherwiſe they marre the Vine; That is, the heart wherein they lurke.

Here the Church deſireth him to be ſo to her; That is, to come leaping to her help, in time of danger by perſecution, or of trouble by temptations, and in thus doing not to ceaſe, till the day appeareth, and the ſhadowes fly away; That is, till the night of trouble and adverſity be paſt, the day, or time of deliverance from all troubles coming, which ſhall be at Chriſts ſecond coming.

2 Pet. 1. 19. And like unto this Peter ſpeaketh, till the day dawne, &c. but this is ſpoken of illumination by the Spirit, and Sanctification, which is before that day; and by the Hinde and Roe, Chriſts manifeſtation of his love and joy is underſtood, as in Rom. 5. 11, &c. Of the mountains it was ſpoken alſo, ver. 8. here only the name Bether, ſignifying diviſion, is further added, and it was a mountain neare Jordan, where ſuch Cattell fed, ſo called, becauſe here by that river the Land of Canaan was divided, or rather for the dividing of Jordan, for Iſrael to paſſe over.

Gregor. For the Mountaines of Bether, the Vulgar hath it, of Bethel, but Hebrew it is Bether; Gregory expounds this of Chriſts returning at the Day of Judgement, like like a Roe, or young Hart; That is, in the ſame forme of a man that he tooke of the Virgin Mary. But becauſe it is not ſaid, when the day ariſeth, but, till the day breake, denoting the time wherein the Church deſireth him to doe thus, that agreeth not, and therefore I reſt in the former expoſition. And the mountaines of Bether are particularly ſpoken of, becauſe that by them the children of Iſrael entred into the Land of Canaan, when they came over Jordan, and vanquiſhed all their enemies: and ſo the meaning is, Returne to thy Church in adverſity, by vanquiſhing all Perſecutors, thus turning her night of troubles into a day of deliverance, ſo as that it may appeare to be an act done by thy mighty hand, and ſtretched-out arme. And as the Church prayeth, ſo it hath, and ſhall be done from time to time; ſhe may be for a time in the ſhadow of death, but ſhe ſhall bee timely delivered, and not lye in perpetuall darkneſſe, but her light ſhall breake forth as the noon day, and the care which Chriſt hath over her ſhall appeare to all men. Note.

CHAP. III.

BY night on my bed I ſought him, whom my ſoule loveth, I ſought him, but I found him not. Here it is ſhewed, that Chriſt is not found by moſt ſerious meditation, ſtudy, and prayer in ſecret, but by going forth to the place, where he is preached: for what more ſecret place is there, then a mans chamber, and bed, wherein he lyeth in the night? and what time of more ſerious ſtudy and meditation then here? for thoſe that upon their beds give themſelves to meditate: but ſhe doing thus confeſſeth, that ſhe found him not, and therefore ſhe ſaith: Verſ. 1.

I will ariſe now and goe about the City, in the ſtreetes, and in the broad wayes, I will ſeeke him, whom my ſoule loveth, I ſought him, but I found him not. By the City is meant the City of Jeruſalem, or any other great City full of people, going up and downe about their worldly affaires. Here alſo ſhe ſearched for Chriſt, but found him not: which ſheweth, that he is not found by that ſoule that is wholly intent to worldly buſineſſe, pertaining either to the Common-wealth, or his owne particular eſtate in this world, as indeed there is leſſe reaſon to thinke thus to finde him, then by retiredneſſe for meditation. After ſeeking both theſe wayes, and not finding, ſhe goeth on, and ſaith: Verſ. 2.

The watch-men found me, who goe about the City, to whom I ſaid, ſaw yee him whom my ſoule loveth? Theſe are the preachers of the Word, who are often ſet forth by the name of Watch-men; and they are ſaid to goe about the City, in alluding to the manner of Watch-men, who goe about in the night from ſtreet to ſtreet, to ſee that there be no hurt done by Theeves, or caſualty of fire: ſo that hereby their care and circumſpection over the people is ſet forth, for which they are alſo called ἐπίσκοποι and Over-ſeers; and ſhe ſaith not, that ſhe found them, but they found her, and by their meanes ſhe found Chriſt a little after, as is ſhewed, verſe 4. Verſ. 3. Ezek. 3. Heb. 13. 17.

It was but a little that I paſſed from them, but I found him whom my ſoule loveth. There is nothing ſaid of the anſwer which they gave her: but becauſe ſhe found him, ſo ſoone after that they had found her, it is implied, that their finding of her was by their inſtructing, and teaching her in the knowledge of God, and his Chriſt, whereby ſhe was inlightned, and had exceeding comfort. For their finding her in the ſtreets, and the broad places thereof, herein it is ſpoken much like unto that which is ſaid of Wiſdome, She cryeth in the gates, at the entry of the City, and in the pathes and high places; and in the Parable, the King ſent out his Servants into the ſtreets to bring Gueſts in. By all which together from the firſt verſe hitherto, we are taught firſt, that Chriſt is not found by mans induſtry, and his owne endeavouring to finde him, but man is firſt out of his great grace and mercy found of him, and then he findes Chriſt, as it is elſewhere ſaid: I was found of them that ſought me not; that we may attribute nothing to Verſ. 4. Prov. 8. 2, 3. Matth. 22. Note. Rom. 10. 20.

Note. our ſelves, but all to his grace; but yet ceaſe not to ſeeke, till we finde. 2. Chriſt is not found by thoſe that lye in bed, that is, by idle and ſloathfull perſons; nor yet by ſuch as riſe and goe about Secular things, as worldly men commonly doe, intending City or Country buſineſſes firſt, and chiefly, and the right ſeeking after Chriſt but a little. Note. 3. Then is he yet found by ſuch as ſeeke and deſire him, when they meet with his faithfull Miniſters; That is, they are willing to learne, and to be inſtructed by them, and are frequent in hearing their Sermons, and deſirous to come to underſtand hereby, which is intimated by her asking them for him, as being ready to obey all their inſtructions, as the ſelf-conceited, and ſtiffe-necked of theſe times doe not, but come and heare Sermon after Sermon, doing yet little or nothing according to their teaching, but as their owne phantaſies lead them; whereas the true Converts are as little children, eaſie to be drawne, and led in the way that one would have them goe in: and who ſo is not, ſuch cannot enter into the Kingdome of heaven, as Chriſt teacheth. Matth. 18. 3.

Moreover, by the words of verſe 1. we may learne, that many thinke, that they have Chriſt, but if they come once ſeriouſly to conſider, they ſhall finde that they have him not, becauſe the Spouſe in the name of the Chriſtians faith, I ſought him in the night in my bed, but found him not; as if ſhe had ſaid, I thought that I had him with me in bed, but when I ſought, I found him not; that we may not goe upon light and groundleſſe conjectures, but prove and try our ſelves, to finde that Chriſt Jeſus is in us, and that we are not reprobates, as we may be, notwithſtanding our beleeving the contrary. Note. 1 Cor. 13.

I held him, and would not let him goe, untill I had brought him into my mothers houſe, and into the chambers of her that conceived mee. Here it is ſhewed, how the ſoule that hath found Chriſt laboureth to hold him, even as Jacob, who wraſtled with God, and would not let him goe, till he bleſſed him; ſo the ſoule that hath found Chriſt, layeth faſt hold on him by faith, and nothing can ſeparate her from him, but ſhe conſtantly cleaveth to him, till that by him ſhe be bleſſed, ſaying, Come yee bleſſed of my Father, into the kingdome prepared for you. Gen. 32. Rom. 8. 34. Matth. 25.

But what meaneth ſhe, by ſaying, till I had brought him into my mothers houſe? by Mother, ſaith Gregory, the Synagogue of the Jewes is underſtood, becauſe the Church of the Gentiles was conceived, as it were, by her, as out of whom preachers came, That is, the holy Apoſtles, and converted her. In ſaying then, till I have brought him into my mothers houſe, is meant, till the Jewes be converted: for the converting of a people unto Chriſt, is the bringing of him into their houſe, afarre off from which he is before their converſion: ſo that here is a Propheſie of their converſion towards the end of the world. And by the Chambers, wee may underſtand ſeverall Congregations of them, that then ſhall imbrace the faith. Gregor.

Ainſworth finding nothing here of the converſion of the Iewes, underſtandeth by the mothers houſe, the Church outwardly, and the Conſcience inwardly, wherein to the faithfull bring him, and then he dwelleth in their hearts, to their unſpeakeable comfort. I conceive the former expoſition to agree beſt, and that without forcing, the words cannot be thus applied; but being underſtood, as was ſaid before, what is meant by theſe words, untill I have brought him? Shall the Church of the Gentiles then hold Chriſt no longer? no, but by perſeverance in ſeeking to God by prayer for their converſion, is hereby intimated, till it be effected; ſhe being then by faith knit more faſt unto him then ever before, and made hereby more full of life, according to that of the Apoſtle; If the falling away of the Jewes be the riches of the Gentiles, what ſhall their reſtitution be, but life from the dead? Ainſw. Rom. 11.

The fifth ver. I charge you, O ye daughters of Jeruſalem, is the ſame with ch. 2. 7 and therefore ſee the expoſition there: for as there that adjuration followes after comfort found in Chriſt; ſo here, after that the ſoule findeth him againe, having through ſome negligence, intimated by her lying in bed, and ſeeking him, loſt him, ſhe breaketh out as before, Verſ. 5.

Who is this that cometh out of the wilderneſſe like pillars of ſmoake, perfumed Verſ. 6.

med with myrrhe and frankincenſe, and all powders of the merchant? Here the Church of the Gentiles, which ſpake before of bringing Chriſt into her mothers houſe, ſeemeth againe to ſpeake of this Mother-Church of the Jewes, being now converted, in praiſing of her for her great devotion, ſet forth by myrrhe, and frankincenſe, and other ſweet ſpices, making a moſt gratefull ſmell in the noſtrils of God, and aſcending as a pillar of ſmoake.

And in ſpeaking of her coming up out of the wilderneſſe, it is alluded to the coming of the children of Iſrael of old out of the wilderneſſe, through Jordan, to poſſeſſe the Land of Canaan, their coming out of all Lands in the time of their infidelity being as a wilderneſſe, and barren place unto them, wherein they wanted all ſpirituall food, being hereby aptly ſet forth. That ſweet odours ſet forth prayer, and preaching is ſo well knowne, that I ſhall not need here againe to ſpeake of it, but rather we ſhould be hereby invited to practiſe the like devotion at all times, and in all places, being aſſured, that thus doing, we are aſcending towards heaven, out of the wilderneſſe of this world, and ſhall in Gods good time be received there, to our everlaſting comfort; whereas if we aſcend not firſt by theſe devotions, but neglect them, we ſhall never come there, ſith that to them that call upon the name of the Lord only, ſalvation is promiſed, and if any man heareth the Word, and doth it, he is bleſſed in the deed. Note. Jam. 1.

Behold his bed, which is Salomons, ſixty valiant men are about it, it may alſo be rendred, behold his bed, it is Salomons; That is, as Salomons, that man, whoſoever he be, that thus reverenceth, and honoureth God, with praiſes and prayers, out of a pure heart, his bed, or reſting place, whereſoever it is, is ſo guarded by Angels, as Salomons was by valiant men, with ſpeares and ſwords, in uſing which they were moſt expert, and therefore he ſhall be moſt ſafe, and not need to feare any danger, either of the Arrow or Peſtilence. And by him in ſpeciall may be meant Iſrael converted, as was before ſaid, to ſet forth the royall glory which ſhould be to that Church then; but herein every devout Chriſtian ſhareth with her, and is likewiſe ſtrongly guarded, where-ever he makes his bed. Verſ. 7. Pſal. 91.

King Salomon made himſelfe a Chariot of the wood of Lebanon, he made the pillars thereof of ſilver, and the borders of gold, the covering of it of purple, the midſt being paved with Love, for the daughters of Jeruſalem. The word rendred Chariot here, is אפריון, Apirion, ſignifying a covering, and is by Salomon Jarchi rendred, a ſecret chamber, by ſome a pallace, by ſome a throne, by ſome a bed, as Ainſworth ſaith; the vulgar hath it, ferculum, a frame to carry him in, and for the borders, reclinatorium, a place to reſt upon, and for the covering, aſcenſum; by the firſt word any covered thing, which is beautifull, and glorious, may be underſtood, becauſe the word cometh neare to the word אופיר Ophir, whence the pureſt gold came; but becauſe a bed is ſpoken of, verſ. 7. I rather hold with Jarchi, that it is a ſecret chamber, cloſe covered, to ſleep and reſt in, upon the bed there ſpoken of, the glorioufneſſe whereof the next words ſhew, the ſtuds, or pillars of ſilver, for ſo the word עמודיו properly ſignifieth, coming of עמד to ſtand, or to be firme, and the words following, the borders of gold, Hebrew, רפידת his bed, whereunto the word reclinatorium in vulgar well agreeth, for the covering thereof, Hebr. is מרכבו, his chariot, or ſella, which is ſeat, or ſaddle, and therefore not any thing pertaining to a chamber, or bed, is meant hereby, but that whereupon he is carried in travelling abroad, and ſo the meaning of all is, our Salomon, Chriſt Ieſus, of whom Salomon in his royalty was a type, hath a glorious chamber made, as the temple of Cedar from Lebanon; That is, of wood incorruptible, and this chamber is the Church of the Jewes before ſpoken of newly converted, for which, it is ſaid to be made for the daughters of Jeruſalem; That is, particular Congregations of beleeving Jewes. And it is called a chamber with a bed in it, for the quiet reſt which the ſoule hath: being once entred into this Church; and it is covered, as Iſaiah ſpeaketh, with a pillar of a cloud, being hereby made ſafe, and defended from the danger of perſecutors, as Iſrael ſometime was from Pharaoh and his Hoaſt purſuing him. And it is made of incorruptible matter, to denote their continuing in the true faith, when once converted, being never Verſ. 9. Verſ. 10. Ainſw. Eſa. 4.

never corrupted by errour or hereſie to the end of the world. The pillars or ſtuds of this chamber of ſilver, ſet forth the Apoſtles, ſome of whom are expreſly ſo called, as James, Cephas, and John, of which Pillars it is alſo ſpoken, Prov. 9. Wiſdome hath built her houſe, and ſet up her ſeven pillars; and againe, the Church in regard of them, and the ſure ground of truth laid in their writings, is called the ground and pillar of truth, becauſe alwayes imbracing the holy Scriptures, as the only ground of all her tenets and rules to goe by, in the worſhip and ſervice of God; and theſe pillars are ſaid to be of ſilver, as the ſonnes of Levi are ſpoken of, He ſhall ſit to purifie the ſonnes of Levi, as ſilver and gold, that they may offer an offering in righteouſneſſe; gold and ſilver being the moſt precious of all other metals, and therefore fit to denote their excellency; and his bed before ſpoken of, but not ſaid of what it was, is ſaid to be of gold, ſetting forth both the purity of their hearts, and the hearts of all the faithfull, for by faith the heart is purified, and it is more precious then gold. And they are ſet forth by a bed, becauſe here Chriſt repoſeth himſelfe, and dwelleth as in his chamber of preſence.

Moreover, this our Salomon is ſaid to have his Chariot, or Saddle whereupon he rideth, of purple, a moſt precious cloath, and therefore Kings Robes are made hereof; this then both denoteth his royalty, and his riding, as it were upon a Chariot, or Horſe, in a moſt glorious manner, over Countries and Nations, ſubduing peoples unto him farre and wide, by the preaching of his Word, as is further expreſſed, Revel. 19. 11. as alſo the purple dye of his Garments being ſprinkled with bloud.

And this Chariot, or Horſe upon which Chriſt rideth out conquering, is the Miniſtry of the Goſpel, whereby he is carried into all Nations, when he is preached, according to which the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Their ſound went into all lands; where he alſo compareth this word unto the Sunne, which the Poets feigned to be drawn in a Chariot by Horſes, round about the world. This is fabulous, but it holdeth touching Chriſt, he is thus drawne as it were, when he is preached every where.

Laſtly, the midſt is ſaid to be paved with Love; That is, in the midſt of this chariot, and chamber, as common to all, both Preachers and Hearers, Love is as the pavement, whereupon they go; the wicked walk not according to Love, as Gregory ſaith, and have no part or portion in the comfortable and excellent things of Chriſt, and his ſervants here ſpoken of. There be theſe three, Faith, and Hope, ſet forth by ſilver and gold, and Love, which is the chiefe of them, and without it all faith is nothing.

Verſ. 11. Goe forth (O yee daughters of Zion) and behold King Salomon, with the crowne where-with his mother crowned him in the day of his eſpouſals, and of the gladneſſe of his heart. Having in the former words ſpoken of the converſion of the Jewes, and the great glory coming to Chriſt, and his proceeding to effect this mighty worke, now he calleth upon the Church of the Gentiles to goe forth, and ſee, and admire the acceſſion of glory that cometh to him hereby, to be the more confirmed in his faith. For Zion ſetteth forth the Church, becauſe that upon a mount in Zion the old Temple ſtood: by daughters of Zion then, Chriſtians are meant. They are here bidden to looke out upon Chriſt, now in his Kingdome reigning over all, both Jewes and Gentiles, rejoycing therefore in him, and with him.

And now they ſhall ſee him crowned by his Mother, the Church of the Jewes, ſo called becauſe he was borne of the Jeweſſe, the Virgin Mary, and came of the Jewes according to the fleſh, and ſhe, that is, the Jewiſh Nation crowneth him, when ſhe acknowledgeth him to be her King, although ſhe formerly rejected him, and would have no King but Cæſar, and the time when this ſhall be done is called, the day of his eſpouſals, becauſe by faith, Jeruſalem is now made his Bride, as is alſo taught by John, ſaying, I ſaw Ieruſalem, as a Spouſe prepared for her Husband. And this is alſo ſaid to be the day of the gladneſſe of his heart, for the great joy of their converſion, as it is ſaid, There is joy in heaven for one ſinner converted. And of the Iewes, when they ſhall be converted, in particular, the

CHAP. IV.

THou art faire (my Love,) thou art faire, thou haſt Doves eyes within thy lockes, thy haire is as a flock of Goates, that appeare from mount Gilead. See a like paſſage to this before, chap. 1. 15. but here Chriſt more at large commendeth his Spouſe, the Church, or Congregation of Converts, not only by her eyes, but her haire alſo; 3 Her teeth. 4. Her lips and ſpeech. 5. Her temples. 6. Her neck. 7. Her breaſts, ver. 3, 4, 5. Of the neck alſo, and cheekes, it was ſpoken before, chap. 1. 10. It ſeemeth therefore to me, that this ſpeech is particularly directed to the Church of the Jews, to be afterwards converted, as it was at the firſt begun with the Church of the Gentiles, which firſt imbraced the Faith, for why elſe are the ſame things in part ſpoken over againe, but for the coming in of the mother Spouſe, which had kept out of the pale of the Church ſo long a time, but now coming in alſo, great is the joy of the Bridegroomes heart, and to rejoyce together with him, for this are the faithfull of the Gentiles called upon to behold it, Chap. 3. 11. And as this Church had, verſ. 9, 10. praiſed Chriſt under the name of Salomon, by his chamber, pillars, Chariot, and love; and verſ. 7. 8. by his Bed ſtrongly guarded, verſ. 7. 8, ſo now he praiſeth her, from the beauty and comlineſſe of all theſe parts, which be ſeven, a number of perfection, to denote more perfection of grace in the Church of the Jewes, which ſhall be, then ever hath been in the Church of the Gentiles, for which cauſe for cheekes, neck, and eyes, only three ſpoken of touching her, ſeven are praiſed in this Church. Verſ. 1. The Bridegroomes firſt ſpeech.

1 Her eyes, which be the lights of the body, for which alſo the Church of the Gentiles is praiſed in common with her, and yet it is to be conceived that the light ſhall then be more then ever yet it hath been, for ſo Iſaiah ſaith, The light of the Moon ſhall be as the light of the Sun, and the light of the Sun ſeven-fold. And reaſon tels us, that Propheſies being accompliſhed, which were darke before, and but gueſſed at, are now made ſo manifeſt, that all men may ſee into them, as into things ſet in the light. Eſa. 30. 16.

2 Her lockes and haire, within which be her Doves eyes, by which words her chaſtity is commended, as before hath been ſaid; but it is to be noted, that Hebr. it is מבעד from within, or beſides, which Ainſworth will have to be underſtood of haire bound up within a covering put upon it, as womanly modeſty requireth, and to betoken her ſubjection to her Husband; and for further proofe he citeth ver. 3. and chap. 6. 7. and Eſa. 47. 2. in the laſt of which places the daughter of Babylon being in miſery is bidden to uncover her lockes, implying, that before they were covered, when ſhe was decently dreſſed up, but now to make her ſelfe fit to goe to Mill and grinde there, or to doe other ſervile workes, ſhe muſt uncover them; but hereby is nothing elſe meant, but that ſhe ſhould now have no joy to trim up her ſelfe, as in the times of her proſperity paſt, but ſhould let her haire, which is a womans ornament, hang remiſſe-ly down about her face and ſhoulders. Ainſw. 1 Cor. 11.

But that it is not meant, that the woman, which is the Spouſe of Chriſt, covereth all her haire, ſo as that none is ſeen, no not as is moſt decent for her, appeareth by the next words, Thy haire is as a flocke of Goates, that appeare from mount Gilead; for if it be all covered, how doth it appeare? and if her eyes be within her lockes, and theſe lockes have a covering above them, under which they be cloſe bound bound downe, as upon the head, ſhe were repreſented blind-folded, and ſo a chiefe part of her beauty, lying in her eyes and fore-head, ſhould be hidden: to ſay nothing of that part of her beauty which lyeth in her haire; for the third verſe here following and Chap. 6. 7. nothing is here or there ſaid, but her temples within her lockes, implying rather lockes hanging over her temples on either ſide, then tying of them up, and covering them. For that which is alledged touching a womans being covered, to ſhew her ſubjection, it is meant only of a vaile covering her head, and face, both in the Congregation, as modeſty requireth, her beauty being thus kept from the ſight of their eyes, that are ready to behold vanity, and to be inſnared herewith.

Gregor. The vulgar for theſe words, Thou haſt Doves eyes within thy lockes, hath it thou haſt Doves eyes without that which lyeth hid within, expounded by Gregory thus; Thy carriage outwardly is honeſt and blameleſſe, but within thou art much more faire, becauſe there is none evill intention in thy minde. But in this expoſition the word לצמתך in thy lockes, is left out, and therefore the firſt is to be preferred. Yet if it be ſupplied thus for the word left out, as for thy lockes, thy haire is like a flock of Goats, we ſhal not goe from the meaning Having ſpoken of her eyes, he proceedeth to her lockes, and haire, but in the former words, beſides that which is within, the Hebrew wil beſt bear it, only the word without is redundant. But what is meant by the lockes, or haire, he wel ſetteth forth in the next words, Thy haire is as a flocke of Goates, that appeare from mount Gilead, ſaying, What be the Churches eyes but Preachers, who be as eyes to the Congregation? and what her haire but the people, adorning, and beautifying them, when they receive the Word taught by them, into beleeving hearts, and as need requireth teſtifie, and ſeale it up with their bloud, for which they are compared to a flocke of Goates appearing from Gilead; That is, being interpreted, The heap of teſtimony.

And the Martyrs for their great numbers in the primitive Church, who thus gave teſtimony to the Goſpel, are likened to a flocke, and all of Goates, which be cleane Beaſts, and therefore appointed for ſacrifice, becauſe they both chew the Cud, and divide the Hoofe, and ſo are fit to ſet forth the faithfull, that doe both by Divine meditations, and dividing between things temporall and Spirituall, deſpiſing them in compariſon, and highly prizing of theſe, being alſo ſacrificed by being burnt in the fire, for Chriſt his ſake; yea, and all true Beleevers are aptly by them ſet forth, becauſe they alſo offer themſelves up in ſacrifice to God, by mortifying their ſinnes as members of the Old man, which is done, when againſt their corrupt nature, to their great paine, for the preſent they leave them all, in ſo doing they cutting off, as it were, their right hand, or foot, or plucking out their right eye, as our Lord ſpeaketh.

Note. The place here named Mount Gilead, ſtood in the moſt fruitfull Country of the Gileadites, that were of the halfe Tribe of Manaſſeh on this ſide Jordan, and therefore a place of fat and faire Cattell. And this is a great Decorum indeed (as a womans faire haire to her) to Preachers, when their Flockes thrive in like manner under their feeding with the Word, and are well liking; Paul called ſome under his hand, who were ſuch, his Crowne and rejoycing, and of that Church which is not ſuch, but the members thereof are like an Heard of Swine, for Drunkenneſſe, and Senſuality, or an hole of Foxes, for fraud and deceit; or of Conies, keeping in the holes of the earth, through covetouſneſſe, or an Heard of Lions, or Tigers, for cruelty, the Miniſter, or Miniſters can have no joy, but may well bee aſhamed: yet the evil finally coming hereof ſhall not be to them, but to ſuch obdurated Hearers, as is taught both Ezek. 3. Heb. 13. 17. and Eſa. 49. 4.

Gregory alſo underſtandeth Preachers, who, as a Mother with her teeth cheweth the Childes meat firſt, and then putteth it into the Infants mouth, for the nouriſhment thereof; ſo he prepareth by chewing, through meditation, the bread of Life for Gods people, for the nouriſhment of their ſoules. Gregor.

And they are ſaid to come up from waſhing, becauſe they have been firſt Baptiſed into Chriſts faith, and each of them bringeth forth twins; That is, ſoules converted, by their teaching of both peoples, Jewes and Gentiles; for unto a woman in travell Paul compareth himſelfe, ſaying, My little children, of whom I travell againe in birth, till Chriſt be formed in you. Gal. 4. 19. Or they are ſaid to bring forth twins, as Juſtus Orgel. hath it, the love of God, and of man, firſt in themſelves, and then in their Hearers. Juſtus Orgel. And it is to be noted, that none of them is barren, for he is unworthy to be in the Miniſtry, that is barren in reſpect of theſe twins, or of indeavouring to bring forth unto God ſoules in great numbers, by converting them to theſe two: although many times a Prophet may labour for this in vaine, as Eſay did, and ſo likewiſe did Jeremy, and other Prophets, who after much paines takeing, although they were inſpired men, complained, that they ſought and could not finde one righteous in all Jeruſalem. Note. Eſa. 49. 4. Jer. 5. 1.

Thy lips are like a thread of ſcarlet, and thy ſpeech comly, thy temples are like a peece of Pomgranat within thy lockes. Here fourthly, the Spouſe is commended by her lips. Fifthly, by her temples. And the ſame Preachers are alſo ſet forth by her lips, becauſe they are the lips and mouth of the Church, and ſaid to be red through zeale, and as a thread, or fillet, as the vulgar rendreth it, to binde up by Preaching the looſe manners of the people, that they may live more ſtrictly; and the ſame are alſo her temples, like unto pieces of Pomgranates, appearing from within her lockes, becauſe to ſpeake wiſely there muſt be an head, and temples to underſtand, as well as lips to utter. But why like peeces of Pomgranats? becauſe the Pomgranate being broken into peeces yeeldeth meat, ſo faithfull Preachers, from the good phantaſies that are within their fore-head and temples; and as under one ſhell in a Pomgranat are many kernels joyned cloſe together, ſo the people by meanes of their doctrine are knit together in love, and unity of ſpirit. Verſ. 3. Gregor.

And all this is againe ſaid, as the Doves eyes, to be from within the lockes; That is, to proceed from an holy heart, which is yet better, and more faire in the ſight of God, then they can outwardly expreſſe, contrary to Hypocrites, who are faire without, but within rotten and corrupt.

The Chaldee expoundeth the teeth of the Prieſts and Levites preparing food, as was before ſaid, and the lips of the High Prieſt, the temples of the King, and the lockes of other Governours under him. Cald. Paraph.

Thy neck is like the tower of David, builded for the Armory, wherein there hang a thouſand bucklers, all ſhields of mighty men. Verſ. 4. The ſame Preachers are here againe ſet forth by another Similitude, in another reſpect, viz. of a necke like a tower, and a tower of David. The necke is ſtretched out, when a man would ſee afarre off; hereby then is ſet forth the Miniſters watchfulneſſe for the people, and his looking at dangers coming towards them afarre off, which he doth valiantly oppoſe, and ſeekes to defend them, as a tower ſuch as be therein, when David, that is, a valiant King with his men are therein, and want no armes of ſhields and bucklers for defence; and theſe are their faith, which the Apoſtle in deſcribing the Armour of God calleth, the ſhield of faith. Ephes. 6. And theſe are ſaid to be one thouſand, that is, a full number, becauſe the number of a thouſand is a perfect number, as containing all numbers in it, and hereby are quenched all the fiery darts of the Devil, our potent enemy.

The Chald. Paraphraſt by the neck here, underſtandeth the Synedrion, or great Councell in Iſrael, Ainſworth the firmneſſe and ſtrength of the Church, and courage thereof, to withſtand all aſſaults of Spirituall enemies, and ſo צואר ſignifieth, when the people of God for their ſinnes are made to ſerve their enemies, their tranſgreſſions are ſaid to come up, and to be wreathes, as a yoke about their neck, but being delivered from ſinne to ſerve God in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, they are *Cald. re ſervants, and under the yoke no more. Theſe ſhields and bucklers alſo hanging up, intimate victory, and glory over enemies ſubdued, they being taken from them, and thus hanged up for a monument. In adding (of mighty men) it is alluded to Davids Worthies, who were all moſt mighty men. But of theſe Annotations I cannot ſee any ſenſe, for צואר ſignifieth a neck only.

Thy breaſts are like two young ones that are twins, which feed amongſt the Lillies; the vulgar, Sicut duo hinnuli capreæ, expounded by Gregory of the Preachers under the Circumciſion and of thoſe of the uncircumciſion; the word here uſed is עפרים ſignifying Duſts, or young ones of the Deere, or Goat; Juſtus Orgel. will have theſe two young ones underſtood of two peoples, Jewes and Gentiles, nouriſhed by the two breaſts of the Old and New Teſtament, and their feeding amongſt the Lillies, of their feeding amongſt holy examples ſet forth therein, which they doe, that imitate them in their piety, and vertuous actions. Ainſworth without any ſuch diſtinction, by theſe two breaſts underſtands the nouriſhment, where-with the young ones of the Church are nouriſhed, as with milke out of breaſts, by pure Doctrine, and by their feeding amongſt the Lillies, their being further nouriſhed, and ſtrengthened, as in ſweet paſtures Fawnes, or Kids are, by the Word preached.

Here is no great difference, but for as much as two breaſts are ſpoken of, I conceive, that herein the two Teſtaments are alluded to, and by the twins, the two ſorts of Beleevers, Jewes and Gentiles, nouriſhed in grace hereby; or continuing in the Allegory of Gregory, theſe two breaſts may well alſo be applied to thoſe of the Circumciſion, and of the Vncircumciſion, that beleeved.

For the next words, Untill the day breake, and ſhadowes fly away, ſee before, chap. 2. 17. I will get me to the mountaines of Myrrhe, and the hills of Frankincenſe. By the mountaines of Myrrhe, ſaith Gregory, underſtand mortified ones to ſinfull workes, becauſe Myrrhe ſetteth forth mortification, as hath been before ſhewed: by hills of Frankincenſe, the altitude of humble prayers. To theſe Chriſt ſaith, he will get him, to ſhew how acceptable all ſuch are unto him, and that in them he delighteth, as in ſweet Frankincenſe, and Myrrhe.

Eſa. 1. 16, 17, 18.

And in the next words, Thou art all faire, my Love, there is no ſpot in thee; he ſheweth the great beauty of all thoſe, that being mortified to ſinne make their prayers continually to aſcend, as the fume of Frankincenſe, as being now waſhed, and made cleane, and white, as wooll, or ſnow. Or, this may be taken as the concluſion of the Spouſes deſcription, by her comly parts before going, as if he had ſaid; Hitherto I have ſpoken of the particular parts of thy body, which moſt appeare; now to conclude in a word, I ſay, thou art all faire, and no ſpot is in thee; That is, although thou haſt infirmities ſtill remaining, for which thou maiſt be diſcouraged, yet be comforted in this, that I account thee all faire, and without ſpot, or ſtaine of ſinne. So Epheſ. 5. 26. it cannot hence be inferred, as the Antinomians would have it, that the faithfull ſoule is altogether without ſinne, that which is done amiſſe by ſuch being no ſinne, although the Law be hereby tranſgreſſed. Ah ſtrange Doctrine, and alwayes unheard of in former Ages, unleſſe it were amongſt the Donatiſts. For although God ſeeth no ſinne in his Iſrael, and pronounceth him to be without ſpot, yet it is in no other reſpect, but of his not imputing ſinne unto him, as is taught, Pſal. 32. 1. Rom. 4.

Verſ. 8.

Come with me from Lebanon, my Spouſe, with me from Lebanon, looke from the top of Amana, and Shenir, and Hermon, from the Lions dens, and from the mountaines of Leopards. Lebanon was a Forreſt on the North part of the Land of Canaan, where Cedars grew in abundance, and many wilde Beaſts harboured: in ſaying therefore, Come with me from Lebanon, and then at the end of the verſe, from the Dens of Lions, and Leopards; he intimateth amongſt what cruel and ſavage men the Church ſhould live under the Goſpel, but by her Husband Chriſt be taken away at length from amongſt them, all to her exceeding great joy & comfort; and this was accordingly fulfilled in the time of the primitive Church, when hot perſecutions by Tyrants were raiſed againſt her, and according to the words here uſed Chriſtians were caſt to the Lions, as Tertullian telleth. If Tyber did over-flow, and there were Famine, or Peſtilence in the Land, by and by it was cryed out, Chriſtiani ad Liones, have the Chriſtians to the Lions, as the men, whom the Idolatrous Heathen thought to be the cauſe of all their miſeries, for as much as they preached againſt their gods in every place, and them hereby incenſed, to the ſending of ſuch puniſhments upon the Land, and that it was thus in other parts alſo, may be gathered from 1 Cor. 15. where Paul ſaith, If I have fought with beaſts at Epheſus, after the manner of men, &c. but when Conſtantine the Great had gotten the Empire, this was firſt fulfilled, which is here ſaid, Come with me from Lebanon, for then they, who had been all the time before amongſt Lions came away, as led by Chriſts mighty hand out of that danger. Tertull.

did

And whereas it is againe ſaid, from Lebanon, hereby a ſecond deliverance being intimated, this may well be underſtood of the perſecution of Antichriſt, who hath raged yet more againſt the true Church of Chriſt; but from amongſt theſe Lions alſo, or rather Leopards ſhe ſhall finally come, that man of ſinne being deſtroyed by the brightneſſe of Chriſts coming, and to intimate two ſorts of perſecutors, both Lions and Leopards are named, the Heathen Emperours being underſtood by the one, and the cruell Popes of Rome by the other. 2 Theſ. 2.

Gregory, who rendreth it, Come with me, and thou ſhalt be crowned, underſtandeth Baptiſme, by Lebanon ſignifying white, wherein being waſhed, the faithfull ſoule ſhall ſoone after be crowned with glory in heaven. Gregor.

And by the other Hills, or Mountaines here named, wherein Lions and Leopards harboured, ſuch cruell Heathens, yea, even the tops, or heads of them amongſt whom the Church preached the Goſpel, from the converting of whom he ſhall come, and be crowned in heaven; for the reading, I miſlike not the vulgar, which Gregory followeth, thou ſhalt be crowned; for the word is תשורי and שור ſignifieth, Principatum tenere, to have the dominion, of which a Crowne is the enſigne; but for his expounding of Lebanon of Baptiſme I cannot agree with him, becauſe the laſt words, the dens of Lions and Leopards, ſerve to ſhew what was in Lebanon, from which ſhe is bidden to come, as alſo in Mount Abana, and Hermon. It is then from ſufferings by bruitiſh and ſavage men that ſhe is bidden to come; or it is intimated, that ſhe ſhall come, and be crowned at laſt with a crowne of immortality.

Againe, by theſe words, from the dennes of Lions, cannot be meant for her being amongſt them, and converting them, for then they ſhould no more have been called Lions, and Leopards, without ſomething to expreſſe their cicuration, as Eſa. 11. Ainſworth will have it meant of coming from amongſt bruitiſh men in manners, and he followeth our new Tranſlation; Looke from Amana, not thou ſhalt be crowned, becauſe the word תשורי hath a prick over the right horne, and ſo ſignifieth to looke or ſee. And touching Amana, he ſaith, it is a mountaine, wherein Strabo ſaith tyranicall men lived, and Shemir, and Hermon were mountaines of wilde beaſts; but to me the ſenſe ſeemeth to be beſt, being rendred, Thou ſhalt be crowned, or have the dominion, the event ſo notably anſwering this Propheſie in Conſtantine turning Chriſtian, and ſo the principality devolving to the Church. As for the point placed in the right horne, ſurely it was not ſo more anciently, for then Jerom would have rendred it accordingly, being of ſo great skil in the Tongues; and whereas it is ſaid, from the top of Amana, ſo it is meant, although thou beeſt now in the height of miſery, and there may ſeeme to be no way of eſcaping, as being in view of Lions. And whereas I have before by Lions underſtood perſecuting Emperours, by Leopards, Popes, in the varying of the Word, I hold with Gregory, that ſubtle and crafty perſecutors are meant, cunningly pretending themſelves to be what they are not, as Hypocrites, and to whom can this better agree, then to the Popes of Rome? Ainſw.

Thou haſt raviſhed my heart, my ſiſter, my ſpouſe, with one of thine eyes, with one chaine of thy neck; the vulgar, for one chaine, hath one haire, but the word is ענק a chaine. Here Chriſt further expreſſeth his great love to his Church for the Graces, of which he ſpake before, that were in her ſo greatly beautifying Verſ. 9.

her, and making her moſt amiable. And he beginneth with her eyes, of which he had ſpoken firſt, verſ. 1. and then cometh to her haire, which is next there, whereby Gregory underſtands, as before, the Preacher, and the people, called one, becauſe agreeing in one; for unity in the Church, when all thinke and ſpeake the ſame things, doth moſt highly commend her to the Lord, and raviſheth his heart; and the neck, which joyneth the head and body together, ſetteth forth faith, whereby the Church, which is Chriſts body is joyned to him, her head; and this expoſition I take to be moſt genuine, for the word עֲנָק properly ſignifying a chaine, or wreath, may well be rendred haire, or a wreath of haire in this place hanging downe upon the necke, and from thence appearing, and affecting the Lover, and therefore it is מִצַּוָּארֵךְ not of thy necke, but from thy neck; and Ainſworth indifferently rendreth it chaine, or haire. Hereby then unity and love amongſt Preachers, and Chriſtian people is commended unto us, and faith, as wherein our Lord exceedingly delighteth, that we may be aſhamed of our diviſions, and unite againe in love.

Verſ. 10. How faire is thy Love (my Siſter, my Spouſe,) how much better is thy love then wine, and the ſmell of thy oyntments, then all ſpices. The Spouſe had commended the love of Chriſt, as better then wine, chap. 1. 2. and the ſavour of his Ointments as moſt ſweet; now Chriſt likewiſe commendeth her love to him, and her Graces, as wherein he delighted more then in all ſweet Spices; for Love here is a Nowne Plurall, Loves; the ſame word alſo ſignifieth breaſts, as was noted, chap. 1. 2. and therefore ſo rendred in vulgar Latine; and then here is another amiable part alſo of the Spouſe, repeated from verſ. 5. And then her lips are alſo Verſ. 11 ſpoken of, as inamouring him, of which before, verſ. 3. but now they are ſaid to drop Honey, and Milke is under thy tongue.

Gregor. Here by lips againe underſtand, with Gregory, Preachers, who diſtill honey, as it were out of the combe, when they bring forth heavenly and comfortable Doctrine, that lieth hid within them, as the honey doth in the wax of the combe, and have it, not to drop it downe in their lips only, as Hypocrites have; and honey and milke is ſaid to be under their Tongue, to ſhew that they ſuck downe, and have within them the ſame ſweet inſtructions which they propound to others, their hearts being firſt ſanctified, and inlightned, and then their tongues and lips to utter the ſame for the nouriſhment of the little ones of the Church, as they are able to beare, to eternall life, according to which the Apoſtle ſaith, I have given you milke, and not ſtrong meat, which yee were not able to beare. The ſmell of thy garments like the ſmell of Lebanon; That is, the ſmell of thy Graces, righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, where-with thou cloatheſt thy ſelfe as with garments, is moſt ſweet, as Lebanon, in which abundance of ſweet and odoriferous Spices grew. Thus it is Propheſied, Hoſ. 14. 5, 6, 7. and in ſaying thus, it is alluded to the ſaying of Iſaac to Jacob, when he bleſſed him, Gen. 27. The ſmell of thy garments is like the ſmell of a field, which the Lord hath bleſſed.

Verſ. 12. A garden incloſed is my ſiſter, my ſpouſe, a ſpring ſhut up, a fountaine ſealed. Having ſpoken of ſweet ſmels, now becauſe Gardens ſmell ſweet, he ſetteth forth his Spouſes ſweetneſſe by a Garden, and this is incloſed; That is, by Gods providence fenced about, that wilde beaſts may not enter, and ſpoyle it, as it is ſaid of the Vine-yard, Eſa. 5. This then ſheweth the ſafety of the faithfull, God is about them by his providence, and protection, as a wall of fire, and he ſtrengtheneth their gates, and barres, as a man hath a ſpeciall care of his Garden, that it be annoyed by nothing breaking in, ſo hath the Lord of his Church; and therefore ſhe muſt be to him as incloſed, and as a ſpring fenced and ſealed, not communicating her ſelfe to baſe and filthy Luſts, as if ſhe were a common, into which all beaſts may come, and take their pleaſure. For the other compariſon taken from a Spring, or Fountaine ſealed, this ſerveth to ſhew her preciouſneſſe, and that ſhe ſuffereth not others, the enemies of the Soule, to drinke of her waters, but keepes them for God only, that he may take pleaſure in her; and this is ſpoken in regard of the Spirit, which is as a fountaine of living water, given to thoſe that aske, and thirſt after him. Juſtus Orgel. applieth this alſo to the Virgin Mary, who who was as a ſealed Fountaine, that never knew any man, but continued a perpetuall Virgin.

But it is further to be extended to the Virgin Church of Chriſt, and every faithfull ſoule which is fenced, and ſealed, and not communicable in her love to the world, or the things of the world, but peculiar to him only. And Chriſt calleth her his ſiſter, for her adoption by Grace, to be a daughter of God, as he ſaith of all that heare the Word of God, and keep it, he is my mother, my brother, and my ſiſter. Matth. 12.

Thy plants are an Orchard of Pomgranats, with pleaſant fruits, Camphire, and Spiknard. Verſ. 13. Hence-forth to the end of verſe fifteene, he proſecuteth the Allegory of a Garden begun, wherein are not only ſweet things, but trees of all ſorts, bearing the beſt fruits, as the Garden of God, Eden, wherein Adam was placed, did. Hereby then is intimated, that the Church is the Garden, or Paradice of pleaſure upon earth, by coming into, and being a member of which a man beginneth to be reſtored to that happy eſtate, from which Adam fell by ſinning; and the Plants here growing are named; 1. Pomgranats, ſetting forth Martyrs, according to Gregory; becauſe as they are red without, and within full of cluſters of Graines, which have a ſweet taſte; ſo the Martyrs of God, that are burnt in red hot fire, are full of the graces of the Spirit within, where-with God repleniſheth them. Gregor. Touching the ſecond, Camphire, ſee before, chap. 1. 14. The third, Spiknard, Hebr. Spiknards, this is a plant growing with leaves, and eares, ſmelling very ſweet. Fourthly, Spiknard and Saffron, this is well knowne unto us to be a precious yellow flower, that is medicinall, having the name, as Ainſworth noteeth, from the colour. Verſ. 14. In joyning Spiknard and Saffron together then, healing, and ſweetneſſe in the Church are commended unto us, and in the Pomgranate pleaſant fruit, all which they yeeld that are true members hereof; the fruit of gracious ſpeeches, and good deeds, Sanation by inſtructions for converſion, and ſweet odours, through devotion, and a good life, which maketh a man to ſmell ſweet both before God and men, whereas he that is of a wicked life ſtinketh. Fifthly, to expreſſe this ſweetneſſe further, Calamus, that is, ſweet Cane is alſo named. Sixthly, Cinamon, of which Exod. 30. in preſcribing the ſweet Oyntment. Seventhly, Frankincenſe. Eighthly, Myrrhe. Ninthly, Aloes, of which often in other places.

A fountaine of gardens, a well of living waters, and ſtreames from Lebanon. Verſ. 15. Here he returneth againe to the Church, wherein all the Plants before named grow. And as if he had not ſaid enough, in calling her a Spring, and a Fountaine, he reſumes the laſt word fountaine againe, ſaying, a fountaine of gardens, and then a Well, and ſtreames from Lebanon; That is, a well-watered place, by the Word and Spirit cauſing the growth of ſuch precious Plants here, as Paradice of old was watered with.

Gregory expounds this Fountaine, and Well of the Scripture in the Church, becauſe it is open as a Fountaine in ſome places, but deep as a well in other places. Of Lebanon, ſee him before upon verſe 8.

Awake O North wind, come O South, and blow upon my garden, that the ſpices thereof may flow out; let my Beloved come into his garden, and eat his fruit. Verſ. 16. By the North wind, ſaith Gregory, underſtand the evil Spirit, becauſe the North wind is peircing cold, and killeth young Plants, or makes them ſtand at a ſtay, that they cannot grow; and by the South the good Spirit of God, becauſe when the South wind, which is warme, bloweth, they grow and flouriſh; ſo by the evil Spirit a man is deaded unto goodneſſe, there coming a chilly coldneſſe upon him, when he is about any holy duty, benumming his affections hereunto; but by the good Spirit he is quickned, and made agil about it; therefore the evil Spirit is here bidden to depart, and the good Spirit to come upon this Garden, the Church, and every faithfull ſoule to make them fructifie, and to caſt forth a ſweet odour, filling the place where they be, there-with, by good teaching and living. Gregor. Thus Gregory: but not ſo probably as Juſtus Orgel. who by the North and South wind, underſtands the ſame Spirit of God, when the Church is oppreſſed Juſtus Orgel.

with heat refrigerating and comforting her, as it were, with a coole gale of wind, and when at any time the ground of the heart is hardned, mollifying it, as with the South wind bringing ſhowers.

And to ſhew, that theſe two divers winds agree in one, he ſaith in the ſingular number, blow, and not in the plurall, noting hereby the agreeing of them both in this, that they come to refreſh this garden. And indeed I ſee not, how any good ſence can be made of the words, according to Gregories expoſition, becauſe he doth not bid the North wind to goe away, but to blow as well as the South upon this garden.

Ainſw. Ainſworth alſo underſtandeth the ſame Spirit, blowing in the preaching of the word by both theſe winds, becauſe ſometimes terrible things to rouze men up from ſleeping ſecurely in ſin, are ſhaken by the impulſions of the Spirit of God, which are ſharp, and piercing as the North wind; and ſometimes things comfortable, which warme, and refreſh, as the South wind, which I cannot but preferre.

Acts 2. And by the wind, Chriſt ſetteth forth the Spirit, Joh. 3. and he came upon the Apoſtles like a mighty ruſhing wind; of theſe winds the wicked and unregenerate heare the ſound, but know not whence they came, nor whither they goe; but the faithfull doe, being hereby made fluent with the ſweet ſpices thereof, which is done, when gracious ſpeeches, and good deeds come from them plentifully. This being ſpoken by Chriſt, the Spouſe his Church replieth in the next words.

The Brides ſixth ſpeech. Let my beloved come, and eat of the fruit of his garden, or his fruits; That is, Lord, doſt thou call them my Spices, which flow from me, they are thine, as I alſo am, come therefore into me, and be delighted in thy owne fruits, which thou

Eſa. 26. 12. haſt cauſed to bring forth, for God worketh all our workes in us, as the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh. From all which note, that by ſharp reproofes, as well as by comfortable propoſals of gracious promiſes, the ſoules of the Hearers are made fruitfull in good. 2. After reproofe to peirce, and caſt downe, conſolations are neceſſary.

Note. 3. Whatſoever good is done by the faithfull is not theirs, and therefore not meritorious on their parts, but Gods worke in them, and ſo his gifts, and not their merits ſhall finally be crowned in them, according to Auguſt. Deus in nobis ſua dona coronat.

Note. And from verſe 13. that all the Plants in this Garden are of the beſt ſort, and none of the worſt, all ſweet and precious, none baſe or ſtinking, and therefore all ſuch as be in the Church, that are of vile conditions, and ſtinking, through ſwearing and curſing, drunkenneſſe, whoring, prophaneſſe, oppreſſion, injuſtice, wrath, or envie are no plants, but weeds that ſhall be rooted up.

CHAP. V.

Verſ. 1. The ſixth ſpeech of the Bride-groom. I Am come into my Garden, (my Siſter, my Spouſe,) I have gathered my Myrrhe, and my Spice, I have eaten my Honey-combe with my honey, I have dranke my wine with my milke. Eate O friends, drinke, yea drinke abundantly, (O beloved) Here Chriſt anſwereth, and aſſenteth to the deſire of his Church, declaring that he is in the midſt of her, delighting in her holy ſervice done to him, as in ſweet Spices making a perfume, and in the fruits by her brought forth, as in Honey and Milke, for thus, as was ſaid before, the Lord eateth and drinketh, being as it were feaſted by us; whereas ſervice being in a carnall manner done unto him, is abomination, although by Incenſe; and ſinnes being committed contrary to his precepts are as ſoure Grapes, or Grapes of gall, and poyſon of Dragons. Of his eating, the Chald. Paraphraſe ſaith the ſame, of his accepting the Offerings then made upon his Altar, by his faithfull people, which he declared by fire ſent downe from heaven, which did, as it were eate, and drinke up their Sacrifices, and Drinke-offerings, as when fire came downe and conſumed the Sacrifice of Elijah, and licked up all the water in the Ditches round about. Eate (O friends) who are Chriſts friends, but they that keep his Commandements? as Abraham did, and was called the friend of God. Now his friends are ſaid to eate and drinke, and to drinke abundantly, when they have joy in his ſervice, and the Spirit is leading them to all good, and beleeving that through Chriſt they are accepted of in their devotions, and good deeds, their ſinnes and imperfections being covered; for now they are ſure that they ſhall not be condemned, but ſaved, that they have peace with God, and ſo their joy cannot be interrupted by tribulations, but increaſed, and finally, that they ſhall have everlaſting reſt, and fulneſſe of joy in heaven. Of this joy, as by drinking our fill of wine, the Apoſtle ſpeaketh; where he ſaith, Be not drunken with wine, but be yee filled with the Spirit; for the laſt word, beloved. Hebr. it is Loves, a plurall, as having reference to the friends before ſpoken of, all faithfull ſoules, which are his Loves.

Matth. 18.

I ſleep, but my heart waketh, it is the voyce of my beloved that knocketh ſaying, open to me, my Siſter, my Love, my Dove, my undefiled, for my head is filled with dew, and my lockes with the drops of the night. The Church being cheared up, as before, verſe 1. that is, filled with joy and comfort through beleeving, is here ſet forth, as ſleeping through ſecurity, when ſhe had reſt and proſperity by Gods good providence towards her, after ſharp perſecutions, under Heathen Emperours a long time. And this was fulfilled in the dayes of Conſtantine the Great, for although ſleeping ſometimes be ſpoke of in a good ſence, as ſetting forth naturall reſt, which is neceſſary for the refreſhing of the body, yet ſometimes carnall ſecurity, and living in ſinne is hereby ſet forth, as Rom. 13. 11. 1. Theſ. 5. 7. Eſa. 56. 10. ſo in this place: for the Church being releaſed from the terrible blaſts of perſecutions, and ſo the blowing of the North wind ſpoken of, Chap. 4. 16. being as it were over, and the South wind of worldly proſperity blowing, in the dayes of the fore-ſaid Conſtantines reigne, ſhe begun to ſleep; That is, to live more ſecurely, in ſo much as that the Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory ſaith, Chriſtians were ſo full of ſtrife, and lived ſo diſſolutely, that they nothing differed from Heathens but in this, that they bare the name of Chriſtians. But yet ſhe ſaith, her heart waked; That is, although through the infirmity of the fleſh ſhe thus ſlept, the ſpirit within her was awake, and this her ſinning was not without reluctation, the ſpirit ſtriving againſt the fleſh, and the fleſh againſt the ſpirit; ſo that ſhe did the evil ſhe would not.

Verſ. 2. The ſeventh ſpeech of the Bride.

Gal. 5. 17.

The Church being in this ſtate, heareth the voyce of Chriſt knocking at the doore, whereby is ſet forth ſome ſevere chaſtiſement following; as in ſuch a caſe it is ſaid to the Church of Laodicea, I ſtand at the doore and knocke, after that he had ſpoken of his ſevere proceeding againſt her for her ſecurity, and luke warmeneſſe, ſpewing her out of his mouth, and ſaying, ſuch as I love I chaſtiſe. So the Church under Conſtantine growing ſecure, the Lord ſoone after knocked at her doore, by perſecution of Arrians, and then of Gothes and Vandals, breaking into the Romane Empire in the weſt, and long domineering there. But even now he calleth her his Love, his Siſter, Dove, and Undefiled, by many comfortable compellations together, more then he had uſed before; whereby is implied both that failings and imperfections in Chriſtians, and deadneſſe in his ſervice, make not him quite to forſake her, although for a time he judgeth her, and leaveth her to the will of her enemies; and alſo, that judgements in this world doe not argue leſſe love in God towards his people, but rather more exceeding, ſhe being now accounted of as his Siſter, Love, Dove, and undefiled; for her opening to him, which he requireth, this is done by turning againe, and doing her firſt workes, ſuffering the Word of God to enter, and take effect againe, by reforming all things that were amiſſe, for ſo the Apoſtle ſpeakes of a doore that was opened to him, and bids the Revel. 3. 20.

Ephes. 6. 19. the Ephesians to pray for him, that a doore of utterance might be given unto him. For the last words, My lockes are wet with the dew of the night; by night here, understand the night of the Churches adversity, coming for her sinnes, wherein when she was, as it were, in the water, and in danger of drowning, Christ sheweth, that he did sympathize with her, his head being also filled with watery dew, and his lockes with drops falling in the night.

Ainsw. Somewhat like unto this speaketh Ainsworth, expounding it of the faithfull, sometimes growing more secure, but then Christ visiteth them with his chastisements, and stirres them up to open to him, by becoming more zealous and reformed againe; and to move them hereunto tels them of his head, and lockes full of dew, as in the night, he having at such times no rest, nor comfort, but being as one

Note. wandring about in a cold wet night uncomfortably; therefore who so desireth to be comforted by Christ, must shake off security, and rouze up himselfe to fly all sin: because as when he is delighted in us feeding, as it were upon Honey and Milke, as was before shewed; he also cheareth us up, bidding us eate and drinke; so he having no comfort in us, when we sleep in sinne, although our hearts be awake, we cannot have comfort in him, and therefore this consideration should make us to open to him by speedy reformation.

Cald. Paraph. The Chald. Paraphrast applieth, as that verse 1. to the Church under the Law, whose sacrifices the Lord accepted of, and their meat and drinke-offerings, and shewed it by consuming and eating them with his fire, when they were zealous for him; so this, verse 2. to the time of the Babylonian captivity, when the Jewes slept, as it were, for a time, being without the fence of their sinnes. Then the Lord knocked by his Spirit at the doore, moving them to repent by this, that his head was wet; That is, he was bedewed, and wetted with the drops of their teares, as a man standing abroad in a cold night.

Gregor. Gregory by the Churches sleeping, understands Church-men of most eminent parts, with-drawing themselves from publick imployment, that they might be free to Divine contemplation, for which they are said to be asleep, but in heart awake. To these the Lord saith, Open to me, my Spouse; That is, come forth out of your Cels, and preach unto, and teach my people, who are the haires of my head, and my lockes wet with dew of the night; That is, in a deplorable condition, as in a darke night abroad when it raineth, but by your instructions to be inlightned, and brought in; let the Reader follow which he pleaseth, but this last savoureth not to me, because sleeping is never taken for being vacant from publick imployment.

Vers. 3. I have put off my coate, how shall I put it on, I have washed my feet, how shall I defile them? Here the Church yet resting, and sleeping in sinne, answereth even under judgements, making delayes and excuses for not turning; as one that hath put off his coate, and is gone to bed, having also washed his feet from sweat and filth at night, as was the manner of those that dwelt in such hot Countries, is unwilling, being called upon to rise and open the doore, although to his friend, as is shewed in the parable, Luke 13. so the people of God sleeping in sinne, although God by knocking with his judgements awaketh them, yet they are loath to arise

Ephes. 5. 14. and come forth, as is commanded, Awake thou that sleepest, and stand up from

Note. the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. It is then dangerous to sleep any time in sinne, and therefore as much to be taken heed of as the sleeping Disease, of which many in this Land in times past dyed; wherefore as then all meanes were used to keep men that were inclining to it, awake; So let us by all meanes keep our selves from this sleeping, and if any man hath sinned, lye not in it by impenitency, but without delay shake it off by repentance.

Vers. 4. My beloved put in his hand at the hole of the doore, and my bowels were moved for him. The Spouse delaying to open to Christ, when she was moved hereunto by the Ministry of the Word outwardly, now sheweth, that he put in his hand at the hole of the doore, and then she was affected with griefe for her unkinde refusall to arise, and open to him; That is, to repent, being so lovingly invited hereunto.

By

By this putting in of his hand, Ainſworth underſtandeth his effectuall moving of her by his Spirit, becauſe when Luke would ſet forth with what efficacy the Apoſtles preached, it is ſaid, The hand of the Lord was with them. When a ſoule is thus moved, although ſhe ſtirred not before for Gods knocking, by preaching, and by judgements, yet now ſhe is deeply affected with ſorrow, for this her hard-heartedneſſe; for ſo this phraſe is uſed, both by Eſay mourning for Moab, and by Jeremiah mourning for Iſrael, and the Lord for Ephraim. Ainſw. Act. 11. 19,20. Eſa. 16. 11. Jer. 4. 19. Jer. 31 20.

I roſe up to open to my Beloved, and my hands dropped with Myrrhe, and my fingers with ſweet ſmelling Myrrhe, upon the handles of the locke. The Church, or faithfull ſoule being pierced with ſorrow, for her negligence in riſing and opening the doore, by turning from ſinne; now proceedeth to other expreſſions of her repentance, ſhe lyeth not ſleeping any longer, but immediatly riſeth up by repentance, and turning unto Chriſt, as godly ſorrow is ſaid to have theſe effects; careſulneſſe, clearing of your ſelves, indignation, feare, vehement deſire, zeale, and reverence. Then ſhe ſaith, that her hands and fingers dropped Myrrhe, That is, ſhe did not only ceaſe and turne from ſinne, but with her hands did good workes, which have a ſweet ſmelling ſavour in the Lords noſtrils, for ſo a Sacrifice was, as this is called. The handles of the locke were the bolts of the doore, and upon theſe the oyle of Myrrhe is ſaid to drop, to intimate the making of them glib and eaſie to unbolt, which without oyle ſometime can hardly be opened. Verſ. 5. 2 Cor. 7. 10. Heb. 13. 16.

I opened to my beloved, but my beloved had with-drawne himſelfe, and was gone, my ſoule failed when he ſpake, I ſought him, but I could not finde him, I called, but he gave me no anſwer. Hereby is ſhewed, that for ſinning, and continuing ſome time ſecurely in ſinne, even the faithfull repenting now, and doing good workes againe are by the Lord neglected, and they cannot ſoone prevaile with him, to ſhew them his favour, which is a great and heavie temptation unto them, but juſt with God, becauſe they are but dealt withall in their kinde; he called to them, and they would not be forth-with moved, but in proceſſe of time, and therefore he likewiſe lends a deafe eare to them, calling to him, for their greater humiliation; and therefore let us take heed, that we harden not our hearts to goe on in any ſinne, whilſt it is called to day; but if any man hath falne through infirmity, let him with ſpeed riſe up againe by repentance, for becauſe David did not thus, but deferred almoſt an whole yeare, ſee with how much adoe he obtained the reſtitution of Gods favour. Verſ. 6. Note. Pſal. 51.

The Watch-men that went about the City found me, they wounded me; the Keepers of the wall tooke my vaile away from me. Here the miſery of ſuch a ſoule is further ſet forth, and the words imply her going further then to the doore to open it, namely, into the ſtreetes of the City, to ſeeke her beloved. But being there the Watch-men found her, and ſmote and wounded her. A like paſſage ſee before, chap. 3. 3. only there they are not ſaid to have ſmitten her, as in this place, whereby is meant, that for her ſinne into which ſhe fell, and wherein ſhe lay, the Miniſters of the Goſpel taking her to be an Harlot, whoſe feet could not keep in the houſe, but carried her about the City at ſuch an unſeaſonable time, ſmote her with their tongues by ſharp cenſures, and reproofes, laying her open, as a vile woman, which is meant by taking away her vaile, that was a ſigne of modeſty. And hereby is intimated, that the deare ſervant of God falling by infirmity, may not only be in a diſconſolate eſtate for want of the preſent ſence of Gods favour reſtored, after his riſing by repentance, but alſo have his diſcomfort aggravated by thoſe, from whom ſhe ſhould have comfort. But even in this ſad condition ſuch a ſoule ſtill goeth on, in expreſſing her love to Chriſt, wherein ſhe is unſeparable from him whatſoever ſhe ſuffereth, as verſe 8. Verſ. 7. 1 Cor. 11. Note.

I charge you (O daughters of Jeruſalem) if yee finde my Beloved, that yee tell him, I am ſick of Love. Of her charging the daughters of Jeruſalem in another caſe, ſee chap. 2. 7. and of her being ſicke of love, verſe 5. Here is ſhewed, how the faithfull ſoule is not by any diſcouragements beaten off, from ſeeking after Chriſt, although ſhe hath no preſent ſence of his favour, and by his Miniſters alſo ſhe be hardly thought, and ſpoken of, for her ſleeping before mentioned, Verſ. 8. Ainſw.

toned, yet ſhe ceaſeth not to publiſh his praiſes, and to commend him to others in the Church, meant by the daughters of Jeruſalem, who are yet unconverted, and without Chriſt, which is intimated by her, ſaying, If yee finde my beloved; but when yee ſhall finde him, make knowne in your prayers my caſe unto him, and intreat him for me. Whence we may learne, that ſuch as have found comfort in Chriſt, ought to pray for thoſe, that are yet deſtitute thereof, but doe earneſtly deſire it, and hee that hath not yet the ſence of it, ſhould commend him to others that they may be inamoured upon him; as the Spouſe here doth in the verſes following.

Note.

Verſ. 9. What is thy Beloved more then ax others beloved, (O thou faireſt amongſt women) what is thy beloved, &c. that thou doſt ſo charge us? Gregory, who underſtandeth by the Watch-men, Preachers, that by their words doe ſo affect the hearts of the Hearers, as if they were pierced and wounded with ſorrow for their ſinnes, and by their pulling off her vale, their laying open to her that, under which, as a vaile, any thing lay hid, which it concerned her to know for her greater humiliation, will have by the daughters of Jeruſalem the ſame Preachers underſtood, whom ſhe deſireth to commend her to God in their prayers. When ſhe ſaith, If yee finde, not meaning that they had not yet found Chriſt, but when in addreſſing your ſelves unto him by prayer yee finde comfort, I pray you remember me; and for her anſwer, telling them upon their queſtion, what is thy Beloved?

Gregor.

Verſ. 10. My beloved is white, and ruddy, the chiefeſt amongſt ten thouſand; he ſaith, that they doe not thus queſtion, as if they were ignorant of him, but to provoke her to ſet him forth, and his praiſes, as ſhe doth, verſe 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. that all men might be ſtirred up to love, and to ſeeke to be joyned unto him alſo by faith and repentance; and this I take to be the beſt, for the Word of God is ſharper then any two-edged ſword, piercing the heart; and when Peter preached, they that heard him were pricked in their hearts. And it is unreaſonable to hold, that any ſhould be ſpoken to, to tell the Bride-groome that his Spouſe is ſicke of Love, but Preachers, touching whom it is ſaid, Is any man ſicke, let him ſend for the Elders of the Church, and they ſhall pray for him; if this ſhall ſeeme to make againſt it, that they are called daughters of Jeruſalem, not men, it is according to the phraſe uſed, Prov. 9. Wiſdome ſent forth her Maids, whereby Preachers are undoubtedly meant.

Jam. 5. 16.

In their queſtioning with her about Chriſt, they doe but try, and take a taſte, as it were, of her knowledge of Chriſt, as Teachers by their Office ought to doe, being for this called Catechiſers, and the inſtructed by them Catechiſed, as the word κατηχέω ſignifieth, although this be now to the great detriment of the Church much neglected. For the deſcription of Chriſt, he is white and red; That is, the moſt beautifull and comly that can be, whereby yet the externall beauty of his perſon is not ſo much meant, for he is ſaid by the Prophet to be without forme, or beauty. But he is white by his innocency, red, by having the ſinnes of us all laid upon him, as cleanneſſe from ſinne, and defilement by ſinne are ſet forth, the one by white, the other by red, and that the moſt pure white of Snow, and deepeſt dyed red of Scarlet, for ſo, Chriſt was made ſinne for us that knew no ſinne, that we might be made the righteouſneſſe of God through him.

Then

Then verſe 11, 12, &c. followeth a deſcription of him by his parts, his head, his eyes, his cheekes, his lips, hands, belly, legges, and mouth, all moſt amiable and lovely.

His head is as the moſt fine gold, his lockes buſhy, and blacke as a Raven. Who is Chriſts Head, ſaith Gregory, but God, and he is likened to fine Gold, the moſt precious of all Mettals, becauſe he is moſt glorious and excellent, all Creatures being vile in compariſon of him; and who are his Haires but Beleevers, that by faith hang upon him; and they are ſaid to be blacke as the Raven, becauſe in their owne eyes blacke through ſinne. Verſ. 11. Gregor. 1 Cor. 11.

Ainſworth, by his head, underſtands his gold regiment of his Church, as he is her head, for Nebuchadnezzar a great and glorious King was ſet forth by an Image, the head whereof was of gold, to ſhew his excellency above the Kings that reigned after him. The words here uſed ſignifie both fineneſſe, and firmeneſſe, and ſo his head of ſuch gold ſheweth not only his excellent government, but alſo the firmeneſſe and ſtability of his Kingdome. By his haires curled and blacke, he is ſet forth as young, and vigorous, full of ſtrength and ſpirit, to overcome his enemies; as his white haires, Revel. 1. ſet forth his antiquity, gravity, and wiſdome; for blacke haire, and curled, ſhew one ſtrong, and full of vitall heat; and white haires one ancient, in whom is wiſdome; in divers reſpects then his haires are ſaid ſometime to be white, ſometime blacke; ſo God is ſaid ſometime to dwell in the Light unacceſſible, and ſometime in darke and blacke Clouds, becauſe that although he be of bright ſhining glory in heaven, yet to us upon earth he is covered with a blacke Cloud, that we cannot heare, ſee, or know him as he is; and this I take to be the beſt, but let the Reader judge, and follow which he pleaſeth. 1 Tim. 6. 16. 2 Chron. 6.

His eyes are like Doves eyes by the rivers of water, waſhed with milke, and fitly ſet. By Chriſts eyes, Gregory underſtandeth here his Miniſters, who in godly ſimplicity ſee into the myſticall things of the Scriptures, for themſelves and others, and therefore they are ſaid to be by the waters, as Doves uſe to be, that they may therein ſee by the ſhadowes of Birds flying over, when ſuch are coming, as Hawkes that ſeeke to devoure them, that by diving into the water they may eſcape them; for even ſo, they being alwayes converſant in the Holy Scriptures, hereby ſee the danger coming by Satans temptations, and by meanes hereof ſhelter themſelves, and are preſerved from the evil of all temptations, becauſe that hereby they know what is to be eſchewed, and accordingly avoyd the ſame. For the laſt words of the verſe, he hath it. Et reddent juxta fluenta pleniſſima, And they ſhall render beſides, or nigh to moſt full flouds. Ainſworth, ſitting in fulneſſe, Hebr. ſitting upon, or above fulneſſe. A further deſcription, ſaith Gregory, of the Scriptures, which are moſt full and perfect, to direct in all things, yea in the leaſt matters what to avoyd, and which to hold and doe, that the ſoule may be out of the danger of the Devil, and of all Seducers. Whence note, that then the Canonicall Scriptures alone were held to be all-ſufficient, and that there was no need of Apochryphals, or mens traditions, to direct in matters of faith, or of good manners. Verſ. 12. Gregor. Note.

Ainſworth by theſe Doves eyes underſtandeth Chriſts pure eyes, that looke not at any iniquity to beare with it, but at vertue in his faithfull people, to approve and reward it, and to keep inviolable his Marriage Covenant made with them for ever: So the Church was ſaid before to have Doves eyes alſo, Chap. 1. 15. 4. 1. By the rivers of water; In theſe words he only proſecuteth the Allegory, becauſe Doves love to ſit by waters, and white waters like milke, wherein they waſh themſelves from all filth, and in full waters, in which they moſt delight; or hereby is ſhewed, eyes filling their holes, not ſunke in their heads, as the eyes of ſome are which are decaying. Ainſw.

Junius alſo ſaith, As pearles ſet in gold Rings, and the waſhing with Milke ſetteth forth his ſhining whiteneſſe, as of the white Dove. Juſtus Orgelitanus following Gregory in the former words, by the laſt, beſides, or amongſt the moſt full flouds, underſtandeth the plentifull gifts of the Holy Ghoſt. And indeed they are not Chriſts eyes which are here commended, but the waters of the rivers filling Junius. Juſtus Orgel.

filling the bankes; and therefore herein I ſubſcribe to Juſtus, the full ſtreame of graces in Chriſt are meant, of whoſe fulneſſe we all receive. But whereas Gregory and he will have his Miniſters meant here, I preferre Ainſworth, becauſe his Miniſters, as was ſhewed before, were the eyes of the Church, which is not here deſcribed in any part but this; and for his being by the rivers of water, I underſtand his preſence, and providence over his Word, and Church, conſiſting of many peoples, who are likened to waters, over whom the great Whore uſurpeth authority; and he is ſaid to waſh his eyes in milke, to denote further the purity thereof, becauſe milke is white, and that which is pure is commonly ſet forth by the word white.

Revel. 17.

Verſ. 13. His cheeks are as a bed of ſpices, as ſweet flowers, his lips like Lillies dropping ſweet-ſmelling myrrhe. Here Gregory again underſtandeth Chriſts Miniſters, as before upon chap. 4. but not rightly, for thus the Spouſe and the Husband ſhould be confounded together; by his cheekes therefore with others, the ruddy comlineſſe of Chriſt like a bed of ſweet Spices is ſet forth, giving a moſt ſweet ſmell to ſuch as come neare unto him; and by his white lips, as his milkey eyes before ſpoken of, the perfection of his comlineſſe, in alluding to the white and red before mentioned, verſe 10. only we are by the ſweet ſpices and flowers, and myrrhe, here further ſpoken of given to underſtand, that as he is moſt comly and amiable, ſo he is moſt odoriferous to draw us unto him, and for the ſame reaſon his mouth is alſo ſaid to be moſt ſweet, verſe 16. his cheekes and lips thus compared ſetting forth his ſweetneſſe to the ſmell, and amiableneſſe to the ſight, to all that by faith looke upon him; and his mouth, his ſweetneſſe to the eare in the gracious and comfortable words that flow there-from. For his ſweetneſſe in ſmell, ſee 2 Cor. 2. 15. Pſal. 19 8. and to the ſight, Revel. 1. and to the eare, Joh. 7. 37.

Ainſworth.

Cald. Paraph. The Chald. Paraphraſe by his head, underſtands the Law, by his haires, the interpretation thereof, which is blacke to Tranſgreſſours, by his eyes, Gods providence, and ſeeing for the good of his Church, providing her Teachers, Counſellours. &c. and by his cheekes, the two Tables of the Law; but ſuch interpretations are only illuſions to draw the Reader from Chriſt.

Verſ. 14. Gregor. His hands are as gold rings ſet with Berill, his belly as bright Ivorie, overlaid with Saphires. By his hands, ſaith Gregory, Chriſts workes are to be underſtood, whereby they were adorned all with gold rings, ſet with precious ſtones, and ſo ſhall all theirs be that follow him in the kingdome of Heaven; by his belly his Mortality, yet turned into immortality, when he roſe againe from the Dead; for which it is ſaid to be as bright Ivorie, which is durable, and of very long continuance, and by his being over-laid here with Saphirs, his bright ſhining glory in Heaven; like unto whom, who ſo riſeth from ſinne to righteouſneſſe, ſhall have bodies ſhining in glory alſo.

Ainſworth. The Hebrew word for belly is מעיו his bowels, ſetting forth his compaſſion over his people; this, ſaith Ainſworth, ſhineth like Ivorie over-laid with Saphirs, which be of an heavenly colour; this I preferre, becauſe I ſee no ſuch good reaſon of taking it otherwiſe; but thus taken, it aptly followeth after hands doing good, to ſpeake of bowels moving hereunto, and of Chriſt having compaſſion upon the hungry in the Wilderneſſe, it is ſpoken, Mat. 14. 14.

Verſ. 15. Gregor. His leggs are as pillars of marble, ſet upon ſockets of fine gold, his countenance as Lebanon, excellent as the Cedars. Gregory by leggs or thighes here underſtands the Apoſtles ſayings to be as pillars of Marble; That is, firme and ſtable, ſtanding upon ſockets of gold; That is the Prophets and their writings, which are moſt precious, and to be made great account of for their ſure words, as St. Peter calleth them, ſaying, Yee have a ſure word of propheſie; and according to this Peter, James, and John are ſaid to be pillars. And to Lebanon, an high and white Mountaine he is compared, becauſe he is the ſtone cut out of a Mountaine, of which Daniel ſpeaketh, filling the whole earth, and white through his perfect purity.

And he is ſaid alſo to be excellent as the Cedars, Hebr. elect as the Cedars, which if a man would chooſe from amongſt all the trees in Lebanon, are above them above them all to be choſen for their tall ſtature, being above them, and for their ſweet ſmell, and incorruptibility, for ſo Chriſt is in ſtature more tall then all other men. for he is above both men and Angels; all this is by others alſo aſſented to, but only they underſtand not by his legges his Apoſtles, becauſe that although the Church be founded, and ſtands upon them, as upon pillars, and ſo is the ground and pillar of truth, yet it is improper to call them leggs, as pillars upon. and by which Chriſt is borne up, for he is of himſelfe moſt ſtrong, and ſo ſtands firme againſt all oppugners; unleſſe we ſhall ſay, that by their teaching and writings he is borne up in all places, when his truth is by them firmely upheld in all places, where the Goſpel is imbraced. Ephes. 2. 26. 1 Tim. 3. 15.

His mouth is moſt ſweet, he is altogether lovely, this is my beloved (O yee daughters of Jeruſalem.) By his mouth or throat, ſaith Gregory, underſtand his Teſtament, wherein he ſpeakes moſt ſweetly to every beleeving ſoule: and having ſaid all this in the praiſe of Chriſt, ſhe turneth againe to the daughters of Jeruſalem, by whom probably the Jewes are meant, who ſhall finally be converted, and ſeekes to allure them unto him, as who would not be, conſidering all his excellencies; and to ſhew what effect this her commendation ſhall one day take in the hearts of the Jewes, who ſhall likewiſe be raviſhed with his love, and ſeeke unto him, they reply, Chapter 6. 1. which Hebr. and in the vulgar is added to this Chapter. Verſ. 16. Gregor.

Whither is thy beloved gone (O faireſt among women) whither is thy beloved turned aſide, that we may ſeeke him with thee? And therefore although before upon verſe 8, 9. the Daughters of Jeruſalem have been expounded, as ſetting forth the Watch-men ſpoken of before that, yet upon further conſideration underſtand we the Jewes by them, who ſhall finally be converted, and the Spouſe praiſing Chriſt unto them, is the preſent Church of the Gentiles, which ſhall be a meanes at length by her high commendations of Chriſt, to move the hearts of the Jewes to turne unto him: yet this is by the ſame Gregory alſo underſtood of one Neighbour ſpeaking to another of Chriſt, and the love of him being wrought in their hearts by hearing ſo much from others, who are already in him, they reſolve to ſeeke after him alſo. Verſ. 17.

Ainſworth underſtanding all that went before to be ſpoken by the preaching of the Word, noteth here what the power of the Word preached is; hereby ſuch as are elect, but yet unconverted, are brought for the love of Chriſt, that is ſo amiable, to be converted to the ſeeking of him; we may take it either way, both as ſetting this forth, whereby one Neighbour and friend ſhould be ſtirred up, having found the ſweetneſſe of Chriſt, to be ſpeaking hereof from time to time to one another, and alſo the future complying of the Jewes with Chriſtians, in ſeeking Chriſt together, that Chriſtians not deſpairing of their converſion may by all meanes ſeeke to allure, and win them to him. Note.

CHAP. VI.

MY beloved is gone downe into his garden to the beds of ſpices to feed in the garden, and to gather Lillies. This, as Ainſworth well ſaith, ſeemeth to be ſpoken ſometime after that which went before, when the faithfull ſoule after diſcomfort, and being at a loſſe for her former negligence, had obtained ſome glimps of his love and favour againe? for what is his Garden but ſhe her ſelfe, as was ſet forth before, chap. 5. His coming then into his Garden, was his coming into her heart by Divine conſolations, where-with ſhe is now fed againe, and the ſweet odour of her ſpices, that is, Graces are a feeding to him, becauſe he taketh as much delight in them, as a man in moſt delicious meat. For his gathering of Lillies, Gregory expounds it of ſoules, unto him white like Lillies, when the time by him appointed of their departure out of this life is come. Verſ. 1. Ainſw. Gregor.

I am my beloveds, and my beloved is mine, he feedeth amongſt the Lillies. Verſ. 3.

The Spouſe being exceedingly affected with joy for her deare Husbands coming againe unto her, as hath been ſaid, now exulteth thus; Now I am ſure that he accepteth me for his, and hath made himſelfe mine; for in his Church, conſiſting of Beleevers, white through his bloud, and by innocency of life he feedeth; That is, delighteth to be, and feedeth them with delights and joyes unſpeakeable. See a ſpeech not unlike to this, Joh. 17. 10. Thine are mine, and mine are thine; and all before this, chap. 2. 16. the very ſame.

Verſ. 4. The ſeventh ſpeech of the Bride-groom. 1 King. 14. chap. 15, & 16 Joſh. 12. 14. Gregor.

Thou art beautifull my beloved as Tirzah, comely as Jeruſalem, and terrible as an Army with banners; the vulgar for theſe words, as Tirzah, comely as Jeruſalem, hath Suavis & decora ut Jeruſalem, taking Tirzah, which ſignifieth gratefull, for an apellative; but there was ſuch a City, a very delightfull place, and therefore the Kings of Iſrael dwelt there, and before that one of the Kings of Canaan.

Here Chriſt commendeth, as Gregory thinketh, the Church of the Jewes newly converted, as he had done the Church of the Gentiles before, chap. 4. for it is not probable that he would otherwiſe have repeated the ſame againe of her haire, teeth, and temples, as he doth, ver. 5, 6, 7. of the meaning of which ſee chap. 4. But I have expounded that of the Jewes, and the ſame is ſaid over againe here with ſome inlargement, to ſet her forth the more, and her continuing in the ſame eſtate.

Paſl. 4. 2, 3.

As Tirzah, ſo Jeruſalem much more was a faire place, and ſaid to be the joy of the whole earth, and Revel. 22. the Church is ſet forth in her greateſt glory, as new Jeruſalem; now Jeruſalem ſignifieth ſeeing peace, therefore this Church being compared to Jeruſalem is hereby intimated to be at unity in her ſelfe, and being thus, is ſaid to be terrible as an Army well ordered, the Banners whereof, and Souldiers about them ſtand each one in their proper places, and by this meanes are ſo ſtrong, that they are terrible to their enemies, being both ready for defence and offence; whereas when diſcord is in an Army, they are eaſily oppreſſed by their enemies; which ſheweth both the great indecorum of this our Church of England, and the great advantage given to our enemies, by the ſchiſmes and diviſions that are amongſt us at this day. Turne thine eyes from me. Jun. turne thy eyes over againſt me, as if it were meant, marke me; but Juſtus Orgel. better, turne them from me in the fleſh, living with thee, for I ſhall ſoone depart herewith from thee, as Joh. 16. 16. for they have prevailed over me; Junius, ut illi efferantur; that is, I may have comfort of thee being led by faith, not by ſence, to be left in me when I am gone.

There are ſixty Queenes, and eighty Concubines, and Virgins without number. My Dove, my undefiled is but one, ſhe is the onely one of her Mother, the choyce one of her that bare her, the daughters ſaw her, and they bleſſed her, yea, the Queenes, and the Concubines, and they praiſed her. Here by Queenes Gregory underſtandeth faithfull ſoules, in whom ſinne reigneth not, as it is ſaid, Let not ſinne reigne in your mortall bodies; but they by the power of the Spirit ſubdue, and ſlay them, as a mighty King his enemies, and therefore Queenes they are well called, which doe the like when they reigne. For this Saint Peter ſaith to the faithfull, Yee are a royall Prieſthood. And they are ſaid to be ſixty, becauſe of their keeping the Commandements, which are Ten, every day of the weeke appointed for labour, and theſe being ſix, if ten be multiplied, hereby they amount to ſixty, and theſe make this their labour all theſe dayes, to mortifie their ſinnes. For the eighty Concubines, they are Hypocrites, who likewiſe teach the Commandements, and ſeeme to be wives alſo for their thus doing, and for their preaching of the Reſurrection of Chriſt, and faith in him, but they are not Queenes rejoycing over, and ſubduing ſinne in themſelves, but live in ſinne, as the Phariſees, againſt whoſe workes Chriſt gave his Diſciples warning; The Scribes and Phariſees ſit in Moſes's chaire, all therefore that they bid you, doe, but after their workes doe not, for they ſay and doe not. Now theſe are ſaid to be eighty, becauſe of the ten Commandements to which they ſeeme to adhere, and of the Reſurrection of Chriſt upon the eighth day, which they preach, for ten being multiplied by eight, make eighty. For the Virgins without number, hereby are ſet forth ſuch as come come into the Church at the preaching of the word, but continue void of true grace, and are none of the elect, who are all numbred, but theſe are without number, they few, a little flocke, the few that finde the narrow way that leadeth to life.

Having thus ſhewed the caſe of Chriſts viſible Church, now hee cometh to verſ.9. to ſhew, that the ſixty before ſpoken of for their agreeing in one faith, and the grace of ſanctification, are one moſt bleſſed Spouſe of Chriſt, whom all, both Daughters, Queens, and Concubines bleſſe and praiſe. Thus Gregory; but for his way of numbring to ſixty and eighty, there is no ſolidity in that: Rather I thinke with Ainſworth, that this number of Queens and Concubines is ſpoken of, a certaine number being put for uncertaine; and however as Junius hath it, there bee very many Queenes and Concubines in the world, and faire Maidens that attend them; yet thou, my Spouſe, art the onely one of thy Mother the viſible Church, whom all ſhall call Bleſſed. Or herein the Virgin Mary may bee propheſied of, whom the Angel called Bleſſed among women, and whom all, both Queens, Concubines, and Maidens that imbrace the faith of Chriſt, call bleſſed, and praiſe, though not pray unto, for the incomparable favour of God done unto her, making her the Mother that bare and brought forth his onely Son of the number of ſixty; ſee Chap.3.7. Ainſworth conjectureth, that herein it might bee alluded to the number of Wives and Concubines that Salomon had, before that hee increaſed them to ſeven hundred and three hundred, or the number of the Nations may bee alluded to; yet in his varying of the words from Wives to Concubines, I deny not but that may bee meant which Gregory hereupon ſpeaketh of, the diverſity of thoſe that are in the viſible Church.

Ainſworth. Junius.

Who is ſhee that looketh forth as the morning, faire as the Moone, cleare as the Sunne, terrible as an Army with banners? Here Chriſt goeth on to praiſe the onely One before ſpoken of by this, that ſhee looketh forth as the morning; that is, ſheweth as a light morning after the darke night, as it was in the time that the vaile was before the Jewes eyes, that they could not ſee into the end of the Law, that is, before their converſion, for hee is to bee underſtood as ſpeaking ſtill of that Church. Now ſhe is ſaid to looke forth as the morning, being at the firſt faire as the Moone, which giveth light in the night ſeaſon, becauſe ſuch of the Nations as before this, and at this time being in the night of errour and ignorance, by her example begins to ſee, and to be moved to come to Chriſt; But ſhee is alſo cleare as the Sunne, giving light alſo to thoſe, that before were children of the day, as the godly, faithfull are called, 1 Theſ 5.5. Of her terribleneſſe as an Army, enough hath been ſaid already. Ainſworth underſtands all the Church in generall, the glory whereof increaſeth by degrees, being firſt as the light morning. 2. As the Moone ſhining. 3. As the Sunne, but then the light of the Moone is as the light of the Sunne, and the light of the Sunne ſevenfold, as the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh.

Eſa.30.26.

I went downe into the Garden of Nuts to ſee the fruits of the valley, and to ſee whether the Vine flouriſhed, and the Pomegranates budded. The Garden of Nuts, ſaith Gregory, are the hearts of the perfect, wherein much ſweet grace and divine knowledge lyeth hid under the outſide of a fraile body, of which the Apoſtle ſaith, We have this treaſure in earthen veſſels, as under the Nutſhell is the ſweet kerneil, but becauſe this grace in them is not ſeen to men, they account them but vile and deſpicable as others. But what meaneth hee to ſay after theſe words, To ſee my Apples, for ſo he rendreth theſe words, to ſee my fruits, it ſeemeth improper after that he had ſaid, I went into my garden of Nuts, to ſay, to ſee the apples of the valleys; but he ſaith, it is not meant to viſite theſe Apples onely, but the Nuts being firſt viſited, that is, the perfect, and then by them others to whom they are propounded as paterns, and over whom they are ſet to ſee unto them. But all this labour might have been ſpared, for the word ſignifieth fruits in generall, and ſo it is rendred by others, and theſe even Nuts are, from whence this Garden is demonſtrated; Ainſworth will have Nutmegs meant.

But why are theſe fruits ſaid to be the fruits of the valleys?

Sol.

Sol. To intimate the humility of the moſt excellent amongſt the faithfull, who are as fruitfull Trees growing in vallies, to which waters deſcend; whereas the proud are as withering ſhrubs upon high hills, which no raine, or waters of brookes flowing in can make to flouriſh; wherefore to the humble God ſaith, That hee is neare, but hee lookes upon the proud afarre off.

Eſa.66.2. Jam.4.6.

To ſee whether the Vine flouriſhed, and the Pomegranates budded; that is, whether new children were daily borne in the Church, and what the care of the perfect was to winne others to Chriſt by going before them in a good example, and zealous preaching. Thus Gregory and the Chaldee Paraphraſe expoundeth it of the wiſe men in Iſrael, and the plenty of good workes by them brought forth, as the Pomegranates are full of ſweet juice and kernels. Hereby is ſhewed, that fruitfulneſſe is by the Lord expected in his Church, and that the faithfull ſhould not onely believe in him, but doe good workes, as the Vine beareth good fruit, and be knit together in love, as the kernels in Pomegranates are, to ſtirre us up thus to doe; for if contrariwiſe wee bring forth ſowre grapes, as the Vine ſo carefully planted, *Eſa.*5. wee ſhall bee in danger of being expoſed to all miſery, the fence of his providence being pulled down from about us; and likewiſe if there be ſtrife and diſſention amongſt us.

Verſ. 12. Gregor.

Or ever I was awake my ſoule made mee like the Chariots of Aminadab; the Vulgar, I knew not, my ſoule troubled mee for the Chariots of Aminadab; and this agreeth beſt with the Hebrew, and is thus expounded by Gregory. I, the Synagogue of the Jewes remained long in ignorance and blindneſſe, not being moved to imbrace the knowledge and faith of Chriſt; but at length I conſidered the Qudraigas, or Chariots drawne by foure horſes; that is, the holy Goſpels, which are foure, and theſe I may well call the Chariots of a willing people, as the word עמי נדב ſignifieth, becauſe other peoples of the Nations ſo willingly imbraced them, and ſo were carried to Chriſt, I remaining all this time in my blindneſſe, for which I am now in my ſoule troubled. Juſtus Orgel. underſtandeth Chriſt ſpeaking here, who in ſaying, I knew not, meaneth, I knew no ſinne, neither will I know the wicked at the laſt day, but ſay unto them, Depart yee workers of iniquity, I know you not; but he ſaith, My ſoule was troubled for the Chariots of Aminadab; that is, I was ſollicitous for people carried in the foure Goſpels to beleeve in mee, as in the Chariot of Aminadab; theſe bookes being ſo called, becauſe Aminadab is there named in his Genealogy both by Matthew and Luke. Ainſworth rendreth it as the Vulgar, I knew not, and my ſoule put me the Chariots of a willing people; word for word according to the Hebrew, expounding it as the ſpeech of Chriſt, who in ſaying, I knew not, ſpeaketh after the manner of men as God ſometime doth, although nothing be unknowne to him; as when he ſaid touching Sodome, I will goe downe to ſee, whether it bee ſo or not. In like manner Chriſt here touching the Jewes hardening their hearts againſt him, he ſaith, I knew it not, or I could not have thought it; and the words Ammi Nadib are two, not one, a proper name, and they ſignifie a people willing, or noble, or Princely; Chriſtians firſt imbracing the faith, being called thus for their excellency above others, as thoſe of Berea are ſaid to be more noble, and a free-will offering; where it is ſaid, Thy people ſhall be willing in the day of thy power.

Act.17.11. Pſ.110.3.

Touching the Chariots here ſpoken of next after theſe words, My ſoule ſet me, he ſaith, it is meant, I earneſtly ſet mee to bring me in a people with all ſpeed, as upon Chariots, according to which Iſaiah ſaith, I will bring them upon horſes and Chariots, an offering to the Lord. Junius rendring it, My minde ſet mee not perceiving theſe things in the Chariots of my ingenuous, or free people, expounds it alſo of Chriſt, who when he found not fruit in his garden, made haſte to his Church, as being carried in a Chariot of a willing people. I hold with thoſe that expound this of Chriſt, not of the Spouſe, and that theſe words cohere with thoſe before going, *verſ.*11. where the Lord ſaying, That he went into his Garden to ſee for fruit, meaneth the Jewiſh Synagogue, to which he came in his Incarnation, and to which he firſt preached, expecting the fruit of their converſion to the faith. But now he ſaith, that hee knew not, that is, found them not yet to bee the people people which he expected; That is, ready to receive the glad tidings of Salvation through faith in him; but contrariwise unbeleeving, and wicked, and ſo ſuch as he knew not, that is, accepted not of; whereupon he ſet himſelfe, as it were, upon the chariots of a willing people; That is, leaving the Jewes, he went in the Goſpel of the foure Evangeliſts, who were willing with this Office amongſt the Gentiles, being ſwiftly by them carried, as in a Chariot, by his Apoſtles, who taught the things in them contained, all over the world.

Returne, returne (O Shulamite) returne, returne, that we may looke upon thee; what will yee ſee in the Shulamite, as the company of two armies? This Gregory ſaith, is the voyce of the Church to the Synagogue of the Jewes, inviting her to turne to Chriſt, and intimating her returne towards the end of the world; and ſhe is called Shulamite, ſignifying Captive, becauſe that all the time of her infidelity ſhe was carried, and held Captive in ſinne by the Devil; and the word Returne, is repeated foure times, to ſhew the diſperſion of the Jewes in the foure parts of the world. Verſ. 13. Gregor.

The next words, he ſaith, are the words of Chriſt to the Church, deſiring the Jewes converſion; what ſhall yee ſee in this Shulamite, when ſhe is converted? and he anſwereth himſelfe, as it were, two whole Armies of Jewes, and Iſraelites, ready to fight for Chriſt, as before they perſecuted him; and this he ſpeakes congratulating, or rejoycing together with his Church for her converſion. But whereas he ſaith, that the word Shulamite ſignifieth captived, it ſignifieth peaceable, or perfect; ſo that in calling the Synagogue thus, he implieth, that he was now reconciled unto her, and at peace with her, the time of her converſion being now come, and by faith to make her the perfect Spouſe of Chriſt, and compleat in all parts, as followeth chapter ſeven; in her further deſcription, what more he ſaith upon this verſe I willingly imbrace. Of the foure parts ſee Pſal. 7. 3. here may alſo be underſtood many times of calling, as in the Parable, Matth. 20.

He moveth this queſtion, What ſhall yee ſee, ſaith Ainſworth, to make all men the more attentive; and he noteth, that the word מחלת rendred company, ſignifieth Chorus, a company in a dance, to expreſſe the great joy that ſhall be at the Jewes converſion; they ſhall be all Armies rejoycing, and expreſſing their joy by dancing, and ſinging in two companies of Angels and men, after a notable victory; but I thinke rather, as Moſes and Miriam with one company of men, and another of women, dancing after the Hoaſt of Pharaoh vanquiſhed, and drowned in the red ſea. Ainſworth. Exod. 15.

CHAP. VII.

How beautifull are thy feet with ſhooes (O Princes daughter) the joynts of thy thighes are like jewels, the worke of the hands of a cunning Workeman. Chriſt having before praiſed his Spouſe, the Church of the Gentiles, and then of the Jewes converted, ſeverally, now he praiſeth them being joyned together, and making one glorious Church, which is intimated in his ſaying, the joynts of thy thighes; or we may take that ſpoken of her, chap. 6. of both together; and here he further inlargeth himſelfe, in praiſing the Jewes and Gentiles thus united. He calleth her the Princes Daughter, as ſhe is called the Kings Daughter, Pſal. 45. That is, the daughter of God, the great King of all the World; and her feet are ſaid to be beautifull with ſhooes, becauſe that by Chriſts example, who ſuffered death for her, ſhe is ſo fenced in her going in the way of Chriſtianity, as one that hath good ſhooes on his feet, that he feareth not in his going the pricking of Thornes, or the tearing of ſharp Stones in the way, as he that goeth with bare feet. According to this Saint Paul ſaith, Having your feet ſhod with the preparation of the Goſpel of peace; and of Chriſtian Preachers it is ſaid, How beautifull are the feet of thoſe that bring glad tidings of peace. Verſ. 1. Epheſ. 6. 15. Rom. 10. 15.

Ainſworth takes this as ſpoken by ſome friends of the Spouſe, and not by Chriſt, Chriſt, and ſo doe ſome others, becauſe the King is ſpoken of, verſe 5. as being in his Gallery; but it is not unuſuall for one to ſpeake of himſelfe in the third perſon, therefore this is no argument to prove it; let us then take it for Chriſts ſpeech, eſpecially there being none other friends upon earth to the Spouſe, but the Spouſe her ſelfe, conſiſting of Gentiles and Jewes; and it is improper for any woman to praiſe her ſelfe, therefore it is her Husband that praiſeth her, being by the converſion of the Jewes made one; and he proceedeth not either as he did, chap. 4. or chap. 6. but he beginneth at her feet, and ſo aſcendeth through her other parts to her head, becauſe he had ſpoken of her returning, which is done with our feet, ſhe having gone before in the way of infidelity, and diſobedience to Chriſt; now ſhe returneth by the way of faith and obedience; and moſt beautifull, and moſt gloriouſly ſhod are their feet, that doe ſo; and becauſe upon our feet we ſtand, and having ſhooes on, firmly, and confidently, her feet are ſaid to be beautifull with ſhooes, therefore hereby may be intimated, the conſtant perſeverance of the Church in the true faith unto the end, after that the Jewes ſhall be converted, and the great boldneſſe and courage of Chriſtians againſt the enemies of the Goſpel.

Againe, becauſe having ſpoken of her ſhooes, where-with her feet were beautified, he now calleth her, Princes daughter, it is not amiſſe gathered, that her being ſo well ſhod argueth her nobility; as contrariwiſe, to goe bare-footed argueth baſeneſſe; ſo it is ſaid, Eſa. 20. 4. to ſhew to what a low eſtate they ſhould be brought for their ſinnes, that they ſhould goe bare-footed: but Ezek. 16. 10. when the Prophet would ſet forth, how they were honoured of God, he ſaith, I ſhod thee with Badgers skinnes. They then that are ſtedfaſt, and unmoveable from the truth, are as Princes Children, of beautifull and glorious feet; but the mutable, who are turned about in any point of truth, as a Weather-cock with every blaſt of Doctrine, are ignoble, and the baſe bond-men of ſinne and Satan. For the perſon ſpeaking here, may it not be the Pen-man of this Song, Salomon, who having ſet forth the praiſes of the Church before, breakes out by the Spirit, and interpoſeth theſe words to her further commendations, to verſe 7. Chriſt then beginning againe, verſ. 8? let the judicious Reader conſider and judge.

Note.

Ainſworth noteth, that the word put here for joynts is uſed only in this place, and that it ſeemeth to ſet forth the round joynt bone in the hollow of the thigh, whereupon it turneth, and that hereby is meant the comely and decent going of the faithfull, which is, when they are of a laudable converſation in their doings, words, and workes. I preferre the allegory of Gregory by theſe two thighs joyned together, where they meet towards the belly, underſtanding two peoples, Jewes and Gentiles, ſpoken of, and praiſed here together; becauſe I ſee no reaſon why the Church of the Gentiles being before praiſed apart by her members, chap. 4. and the Church of the Jewes apart, chap. 6. ſuch praiſes ſhould be repeated againe, and that by ſuch members, ſome of which were not ſpoken of before, unleſſe it be in regard of the preſent conjunction betwixt theſe two, making one more glorious Spouſe then ever before.

Gregor.

Verſ. 2. Gregor.

Thy mouth is like a round Goblet, that wanteth not liquor, thy belly like an heap of wheat, ſet about with Lillies. By the Navell Gregory underſtandeth the Preacher, who is compared to a turneable Goblet, as he rendreth it, becauſe he having to doe with divers men, muſt turne himſelfe in his tongue, that he may ſpeake fitly to them; and he is a Goblet, or great Bowle full of liquor, becauſe he is full of Spirituall wine, to inebriate and fill the Hearers, to the making of their hearts to rejoyce; and yet he himſelfe is ſaid to want no liquor, becauſe he holdeth in his owne heart that which he giveth others to drinke.

And like the belly, which is compared to an heap of wheat, are the people, becauſe that by their good workes they are prepared to be brought into the Garner of Heaven; and they are ſet about with Lillies, becauſe compaſſed about with holy examples of the Worthies recorded in Scripture, whereby they are ſtirred up to live, and doe ſo, as that they are not Tares to be burnt, but Wheat to be gathered into the Garner at the laſt day. For by Lillies, as hath been ſhewed before, the moſt excellent of Gods ſervants may well be ſet forth for their whiteneſſe, and

ſpotleſneſſe in regard of ſinne, as the Church was ſaid before to be without ſpot.

Juſtus Orgel. becauſe the Navell is in the midſt of the body, hereby underſtands ſuch as are vertuous, becauſe vertue is in the midſt; and becauſe that the holy Scriptures, and continuall exerciſing of a mans ſelfe herein, are a meanes of attaining this grace, they are ſaid not to be without liquor, becauſe that hereby they are filled with living water: and they are turnable, in reſpect of their ready obedience to God in every thing; and becauſe that by this meanes they have that within them where-with others may be fed and ſuſtained, they are likened to a belly, as an heap of wheat. Juſtus Orgel.

But Ainſworth herein beſt of all; The Church is likened to a Mother, that firſt nouriſheth her Childe by her Navell, which wanteth no liquor fit for nouriſhment, becauſe ſhe is full of Wine, and Milke, and in her belly her young lye and grow as wheat in the field till the Harveſt, when it is cut downe and laid upon a Stack, for which it is ſaid to be as an heap of wheat: and becauſe a Stack being thus made, a fence uſed to be made about it, Lillies are ſaid to be ſet about this heap; That is, the Children of the Church are fenced with innocency, and blameleſneſſe of life, whereby through the guidance of the Spirit they are kept from the ſpots of ſinne, where-with the wicked of the world are defiled. Thus he; although not altogether in theſe words, but in this ſence, wherein the ſame is ſaid in effect with that of Gregory, touching the Goblet, expounded of Preachers, becauſe that in further declaring how the Church nouriſheth her young in her wombe, as a Mother, he ſaith, that Paul according to this ſpeakes of himſelfe as Mother, ſaying, My little Children, of whom I travell againe in birth, till Chriſt be formed in you. And for that of her belly, there is in his expoſition little difference from this. Ainſworth. Gal. 4. 19.

Thy breaſts are like two young Roes, that are twins. Having ſhewed the ſtate of the Children of the Church, being but yet conceived, and lying in the wombe, and brought newly forth; as wheat being ripe is taken and laid upon a Stacke, or heap, now he ſheweth how theſe her Children are alwayes nouriſhed after, as long as they live in this world, viz. by her two Breaſts; That is, as hath been before ſhewed upon chap. 4. 5, the ſincere milke of pure Doctrine, out of the two Teſtaments, which are as twins, becauſe both alike; and who ſo takes away one of them, as the Antinomians of old did the Old Teſtament, holding only the New, they rob the Children of God of one of their Breaſts; and they that having ſuckt theſe Breaſts formerly, through the Miniſtry opening them unto them, but now either fall immediatly to them, deſpiſing the help of the Miniſtry, or pretending new revelations from God, ſlight them, inſtead of Milke ſucke poyſon, to the deſtruction of their ſoules. And thus Juſtus Orgel. underſtands theſe two breaſts; but others not ſo aptly, two peoples, Jewes and Gentiles, becauſe Breaſts are ſuch things, as whereby Children are nouriſhed, and not the Children themſelves; wherefore that Church, which holdeth forth both theſe, and theſe only, is the true Spouſe of Chriſt, all others being but Strumpets, and to be taken heed of. Verſ. 3. Verſ. 4.

Thy neck is as a tower of Ivorie, thy eyes as the Fiſh-ponds of Heſhbon, by the gates of Bethrabbim, thy noſe as the tower of Lebanon, which lookes towards Damaſcus. Of the Spouſes necke like a tower, ſee before, chap. 4. 4. but as there it is ſaid to be the Tower of David, ſo here a tower of Ivorie, thereby her ſtrength being ſet forth, here her bright, and white ſhining, through holineſſe and purity of Doctrine and life. Her eyes called alſo Doves eyes, chap. 4. 1. are here likened to Fiſh-ponds of Heſhbon; That is, Fiſh-ponds artificially made; for the word ſignifieth device, or cogitation, implying ſtudy and invention in the making hereof, ſo as that they might be an ornament to the Land, as well as a bleſſing, as Pools, or Ponds were in that hot Country. Heſhbon was a fruitfull Country, where Sihon dwelt, it was the Lot of the Reubenites; to the Ponds here the Spouſes eyes are compared, for their clearneſſe, ſo that as in cleare waters things are ſeene, as in a Glaſſe, ſo in the Ponds of the Church, that is, the holy Scriptures; for hereby a man may ſee his face as in a Glaſſe, to waſh away the blemiſhes hereof, Numb. 21. chap. 31. Jam. 1.

and theſe are artificially made by the greateſt Artiſt in the world, even by the invention of the Spirit of God; and they are likened to Fiſh-ponds, becauſe that men being taken by the preaching of the Word are here put, when they are required to meditate hereupon, and to keep in all things within the compaſſe hereof; and men, as Chriſt hath taught us, are as Fiſhes, where he ſaith to his Apoſtles, I will make you fiſhers of men.

Gregor. Ainſworth. Some will have the ſimilitude to ſtand in the faithfulls weeping abundantly, upon the conſideration of their ſinnes, as Gregory; but Ainſworth is either for this, or the other, by the gates of Beth Rabbim; that is, being interpreted, the houſe of many; That is, theſe Ponds are ſo placed, as that they are not ſhut up from the multitude, but many, yea even all that will, may have them in their private houſes, and read them, and hereby ſee themſelves, as was ſaid before, to reforme what is amiſſe, and to be confirmed in that which is good. Thy noſe as the tower of Lebanon, that lookes towards Damaſcus; the Noſe is the organ of the ſence of ſmelling, whereby a man diſtinguiſheth between ſweet and ſtinking, the diſcerning faculty of the Church is hereby ſet forth, betwixt Apoſtolicall Doctrine, which is commended as a ſweet odour to God in every place, and the ſtinking ſmell of the Apoſtaticall, who going from the truth, teach their owne erroneous imaginations: and when the faithful doe thus, they are as the ſtrong Tower of Lebanon, on the North parts of the Land towards Damaſcus, the head City of Syria, a Country of enemies to Gods people, as the holy Hiſtory ſheweth; That is, they ſtand ſtoutly to the maintaining of the Truth, as Souldiers, in a ſtrong tower againſt Spirituall enemies, ſet forth by Damaſcus, and the Syrians inhabiting there, which had the name from Bloud, for ſo דם ſignifieth; the wicked, whether Satan, or his inſtruments being hereby denoted, whoſe hands for their wickedneſſe are ſaid by the Prophet to be full of bloud, as this City Damſeck; that is, a ſack full of bloud, in the Hebrew tongue.

2 Cor. 15.

Verſ. 5. Thine head upon thee is like Carmell, and thy haire like purple, the King is held in thy Galleries. By head upon her, here may be underſtood the tire of her head, and the word Carmel ſignifieth a ſcarlet colour, and therefore the rich attire of her head may be hereby denoted, as well as her haire, which is likened to purple, for the purple ſtrings, or ribbonds about it; for theſe were the colours which were worne by Princes, and now aſcribed to this Princes daughter, the Church. By the head underſtand the minde, by the haires the cogitations; becauſe as the haires come from the head, ſo cogitations come from the minde, and all theſe in the faithfull are royally adorned, their minde and thoughts being ſet upon nothing, but royall and glorious things, which pertaine to the kingdome of Heaven; and herein ſtandeth the chiefe part of their excellency; but to be worldly-minded is a baſeneſſe, and therefore forbidden to all that are riſen with Chriſt, ſet not your mindes on things below, but upon things above. This Gregory hath in part, but he firſt underſtandeth by her head, Chriſt, but very unaptly here, ſeeing Chriſt is here deſcribing his Church, conſidered apart from him. But Carmell is alſo the proper name of a fruitfull place, for which it is ſaid, that the Church under the Goſpel ſhould be as Carmel, Eſa. 35. 2. Jer. 50. 19. but that hath no place here. The King is held in thy Galleries; That is, Chriſt is ſo taken with the beauty of the ſoules that are ſuch, that he is held, and tyed, as by bands, by the love of them, that hee cannot goe from them; which ſeemeth to be ſpoken in alluſion to the Harlots holding of a fleſhly man, where it is ſaid, Whoſe hands are bands; the word רהטים rehatim ſignifieth as Galleries, ſo Channels, as Gen. 30. 38. or watering troughs, and therefore the vulgar renders it, joyned by the Kings Channels: but it it being thus rendred, Gregory giveth no expoſition.

Col. 3. 1. Gregor.

Prov. 7. 26.

Verſ. 7. Gregor. Thy ſtature is like a Palme-tree, thy breaſts like cluſters of Grapes. The Palme-tree, ſaith Gregory, groweth up ſlender, to a great height; ſo the Chriſtian at the firſt but little in grace, or having but a ſmall meaſure of grace and knowledge, in time aſcendeth very high, and is eminent in both. And as Cluſters of Grapes yeeld ſweet juyce, ſo ſuch a perſon, out of the two breaſts, the Love of God, and of his Neighbour.

Ainſworth

Ainſworth ſaith, that the faithfull is compared to the Palme-tree, becauſe it groweth ſtraite up, and cannot by hanging weighrs thereon be made crooked, or to bow, and it is alwayes green, and yeeldeth moſt ſweet fruit; wherefore in the Pſalmes alſo, the righteous are compared to a Palme, or Date-tree, as it may be rendred here. It is meant then, that the faithfull, whatſoever they ſuffer, cannot in their mindes be depreſſed, but ſtill they are erected and tending towards heaven, to the end of their dayes; and they beare the beſt fruites of Love, meekneſſe, humility, juſtice, beneficence, patience, &c. For her breaſts, not thinking that he had ſaid enough hereof, verſ. 3. in comparing them to twinne-rees, he here ſets them forth by another compariſon, whereby happily ſomething elſe is ſet forth, according to the Allegory of Gregory before going. Ainſworth. Pſal. 92 13.

I ſaid, I will goe up to the Palme-tree, I will take hold of the boughes thereof now, alſo thy brethren ſhall be as cluſters of the Vine, and the ſmell of thy noſe like apples. The vulgar, I will take of the fruit thereof; which Gregory expoundeth thus: I will goe up to the Croſſe, and there ſuffer, and take of the fruits of my ſufferings to give unto thee, even juſtification from all ſinne, and being made partaker of this fruit, now thy breaſts ſhall be indeed as cluſters of the Vine, yeelding pleaſant liquor for thy children to ſuck comfort from. And for the next words, the ſmell of thy noſe is like apples, he reading it, the ſmell of thy mouth, ſaith, that the ſweetneſſe of Divine teaching, which cometh from the mouth of the faithfull Teacher is hereby meant, this is like thoſe Apples that are called Pomgranats, which ſmell ſweet, and taſte ſweet being opened, as being full of pleaſant fruit: and becauſe they are covered over with a red barke, they denote the Martyrs in ſpeciall red, by the ſhedding of their bloud for Chriſt, their conſtant confeſſing of him with their mouthes to the death, giving this ſweet ſmell; and the word אף here uſed, ſignifieth either face or noſe, and therefore the mouth being part of the face may be underſtood hereby, and ſo it agreeth beſt; yet Ainſworth ſaith, that the breath coming out by the Noſe may be meant, which when it is ſweet, ſheweth that the inward parts are uncorrupt; therefore in commending the ſmell of her noſe, her inward ſoundneſſe is commended in her heart, ſhe ſpeaking, and doing all things out of an upright heart. For the word expounded by Pomgranats, it agreeth not, for they be Apples, that are here ſpoken of, by the ſame word that went before, chap. 2. 5. For his going up to the Palme-tree, as the Church was, verſe 7. hereunto compared, ſo now the tree upon which Chriſt hanged; yet ſome underſtand the ſame Church, to the top of which Chriſt aſcendeth, in going to lay hold upon the boughes, (for in a Palme-tree the boughes are altogether on the top, none on the body, and at the top of the boughes is all the fruit) his acceptation of her fruit before ſpoken of is here ſet forth, the fruites that come from her head, meditations, and utterance of words for edification, and of her breaſts the vertues and graces harboured here, which are pleaſant to God, as the fruite of the vine. Verſ. 8. Gregor. Ainſworth.

The roofe of thy mouth like the beſt wine for my beloved, that goeth downe ſweetly, cauſing the lips of thoſe that are aſleep to ſpeake; the vulgar, for the roofe of thy mouth, hath it, thy throat, worthy my beloveds drinking, and ruminating with his lips and teeth, and the word חכך ſignifieth either thy palate, or throat; and being expounded throat, Gregory expounds it of Preachers, whoſe Sermons uttered through their throat, are inebriating, and chearing the Hearers, like the beſt wine. For the next words, they are word for word according to the Hebrew, going to my beloved aright, or in rectitudes, related lips and teeth; this by Gregory is underſtood, as ſpoken by the Church touching Chriſt, he having ſaid, thy throat is as the beſt wine, replieth, going downe with pleaſure to my beloved, and meditated upon by ſuch as heare things uttered out of the throat before ſpoken of; even as cleane Beaſts chew the Cud with lips and teeth, ſuch as it is neceſſary all Chriſtians ſhould be, and not read or heare the Word only, not ruminating; for whoſo doe thus, are as uncleane beaſts, which God accepteth not of. And this doth not much differ from the Hebrew, if the laſt Verſ. 9. Gregor.

word be ושנים for שן ſignifieth a tooth, but becauſe it is ישנים ſignifying ſuch as are aſleep, the New Tranſlation is rather to be preferred, making to ſpeake the lips of thoſe that be aſleep; That is, the moſt drowſie, and at other times of little ſpeech, but now moſt talkative, being inebriated with this ſpirituall wine, that was ſaid in the words before to move aright, for ſo the words הולך לישרים may well be rendred, and this is ſpoken according to the common ſaying, Whom have not full cups made eloquent? And it is noted of the Apoſtles, when they were filled with the Spirit, that they ſpake ſo, as that their Auditours ſaid, they were full of new wine. The ſleepers here ſpoken of are ſuch, as before this wine entring into them ſlept in ſinne, who are bidden to awake, and to awake and ſing, being aſleep, or dead in ſinne, and mute in reſpect of the things of God, as all men are, before they be thus awaked, as is commonly to be ſeene in moſt; they are full of talke, when they meet about other things, but of things pertaining to godlineſſe not a word cometh from them, which argueth them all to be thus dead; although they heare Sermons, as the beſt wine moſt delightfull, yet none of them enter in, but are to them as precious liquor of the Grapes, ſpilt upon the ground.

Fœcundi calices quem non fecere diſertum. Epiſt. 5. 14. Eſa. 26. 19.

Note.

Verſ. 10. I am my beloved's, &c. A repetition of that which was ſaid before, chap. 6. 3. and ſpoken now by the Spouſe out of her joy, for her being made compleat by the calling of the Jewes, as is before ſaid.

The eighth ſpeech of the Bride.

Verſ. 11. 12. Gregor. Come (my beloved) let us goe into the field, let us tarry in the villages, let us goe up early to the vine-yards, let us ſee whether the vine flouriſheth; whether the tender grapes appeare, and the Pomgranats bud forth, there will I give thee my loves. Hereby ſaith Gregory, is ſet forth, how the faithfull ſoule having taſted of the ſweetneſſe of the knowledge and love of Chriſt, is deſirous that others, who have not yet attained to this knowledge, may be brought unto it alſo; for what is the field into which ſhe deſireth Chriſt to goe with her, but the wide world, wherein are innumerable Townes, and Villages wanting this knowledge? therefore ſhe deſireth him to goe with her amongſt them, to preach unto, and inlighten them every where, that are yet in darkneſſe, for ſo it is ſaid in the Parable of the Wheat and Tares, the field is the world. He cometh into the field then, when his coming into the world, by being conceived by the Holy Ghoſt in the wombe of the Virgin Mary, this holy Seed being ſowne therein, as in a field, is preached and taught; and into the Villages, when he was preached amongſt the Gentiles; and he goeth into the Vine-yard to viſite it, when after his Reſurrection, aſcending up into Heaven, he ſitteth there in Majeſty and Power, defending his Church, his Vine-yard in all places, being with his every where, to the end of the world.

And what elſe doth the Lord here? viſite to ſee whether the Vine flouriſheth, what acceſſion of ſoules is made daily to the Church, that ſhall be ſaved, and for ſuch as be added, if they be tender and young Chriſtians newly come in, whether any increaſe of knowledge and grace appeareth in them, ſet forth by the tender Grapes; if they be more perfect ones, whether they be ſtill going on to more perfection, as the Apoſtle Paul did; for the Lord hath an eye to all that are in his Church, and lookes that there ſhould be in every one a proficiency, according to his proportion, and ſtature in Chriſt, there I will give thee my loves; the Vulgar, my breaſts; which the Church gives to Chriſt, when to his members, by holding out unto them the two Teſtaments yeelding ſincere milke for their nouriſhment unto eternall life. Of going to ſee whether the Vine flouriſheth, and the Pomgranats budded, he ſpake before, Chap. 6. 11. which, as was there expounded, was ſpoken by way of Propheſying of the converſion of the Jewes; now the ſame is more particularly ſet forth, and in what order it ſhould be; Firſt, the Goſpel ſhould goe out into all the world, for this is the field here ſpoken of, into which Chriſt went with his Apoſtles, when ſending them to teach and baptize all Nations, he went with them, accompanying their teaching with Miracles, and then they abode, and lodged, as it were, in the Villages of the Gentiles, when their going to preach amongſt them, tooke effect to their converſion. Then to ſhew, that after this, the Jewes, who at the firſt rejected it, ſhould imbrace the Goſpel alſo, it is ſaid, Let us goe into the vine-yard, &c. for what is the vine-yard of the Lord of Hoaſts, but Judah, as the Prophet ſpeaketh? and here then ſhall the vine flouriſh, and the tender Grapes put forth, and the Pomgranats bud, by the coming in of the common ſort, like tender children in knowledge, and of the more perfect and expert in the Word of God, that is, Rabbins and Teachers; and this being done, the Church giveth unto Chriſt her Loves, or Breaſts, he being as much delighted here-with, as a man with the love of his deare Wife, who after going aſtray, turneth againe unto him with all her heart, and doth all Offices of love and ſubjection to him; or as a childe, by ſucking moſt ſweet milke out of the Mothers breaſts, although he hath no need of it, but the Church to ſucke the breaſts of his conſolations. Eſa. 5.

The Mandrakes give a ſmell, and at our gates are all manner of pleaſant fruites, both new and old, which I have laid up for thee my beloved. By the Mandrakes Gregory underſtandeth fruites, both medicinall and ſweet, and by them all ſuch in the Church of God, as by their good fame yeeld a ſweet ſavour, being publicke perſons, ſet forth by Gates, becauſe there ſuch uſed to ſit: but here it is to be applied to publicke Teachers, who are as Phiſitians, by their wholſome Doctrines healing the diſeaſes of mens ſoules, and have Store-houſes, out of which they bring forth to theſe Gates, or publicke places, inſtructions out of the New Teſtament, and out of the Old, according to the one, teaching Chriſts Incarnation, Death, and Reſurrection, as they are plainly herein ſet forth, and out of the other, opening the ſame, by ſhewing the myſticall underſtanding of all the Sacrifices, and old Rites, and types of the Old Teſtament: and theſe are ſaid to be laid up for Chriſt, becauſe he is here-with well pleaſed, as men with the ſweeteſt fruites which can be kept for them, and brought forth and preſented to them. Verſ. 13. Gregor.

To the ſame effect Juſtus Orgel. but he will have ſuch compared to Mandrakes alſo, for their being deep rooted, and grounded in the love of Chriſt, as Mandrakes are in the ground. Juſtus Orgel.

Ainſworth referring us to the Hiſtory, Gen. 30: 14. of Mandrakes found in the wheat harveſt in the fields, ſaith, that they ſet forth fruites, both ſweet and pleaſant to behold, exceeding thoſe that we have now adaies, and that the Graces of God in his Church are hereby ſet forth, and are ſaid to be at our doores, in oppoſition to the fields, wherein thoſe grew of old, the faithfull having them every where amongſt them, when by heavenly teaching, and godly living, they give a ſweet ſmell; and ſuch fruites laid up for Chriſt were the faithfull of old, and thoſe newly ſpringing up, and brought forth under the Goſpel anew. And they are ſaid to be laid up for Chriſt, becauſe that in the holy Scriptures their famous acts and vertues are recorded, all tending to guide us to him, for which our Lord ſaith; Every Scribe inſtructed to the kingdome of Heaven, is like unto an Houſholder, that bringeth out of his treaſury things both new and old. Ainſworth. Matth. 13. 52.

CHAP. VIII.

O That thou wert as my brother, that ſucked the breaſts of my mother, when I ſhould finde thee without I would kiſſe thee, yet I ſhould not be deſpiſed. Here the Church is brought in, ſpeaking to Chriſt in thoſe dayes, wherein this was written, he being not yet come in the fleſh; and it ſerveth to ſhew the longing deſire of the faithfull after his coming, as is expreſſed by the Prophet Iſaiah, ſaying, O that thou wouldeſt breake the heavens, and come downe; and likewiſe by Dævid, who ſaith the ſame. And the Spouſe's ready receiving of Chriſt, which was without, that is, the Church of the Gentiles, is here intimated, in that he ſaith, When I ſhould finde thee without; that is, ſtanding without doores, being by the Jewes, through their hardning their hearts, ſhut out. See chap. 5. 2. I Verſ. 1.

would kiſſe thee: That is, for love ſubmit my ſelfe unto thee, as Princes are exhorted to kiſſe the Sonne. Yet I ſhould not be deſpiſed; Hebr. yea they will not deſpiſe me; That is, ſo doing, I ſhould not make my ſelfe deſpicable, as an impudent woman, that findeth a man and kiſſeth him, as Prov. 7. becauſe this expreſſion of my love cometh from the Spirit, ſetting me at liberty to ſerve God for love, whereas before being in bondage, I did it for feare. Thus the Church before the coming of Chriſt, ſhewing her expectation of his coming of woman, ſuch as every other mans mother is, and of his ſucking her breaſts, and being nouriſhed and brought up, as other children are.

Verſ. 2. I would lead thee, and bring thee into my mothers houſe, who would inſtruct me, I would cauſe thee to drinke of ſpiced wine, of the juyce of my Pomgranats.

Gregor. This, ſaith Gregory, is a Propheſie of the Jewiſh Church, which at the firſt rejected Chriſt, but afterwards being converted, brings Chriſt into her mothers houſe, that is, by ſetting up the preaching of him in her Synagogues; and ſhee ſaith, I would cauſe thee to drinke ſpiced wine, of the juyce of my Pomgranats; that is, refreſh thee with the courageous ſuffering of my Martyrs in fighting againſt the Antichriſt. Ainſworth referreth it to the ſame Church ſpoken of, verſe 1. and for her ſaying, who would inſtruct me, he underſtandeth this of Chriſt, thus entertained into the heart by faith. for ſuch as feare him, he teacheth in the way wherein they ſhould goe; and the Church, or Soule, being thus taught by her graces, delighteth Chriſt, as with ſpiced wine, to make it taſte more pleaſantly a man is delighted. For my part, I hold that the Church of the Gentiles which was ſaid before to finde him without, goeth on in expreſſing her great deſire of Chriſt, come by his Incarnation, ſhewing, that ſhe would make him moſt welcome, by all the meanes that ſhe could.

Verſ. 3. 4. For the next words, verſe 3. they are the ſame with chap. 2. 6. His right hand ſhould be under my head, &c. and therefore ſee the expoſition there, and likewiſe verſe 4. with chap. 2. 7.

Verſ. 5. Who is this that cometh up from the wilderneſſe, leaning upon her beloved, I raiſed thee up under the Apple-tree, there thy mother brought thee forth, &c.

Gregor. She that is ſaid here to aſcend out of the Wilderneſſe, ſaith Gregory, is any faithfull ſoule, which being converted cometh, as it were, out of a wilderneſſe of ſinne and miſery, affording no true comfort to ſuch as continue therein, that is, in the ſtate of corruption; but now ſuch a ſoule is ſaid to leane upon her beloved, that is, to depend only upon Chriſt for the comfort of juſtification from all her ſins.

The eighth ſpeech of the Bride-groom. Then Chriſt her beloved ſpeaketh, I raiſed thee up under the Apple-tree; ſhewing whom ſhe might thanke for her coming into this comfortable eſtate, and from the other ſo miſerable, even that ſweet fruit which hung upon the Croſſe, compared before to Apples, and now the Tree of the Croſſe for his hanging thereon called the Apple-tree, bearing this precious fruit, by beleeving in, and turning to whom we are raiſed up from the death of ſinne, to the life of Grace, and Righteouſneſſe, and ſhall finally be raiſed up after death to life everlaſting.

Chap. 2, 3. For the next words, There thy mother brought thee forth, the vulgar followed by Gregory hath it, there thy mother was corrupted, and the word חבל ſignifieth either to corrupt, or to bring forth; but he expounds it of the foule ſinne, whereby the Jewiſh Synagogue corrupted her ſelfe, by cauſing Chriſt to be crucified, under which Apple-tree he findeth at length the Daughter of this Synagogue lying ſtill in the ſame ſinne, by infidelity, and raiſed her up, by converting her to the faith, through his great grace and mercy; and this expoſition I take to be right, although Ainſworth expounds, and renders the laſt words otherwiſe; there thy mother brought thee forth; that is the Preachers of the Goſpel, by great labour and paines formed thee to this: and theſe words, I raiſed thee up under the apple-tree; he expoundeth of the Church, ſpeaking to ſome new company of beleevers coming in, from the multitude of the wicked of this world, as from a wilderneſſe, where no comfort is to be had, but all miſery: but how forced this is, let the Reader judge. That a new company of beleevers not before converted is here ſpoken of, I deny not; for I conceive it to be ſpoken againe of the converted Jewes, of whom ſo much was ſaid before; but becauſe it is not in man, but God only, to raiſe up from ſinne and infidelity to faith, how can it be ſpoken in the perſon of any Church, I raiſed thee under the Apple-tree? but I thy Redeemer raiſed thee under my ſelfe, from that miſerable eſtate, to that hope wherein thou now ſtandeſt; but thy mother that bare thee corrupted thee, by oppugning me, and teaching thee to curſe, and abjure me; yea ſhe moſt ſhamefully corrupted thee, and therefore to her diſgrace I ſpeake it over againe. Chap. 2. 3.

Set me as a ſeale upon thy heart, as a ſeale upon thine arme, for Love is ſtrong as Death, Jealouſie is cruell as the Grave; the coales thereof as coales of fire, which hath a moſt vehement flame. Verſ. 6.

Chriſt is ſet upon the heart of the Spouſe, ſaith Gregory, who taketh theſe words to be his alſo, when the ſoule heartily loveth him; for Love is his Seale, or Marke, as it were, whereby we may be knowne to be his Diſciples; and he is ſet upon her armes when ſhe doth ſo, as a moſt earneſt affection to Chriſt requireth, that is, feedeth his poore members, followeth him in meekneſſe, holineſſe, lowlineſſe, and ſuffering for his ſake. And to ſhew that ſuch love is meant, it followeth, For Love is ſtrong as Death, and Jealouſie is cruel, &c. As if he had ſaid; If thou loveſt me, as thou ſhouldeſt doe, an impreſſion of the love of me being made in thy heart, as by a ſeale, this love would be as ſtrong in thee to ſubdue any contrary motions ariſing from the fleſh, as Death, againſt which nothing living can ſtand, when it ſtriketh, and thy jealouſie ariſing from this love, and the hatred of any thing done againſt me, would be as one raging, and cruell againſt any corrivall wronging him in his love; for in this caſe he will ſhew him no favour, but killing, and ſlaying; ſo the ſoule, in which the love of Chriſt is ſealed, is hot and zealous, as coales of fire againſt any thing, wherein Spirituall whoredome, which is againſt him, lyeth, whether by the worſhipping of Idols, or Images, or the great Idols of the World, Profit, cauſing ſtealing, lying, forſwearing, curſing, fraud, oppreſſion, or any other unjuſt dealing; or Pleaſure, cauſing Gluttony, Drunkenneſſe, Adultery, Fornication, or ſenſuall living any way; Firſt, not to endure any of theſe things in himſelfe; Secondly, neither in others, but to his power oppoſing them, with all fervency and heat, as of the moſt vehement fire. Gregor.

Junius, and Ainſworth, and ſome others, taking this to be the ſpeech of the Spouſe, expound it of her deſiring Chriſt to thinke continually upon her, as having an impreſſion of the love of her made in his heart, and to manifeſt it, by ſtretching out his arme to defend her in all dangers, and for this ſhe pleadeth her earneſt love to him, ſo that threatnings with death, or the greateſt rage of Tyrants, could not beat her here-from. I preferre the former. Junius. Ainſw.

Many waters cannot quench Love, neither can the flouds drowne it; if a man would give all the ſubſtance of his houſe for love, it would be utterly contemned. Verſ. 7.

He goeth on in ſetting forth the nature of this love unto Chriſt, many waters cannot quench it; That is, he in whom the love of Chriſt is, by ſufferings, to which he is put for his ſake, cannot be made to doe any thing here-againſt, yea although Perſecutions increaſe like a floud; for he that ſo loveth him, will rather bear any thing, to the loſſe of his life, then to the extinguiſhing of the fire of his love. If a man would give all the ſubſtance of his houſe, &c. That is, the love of Chriſt is ſo predominant in the heart of a true Chriſtian, that if he muſt loſe all his goods, and be expoſed to extreame poverty for his ſake, yet he would not weigh it, or be moved hereby, becauſe he counteth all theſe things vaine in compariſon of Chriſt, and the benefit coming by him to his ſoule,; thus Gregory. But Juſtus Orgel. underſtandeth, as a further commendation of the love of Chriſt thus; It is ſo excellent, as that if a man would give all his goods to the poore, thinking for this to be accepted, without it, all this would be taken before God as nought worth. Ainſworth, it is meant, That Love, as none other grace of God, is to be attained by money, but is Gods free gift. Junius, Love is not only unextinguiſhable by the waters of calamity before ſpoken of, but by any the greateſt gifts, or rewards. For as he that truly loveth God, cannot by ſufferings be terrified ſo, as not courageouſly to perſiſt herein; ſo if he ſhould be offered abundance of treaſure Gregor. Juſtus Orgel. 1 Cor. 13. Ainſworth. Junius.

ſure to forſake the Lord, and his Law, he would utterly contemne it; and this I take to be the beſt, becauſe it is moſt probable, that both ſorts of temptations to 2 Machab. 7. make men Apoſtatize are here ſpoken of; the one by threatnings, the other by promiſes: as one of the ſeven brethren that ſuffered death for Gods Law, having ample rewards promiſed him, if he would yeeld to the Tyrant, deſpiſed them all, preferring for the love of God rather to dye in his cauſe. And herein Balaam himſelfe ſpake right religiouſly, when Balac promiſed to promote him to honour; If he would give me his houſe full of gold and ſilver, I will ſpeake none other words, but what God ſhall put into my mouth. This then is a Touch-ſtone, whereby to try our love; not every one that ſaith, I love God, loveth him, but he that being tried, ſhrinkes not from his truth, for any feare of danger, or hope of reward.

Note.

Verſ. 8. We have a little Siſter, and ſhe hath no breaſts, what ſhall we doe for our Siſter, in the day when ſhe ſhall be ſpoken for? The Lord having hitherto confirmed the Church of the Jewes in his love, never more to be beaten from it, after that ſhe hath once imbraced it; now beginneth to declare another new Church yet remaining to be gathered after the fore-laid converſion of the Jewes, of ſuch Countries and Nations, as never before received the Goſpel, as of Turkes, and Pſal. 2. Tartars, Chinois, and Americans: for all Nations are Chriſts inheritance, and Pſal. 72. the uttermoſt parts of the earth his poſſeſſion: and he muſt rule from Sea to Sea,
Eſa. 2. 2. and to the worlds end; and of this the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh, as which ſhould be fulfilled in the laſt daies, when an univerſall peace ſhall be, and no more wars, as have alwayes hitherto been; neither hath the Mountaine of the Lords houſe ever yet been ſo high exalted, that is, the Jewiſh Nation; but this is yet to come, when the whole Nation ſhall imbrace the faith. If that of the Apoſtle ſhall ſeeme to make
Rom. 11. 25. againſt this, where he ſaith, Blindneſſe is hapned to Iſrael in part, till the fulneſſe of the Gentiles ſhall come in, as I have alſo ſometime thought, thoſe words,
Acts 2. 5. 9. I take it now, doe not neceſſarily imply it, but the coming in to the faith of all thoſe who are called, all the Nations under heaven, Act. 2. and of all others then knowne, as the Americans were not, and many others, amongſt whom the Goſpel hath been received, have againe revolted from it, but muſt come in againe; or elſe how can Chriſt reigne over them all at the ſame time? Of this Church then here after to be gathered, I thinke it may be beſt conceived, that it is propheſied here; And ſhe is called a little Siſter, having yet no breaſts, becauſe not growne to the ſtate of a woman, to afford the nouriſhment of teaching to her young ones; yet ſhe is a Siſter, ſo called, becauſe ſhe ſhall be one. And the Lord ſpeakes in the plurall Ainſworth. number, ſaith Ainſworth, We have a little ſiſter, to intimate the triplicity of perſons in the unity of the God-head; and he alſo ſaith, that this is ſpoken of a new Church ariſing. But touching the Trinity herein implied, I aſſent not unto him, becauſe that chap. 7. 11, 12. it is likewiſe ſpoken in the plurall, where Chriſt and the Church are manifeſtly brought in together ſpeaking; and ſo likewiſe, as I rather 1 Cor. 3. 9. take it, here he joyneth faithfull teachers to him, who are ſaid to be Labourers together with the Lord, becauſe that by the Miniſtry of ſuch this new Church ſhould be built.

Gregor. Gregory by this little Siſter, underſtandeth the Apoſtles, before the coming downe of the Holy Ghoſt upon them, for then they were little in courage for Chriſt, when as Peter, the chiefe of them, was afraid of a ſilly Maid, and denied Chriſt at her ſpeech, and they all fled from him, and hid themſelves, keeping cloſe in an upper roome for feare; but the Holy Ghoſt being given, they were as a ſtrong wall, or tower, as a doore of utterance of the marvellous things of God, which they ſpake with all boldneſſe; and cloſed in with Cedar, that is, a company of beleevers coming about them, as an ornament unto them, as a Cedar Porch is to a doore of an houſe.

Juſtus Orgel. Juſtus Orgel. underſtands the Church of the Gentiles, being at their firſt converſion very ignorant, and without Teachers, and ſo without breaſts, till that they had ſome ordained them by Paul and Barnabas, and after that by Timothy, and Titus; which being done they were as a wall, with a tower, and a doore, ſo ſet forth, forth, as was ſaid before. But the order of time agreeth not to either of theſe, ſith this is ſpoken after that of the Jewes coming in, towards the end of the world, and being ſo exceſſively zealous for Chriſt; wherefore I thinke it evident, that ſuch a new Church is meant, as I have ſpoken before of, the time of whoſe Eſpouſals is not yet come.

If ſhe be a wall, we will build upon her a Palace of ſilver; if ſhe be a doore, we will incloſe her with boards of Cedar. By wall here we may underſtand with Ainſworth, a City fenced with walls and gates; becauſe a doore is alſo ſpoken of, the meaning is, when by our labours ſhe ſhall become ſtrong in the faith, as the walls of a City, to which the Church is compared, Matth. 5. ſhe ſhall be beautified, as by a palace of ſilver, through purity and holineſſe, which ſhall ſhine in her, and being as a doore, or gate, to let in friends, and to keep out enemies, through vigilancy, and watchfulneſſe, ſhe ſhall now, as a compleat temple, as the Temple of old, be incloſed, and be an houſe, made as it were, of Cedar, goodly to behold, ſweet and incorruptible. And by this name of walls and gates the Church of Chriſt is often ſpoken of, as Eſa. 26. 1. Chap. 66. 18. Thou ſhalt call thy walls ſalvation; and ſuch ſhe ſaith by and by that ſhe is. Verſ. 9. Ainſworth.

I am a wall, and my breaſts as towers, then was I in his ſight as one that found favour. And ſuch is every true Church of Chriſt, and every true faithfull ſoule, neither can he be in favour with Chriſt that is not ſuch, that is, ſtrong through faith, to ſtand againſt the aſſaults of all Spirituall enemies, and perſecutions of Tyrants in the world; as God ſaid to Jeremy, that he would make him as a brazen wall, and an Iron pillar. 2. As a palace for God to dwell in, as being one in whom there is an heart continually lifted up in prayer. 3. Having breaſts, as towers, ſo great, and ſo full through abundance of the Milke of Divine doctrine contained therein, whereby to be defended in all times of being aſſaulted by temptations, as Chriſt by the word confounded the Devil tempting him. 4. A doore of a mouth, to utter words to edification of the Hearers, and that incorruptible, as out of which no corrupt communication ever cometh, for ſuch is this Church that findeth favour, in theſe two verſes propounded to be. Verſ. 10. Note. Jer. 1. 18. & 15. 20. Epheſ. 2. 20.

Salomon had a vine-yard at Baal Hamon, he let out the vine-yard to Keepers, every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thouſand peices of ſilver. The Vine-yard of Salomon, otherwiſe rendred the Paciſicke here ſpoken of, ſaith Gregory, ſetteth forth the Church of the Jewes, according to Eſa, 5. who are the Lords vine-yard, which Lord, for his peace-making by his bloud, is called the Paciſicke. This vine-yard he had, and let it out to Husband-men, that is, Moſes and the Prophets, but by and by, as if he had forgotten himſelfe, he ſaith, that theſe Husband-men were the Apoſtles, and other Beleevers of the primitive Church, who brought for the fruit each one a thouſand peices of ſilver, when they left all to follow Chriſt, and ſold all, and brought and laid it at the Apoſtles feet, becauſe a thouſand is the number of perfection, and ſo may well ſet forth all that a man hath. And ſikewiſe he expoundeth verſ 12, both of their parting with all, and their remuneration two hundred; and Juſtus will have the 12. Apoſtles with their reward herein intimated, becauſe that twelve multiplied by a hundred make twelve hundred, every one having an hundred fold for all, which he left for Chriſts ſake, as the Lord hath promiſed; Who ſo leaveth father and mother, houſe and land, &c. ſhall have a hundred fold, &c. But if Chriſt be meant by Salomon, the Vine let out by him was that which was taken from the Jewes, and let to other Husbandmen, the Preachers of the Goſpel, to be kept by them, and the thouſand ſilverlings cannot be the worldly goods which they left, but ſome benefit by them brought in to Chriſt. I rather hold therefore with Junius, that a compariſon is here made betwixt Salomons vine-yard, planted in a fruitfull ſoyle (as he renders it for Baal Haman ſignifying the Lord of a multitude, that is, bearing abundance of fruit) and the Church of Chriſt: As if he had ſaid, Salomons vine-yard indeed was a very fruitfull one, but the fruites were not ſo great, as the fruites of my vine-yard, for it yeelded but a thouſand ſilverlings to him, mine a thouſand to the Lord of the vine-yard, and two hundred to the Keepers; and whereas that was committed to Verſ. 11. Gregor. Juſtus Orgel. Matth. 19.

Verſ. 12. Mine is before me; mine eye being continually upon it, and my helping hand put to, for the cauſing of it upon my Keepers labour to yeeld the more fruits. Theſe words then are manifeſtly the words of Chriſt, extolling his vine-yard, his Church, above Salomons, for the fruitfulneſſe thereof, although Ainſworth inclineth rather to thinke them to be the words of the Church; and whereas theſe words, mine is before me, may ſeeme to make againſt it, he ſaith, ſhe calleth the vine-yard hers, as chap. 1. 6. becauſe committed to her keeping. But if the vine-yard be hers, in that ſence, who be the Keepers, that ſhare in the benefit, reaping two hundred ſilverlings to the Kings thouſand. It is cleare then, that Chriſt is brought in ſpeaking here; but what meane theſe ſummes of money paid, as it were, rent to him, and wages to them? Sol. Fulneſſe of glory to him ſet forth by a thouſand, the number of perfection, and a great proportion of heavenly glory to the Apoſtles, and other Labourers in the vine-yard, the prime Preachers of the Word, ſet forth by two hundred, becauſe whoſoever leaveth friends, or poſſeſſions for Chriſt, ſhall receive an hundred fold; but when the Sonne of Man ſhall ſit upon his Throne, yee that have followed me, ſaith Chriſt, ſhall ſit upon twelve Thrones, &c. implying a greater reward, here ſet forth by two hundred, for their one hundred fold; or the words may have this expoſition, Salomons vine-yard put out to Keepers, yeelded him from every Keeper a thouſand ſilverlings, whereupon it is concluded by way of compariſon, betwixt Chriſts vine-yard and his, Thou (O Salomon) haſt a thouſand peeces of ſilver; and (which I omitted to ſpeake of before) thy Keepers each one two hundred, but the vine-yard, which is mine, is before me; that is, I have more joy of my vine-yard, which is my Church, my Wife, for ſhe is alwayes with me, inveſted with heavenly glory, and ſo we together reap farre more. Jun. I in the delight that I take in her being thus glorified, and ſhe and her keepers in their partaking with me, of my Kingdome for ever; ſo that here is a Propheſie of the final end, to which all the amorous expreſſions before going tended, namely, the fulneſſe of joy, which the Bride-groom and Bride have together in heaven, at the conſummation of this world.

Ainſworth.

Note.

Verſ. 13. Thou that dwelleſt in the Gardens, the companions hearken to thy voyce, cauſe me to heare it. Seeing theſe things ſhall be ſo, now I turne my ſpeech againe to thee (my Spouſe) ſaith Chriſt, whilſt thou art as a Garden, my pleaſant place upon earth, let all my friends, thy companions hearken to thee, teaching how this felicity may be finally attained, and let me heare thy voyce from time to time, uttered in prayers and praiſes continually.

Verſ. 14. Make haſte my beloved, and be as a Roe upon the mountaines of ſpices; See the like ſpeech, chap. 2. 17. but here the Spouſe deſireth, that Chriſts ſecond coming may be with ſpeed, as Revel. 22. that together with him ſhe may be for ever in the mountaines of Spices; this wicked world being left, wherein there is nothing but ſinne and miſery. And heaven, which is ſometime ſet forth by the name of Hills, as where it is ſaid, I have lifted up mine eyes to the hills, is here called mountaines, as in the Garden of the Church, before a bed of Spices was ſpoken of, to intimate the ſurpaſſing pleaſures, and joyes, that ſhall be to the faithfull there for ever and ever.

CHAP. I.

Verſe 2.

Let him kiſſe me with the kiſſes of his mouth, thy love is better then wine.

Verſe 2.

O Lord my God, and Saviour, inſpire me with thy grace Divine,
Hereby I ſhall be glad, and joy, much more then they that doe drinke wine.

3 Becauſe of the ſavour of thine oyntments, thy name is as an oyntment poured forth, therefore doe the Virgins love thee.

3 Th' Apoſtles, ſent as odours ſweet, ſpreading in every place thy fame,
Inamour Nations, and ſo from Chriſt is ſpread the Chriſten name.

4 Draw me, we will run after thee, the King brought me into his chambers, we will be glad, and rejoyce in thee, we will remember thy name more then wine, the upright love thee.

4 Draw me (O Lord) by thy good Grace, without thine ayd I cannot come,
But hereby drawne ſure after thee,
we'l all as one both run and come:
When I thus run I'me ſure of life, for which all upright men rejoyce
In thee, and keep in mind thy love we ever wil, by deed and voyce.

5 I am blacke, but comly, (O yee daughters of Jeruſalem) as the tents of Kedar, as the curtaines of Salomon.

5 But when of th' upright I doe ſpeake,
I meane not our owne righteouſneſſe,
For we black are, and foule by ſinne,
in Chriſt is all our comlineſſe;
And this I ſpeake to you (O Jewes)
O ſay with me all blacke are we,
As Kedars weather-beaten tents, thus as Kings curtaines ſhall we be.

6 Looke not upon me becauſe I am blacke, becauſe the Sunne hath looked upon me, my mothers children were angry with me, they made me the Keeper of the Vine-yards, but mine owne Vine-yard I have not kept.

6 And if I be ſo comely then, take none offence at my diſgrace,
In word, or deed, by ſpitefull men,
the Sun thus only tans my face.
None'other harme yee can me doe, by your fell wrath, but ceaſe me make Keeping your Vine-yard, but the Lord for one will more to me betake.

7 Tell me (O thou) whom my ſoule loveth, where thou

7 Shew thou to me, my Love, my Deare, by what good paſtures thou doſt feed

feedeſt, where thou makeſt thy flocke to reſt at noone, for why ſhould I be as one that turnes aſide by the flockes of thy companions?

Thy Flock, and from all burning heat, ſhadow thy ſheep all times of need;
O keep me, that I follow not Seducers flockes, though they pretend
Them to be ſheep, elect by Chriſt, and eke himſelfe his moſt deare friend.

8 If thou knoweſt not (O thou faireſt amongſt women) goe thy way forth by the foot-ſteps of the flocke, and feed thy Kids beſides the ſhepheards tents.

8 O thou, that haſt a ſoule moſt faire, through faith by waſhing in my bloud,
If that thou knoweſt not the way to me, behold juſt men and good,
By whoſe foot-ſteps 'tis plainly ſeene;
In David his true-heartedneſſe,
In Abraham his obedience, and Zachary his blameleſneſſe,
Moſes his zeale to beat downe ſinne, of Job the greateſt patience,
The Apoſtles light eſteeme of goods of this baſe world, both pounds and pence,
And feed in Grace, thus ſtrengthening, ſeeke not in corners thy babes to feed,
Let learned Paſtors in places keep,
where Chriſtian people uſe to meet.

9 I have compared thee, (O my Love) to a company of Horſes in Pharaohs chariot.

9 Whereas (my Love) I thee direct, my flock to follow which is weake,
Becauſe ſtout foes will 'gainſt thee riſe, and ſeeke into the fold to breake;
Feare not, but be undaunted now,
for 'mongſt my ſheep my horſe is try'd,
Ready to ſtrike thy proudeſt foes,
as ſometime Pharaoh in ſea that's red.

10 Thy cheekes are comly, with rowes of jewels, thy necke with chaines of gold.

10 Of Chaſtity, the jewel doth adorne thy cheekes, thy neck the chaine
Of holy Precepts, which thou keep'ſt, and keeping doſt conſtant remaine:

11 We will make thee borders of gold, with ſtuds of ſilver.

11 Nor are theſe all thy ornaments, but by the Miniſters teaching Of Gold, and Silver rich Borders to Soules, the Trinity doth bring.

12 Whilſt the King ſitteth at his table, my ſpikenard ſendeth forth the ſmell thereof.

12 When Chriſt the King at Table ſate, t' annoynt him to the Buriall,
A woman came with Spikenard ſweet, not one, but two, yea three in all.

13 A bundle of Myrrhe is my beloved to me, he ſhall lye all night betweene my breaſts.

13 My Love to me a bundle is of Myrrhe, upon my ſoule ſeated, Thence keeping out all corruptions, and then from corps firſt corrupted.

14 My beloved is to me as a cluſter of Camphir in the vine-yards of Engedi.

14 My Love an All-ſufficient, expiating ſinne Sacrifice
Is without help of any man, his love, merit me doth ſuffice.

15 Thou art faire my love, behold, thou art faire, thou haſt Doves eyes.

15 Moſt faire thou art, and beautifull, yea, beautifull thou art my Love;
And for to grace thee more, thou haſt eyes like the eyes of harmleſſe Dove:

16 Behold, thou art faire my beloved, yea pleaſant, alſo our bed is green.

16 O my beloved, doſt thou ſpeake of being faire, that's thine owne,
For us 'tis grace enough, that we are

17 The beames of our houſe are Cedar, and our rafters of Firre.

are like to trees that are green growne.
17 That we are Gods Houſe, built with beſt, and long laſting materials,
Sweet Cedar beames, and ſtreight Firre,
Rafters ſo ſtrong, never to fall.

CHAP. II.

Verſe 1.

I Am the roſe of Sharon, and the Lilly of the vallies.

2 As the Lilly amongſt the thornes, ſo is my Love amongſt the daughters.

3 As the Apple-tree amongſt the trees of the wood, ſo is my beloved amongſt the ſonnes; I ſate downe under his ſhadow with delight, and his fruit was ſweet unto my taſte.

4 He brought me into the Banqueting-houſe, and his banner over me was love.

5 Stay me with Flaggons, comfort me with Apples, for I am ſick of love.

7 I charge you, O yee daughters of Jeruſalem, by the Roes and Hindes of the field, that yee ſtirre not up, nor wake my Love untill he pleaſe.

8 The voyce of my beloved, behold he comes leaping upon the mountaines, and skipping upon the hills.

9 My beloved is like a Roe, or young Hart, behold hee ſtandeth behinde our wall, he looketh forth at the windowes, ſhewing himſelfe through the Lattice.

Verſe 1.

I Am the Roſe that ſmels moſt ſweet, of all the flowers in the field,
And Lillies none more purely white,
then me, the world did ever yeeld.
2 As Lilly white, which hath no price, amongſt the pricking thornes is plac'd,
So is my Love amongſt hurtfull men, harmleſſe ſet, whereby grac'd.
3 As Apple-trees for ſhade and fruit,
excell all trees that grow in wood,
So my beloved doth all ſonnes,
in pleaſing ſhade, and fruit for food.

4 No ſooner doe I this beleeve, but that more joy comes unto me,
By his good Spirit, as by wine,
for now his Banner's love to me;
5 And this ſweet taſte of thy great Love,
(O Saviour) which now I have,
So workes with me, that whole flaggons, and more apples of Grace I crave.
6 And this I can no ſooner doe, but that he's ready in my ſight
Me to imbrace, with both his hands, my head with left, my corps with right.
7 And now he ſleepes between my breaſts,
all anger being laid abed,
My care ſhall be for evermore,
by ſinning not to ſtirre his head;
And the ſame charge upon you, all fellow Beleevers, I doe lay:
If Roe, the Hinde doth thus obſerve, ſtirre not by ſin our Love, I pray.
8 If how he comes, yee would faine know, behold his voyce in Wilderneſſe,
Comes firſt for to prepare his way,
and then my Love full of goodneſſe.
9 Soone after as an Hinde, or Roe, ſtops not for ſteep mountaine or hill,
So he ore-leaps impediments, even all by his good Goſpel-will.
Before he tooke our fleſh he ſtood, hidden in Types behind that wall;
But now at window as the Sun,

Tur-

turning to Light that darkneſſe all,
And thus as man to man was ſeen, to mortall eyes, as God yet hid,
As through a Lattice that is thick appeares, and ſhew himſelfe he did;

10 My beloved ſpake, and ſaid, Ariſe my Love, my faire one, and come away.

10 And now what is his will, but that
I riſe from ſinne to righteouſneſſe,
And thus beleeving come to him, and ſo partake of his goodneſſe?

11 The winter is paſt, the raine is over, and gone.

11 And me to move to this, he pleads the time, and ſaith, winter is paſt, Wherein the world lay dead in ſinne, which me from his cold raine kept faſt.

12 The flowers appeare upon the earth, the time of the ſinging of Birds is come, the voyce of the Turtle is heard in our land.

12 Flowers of Graſſe ſmelling moſt ſweet, in Chriſten fields doe now appeare,
Preachers like Birds ſweet harmony, by ſinging make now every where,
Charming the ſoule from den of ſinne, yea the chaſte Turtle John Baptiſt,
His voyce is heard in Judea, with ſpeed to draw us all to Chriſt.

13 The Fig-tree putteth forth green figges, the Vine with her tender Grapes give a good ſmell. ariſe my Love, my faire one, and come away.

13 All Countries whence the Goſpel's preach'd, do ſpring, bud, ſhoot out, and bloſſome,
As doth the Fig-tree in the ſpring, riſe then my Love, and to me come.

14 O my Dove, that art in the clefts of the rocke, in the ſecret of the ſtaires, let me ſee thy countenance, let me heare thy voyce, for thy voyce is ſweet, and thy countenance comly.

14 And doing ſo feare not, for he that comes to me as helpleſſe Dove,
In me the rock is ſheltered from foes beneath, and foes above.
But note that he who is thus ſafe, on ſtaires of grace aſcending is Heaven-ward, though not mens mortall eyes, but God in heaven alone ſees this;
Say then, I come, and unto me
appeare upon theſe ſteps Divine:
Thus both thy voyce and face ſhall I accept, and love and owne as mine.

15 Take us the Foxes, the little Foxes that ſpoile the Vines, for our Vines have tender grapes.

15 But that thy voyce may pleaſant be, and face moſt faire eke in my ſight;
O ſuffer not Seducers bold within my Church, but by thy might Chaſe them away, as men Foxes doe take, which doe their vines deface,
So theſe by devouring the weale of Church, doe marre the moſt faire face.

16 My beloved is mine, and I am his, he feedeth amongſt the Lillies.

16 Doſt thou in me ſo much delight
(O my beloved) take, loe I Am thine, and thou art mine, feed then with me, and live with thy Lilly.

17 Untill the day breake, and the ſhadowes fly away, turne my beloved, and be thou like a Roe, or a young Hart, upon the mountaines of Bether.

17 Till that moſt joyfull day ſhall breake, wherein thou com'ſt to ſave for aye,
When all troubles, and miſeries of world ſhall fleet, and fly away,
As Roe, and Hinde, on Mountaines ſteep, haſten to goe with greateſt ſpeed:

of Haſte thou alwayes to come to me, in danger, at all times of need.

CHAP. III.

Verſe 1.

BY night in my bed I ſought him whom my ſoule loveth, I ſought him, but I found him not.

2 I will riſe now, and goe about the City, in the ſtreetes and broad wayes, I will ſeeke him whom my ſoule loveth, I ſought him, but I found him not.

3 The watch-men that goe about the City found me, to whom I ſaid, ſaw yee him whom my ſoule loveth?

4 It was but a little that I paſſed from them, I found him whom my ſoule loveth, I held him, and would not let him goe, till I brought him to my mothers houſe, to the chamber of her that conceived me.

5 I charge you, O yee daughters of Jeruſalem, that yee ſtirre not up, nor wake my Love, untill he pleaſe.

6 Who is this that comes out of the Wilderneſſe like a pillar of ſmoake, perfumed with Myrrhe & Frankincenſe, and all the powders of the Merchant?

7 Behold his bed, which is Salomons, ſixty valiant men are about it, of the valiant men of Iſrael.

8 They all hold Swords, being expert in Warre, every one hath his Sword upon his thigh, becauſe of the feare in the night.

9 King Salomon made him-

Verſe 1.

MY Saviour I ſometime ſought to finde in ſloth, and idleneſſe,
In the darke night of ignorance,
but thus to ſeeke I finde bootleſſe.
2 I ſaid therefore, I will ariſe, and toyle, and travell, for to get Things worldly, for this preſent life, not ceaſing thus to ſeeke him yet;
But, woe is me, for whilſt that I worldly goods getting doe moſt intend,
In ſearch of him that is moſt deare,
in vaine I doe my whole time ſpend.
3 I went therefore where Watch-men are,
of wanderers the courſe to ſtay,
And unto Chriſt in the darke night,
ſtrait for to direct their way;
4 When I did thus they found me ſoone, and I him, whom I love, then found,
I did him finde, and held him faſt,
by perſevering in faith ſound;
Untill that to Jeruſalem,
my Mother deare, I did him bring,
Whence firſt I had conception, hearing thoſe Bels th' Apoſtles ring.
5 This great worke done, my beloved hearts reſt ſhall have, and ſtirre never To judge the Jew, or him forſake more, but him dearly love ever.
6 For now as one with Frankincenſe, and Myrrhe perfum'd, in Wilderneſſe Horrid that lived long time hath incult in filth and naſtineſſe;
So doe I ſee my Mother Church, the Jewes a long time wildered
In unbeleife, acceptably to God, and Chriſt, at length turned.
7 Which done, King Salomon himſelfe with his deare royall Spouſe, could not More ſafely ſleep in bed, when Guard of mighty men ſtood it about.
8 Although they ſixty valiant were,
all expert men of Iſrael,
Swords in their hands, ſwords by their ſides, feare cauſing Night-walkers to quell,
Then Jewiſh Synagogues turn'd Church, and Love and Spouſe of Chriſt moſt deare, Round about which Angels doe pitch their tents, and ſo her free from feare.
9 If in what chamber this bed ſtands ſelfe a Chariot, or chamber of the wood of Lebanon.

10 He made the pillars thereof of ſilver, the borders thereof of gold, the covering thereof of purple, the midſt paved with Love, for the daughters of Jeruſalem.

11 Go forth (O ye daughters of Zion) behold King Salomon with the Crowne, wherewith his mother crowned him, in the day of his eſpouſals, and in the day of the gladneſſe of his heart.

inquire yee doe, 'tis faire and ſweet,

10 With Silver pillars ſupported, bordered with Gold, as it is meet;
The wood, Cedar of Lebanon,
the hangings are purple royall,
Of Jewiſh Church-graces ſhining, with deareſt love amidſt them all.
11 And now yee Gentile Churches, loe
Chriſt the true Salrmon, as King,
By Jewes is crown'd, and married, for which ſhoutings with joy doe ring.

CHAP. IV.

Verſe 1.

BEhold, thou art faire (my Love) thou art faire, thou haſt Doves eyes within thy lockes, thy haire is as a flocke of Goates, that appeare from Mount Gilead.

2 Thy teeth are like a flock of ſheep that are even ſhorne, and come up from waſhing, every one beareth twins, and none of them is barren.

3 Thy lips are like a thread of ſcarlet, thy ſpeech is comely, thy temples are like a peice of Pomgranat within thy lockes.

4 Thy neck is like the tower of David, built for an armory, wherein there hang a thouſand bucklers, all ſhields of mighty men.

5 Thy two breaſts are like two young Roes that are twins, that feed upon the Lillies.

6 Till the day breake, and the ſhadowes fly away, I will get me to the mountaines of Verſe 1.

MY two Churches thus joyn'd in one,
I now, thus ſaith the Lord, behold,
As my moſt faire Love, which haſt eyes
adorn'd as Doves, not over bold;
And whereas womens haire, if faire and long, a glory is to her,
So doe the meditations of thy head now to me appeare.
2 Thy Miniſters that with ſtudy for thee prepare moſt wholſome food,
As Nurſe for Childe meat chew'd with teeth;
as ſheep appeare pure, white, and good;
I meane not ſuch, as whilſt they preach,
in doing good are yet barren,
But bring forth twins of faith and love,
both towards God, and towards men.
3 Thy lips doe ſcarlet threads reſemble all fiery red through zeale 'gainſt him,
Not frantick yet, but comely, thy ſpeech like to thy wit within.

4 Thy neck, whereby ſupported is thy head, and face ſo beautifull, Is ſtrong, as Davids tower was,
behung with ſhields, moſt wonderfull,
The ſhields of faith which thouſands have, even all Beleevers hereby made Moſt mighty through me, to defend themſelves gainſt all that thee invade.
5 Thy Prieſts, that from both Teſtaments, as two twin Roes their breaſts doe fill,
With ſincere milke examples bring,
of Lillies white, ſtrengthening 'gainſt ill;
6 Untill the Day of Judgement comes,
when the darke night ſhall have an end,
I'le be where Aſſemblies prayers

To

Myrrhe, and to the hills of frankincenſe.

7 Thou art all faire my Love, there is no ſpot in thee.

8 Come with me from Lebanon (my Spouſe) with me from Lebanon, looke from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, and from the Lions Dennes, and the mountaines of the Leopards.

9 Thou haſt raviſhed my heart, my Siſter, my Spouſe, with one of thine eyes, with one chaine of thy necke.

10 How faire is thy Love (my Siſter, my Spouſe) how much better is thy love then wine, and the ſmell of thine oyntments then all ſpices?

11 Thy lips (O my Spouſe) drop as the Honey-combe, Honey and Milke are under thy tongue, and the ſmell of thy garments is like the ſmell of Lebanon.

12 A garden incloſed is my Siſter, my Spouſe, a ſpring ſhut up, a fountaine ſealed.

13 Thy plants are an Orchard of Pomgranats, with pleaſant fruites, Camphir and Spiknard.

14 Spiknard and Saffron, Calamus and Cinamon, with all trees of Frankincenſe, Myrrhe, and Aloes, and all the chiefe ſpices.

to me as Odours ſweet aſcend.

7 Thou faire art my Love, thou art faire, and in thee is no ſpot at all;
As in Heathens, through vaine glory,
amidſt their vertues Cardinall.
8 'Mongſt men like Lions (O my Spouſe) and moſt fell Leopards thou ſhalt be,
But from them all I'le thee ſet free, and thou with glory crown'd ſhalt be.

9 And now my Love, my Spouſe, I ſee
ſuch faire and comely unity
Amongſt thy members, all which doe in diſcipline and faith agree,
That as with his Loves beautifull, one wreath of haire her neck upon,
And eye a Lover's raviſhed, ſo I with chaine thy neck upon.
10 And this thy love (O ſiſter Spouſe) amongſt thy members moſt faire is,
Yea, more pleaſant then the beſt wine, thy grace each ſmels more ſweet then ſpices

11 Thy lips, thy Prieſts, ſweet Doctrines bring, out of the word, where they lay hid
Before, as in the Honey-combe,
Honey, till it dropt out, lye did:
And hereof more ſtore ſtill reſerv'd, and of good milke alſo they have,
Whereby to feed thy babes weak in knowledge,
when e're their hunger doth it crave.
The righteouſneſſe where-with thou art,
as with moſt pure garments, cloathed,
A fragrant ſmell unto me yeeld,
as Lebanon when moſt bleſſed.
12 As a garden moſt delightfull, incloſed is my ſiſter Spouſe, Gainſt filthy luſts, and as a ſpring,
from fouling feet ſhut up in houſe:
And unto God alone thy heart is kept, and to none other thing,
But as by him permitted is,
he for his deare thee thus ſealing.
13 If in my Garden yee would know what trees there be, Pomgranats grow,
And all-fruit-pleaſant-bearing trees,
Camphir and Spiknard on a row, 14 Spiknard and Saffron, Calamus, and Cinamon, Myrrhe, Aloes,
All trees of the beſt Frankincenſe, and all moſt ſweet ſmelling ſpices:
Beleevers which doe beare good fruit, in great abundance all as one,
Making ſweet ſmells unto the Lord,

15 A fountaine of Gardens, a well of living waters, and ſtreames from Lebanon.

16 Awake (O North wind) and come (O South) blow upon my Garden, that the ſpices thereof may flow out, let my beloved come into his Garden, and eate his pleaſant fruites.

by prayers and devotion.
15 And from my Spouſe, as a fountaine, full many Gardens multiply,
As one faire ſpring from Lebanon,
ſtreameth o're all both farre and nigh.
16 Now that the Spice of which I ſpake before, may yeeld the ſweeter ſcent, Yee Winds, both North and South, upon my Garden for to blow be bent:
That is, thou Holy Ghoſt worke ſo, by meanes both harſh and gentle to,
That all ſweet graces may the more utter themſelves, as thou canſt doe.
O my beloved, if thou doſt ſuch pleaſure take in thy Garden,
Feed and keep here I thee beſeech, and alwayes be my ſafe Warden.

CHAP. V.

Verſe 1.

I Am come into my Garden, (my Siſter, my Spouſe) I have gathered my myrrhe with my ſpice, I have eaten my honey-combe with my honey, I have drunke my wine with my milk; eat (O friends) and drinke, yea, drinke abundantly (O beloved)

2 I ſlept, but my heart waketh, it is the voyce of my beloved that knocketh, ſaying, Open to me (my Siſter, my Love, my Dove, my undefiled) for my head is filled with dew, and my lockes with the drops of the night.

3 I have put off my Coate, how ſhould I put it on? I have waſhed my feet, how ſhould I defile them?

4 My beloved put in his hand

Verſe 1.

INto my Church, as my Garden,
I'me come, and doe now delight ſo,
In praiſe and prayer, as in ſpice,
from which a fragrant ſcent doth flow,
As honey and the honey-combe, wine and milke to taſte are ſweet
In teaching, when ſweet food that's hid in word, is given in gloſſes meet,
And unto babes, and weake in faith,
Soule-nouriſhing milke and comfort:
Wherefore my friends, yee faithfull be with me, all merry in like ſort.
2 But Lord, this my proſperity makes me to ſinne ſecurely, Although my heart be not ſecure, and judgements on me come hereby,
And with judgements knocking, I heard the voyce of Chriſt my Saviour, Saying, Ariſe my ſiſter Spouſe, and ſleep no more, no not one houre,
For this I ſtand here wooing thee, drenched with wet my lockes and head,
Till thou riſeſt, and doore to me of thy hard heart be opened.
3 So long I have without Law lived, as one in naked bed ſecure,
That now thy Law no more then bands
moſt harſh, woe's me, can I endure,
My conſcience eke is waſht, and wipt from all the ſence of horrid ſinne;
Should I then now come to thee that calſt, and live no more therein.
4 When voyce and knocking mov'd me not,

the

at the hole of the doore, and my bowels were moved for him.

5 I roſe up to open to my beloved, my hands dropped with myrrhe, and my fingers with ſweet-ſmelling myrrhe upon the handles of the locke.

6 I opened to my beloved, but my beloved had withdrawne himſelfe, and was gone, my ſoule failed when he ſpake, I ſought him, but could not finde him; I called, but he gave me no anſwer.

7 The Watch-men that went about the City found me, they ſmote me, they wounded me, the Keepers of the wall tooke away my vail from me.

8 I charge you, (O yee daughters of Jeruſalem) if yee finde my beloved, that yee tell him, I am ſick of love.

9 What is thy beloved more then another beloved (O thou faireſt amongſt Women?) what is thy beloved, that thou doſt ſo charge us?

10 My beloved is white, and ruddy, the chiefeſt amongſt ten thouſand.

11 His head is as the moſt fine gold, his lockes are buſhy, and black as a Raven.

12 His eyes as Doves eyes by the rivers of water, waſhed with milke, and fitly ſet, or ſet in fulneſſe.

13 His cheekes are as a bed of ſpices, as ſweet flowers, his lips like Lillies, dropping ſweet ſmelling myrrhe.

14 His hands are as goldrings ſet with the Berill, his belly is a bright ivory, overlaid with Saphirs.

the ſpirit of my beloved.
Breake ope my heart with mighty hand,
in ſin once hardned, and entered.
5 I then to ope the doore aroſe, and went the Iron bolt unto,
My hands dropt myrrhe when I began by good ſweet ſacrifice to doe.

6 My heart I opened, but no love could I then ſee, which pierc'd my heart
With ſorrowes great, for he was gone, and had himſelfe with-drawn apart;
I prayed, but his anſwer to give he me deny'd then for to grant.

7 His Miniſters I went unto,
but they into me ſtruck more feare,
For when I heard them preach againſt ſin, with great threats, it touched me, Who had ſo vilely liv'd; and when they ſhew'd ſome hypocrites to be 8 That ſeem'd good hearers. But O yee, that in Gods houſe doe miniſter,
On me ſome pitty take, and ſhew him, when before him yee appeare
To pray, that I with upright heart doe love him now, and to him ſeeke;
Being, untill he manifeſt his love to me, moſt deadly ſick.
9 But canſt thou tell how excellent he is of whom thou ſpeak'ſt? I can.

10 He is the chiefe of ten thouſands, hee's white and red, both God and man;

11 He is a King moſt glorious,
he is moſt mighty and moſt ſtrong,
For that a golden head, for this long lockes as Sampſons were when grown.
12 As the white Doves by waters ſet, in ſtreames ſo cleare doe waſh their eyes;
So he in midſt of Churches is,
as waſht in milke, having pure eyes Set on all thoſe that full of grace are in their hearts, as delighted,
That in time of danger and need,
for them it may be provided.
13 As for his cheekes they are moſt faire, as beds of ſpice and flowers gay,
Words from his mouth loving and pure,
ſtilling as myrrhe, moſt ſweet I ſay:
14 His hands with good workes, as with rings of gold with Berill ſet are bright;
His belly through compaſſion
As Saphirs gives an heavenly light;

15 His leggs are as pillars of marble, ſet upon ſockets of gold, his countenance is as Lebanon, excellent as the Cedars.

16 His mouth is moſt ſweet, he is altogether comely, this is my beloved, and this is my friend (O daughters of Jeruſalem.)

15 His leggs as Marble pillars ſtand, on ſockets of the fineſt gold,
The Prophets that in their writings of him all circumſtances told:
His countenance as choyſe Cedars in Lebanon, that doe excell all trees, for ſo he higher is, then all Kings that on earth doe dwell, 16 From his ſweet mouth all graces come, in all his parts he is lovely;
That my beloved is (O Jewes)
why then doy' not unto him fly.

CHAP. VI.

Verſe 1.

WHither is thy beloved gone (O thou faireſt amongſt women?) whither is thy beloved turned aſide, that we may ſeeke him with thee?

2 My beloved is gone downe to his garden, to the beds of ſpices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather Lillies.

3 I am my beloveds, and my beloved is mine; he feedeth amongſt the Lillies.

4 Thou art beautifull my Love, as Tirzah; comely as Jeruſalem, excellent as an army with banners.

5 Turne away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me; thy haire is as a flocke of Goates that appeare from Gilead.

6 Thy teeth are like a flock of ſheep, that goe up from the waſhing, whereof every one beareth twins, and there is not one barren amongſt them.

Verſe 1.

WHither is thy beloved gone?
whither is he turned aſide?
O thou woman moſt faire, that we with thee may ſeeking him abide?

2 Into his Church, as his Garden, he's gone to beds of ſpices ſweet,
In grace delighting, and gathers thence pure ſoules from corps that fleet;

3 Doſt thou in me ſo much delight
(O my beloved) take? loe I Am thine, as thou art mine; feed then with me, and live with thy Lilly.
4 Thou art (my Love) moſt beautifull, as Tirzah, Cit' in Iſrael,
And comely as Jeruſalem
in Judah, which all know full well;
An army with banners diſplay'd,
by Captaine ranked and filed That's moſt expert, by force of foes that it cannot be reſiſted.
5 Thy longing eyes turne now away,
(my Love) with me thou doſt prevaile,
In ſeeking me as at a loſſe,
thou ſhalt no longer weep and waile,
The haires that be upon thy head are faire, as Goates on Gilead,
I meane thy meditations,
and ſtudies on my ſacred Read.
6 Thy Miniſters, that by ſtudying prepare food for thy babes aright,
As ſheep new ſhorne, and waſhed cleane,
by a new life ſhining in light.
Not one is like a barren wombe,
but full of knowledge, and pregnant,
And what they know they doe bring forth, out

out of both' Old and new Teſtament.

7 As apeece of a Pomgranate, are thy temples within thy lockes.

7 The Pomegranate is not more full of kernels, and moſt pleaſant meat,
Then bee their heads of food divine, of which the faithfull their fill eat.

8 There are threeſcore Queens, and foureſcore Concubines, and Virgins without number.

8 But when my Spouſe, my Church, I praiſe,
'twixt them I put great difference:
For ſome are Concubines, decked with knowledge, but no conſcience.
Such when I look upon, I love for civill things, and knowledge great:
Yet being ſtill ſervants to ſin,
they pleaſe me not, as doth my meat.
Again, ſome fooliſh Virgins are,
who neither grace nor knowledge have:
Some Queens, that are indu'd with both,
theſe few; they, numberleſſe and brave.

9 My Dove, my undefiled is but one, ſhee is the onely daughter of her Mother, ſhee is the choyce one of her that bare her; the daughters ſaw her and bleſſed her; the Queens and the Concubines, and praiſed her.

9 My Dove, my Church undefiled, ſole Daughter of her Mother is;
The Church that from beginning was,
whom Daughters all do praiſe and bliſſe.

10 Who is this that looketh out as the morning, fair as the Moon, clear as the Sun, terrible as an army with Banners?

10 And now, as morning bright doth ſhee, after a black dark night appear:
The Moon it ſelf is not more fair,
nor yet the ſhining Sun more clear:
Through righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, whereby ſhee's alſo terrible
As Armies ſtrong to all ſuch foes, as with her now dare to meddle.

11 I went downe into the Garden of Nuts, to ſee the fruits of the Valleys, to ſee whether they flouriſhed, and the Pomgranate budded.

11 Downe to my Nut-Garden I went, to Jewiſh Church, my ſelf hiding:
In that pure Virgin Maries womb,
as kernell in Nut-ſhell lying.
Down to the Valleys fruitfull ſoyle,
the Jews to ſee my choyce Vineyard,
And Vines growing there, and whether fruit they had, and Pomgranate hard.

12 Or ever I was aware, my ſoule made mee like the chariots of Aminadab.

12 But fruit then none could I there find, at which I was ſore perplexed,
To think ere long how they ſhould bee
by Romans army deſtroyed.

13 Return, return, O Shulamite, return, return, that wee may look upon thee: what will yee ſee in the Shulamite as a company of two Armies?

13 But now to thee (O Jew) I ſay in peacefull wiſe return, return:
From Eaſt to Weſt, from North to South, unto my faith return, return:
But if to peace with God, return
ſhee doth, a goodly ſight to ſee:
Two Kingdomes, as two great armies,
one triumphant Church to bee.

CHAP. VII.

Verse 1.

How beautiful are thy feet with shooes? (O Princes Daughter) the joynts of thy thighs are like Jewels, the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

2 Thy navel is like a round Goblet that wanteth no liquor, thy belly is like an heap of wheat set about with Lillies.

3 Thy two breasts like two young Roes that are twins.

4 Thy neck is like a tower of Ivory, thine eyes like the Fish-pooles in Heshbon, by the gate of Beth-rabbim, thy nose like the tower of Lebanon, that looketh towards Damascus.

5 Thine head upon thee is like Carmel, the haire of thine head like purple, the King is held in thy galleries.

6 How faire and pleasant art thou (O Love) for delights?

7 This thy stature is like to a pleasant Palm-tree, thy breasts like clusters of grapes.

8 I said, I wil goe up to the Palm-tree, I will take hold of the boughes thereof, now also shal thy breasts be as clusters of the Vine, the smell of thy nose as the smell of apples.

9 The roofe of thy mouth like the best wine for my belo-

Verse 1.

O Childe of God, for so thou art that turn'st from unbeliefe and sin,
Thy desires and affections faire are, as feet faire shooes within:
And thy conjunction in one with Gentiles in the faith, truly Is precious, as jewels be,
with skilfull hands wrought cunningly.

2 Thy navel like a Goblet round, with good liquor repleniſhed,
Thy belly like an heap of wheat,
a Graine whereon the best doe feed, Doe represent our women great with Childe, and bringing forth yet more Lilly-white children, which doe stand about her table round, good store.

3 Thy breasts, that is, both Testaments, from which thy Ministers doe fill Themselves with milke, thy babes to feed, like two young Roes, are ever still.

4 Thy neck, the strength whereby thy head and breasts together are joyned, Is white, and strong, as a tower of Ivory that's composed;
Thine eyes as Fish-pooles in Heshbon, that is, the word-Preachers all,
Whereby as in a Looking-glasse faults thou mayst see, both great and small:
And Looking-glasses of the Word, even now in all mens houses are,
And so sagacious they are made,
as of vile sin to voyd the snare.

5 Thy head wherein thou glorieſt, that's Christ, is as fruitful Carmel, Thy haires, thy thoughts, upon his Bloud ornaments are, as is purple;
The places where thy members meet for Divine worship are to me
Most delightfull, and there I am held as spectator, and will be.

6 How faire art thou, my Love, and eke by me how much delighted in?

7 High like Palm-tree for heavenly minde, thy fruits, sweet Grapes, soule free from sin;

8 And for to purchase, and to make a Church so glorious to me;
I'le to the tree, the Crosse, ascend
Victor, holding branch of Palm-tree,
And now thy breasts, both Testaments, like bunches of sweet Grapes shall be.
And eke thy breath, the which is drawne by nose and mouth shall smell sweetly.

9 As much delighted in preaching as in wine is thy beloved,

And

ved, that goeth downe pleasantly, making the lips of them that are asleep to speake.

10 I am my beloveds, and his desire is toward me.

11 Come my beloved, let us goe forth into the field, let us lodge in the Villages.

12 Let us goe up into the Vine-yards, let us see whether the Vine flourisheth, whether the tender Grape puts forth, whether the Pomgranate puts forth, there will I give thee my love.

13 The Mandrakes give a smell, and at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, which I have laid up for thee, (O my beloved) both new and old.

And hereby going downe with joy, lips of the dead are opened,
To sing unto the Lord in Psalmes, and Hymnes, and songs Spirituall.
10 For thus I my beloveds am, and to me is his desire all.
11 We thine Apostles fil'd with joy, as with best wine, are now all bent
Amongst the Gentiles to preach thee.
where we shall have entertainment.
12 And after this to thy Vine-yard, barren of old, the word shall come,
And it shall spring, bud, and fruit beare,
I meane the Jewes, fore Day of Doome,
And then my Love, unto my Church shall more then ever yet appeare,
By peace and joy that I will give to all that worship me, and feare.
13 The Man-drakes which doe grow in field, and Gentiles graces signifie,
A sweeter scent now yeeld, and Jewes
in their owne City fructifie,
And bring forth fruits both new and old,
the New, of faith and charity,
Old, of observance to Gods Lawes,
th' end glory and felicity.

CHAP. VIII.

Verse 1.

O That thou wert my brother, that sucke the breasts of my Mother, when I should finde thee without I would kisse thee, yet I should not be despised.

2 I would lead thee, and bring thee into my mothers house, who would instruct thee, I would cause thee to drinke of spiced wine, of the juyce of my Pomgranats.

3 His left hand should be under my head, and his right hand imbrace me.

4 I charge you (O yee daughters of Jerusalem, that yee stirre not up, nor awake my Love, untill he please.

5 Who is this that cometh up from the wilderneſſe, leaning upon her beloved? I raised thee up under the Apple-tree, there thy Mother brought thee forth, there she brought thee forth that bare thee.

Verse 1.

AND now that I this blisse fore-see, what else can be my hearts desire,
But's Incarnation to see?
this above all doe I require.
As then my brother in the flesh,
I should him love, and finde, and kisse,
Submitting to his faith, and yet
I should not be despis'd for this.
2 And though my Mothers house, the Jewes, shall cast thee out, yet I will bring Thee in againe, and then she shall teach me, and I to thee will sing,
And thou in this shalt delight more,
then in a cup of sweetest juyce
Of Pomgranats, when thereunto is added much of the best juyce.
3 This done, he with right hand
imbraceth me, and holds my head;
4 With left, in this posture of rest
O Jewes, him by sin to wake dread.
5 And now me thinkes I see the Jewes,
after long desolation,
And wandring in the Wilderneſſe of errour in opinion, Turning to Christ, and not trusting to workes, but to his passion,
And the 'lone merit of the same for Justice and Salvation.

Thee

Thee here oppreſt with miſery, for deſpiſing me, and my Croſſe,
I found as the old Synagogue had brough thee forth, ſinfull and loſt.

6 Set me as a ſeale upon thine heart, as a ſeale upon thine arme, for Love is ſtrong as Death, Jealouſie is cruell as the Grave, the coales thereof are as the coales of fire, that have a moſt vehement flame.

6 As doth a ſeale impreſſion make, ſo let my love upon thy heart,
And arme alſo, love me and mine,
that nought here-from may thee divert,
And if thy love to me be great as it muſt be, Death's not ſo ſtrong,
The ſtouteſt bodies for to kill;
As it, the fleſh though liv'd in long,
Nor jealouſy like burning coales,
Or hot fiery flames rage more,
Or Grave-devouring all comers,
Then have of Chriſt 'gainſt paramore.

7 Much Water cannot quench love, neither can the flouds drowne it; if a man would give all the ſubſtance of his houſe for love, it would be contemned.

7 Quench love of Chriſt no waters can,
nor flouds of perſecution,
And if worldly goods be preferr'd to love to ceaſe ſh'would ſpit thereon.

8 We have a little ſiſter, and ſhe hath no breaſts, what ſhall we doe for her in the day that ſhe ſhall be ſpoken for.

8 And now that Jewes converted are, a Siſter's yet for to come in,
To make my Church compleat and full,
all the Gentiles living in ſinne,
And unbeliefe, and breaſts wanting,
from which of my faith ſuckt may be,
The milke in time of her calling, now neare, for her what doe may we?

9 If ſhe be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of ſilver, if a doore, we will incloſe her with boards of Cedar.

9 If that a wall ſhe be, on her we'l build a palace of ſilver,
If firme in faith, ſhe holdeth out a faire houſe for God that made her;
And if thy heart be like unto a doore, open to inſtruction, Incloſed thou ſhalt ſurely be with Cedar of incorruption.

10 I am a wall, and my breaſts as towers, then was I in his eyes as one finding favour.

10 For firmneſſe I am like a wall, through Gods good favour unto me,
My breaſts alſo through my Teachers, are growne as towers great to be.

11 Salomon had a Vine-yard in Baal-Hamon, and he let it out to Keepers, every one to bring for the fruit a thouſand peices of ſilver.

11 As Salomon a Vine-yard had, a moſt fruitfull ſoyle let out,
For ſilver peices a thouſand to Husband-men dwelling about.

12 My vine-yard which is mine is before me, thou (O Salomon*) muſt have a thouſand, and the Keepers thereof two hundred.*

12 So I, the Lord, a Vine-yard have, the which is mine in my preſence,
Thou Prince of peace a thouſand haſte,
each Keeper hath two hundred pence,
That is, to thee all praiſe is given, rewards to them in heaven above.

13 Thou that dwelleſt in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voyce, cauſe me to heare it.

13 The way to which is for thy friends, the voyce of thy preaching to love,
And I, my Spouſe, delight to heare thy voyce of ſupplication, Beloved, doſt thou ſo, I pray
now haſten thy ſalvation.

14 Make haſte my beloved, be as the Roe, or the young Hart, upon the mountaines of ſpices.

The end of the Paraphraſe of the Song of Salomon.

Παλιν ὁμοία ἐστὶν ἡ βασιλεία τῶν οὐρανῶν θησαυρῷ κεκρυμμένῳ ἐν τῷ ἀγρῷ· ὃν ἄνθρωπος εὑρὼν ἔκρυψε, καὶ ἀπὸ τῆς χαρᾶς αὐτοῦ ὑπάγει, καὶ πάντα ὅσα ἔχει πωλεῖ, καὶ ἀγοράζει τὸν ἀγρὸν ἐκεῖνον.

The Epiſtle Dedicatory.

To the moſt Excellent the Theophili of the Nobility and Gentry of England.

IT was the complaint of Jeremiah the Prophet of old, under the Law, that when hee had gone through the ſtreets of Jeruſalem to ſeek out one godly man, and found none, he came to the great ones, but neither did he finde any amongſt them, but that they all had caſt off the yoke, and broken the bands. And the Apoſtle Paul in the time of the Goſpel ſaith, Not many wiſe, not many great, or mighty, not many noble are called. If it were with the preſent noble, wiſe, and great ones of England, as of old, my dedication of this Booke would prove a nullity. But under the Goſpel, it is not ſaid none, but few ſuch are called, wherefore Luke could now finde out a moſt excellent Theophilus to dedicate his Goſpel, and Acts of the Apoſtles unto, and the Apoſtle John, an elect Lady, and her children, to write his ſecond Epiſtle unto; and I doubt not but in theſe laſt and worſt dayes there be ſome ſuch, to whom both my work and dedication will be acceptable, that is, true lovers of God, and of his things, as the word Theophili ſignifieth: and my deſires are, that theſe my poor labours may be a means to increaſe the number of them, which I doubt not by Gods bleſſing, but they will, if with the great Steward of Candaces, the Queen of Ethiopia, they would bee pleaſed at all ſpare times to be reading the holy Scriptures, and take up Philip by Gods providence brought unto them, to interpret all things therein contained, yea the moſt obſcure, and hard to bee underſtood, whereof St. Peter ſaith, there be many by ſome for want of doing thus, perverted to their owne damnation, that is, by ſuch as being private perſons, preſume, to give the ſenſe of their owne heads, contrary to that which they are ſpecially warned by him to take notice of, that no Scripture is of private interpretation. And why ſhould not all Noble men, and Gentlemen, Ladies, and Gentlewomen be pleaſed to doe thus, ſeeing there are none ſo great, but if they could, they would be greater, and more honourable? and to attaine to this, the onely way is to ſearch the Scriptures, for which the Spirit of God giveth this teſtimony to the Bereans, that they were more Noble, then thoſe of Theſſalonica. And to ſpeak truly, be ye never ſo great in this world, til ye come this way to be innobled, although ye be here called honorable, or worſhipful, yet ye Ioh.8.33,34. are not ſo much as truely free, but in bondage, according to that of our Lord, when the Jewes ſaid unto him, We be Abrahams ſeed, and were never in bondage to any man, he that committeth ſinne, is the ſervant of ſinne, but if ye continue in my word, ye are my Diſciples, and yee ſhall know the truth, and the truth ſhall make you free. And what man or woman living is there, that is not a ſinner? and if a ſinner, a bondman till he be made free, and this freedome is not attained, but by abiding in the word, and abiding ſo, as to know the truth therein contained, and this is not obvious to every ſpectatour, that doth onely now and then look upon it, and read, and heare it of courſe, for it Matth. 13.44. is as a treaſure hid in a field, and lying deep within the ground, which cannot be found and gotten, but by much ſeeking and labouring. Prov.2.3. If thou ſeekeſt for knowledge therefore, ſaith Salomon, as for ſilver, and ſearcheſt for her, as for hid treaſure, then thou ſhalt underſtand, &c. And agreeable to this, ſpeaketh Auguſtine, ſaying, Auguſt. Deus ſub figuris & obſcuris veritatem ſuam occultavit ut à laboroſis tantum, non ab otioſis reperiatur. And thus the excellency of his truth is intimated, becauſe we count that vile and baſe, ſaith Caſſiodor, that comes to Caſſiodor. us with eaſe, but that excellent, which is not without great difficulty attained.

But to returne againe to the freedome, of which I ſpake before, to ſtir up all you great ones to affect it, as the Theophilus-Nobility and Gentry doe. Hear ſome notable paſſages out of that noble Tutor of Nero the Emperour, who was no profeſſed Chriſtian, but a Seneca. heathen Roman.

Many men, ſaith he, are fools, that flye ſervile food, & ſervile cloaths, but not ſervile manners, for ſuch may truly be called fools, who affect the reputation of nobility, but the true Nobility, which ſtands in good manners, they affect not, nor labour after. Again, if thou ſeeſt a Noble, or Gentleman praiſe thy parents, if rich, thy fortune, if fair, ſtay but a while, and thou ſhalt be neither of them all, viz. when death comes. But if thou beeſt indued with good manners, this makes thee praiſe-worthy indeed.

Laſtly, He that hath no nobility, but from his parents, hath no cauſe to glory therein, whether they were good or evill; if they were good, true is the ſaying of the Philoſopher, Nobility periſheth in him, which is in the beginning onely; but if evill, what joy can he have hereof, being now a firebrand in hell. It is better to come of poor parents that are now in heaven, then of rich in hell.

Now for further information, that ye may know when wee are truly noble, bee pleaſed to take notice, that this ſtands in three things, and ſheweth it ſelfe in three ſigns. The three things wherein it ſtandeth, is firſt to be wiſe in point of Government. 2. To keep fidelity to God, as they would have their tenants and ſervants doe to them. 3. To humble themſelves to God, and to give him all due obedience, as they would have their ſervants and inferiours doe them.

1 King.3. Touching the firſt, it was the prayer of Salomon, wherewith God was ſo well pleaſed, that he might be indued with wiſdome to goe goe in and out before the people, over whom God had ſet him, and both Kings and Judges are admoniſhed hereof by King David, ſaying Be wiſe ye kings and Judges of the earth, and ſhewed how they may be ſo, viz. by ſerving the Lord with fear, one part of whoſe ſervice to this end is to read in his word continually, as is ſhewed Deut. 17. 19. that Kings ſhould doe, to learne to feare God, and to doe his will in all things, and beſt to governe, for want of which learning, ſome in ſundry times have brought both themſelves and people to great miſeries, whilſt they have not been intent to ſuch ſtudies, but either to increaſe their wealth and honour, or to fill themſelves with pleaſure in drinking, whoring, gaming, following ſports and pleaſures, and delicious meats: like Sardanapalus, whoſe poſie was, Ede, bibe, lude, dormi, poſt mortem nulla voluptas. And why doe any of you great and rich ones, or any others ſo, but becauſe yee thinke, that there is none other pleaſure, but what yee have the ſenſe of in this life, as it is ſaid in the Fable, that the Swine being invited amongſt other beaſts to the Lions feaſt, would not goe becauſe there were no dregs there. And it is ſaid of the Welch of old, that they thought there could be no ſuch pleaſure in heaven, becauſe there is no ſtrong drink there. Pſal. 2.

But herein ye are like unto one that hath an Ague, or a Greenſickneſſe, to whoſe taſte nothing is pleaſant, but that which is worſt and moſt hurtfull to him, who yet, if hee recovereth his health, comes to finde more pleaſure in good and wholeſome meats, and is aſhamed to think, that he loved things ſo vile and baſe before; ſo the ſoule that is ſo much affected to the vaine and ſinfull pleaſures of this life, appears hereby to be out of temper very much, but if ſhe hath once recovered her health, and be like to live eternally, ſhee abhorreth from, and is greatly aſhamed of, and grieved to thinke of ſuch pleaſures, and her feeding thereupon ſo long a time; and now all her delight is in the ſincere milke, and ſolid wholeſome meat of the word, as it was with Job, who profeſſed, that he eſteemed of Gods word more then of his appointed food; and David more then the honey-comb, or any worldly treaſures; and Salomon repenting, cryeth out upon his owne fooliſhneſſe and bruitiſhneſſe, whilſt hee was tranſported with carnal plea ures under the name of Agur, ſaying that he had not then the underſtanding of a man in him: but in extolling the word now he ſaith, Every word of God is pure, that is pretious, and delightfull, as a cordiall to my ſoule, and againe having largely diſcourſed of all things that are eſteemed much of in this world, he concludeth that they are all vanity, and that to feare God, and keep his Commandements is the whole duty of man, which who ſo doth not, but tranſgreſſeth there-againſt, although but in his ſecret thoughts, ſhall therefore be brought to judgement: But hee that fears God ſhall have the joy of the Spouſe in her Bridegroome Chriſt, treated of in a Propheticall and heavenly manner in his Song of Songs. And who is ſo great that may not well thinke any of theſe three worthy to be hearkned unto, and imitated, for as David and Salomon, ſo moſt probably, as I have ſhewed in my Preface upon Job, he was a noble King: Job 23. 12. Prov. 30. 2. Eccleſ. 12, 13.

Verſ 5. 6. Having hitherto ſpoken of himſelf as a Sheep, now he concludes as a faithfull and beloved man, having his Table by Gods providence fully furniſhed, his head anointed with oil, and his cup overflowing, intimating by all theſe a full and proſperous Eſtate, having not only for neceſſity of Life, but for delight, and wherewith to be beneficiall to others, and that in ſpite of his Enemies, who laboured to bring him to miſery and want. And hereupon he reſts confident to be always proſecuted with good, and voweth thankfullneſs accordingly, by his much frequenting the houſe of God to praiſe and to make Oblations to him always, during life, Hebr. To the length of Dayes, And this he calls a dwelling in his houſe: For after our ſerving of God diligently in his houſe in this world, we ſhall dwell in his Heavenly Tabernacle or houſe for ever and ever. And this was lookt at by David, when he promiſed himſelf good and mercy all the Days of his Life: For he was not confident that he ſhould have continuall proſperity without any intercourſe of Adverſity for ever, becauſe he ſhewed before, that his thoughts were upon walking in the ſhadow of death, as knowing greivous Afflictions to be ſtill incident unto him, but he beleived that God who had hitherto been ſo good unto him as to deliver him from them all, would likwiſe from time to time deliver him, for which he voweth this thankfulneſs, to dwell in his houſe continually, as hath been ſayd.

PSAL. XXIV.

A Pſalm of David whereunto is added in Sept. prima Sabbati.

Auguſt. Baſil. AND this is followed by Auguſt. and Baſil although it be not Hebr. and as Baſil ſayth, not in ſome Greek Copyes. They alſo expound it accordingly of Chriſt, who roſe from Death the firſt day of the week, and aſcended into Heaven. And whether this be added to the Title or no, the Verſ. 1. Expoſition is not to be miſliked which referreth it to Chriſt and to his Church. For now indeed the whole world is the Lords, and the Inhabitants meant by the fulneſs thereof, becauſe that whereas the Jews only were in times paſt his peculiar People, all Nations were made his, by the preaching of the Goſpel: Whereas Calvin Expounds it as ſpoken to pull down the

Calvin. pride of the Jews, who did bear themſelves aloft upon this, that they only were the Lords people, by ſhewing, that not only Judea and the inhabitants thereof were his, but the whole Earth and the Inhabitants of all the World alſo, he ſayth ſomewhat indeed, but not enough to ſet forth the full ſenſe: For what though all the Earth and all men be the Lords by Creation, what is this to abate the Jews pride, if they only were from amongſt them all choſen, and all others left as Reprobates to perish in their ſins. But to tel them of Gods taking in all Nations to be his people, and that none ſhall dwell in the holy mountain of the Lord, but ſuch as are of pure hearts and clean hands, might well humble them, being ſo wicked and filthy through licentious living as they were: But what is meant by this, He hath founded it upon the Verſ. 2. waters or Seas, and eſtabliſhed it upon the flouds: And what is this to the Argument in hand, if the taking in of the Gentiles to be his people, be here propheſied of? For the meaning, the word עַל ſignifieth Above, and the meaning is, whereas at the firſt, the Waters covered all, yea the higheſt mountains, God by his almighty povver hath ſet it above them and keepeth it above them, that they neither do nor can overflovv it any more, although there be Waters enough to drovvn all again. And this is no leſs then a continuall miracle, and vvorthy to be predicated to his praiſe throughout all the World. Job. 38. 6. 7. &c. to V. 11. The Lord hereby magnifieth his power exceedingly, as paſſing all the underſtanding of man, how it comes to paſs that the Earth hangeth in the midſt of the World, having nothing but inviſible foundations to ſuport it or to keep the Waves of the Sea from overflowing it, for they are kept in by nothing but the power of his command within their ſhoares, as within doors and bars. For the agreement with the argument in hand, Auguſtine ſaith, Hereby is myſtically meant, that he hath ſet his Church above the waters of adverſities, ſo that how high ſoever they ariſe, it is kept ſtil above them in ſafety, and ſo ſhall be for evermore, or it may agree thus, he will take in all Nations to be his in grace, becauſe all be his Creatures, he made them ſo admirable an Habitation at the firſt, and upholds it ſtil, ſhewing hereby how much he regards them, therefore he wil now extend his favour further towards them, by taking them in to be his people. Auguſt.

But ſith it is the good pleaſure of God thus to deal by all Nations, it is worth the inquiring, who amongſt all theſe ſhal dwel in the holy Mountain of the Lord, for all ſhall not; For many are called but few choſen. He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, &c. A paſſage much like unto that, Pſal. 15. But here it is added, He ſhall receive bleſſing from the Lord, and righteouſneſſe from the God of his ſalvation. That is, The bleſſing of aſcending and abiding in the holy place, and juſtification by faith, in his Saviour making him worthy. Verſ. 3. 4. Verſ. 5.

This is the generation of them that ſeek thy face, Jacob. That is, the true ſeed of Jacob or Iſrael, who ſought by prayer and ſaw God, when he wreſtled with him, whence the place where was called Peniell, from ſeeing God, according to which it is ſaid, John 1. 43. An Iſraelite indeed, in whom there is no guile. And it is ſaid, This is the generation. To denote a Generation which is from above of the ſpirit, as all others be from beneath of the fleſh, as John 3. And becauſe Chriſt is the head of this Generation, having ſaid that they ſhall dwel in the Mountain of the LORD; that is, Heaven on high, he foreſeeing in the ſpirit, Chriſts aſcention into Heaven, as the firſt fruits, and the opener of the way to all his members, calleth to the Heavens by a Proſopopeia. Verſ. 6. Rom. 5.

Lift up your heads (O yee Gates) and be lifted up yee everlaſting doors, and the King of glory ſhall come in. For Chriſt is the King of Glory, and he together with the Father is ſo mighty, For all power, ſaith he, Is given to me in Heaven and in Earth. And he doubteth the ſame ſpeech, for the joy that he had in the contemplation hereof; others I confeſſe are for another ſenſe, ſome that the Temple to be built by Solomon is meant, as Calvin, but becauſe thoſe Gates were not everlaſting, his comming into and filling the houſe in a cloud, cannot ſtand: Some, Chriſts entring into the Virgins Womb, ſome his coming and dwelling in our hearts by faith: But becauſe it agreeth beſt with the premiſes to expound it, as hath been ſaid, I reſt in that. Verſ. 7. Calvin.

PSAL. XXV.

TO thee O Lord I lift up my Soule. David praying here unto God, teacheth us in his example, when we pray, to do it with our hearts lifted up and not our voice only, as Hannah alſo did, and ſo we ſhall be ſure that praying in faith, as in the next words, we ſhall be heard and not be left to confuſion; but they who ſin by being enemies to us, and perſecuting us without cauſe, ſhall be confounded, as is meant by the words of Verſe 3. Verſ. 1.

Remember not the ſinnes of my youth. That he might obtain mercy, he prayed for the pardon of his ſinnes, not ſleightly, or looking at them which he had more lately committed, but even in his youth, intimating, That the ſinnes of youth if they be not pardoned, ſhall indanger the Soule as Verſ. 7.

wel as ſinnes of age; that young perſons may not think, that they may follow the luſts of their hearts and the delights of their eyes, and in ſo doing go ſcot-free, but know, that if for theſe, by turning to God and praying, they attain not forgiveneſſe, they ſhall be brought to judgment, and that no man can expect favour from God, except his ſinnes be firſt pardoned.

Verſ. 9. He will direct the poor. That is, The poor in ſpirit, that think themſelves ſuch, in reſpect of all riches of goodneſſe.

Verſ. 14. The ſecret of the Lord to thoſe that feare him, to make them know his Covenant. As if he had ſaid, It is not wit nor learning, that can ſee into the ſecrets of God, or the myſteries of his Kingdome, but to ſuch as truly feare him, it is given to know them, and to have ſolid comfort therein, according to that, Matth. 13. 12. To you it is given to know the ſecrets of the Kingdome of Heaven. That we may feare God indeed, and in our hearts, and not in ſhew only: For Hypocrites ſhall Heare and not underſtand, ſee and not perceive the truth, but run into divers errours to their damnation: By the Covenant the ſame is meant that by the feare, and in calling it a ſecert, he ſheweth the excellency thereof, as Calvin noteth,

1 Cor. 1. it being ſo tranſcendent, that all humane knowledge is but fooliſhneſſe in compariſon of it.

Verſ. 16. I am alone and poor. See the like before, Pſal. 22. 20. I truſt not in any other help, nor have any other but God alone.

Verſ. 21. Perfection and rectitude ſhall keep me. Some, ſaith Calvin, Underſtand this, as if he had prayed to be kept from uſing wicked meanes to be revenged upon his enemies, as they did againſt him to do him miſcheiſe; but that he might ſtil walk by the perfect and right rule: This he rejects, and ſaith, That he alledgeth his integrity and right walking all this time, howſoever he had been provoked by his malicious enemies to paſſe theſe bounds, yet not truſting hereunto, but to Gods mercy; for which he addeth, Becauſe I truſt in thee. And this is the true ſenſe, and who ſo will upon good ground truſt in God to be ſaved in time of danger, when he calleth upon him, muſt likewiſe lay his foundation in ſincerity, which is here and elſwhere commonly called Perfection.

Verſ. 22. Deliver Iſrael, O God, from all ſtreights. Or Redeem. Intimating the oppreſſion of the Church, either preſent or to come; and in his example we are taught, that the miſeries of the Church, ſhould as much affect us as our own, and when ever we pray for our ſelves, we ſhould pray for the whole Iſrael of God alſo. Touching this Pſalme, there is one thing noted by Ainſworth, wherein it is ſingular, Viz. That the verſes begin according to the Hebrew Alphabet א ב ג &c. Denoting it to be of ſingular uſe for all men, as alſo, Pſal. 119. 34. 37. 111. 112. 145. For the ſame cauſe.

PSAL. XXVI.

Verſ. 1. JUdge me O Lord, becauſe I have walked in uprightneſſe, and have truſted in the Lord, I ſhall not ſlide or decline out of this way. The firſt words are a ſentence in themſelves, Judge me O Lord. And then the next are a reaſon, why he thus boldly appealeth to the Lord, he walked uprightly and truſted in him, and by this meanes was kept from going out of the right way, which made him confidently to ſet himſelfe before Gods judgment Seat: But he ſpeaks not thus, as meaning, that he was ſo exactly righteous in all things, as that his righteouſneſſe would hold, if he were brought to a ſtrict account before Gods judgment Seat, for in this ſenſe he confeſſeth, that no man living ſhal be juſtified, and therefore pleadeth, Enter not into judgment with thy Servant. But his appealing to God to be by him judged, judged, was in reſpect of his enemies, and his doings towards them, becauſe they detracted from him, and laid ſinnes to his charge, and by their malicious interpriſes, provoked him to render them evil for evil, ſee the like before, Pſal 17. 2. 18. 20. 21. But by all which they did wickedly againſt him, he was not moved to do the like unto them.

Examine my reines and my heart. That is, My moſt inward parts, that man cannot look into, but God can, and thus can no hypocrite ſay therefore, whoſe righteouſneſſe is no more then that which is open to every mans eye, but within he is ful of filthineſſe; and herein David ought to be a pattern to us to imitate, as we deſire to have boldneſſe and confidence before the Throne of Grace. Verſ. 2. Note.

I have not ſitten with vain perſons, &c. This is another point of uprightneſſe, not to conſort with wicked and vain or deceitful perſons, becauſe if a man conſorteth with ſuch, he ſhall hardly avoid defilement by their evil qualities, but learn to be vain of the vain, ſwearing of the ſwearer, lying and deceit of fraudulent perſons, &c. Verſ. 4. Note.

I will waſh my hands in innocency. Here he alludeth to the cuſtome of waſhing hands before ſacrificing, which all men commonly did, to ſignifie indeed how clean they endeavoured to keep themſelves from all impure actions, and if they had been through infirmity overtaken with ſin, that by the teares of repentance they did labour to waſh it away: For thus the Elders of any City, next unto a man found ſlain in the feild, were to waſh; and Pilate would ſhew his innocency by waſhing, in reſpect of Chriſts blood: Now all men waſhed therefore at ſuch times, but moſt only by an external waſhing, their hands being ful of blood, as is complained, Iſa. 1. 15. That is, They daily acting foule ſinnes herewith, of which they repented not to turn therefrom. This did not drive David away from Gods Altar, but he for his part waſhing in innocency, by keeping himſelfe clean from the ſinnes wherein they wallowed, as Swine in the mire, came confidently to ſerve him there: And therefore they are more ſcrupulous then David, who will have no communicating at the Lords Table nowadaies, becauſe the wicked intrude as well as the innocent and unblamable. Verſ. 6. Deut. 21. 6 Note.

I love the habitation of thy houſe. Having ſpoken of his compaſſing Gods Altar, and there praiſing him, now he ſheweth, what his affection was to his houſe, which was the Tabernacle, he dearely loved it, and to come thither to his worſhip and ſervice, and he calleth it the place of the dwelling of his glory, becauſe the glory of the Lord often appeared in the Tabernacle, and afterwards in the Temple built by Solomon: And who ſo is of Davids ſpirit loveth the Church likewiſe, or the place appointed for publick worſhip, for the Ordinances ſake that are there, the word and Sacraments, to work and confirme faith and all grace, becauſe our weakneſs doth and will alwaies need outward meanes of ſupport and ſtrengthening as long as we live, for no man is perfect in this life, but ſtrives after it, Phillippians 3. 9. Verſ. 8.

Gather not my Soule with ſinners, nor my life, &c. Sith I do thus ſincerely ſet my ſelfe to ſerve thee, and am ſeperated from the wicked and hypocrites in the courſe of my life, let my life alwaies be precious in thy ſight, and not left expoſed to deadly danger, as the lives of wicked and bloody men, who are threatned, that they ſhal not live out halfe their daies: And this indeed is the comfort of Gods Saints, that their blood is precious in his ſight. Verſ. 9.

My foot hath ſtood in the right, therefore will I bleſſe the. Some, ſaith Calvin, Expound this of Davids perſevering in the way of righteouſneſſe, which he approveth not; ſome of the ſafety wherein he was kept from his enemies, which he approves, but to me the firſt ſeems to be beſt, becauſe in ſpeaking, Verſe 1. of his not declining out of the way, he meaneth the way of juſt and righteous dealing, and Verſe 11. he ſaith, He walked in uprightneſſe. Verſ. 12.

uprightneſs. Wherefore moſt probably in ſaying, My foot hath ſtood in righteouſneſſe. He meaneth the ſame, and in acknowledgment that God gave him the grace ſo to do, when he had ſo many provocations by his enemies to the contrary, he praiſeth God therefore:

PSAL. XXVII.

Verſ. 1. THe Lord is my light and my ſalvation, of whom ſhall I be afraid, &c. David having prayed earneſtly to the Lord in the Pſalme before going, now triumpheth, as it were, over all his enemies, as being moſt confident by the experience of his favour ſhewed in former deliverances, that he ſhould ſtil ſtand by him and protect him, from all their malicious attempts againſt him, wherefore he cals him his light, to intimate his keeping him alive and ſafe from the darkneſſe of death, and his ſalvation, whereby he meaneth the ſame, as the next words, The ſtrength of my life, declare. And for his experience, whereupon he was thus confident, he ſpeaketh Verſe 2. And hereupon how void of all feare of his enemies he grew, Verſe 3. ſee the like, Pſal. 3.

Verſ. 4. David being in this ſafe condition, what doth he now think upon or look at, as his main ſcope, not as Pirrhus King of the Epirots, to ſit ſtil and to be merry, when he had overcome the Romans, and all his enemies, as he ſometime ſaid to Cyneas the Philoſopher, but to improve his reſt to perpetual piety, in going from day to day to Gods houſe, as Hannah is ſaid afterwards to have done, Luk. 2. And this firſt, For the ſolace of his Soule, in ſeeing the beauty of his Sanctuary. Secondly that he might ſtil be directed aright and be ſafe. Thirdly, That he might yet be more highly exalted in kingly Glory. Fourthly, For all this, as he ſhould have abundant cauſe, ſacrificing and ſinging Pſalmes to God without ceaſing Verſe, 5. 6.

Verſ. 8. My heart hath ſaid unto me, ſeek yee my face. He prayeth, Verſe 7. to be heard, and here he concludeth, My heart hath ſpoken to thee. That is, Thus I have prayed and that not without ground, for thou bidſt thy faithful Servants, Seek yee my face. Therefore I will ſeek it, and beleive that in ſeeking, thy face or favour ſhall be towards me, in approving and anſwering me as I deſire: And in this confidence we ſhould all ſeek Gods face, to have it turned towards us, as it is to all that cal upon him faithfully, and not away from us as from them, with whom he is angry, as Verſe 9. is further expreſſed: Ainſworth paraphraſeth thus upon the words; Thou haſt bidden us ſeek thy face, this my heart meditated upon, and upon this ground I will ſeek, ſeek it in my tentations: Calvin, My heart hath ſaid of thee, that this is thy invitation to thy Servants in diſtreſs. Seek yee my face, &c. The Reader may follow whether he pleaſeth, but I reſt in the firſt; and if it be demanded where God hath ſaid, Seek yee my face. He ſaid ſo in effect to Abraham, when he directed him to Mount Moriah, Gen. 22. To ſacrifice his Son, for then he ſhewed his face ſo to him, as that he departed ful of unſpeakable comfort, giving the place for the memory of it this name, Jehovah fireh, the Lord will be ſeen. And what was ſaid to Abraham by way of inviting him, is ſaid to all the faithful, who are his Children. And this muſt be the ground of our confidence in ſeeking to the Lord, Viz. his gracious inviting of us ſo to do, and this ſhould cauſe a readineſs in us to pray in all times of our trouble, yea and alwaies according to that precept, Pray continually.

Verſ. 10. Though, when, or for my Father and Mother forſake me, the Lord gathereth me. For the word כי may admit of either of theſe ſignifications: The meaning is not, that Davids Parents did in his troubles forſake him, for we may rather gather the contrary from the Hyſtory; but as Calvin wel wel expounds it, he meaneth, If it ſhould be ſo, hereby extolling Gods love and care above that of Parents, to whom their Children are moſt deare, as Iſa. 49.15. By gathering he meaneth, taking him to him, to ſave and cheriſh him.

Lead me in the path of right, becauſe of my enemies. That is, Both keeping me from all unrighteouſneſſe and ſin, whereby they may have advantage againſt me, and from any overſight in managing my affaires indiſcreetly: For both theſe waies enemies get advantage, but ſpecially by the firſt; as cunning Balaam knew wel enough when he counſelled Balack to tempt the Hebrews to ſin, by the faire women of Midian, that he might fal before the Moabites. Verſ. 11.

Give me not to the Soule of my oppreſſours. Commonly rendred, To the deſire or will. As indeed the meaning is, for the wicked have ſo earneſt a deſire to oppreſſe the righteous, that they are carryed on, as it were, with all their Soule againſt them. Verſ. 12.

Except I had beleived to ſee the goodneſſe of the Lord in the Land of the living. This as all conſent, is an Eccliptical ſpeech, it being underſtood, I had periſhed by the hands of mine enemies, whereas Calvin ſpeaks of ſome that take it for an oath, there is no colour of reaſon for it, but that it is an expreſſion, by what meanes he was preſerved, and that his enemies had not their wil of him, there is good reaſon, becauſe having thus prayed, Verſe 12. It moſt aptly followeth, that he ſhould declare by what meanes it came to paſs that they had it not, for he truſted to ſee Gods goodneſs in the Land of the living, that is, By being ſtil preſerved here to glorify him, which he ſhould not have been, unleſs he had confidently truſted in God; whereby we may ſee, what the benefit of faith is, that we alſo may beleive and be preſerved, although as Calvin noteth, every ones caſe is not like Davids, who had particular promiſes concerning this life, beyond many other faithful perſons, yet becauſe according to our faith, it ſhall be unto us, let us likewiſe truſt in God in our diſtreſſes, as every one is hereupon exhorted, Verſe 14. Verſ. 13. Note.

PSAL. XXVIII.

THIS Pſalme, as the former, is alſo a moſt earneſt prayer made by David unto God, that he would heare and anſwer him, as who did ſo depend upon this, as that without it, he accounted himſelfe to differ nothing from a dead man, Verſe 2. He mentioneth the lifting up of his hands, as a ſign of his ſeeking help only from above, and Pſal. 134. He bids us lift up our hands, and Moſes his hands were lifted up, and Iſrael prevailed, which reproveth the remiſneſſe of moſt men in praying, who lift up no hands, nor make any outward expreſſion, ſurely it ſheweth a dead heart, and yet if this be done in hypocriſie it availeth not neither, for with the hands the heart muſt be lifted up, that we may prevail, To thy holy Oracle, or the Oracle of thy ſanctuary. The moſt holy place being thus called, דביר from דבר to ſpeak, becauſe there the Lord gave anſwer. Verſ. 2. Note.

Draw me not with the wicked. See a like ſpeech before, and the expoſition, Pſal. 26.9. Verſ. 3.

Give to them according to their works. Having prayed that he might not be drawn with the wicked, as it were, to the ſame common execution, Verſe 3. Here he prayeth, that they might be dealt with according to their doings towards others, which we muſt not conceive yet came from troubled affections, or a deſire of private revenge, for then it had been evil, but from zeale for Gods glory, and a prophetical ſpirit, by thus praying, ſhewing Verſ. 4.

ing that it ſhould be ſo, aiming yet alwaies at this, that the wicked enemies being judged in this World, might at the laſt be made ſo aſhamed of their evil doings, that they might be brought to repentance and laved,

Note. as he elſewhere expreſſeth: Any imprecations which are not thus moderated, or made againſt any without abundance of ſin, by them firſt committed and long perſiſted in, come from the fleſh and are ſinful; for he ſaith not only, Their Works, But the evil of their doings, and the works of their hands, To ſhew that they were very many, and committed time after time without end.

Verſ. 5. For they underſtand not the works of the Lord. Here he ſheweth the ground of mens ſo audaciouſly going on in doing evil, they ſet not their mindes awork to ſee into and conſider Gods works of judgment againſt ſinners, to be hereby deterred from ſin, as the deſtruction of the old World and of Sodom, &c. Or his works of making the Sun to ſhine, and the rain to fal upon the bad as wel the good, as a meanes to win them to repentance, and for want of this conſideration, they go on in ſin without ceaſing: Neither do they conſider it as his work, when the godly ſuffer by the wicked, or otherwiſe for their chaſtiſement or tryal of their faith, which makes them think, that it is all one to feare God or not to feare him, but we contrariwiſe muſt ſee the work of God both in the proſperity of the wicked, and the adverſity of the godly, and conſider the end of his thus dealing with either, with the wicked to aggravate their condemnation, with the godly for their future greater reward in his Kingdome, and we muſt have his works of judgment in minde, to be confirmed more in his feare.

He will deſtroy them and not build them. Some render it, Will deſtroy, or ſhall deſtroy. As if it were ſpoken of this their inconſiderate going on in ſin, but moſt render, He will. That is, The Lord, both may wel agree, for when men are deſtroyed for ſin, it may be ſaid to do it, as elſewhere, The ſin which the wicked doth ſlayeth him. Or God for ſin, and it is added, And not build them up. To ſhew their everlaſting deſtruction, without ever recovering again.

Verſ. 9. According to this profeſſion of the power of the Lord, and of Chriſt to ſave, Verſe 9. He concludeth, Save thy people, &c. By heritage added meaning the ſame, for Gods people are his Heritage, and he prayeth that they may be lifted Up for ever, being advanced above all other peoples

PSAL. XXIX.

Aſcribe to the Lord yee Sons of the mighty: David ſeeing, that of all others the greateſt in this world to be readieſt to rob God of his honour by their pride and lofty carriage of themſelves above the common ſort, as if they were divine Gods, calls upon them in this Pſalme to aſcribe all Glory to God by an humble Deportment, of how great dignity ſoever they were in this world. For which purpoſe he puts them in mind, as not likely otherwiſe to be wrought upon, of a ſenſible ſign of Gods almighty power, making the proudeſt and ſtouteſt heart to tremble, Viz. the Thunder: For this made even Caius Caligula, that proud Romane Emperour, (who would have divine Honour done unto him, and that he might be counted a God, had Devices to thunder and lighten) to tremble and to haſten into ſome Cave of the Earth for fear, when it thundred indeed: And for this cauſe David is ſo copious in ſetting forth the powerfull Effects of this voice of God, the Thunder, Verſe 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. He calls not upon the mighty to give Glory to God, as if all others were not Bound to do the like, but becauſe it was hardeſt to bring them to do it. And therefore (yee Potentates, learn hereby to conſider your ſin of pride, and affectation of all honour and worldly pomp, and flee it, as thinking your ſelves unworthy, and God only worthy, who hath advanced you to this height of greatneſs, the more high thou art, be the more lowly minded, and bend all thy forces to the Glorifying of God, whoſe very voice will terrify thee if thou doeſt not, be then as magnanimous as thou canſt: The Hebrew word here uſed ſignifieth alſo Ramms, and therefore the Sept. render it, Give to the Lord yee ſons of Rams: But the Hebrewes do all agree in the Sons of the mighty, but as Calvin ſayth, ſome by them underſtand Angells, ſome the Starrs, ſome the holy Patriarcks, which is altogether from the purpoſe: For mighty men and proud are ſpoken to, as hath been ſayd, who ſhall be all brought down and abaſed, if they repent not, and do as is here exhorted, ſee Iſa. 2. 12. Verſ. 1. Note.

Worſhip him in the Beauty of the Sanctury: This is ſpoken according to the manner then preſcribed, when all that would worſhip the true God rightly were required to do it at the Tabernacle, and at the Temple, when it was built, this being ſet up as a ſign of his preſence during the time that he would have his People worſhip him by outward things: And whoſoever eyther worſhipped Images or other things, or the Lord, but not in his Sanctuary was not accepted of as a Worſhipper of the true God. Now the true worſhippers worſhip God in ſpirit and in truth, and if any go to Jeruſalem to do it, or by an Image, or in any holy place, thinking that the place makes his Prayers the more available, he erreth in the way of Superſtition in ſtead of Devotion, yet for orders ſake to join together in Prayer we muſt come to Cods Sanctuaries, and being there, no man is to think, that he erreth, who prayeth by himſelf whilſt the publick prayers are not yet begun, becauſe we are bidden, Pray continually, and in every place, therefore certainly not debarred, when we are in the houſe of Prayer, as not only the Temple, but every Synagogue is called, Pſal. 74. 8. Verſ. 2. Joh. 4.

The voice of the Lord is above the Waters: Here by voice he meaneth Thunder, as is by and by expreſſed, and it is ſayd to be above the waters, becauſe it is heard above the watery Clouds, and he addeth, Above many waters, meaning in the loud ſound thereof: For although abundance of Water gathered togethet roare and make a horrible noiſe, yet the Thunder makes a noiſe more terrible: And he ſingles out this amongſt the powerfull works of God, becauſe, that even naturall men are moſt affected with it, and cannot when they hear it thunder greatly, but quake and fear, Verſ. 3.

as I inſtanced before in C. Caligula, and Calvin, in Horace, who confeſſed that whilſt he did little worſhip God and wandred after mad Wiſdome, he was compelled to turn ſail, and to iterate the courſe left, and that by the bright fire dividing the clouds, when he drives through his thundring horſes and Chariot.

Verſ. 5. The voice of the Lord breaking the Cedars, &c. By the effects of the thunder and lightning upon the talleſt and greateſt Trees upon Wilderneſſes and Mountains and wild beaſts, he ſheweth how dreadfull Gods voice is in his thundring, that if dumb and dead things be moved hereby, living men might much more be moved to fear God, who is thus terribble when he utters his voice, Philoſophers ſtrain their wits much to find out the cauſe of Thunder and lightning, and have found it out ſo far forth as concerns the immediate or ſecondary cauſe, but what is this, when they reſt here, and ſearch no further, who giveth fire to that matter within the Cloud making it ſo terribly to roar, and lightnings and thunder-bolts to break through, deſtroying both houſes and men and beaſts, in ſuch an irreſiſtable and unſpeakable manner: What is it, ſayth Calvin, but to look only upon the fingers ends of him whom we ſhould know and fear, and never aſcend higher to ſee his glorious face. For then only do men ſearch rightly into the cauſe of the Thunder, when they look up to God whoſe terrifying voice it is, for his power and terribleneſs to ſinners, to ſtand in awe of him, and not to dare to go on in ſin.

Verſ. 6. Lebanon and Shirion like a young Unicorn: Lebanon was a forreſt full of Cedars, which the voice of the LORD is ſayd before to have broken, Shirion is otherwiſe called mount Hermon, Deut. 3. 9. It lay on the other ſide of Jordan, where Ogge raigned, Joſh. 12. 1. 5. He ſayth, they leaped by an Hyperbole.

Verſ. 8. Maketh the Wilderneſs of Kadeſh to tremble: By the Wilderneſs meaning the ſavage Beaſts therein, the Wilderneſs of Kadeſh had the name from the City Kadeſh, by which it lay, Num. 20. 1. 16. It was very large & ful of moſt fierce wild beaſts, being otherwiſe called the Wilderneſs of Para and Zin, through which the Iſraelites paſſed, Numb. 13. 27. and he ſpeaks of theſe places in particular, becauſe beſt known to the Jews, but hereby meaning all places, and Creatures inhabiting therein, for this voice of the Lord peirceth into them all.

Verſ. 9. The voice of the Lord makes the Hinds to bring forth: Amongſt all other beaſts he inſtanceth particularly in the Hinds, as which bring forth their young with greateſt difficulty, which the Lord alſo ſpeaks of, Job 39. 3. She boweth her ſelf, brings forth her young, and caſts out her ſorrows, And ſpeaking of it as one of his wonderfull works, he asketh, Who can tell how ſhee bringeth forth? Yet God by this his voice peirceth into the hidden places of the thickeſt Forreſts, where ſhee keeps at ſuch times, and by ſtriking feat and trembling into her, cauſeth her inſtantly to bring forth, and yet her young miſcarry not, but live and are well liking, Job. 39. 4. And makes bare the Forreſts: That is, whereas they are covered with Trees and buſhes ſo thick, that the wild beaſts are hidden in them from the ſight of men, yet they lye open to his Thunder, nothing can hide or cover them therefrom. Some expound this making bare, of ſtorms beating off the leaves and fruits of Trees, but this is more genuine, as agreeing beſt with the Premiſes about Hinds hidden in thickets there, And in his houſe or Palace, (For ſo the word ſignifieth, all his ſay) Glory, That is, All the faithfull give him Glory and praiſe continually, and they are deſcribed by their being in his houſe, to intimate, that ſuch only are his faithfull people, as be of his Church, and repaire diligently to his Sanctuary, to worſhip him together there from time to time. And this may eyther be underſtood thus, the voice of God worketh upon the dumb and dead Creatures to make them fear, and without this tertifyiug means, his faithfull people ſerve him with the trembling and feare in his houſe, giving him glory, therefore be moved alſo yee mighty ones to do likewiſe; of the Creatures he ſpake before, of his faithfull people here, or thus, ſuch be the effects of his voice in all parts of the World, but amongſt none is glory aſcribed unto him, but amongſt his own people, who repair to his houſe, and imbrace the truth there taught, never departing from it, or from the right way of worſhipping and ſerving him, others heare and ſee ſuch prodigies, and are for the preſent affected with them, but by reaſon of the blindneſſe of their eyes, ſee not ſo much of God as to be moved to feare and ſerve him, whoſe voice is ſo powerful, and who ſheweth hereby with what power he will one day come to be avenged upon all men, that know and feare him not; which is the uſe that indeed they ſhould make of this his terrible declaring of himſelf: And this paſſage is to be noted; In his houſe every one of his ſhall ſay, Glory. And I wiſh it may be conſidered, whether it be not a ground of that cuſtome in the Church, of ſaying often, Glory be to the Father, &c.

The Lords ſits upon the flood. Some ſaith Calvin, refer this to the Deluge in Noah his time, which they ſay is remembred here, as another terrible act of Gods power, that the conſideration hereof might make the greateſt to feare God, but he rather takes it, as ſpoken of Gods ſending great floods of water at ſundry times, making men afraid, that all would be drowned again, but ſitting as King, as he expreſſeth in the next words, he ruleth this raging Element ſo, that his promiſe may be kept, of never drowning the World again, and therefore timely ſtaying it from making ſuch a deſtruction any more: And this is beſt and moſt agreeable to the word here uſed, Not ſat, but ſitteth. Denoting a continued act of his providence. Verſ. 10. Calvin.

The Lord will give ſtrength to his people. That is, As he ſheweth his power to the preſervation of all men generally throughout the World, ſo much more in peculiar manner, he wil extend it to the ſtrengththening of his againſt their enemies, and to eſtabliſh the bleſſing of peace and proſperity amongſt them, as the next words do ſhew; for godlineſſe hath the promiſe, not of the life to come only, but of this life alſo. Verſ. 11.

PSAL. XXX.

A Pſalme ſung at the dedication of the houſe of David, Deut. 20. 5. It is commanded that when a man built him a new houſe, he ſhould dedicate it to the Lord, in acknowledgment that the whole land of Canaan was his in a peculiar manner, and that they who built houſes there did it, as Tenants under him the great Land-Lord of them all, and this dedicating, as may hence be gathered, was by ſolemnly ſinging praiſes to God, the Author of all their welfare, whereunto moſt probably feaſting was added: And although we be not bound by the ceremonial Laws given to the Jews, yet we may hence learn, to account our houſes Gods houſes, and therein as in his houſe ſet a part to worſhip him in, to praiſe him, and to do other duties of piety daily, as repeating his commandements, and charging each houſholder his Children and Servants to feare God, and keep them from day to day. And this Pſalme moſt probably was made, when David had built his houſe, ſpoken of 2 Sam. 5. 11. Some expound it of his houſe, to which he returned again, after that he had fled from it for feare of Abſalom, who poluted it by inceſtuous going in to his Concubines, being hereunto moved, becauſe it is ſaid, That he had been ſo ſtrongly ſetled, that he thought he ſhould never be moved, but the Lord hid his face and he was ſmitten, Verſe 7, 8. But becauſe no ſuch dedication uſed to be made but of an houſe new built, this expoſition falleth: Deut. 6. 7.

Some as the Cald. paraphraſt, expound it of the houſe of the Lord, becauſe David built him a Tabernacle; ſome, of the houſe of God re-edifyed, after the Jews return from Babylon, but without any colour of reaſon; the firſt therefore only ſtands firme, but whereas the contents ſeeme to make againſt it, we ſhall conſider that, as we come unto them. Auguſtine who draweth all things to Chriſt in every Pſalme, by Davids houſe here underſtands Heaven, where the Saints dwel for ever in peace and tranquility.

Verſ. 2. I cryed unto thee and thou healedſt me. From hence ſome gather, that David had been dangerouſly ſick, about the time that he was building, but recovered his health again, this is mentioned by Calvin, but he rather thinketh ſome other danger meant, wherein David was, becauſe it is not unuſual to ſpeak of deliverances from deadly dangers by this word Healing: But what other danger, unleſſe by ſickneſſe, can we imagine David to have been in about this time, which he confeſſeth juſtly befel him, for his foregoing ſecurity upon the eſtabliſhing of his Kingdome, which he calleth his Mountain made ſo ſtrong: For we read not of any danger by enemies before this dedication, but altogether of his proſperity, after his anointing King in Hebron, by the men of Judah; Sauls houſe continually waxing weaker, and his ſtronger, it muſt needs be therefore ſome dangerous ſickneſſe out of which he lately recovered, that he toucheth upon, and praiſeth God for it: And this is further confirmed, Verſe 3. Where he ſaith, Thou haſt delivered my Soule from the grave, &c. Becauſe in deadly ſickneſſe a man is neere to the grave, and going down to the pit, but health being reſtored again, he is delivered.

Calvin.

Verſ. 3.

Verſ. 4. Praiſe the Lord his holy or mercifull ones, for the elect of God have alwaies this property, that they are merciful, as hath been before noted upon Pſal. 4. 3. For a remembrance of his holineſſe. That is, That his holineſſe whereby all goodneſs and graciouſneſs is meant, may alwaies be had in remembrance, as it ought by all his people: For we muſt not only pray in time of danger by ſickneſs or otherwiſe, but being delivered, praiſe God from time to time, thus putting that which he doth for us upon record, as it were, to the end, that others may alſo be drawn to feare and ſerve God, who is ſo good and gracious to them that call upon him.

Note.

Verſ. 5. A moment in his wrath, but in his being Well pleaſed Life, or Lives, as the word properly ſignifieth: Thus David and others like David account of their Afflictions, although they be oft times long and greivous, both becauſe all the time of our ſufferings is but as a moment, being compared with the joyes of the life to come, as 2 Cor. 4. 1. And becauſe the inward comfort by the ſpirit in the faithfull, doth ſo overpoiſe them, that even in their Sufferings their joy is greater then their Sorrow for the pardon of their ſins, and peace with God, Rom. 5. 1. See the like promiſe to this, Iſa. 54. 7. Contrariwiſe worldlings think any thing that they ſuffer greivous to be born, and if it continueth, that none are puniſhed like unto them, and therefore they murmure and complain always, and have their hearts ſtirred up againſt God as their Enemy, or they look only at ſecondary cauſes, being full of ſpleen againſt them. But in ſuch is not the ſpirit of God, but the ſpirit of the world, which is the ſpirit of Bondage, contrary to the faithfull who have not this, but the ſpirit of Adoption. Whereas he varyeth the word, ſaying, Weeping ſhall lodge in the evening or night, but joy in the Morning: The ſame is meant, that before, and not according to the Letter, that all and every faithfull perſon ſhall find it thus from day to day, but though in this life as in the night of ſorrows, they ſuffer greivous things, yet as after the darkneſs of the night, the morning light comes on, ſo the morning of the Reſurrection ſhall put a full End to all their miſeries for ever, neither ſhall they lye always in miſery in this life, but ſhall have ſome mornings of joy and comfort by deliverances.

Rom. 8. 16.

I ſayd

I ſayd in my proſperity, I ſhall never be moved: Here David confeſſeth his ſin, for which the Lord layd that dangerous viſitation upon him, before ſpoken of, which was carnall ſecurity, by reaſon of his continuall good ſucceſs: For this was no little but a great ſin to truſt in worldly things, which are alwayes flitting and uncertain, as if there were ſtability in them. For what is this, but for a man fondly to think himſelf exempted from the common condition of all others, ſith every mans eſtate here is uncertain and vain, when it is at the beſt. and what can follow hereupon but pride, and diſdain of others, a licentious life in pleaſure and negligence in the Worſhip and ſervice of God, and a diminution of our confidence in him. That we may all take heed of this ſin, and in proſperity think we are not ſure to continue long herein, and therefore not truſt in it, but in God only. Verſ. 6. Note.

Thou hadſt made my hill ſo ſtrong, This he ſpeaks in alluding to mount Zion, where he dwelt, which was a moſt ſtrong place, held before by the Jebuſites, even till his time, but they were by him ſubdued, and he having gotten poſſeſſion, dwelt there and fortified it more, 2 Sam. 5. 7. 9. But this was his ſin, that having done ſo, he now truſted to the ſtrength of the place, and not in God alone, who made it ſo ſtrong to him: It is a good confidence in reſpect of Gods Grace in Chriſt to beleive, that we ſhall never be herefrom moved by Satan, or any thing that his accurſed inſtruments can do againſt us, as Rom. 8. 35. Becauſe we are built upon a Rock, but not herein to be without fear and ſolicitude that may keep us from ſin, according to Rom. 11. Phil. 2. 12. Thou hiddeſt thy face, and I was troubled, here he ſheweth how he ſmarted for this carnall ſecurity, although we read not now that he lived after the manner of carnall men in proſperity, in laying the Reines looſe to his inordinate affections, to follow any ſinfull pleaſure, yet this very thing, that he truſted to his own ſtrength in this world, was before God counted ſuch a ſin in him, that he turned from his wonted kindnes towards him, which is meant by his hiding of his face, and afflicted him ſore. And well is it with thoſe, who are thus met withall in their proſperity, if their hearts begin to be likewiſe infatuated: For otherwiſe it hath been ſhewed by many Experiments, they are in a way of utter ruine, as he of whom Ambroſe writes, to whom he came to lodge, but hearing that he never had any adverſity, he immediatly departed, as from one to whom he feared ſome deadly danger to be neer, and he being gone, the Houſe ſuddenly fell down and ſlew him; and Creſſus, who was in like proſperous condition, had a fall by Cyrus, into whoſe hands he and all his wealth came, and he was adjudged to be burnt to death, although the King when Execution was ready to be done, ſpared him, in conſideration of his own uncertain condition. And if David meerly for his carnall confidence, was ſore ſmitten, what ſhall become of them, that by reaſon of their worldly proſperity think all things to be lawfull for them, that they liſt to do, and live accordingly in all ſenſuality. Verſ. 7. Note. Qui quid libet licet.

What profit is there in my blood, ſhall the duſt praiſe thee? To inforce his prayer of Verſ. 8. the more he takes an Argument from hence, that it would not conduce ſo much to Gods praiſe now to take away his life, he being but newly come to the Kingdome promiſed him, becauſe God had choſen him not only to be King, but alſo to ſettle the Kingdome upon him and his poſterity for ever: But if he were ſo ſoon taken out of this life, where were the truth of this promiſe, when neither he had reigned long, neither had he Iſſue that ſhould ſucceed him yet born. Wherefore in ſaying, What profit or advantage in my blood, he meaneth that it would not make for Gods Glory, becauſe it would not redound to his praiſe, yet to turn him to the duſt from which he was taken, but make againſt it, he that ſhould for his promiſe accompliſhed, celebrate his praiſes, and publiſh his truth being cut of by an immature death, it is not meant, that the Saints departing out of this life, do not any longer praiſe God, for they are as the Angels, who Verſ. 10.

who ceaſe not crying, Holy, holy, holy, &c. Iſa. 6. And ſinging Halalujah in Heaven, Revel. But that they do it not in the hearing of men upon Earth, in way of exciting one another, as Calvin wel noteth: See ſomething like unto this before, Pſal. 6.

Verſ. 11. Thou haſt looſened my ſack, &c. That which he prayed before being nothing elſe, but a declaration, how he had pleaded in the time of this danger, he here ſheweth, how the Lord heard him and healed him, giving to him therefore condigne praiſe: But whereas Calvin conceiveth his mentioning of ſackcloath, to be an overthrowing of our foregoing Expoſition, that it was ſome dangerous ſickneſs out of which he was delivered, becauſe in time of ſickneſs they did not put on ſackcloath, though they did in mourning upon other occaſions, this is eaſily anſwered, the putting of ſackcloath is not properly to be underſtood here, but metaphorically in this place, it being meant, that he had delivered him out of that ſorrowful caſe, and brought him into a joyful, for his health reſtored.

Verſ. 12. That glory may ſing Pſalmes to thee. The Sept. for further expreſſion inſert (my) and indeed his tongue or Soule is meant here by glory, as alſo, Pſal. 16. 9. And ſuch a tongue is truly a mans glory, but an evil tongue his foule ſhame.

PSAL. XXXI

ONE, ſaith Calvin, thinks this Pſalme to have been compoſed by David, when he eſcaped ſo narrowly out of the Wilderneſs of Maon from Saul, 1 Sam 23. 25. And if it be ſo underſtood, the argument of the Pſalme agreeth very well; for herein he firſt profeſſeth his great confidence in God, and accordingly commends himſelfe to his protection, Verſe 1. &c. to the 7. 2. He praiſeth God for delivering him, Verſe 8. 3 He declareth in what a dangerous condition he was, and how deſolate and forſaken, Verſe 9. 10. &c. to Verſe 14. 4. He profeſſeth his confidence again, and praies, Verſe 14. to Verſe 19. 5. He praiſeth Gods goodneſſe and mercy both towards him and all that feare him, Verſe 19. 20. and to Verſe 23. 6. An exhortation is by him made to all the faithful, to put their truſt alwaies in him, promiſing that ſo doing they ſhall be ſafe, Verſe 23. 24. And thoſe words, Verſe 7. 8. make ſpecially for this conjecture, that it was compiled after his deliverance from Saul in Maon, becauſe he ſaith, Thou haſt not ſhut me up in the hands of my enemie. Forſomuch as he was then very neer falling into his hands, he being with his men on the one ſide of the mountain, and David on the other, and Saul now ready to come upon him, but by the good providence of God, at that inſtant, news came to Saul, that the Philiſtims invaded the Land, whereby he was immediatly called off from his purſuit of him: And this is alſo favoured by the words of Verſe 13. They conſult together againſt me, and think to take away my life. For both the men of Keilah a little before joined with Saul againſt him, and he was never neerer looſing his life then at this time, and Verſe 15. Deliver me from the hands of them that perſecute me. Intimating that he was then purſued, as he was indeed at that time very hard; yet it is not unlikely, but that he had reſpect to other deliverances alſo, wherein God had likewiſe ſhewed his providence over him, to ſave him from the like danger: Here is nothing difficult but what hath been often ſaid before in the 1. 2. and 3. Verſes.

Verſ. 4. Bring me out of the net, which they have ſpread for me, by theſe words he intimateth, that his Enemies did not only by open force come againſt him, but by cunning and policy attempted to circumvent him, as when they put him on, as Saul inſtructed them, to be the Kings Son in law, and to this this end ſet him on to get two hundred foreskins of the Philiſtims for a dowry, under a Pretence of good wil ſeeking his ruine, and when wait was layd for him to kill him in his houſe, &c. But truſted in God and prayed to be delivered, if there ſhould be any the like Enterpriſe againſt him hereafter.

Into thy hands I commend my ſpirit: David having prayed in his danger, unto God, now reſolveth to commit the care of his life to him, nothing doubting, but that he was able to preſerve it in the midſt of a thouſand dangers, and accordingly our LORD JESVS being ready to dye, ſayth, Into thy hands, O Father, I commend my ſpirit: and Steven after his Example, Lord Jeſus receive my ſpirit: And likewiſe every faithfull perſon by his laſt Will and Teſtament, wherefore we are without doubting to beleive, that God is the keeper of every faithfull perſons life in this world, to be courageous and fear nothing in doing our Dutyes, although we ſee apparently deadly danger hanging over our heads therefore, and when we ſee this life ready to depart, ſtill to do the ſame and fear not, but that he will preſerve our Souls to Eternity. For want of this, men are full of Feares, making them uncomfortable in ſickneſs and Puſillanimous in danger of men looking terribly upon them, forgetting that of our Saviour, Fear not man that can kill the body, &c. And by this means we are diven from God, and do things which we ought not, to the indangering of our Soules through his diſpleaſure, whereas if this were ſetled in our mindes, that he is the Keeper of our lives, we would confidently caſt our care upon him, come life or death, and be comfortable in ſuffering and even in dying, as is ſayd, Rom. 5. 1. But now where is there a man that is chearly in troubles or ſickneſs, although in proſperity moſt frolick and merry? The next words, Thou haſt redeemed me: Are the Ground of his commending his Spirit to God, becauſe he had formerly delivered him, and he calleth him, God of truth, as who having promiſed and ſtood hitherto by him, would never fail to ſave him. Verſ. 5. Act. 7. 59.

I hate thoſe that obſerve vanities of deceit, or lying vanities: Hereby he meaneth the vanities of Idolaters, againſt whom he had proteſted before, Pſa. 16. for it is uſuall in Scripture by this word Vanity, to ſet forth their practiſes and Images, wherein they truſted, Deut. 32. 21. 1 Kings 16. 26. 2 King. 17. 15. Jer. 2. 5. 8. 19. And in this ſenſe it is ſayd, Jonah 2. 8. They that obſerve lying vanities forſake their own mercy: Calvin by vanities underſtands any thing of this world, that may draw a mans mind from God, and worldly profits and pleaſures indeed are lying vanities alſo, for all are called vanity of vanity, Eccl. 1. And they are lying, becauſe there is in them a ſhew of good and happineſs, drawing the mind after them ſo, that God and his Lawes are caſt behind the back, as hated; but this ſhew of good will appear one day to be deceitfull and lying, when gain ſhall be turned into loſs, and pleaſure into pain intollerable for ever. And therefore we may underſtand the words of theſe vanities alſo, but more properly of the Superſtitions of Idolaters, becauſe it is ſayd, that keep or hold, as the word ſignifieth, intimating a ſtiff ſtanding for them in an opinion of piety, the true God and his ſervice being for them neglected, as if eternal happineſs ſhould thus be attained, whereas they that are drawn by other vanities look at none other end but benefit, or pleaſure here, and what they aime at they have for a time, but the Superſtitious nothing for their coſt and paines, ſo that theſe of all others are the moſt meer vanities, yet the next words, But I have truſted in thee Lord: Oppoſed to the former do ſhew that any vanities at large are meant, whereunto men truſt, either in reſpect of this Life or the Life to come whether Idols, gain, or pleaſure. Verſ. 6. Calvin.

Mine eye is conſumed with Wrath, Hereby he ſheweth, that his Afflictions were not light or of ſhort continuance, but great and tedious, cauſing ſome impatience in him: As Calvin noteth, and ſo it happeneth through the infirmity of the fleſh ſometimes to the beſt of Gods Servants, but not to make them go from God who ſmiteth them, as the murmuring Iſraelites, but Verſ. 4. Calvin.

but to turn and pray the more earneſtly to him, as David here doth, and Hoſ. 8. 1. And he ſets forth his low condition, to which he was brought by the conſuming of his eyes: Ainſworth renders it, My eye is gnawn upon with wrath. Calvin, Computruit. New Tran: Conſumed with greife. And if by wrath we underſtand Gods wrath, whereby he now ſuffered, it is not improbable, becauſe, Verſe 10. He imputes theſe his ſufferings to his ſinnes or iniquities, it may well be rendred Greife, the effect being put for the cauſe: He names his eye, which by long ſufferings is ill affected and ſinketh, and his ſoule and belly, meaning the whole man pined away and infeebled.

Verſ. 10. My life is ſpent, my ſtrength decayed through mine iniquity, &c. Which words tend further to expreſſe his greivous miſery, and the cauſe thereof, his iniquity whereupon he commonly layeth it, and ſo ſhould every faithful man, and not look only at ſecondary cauſes, becauſe no man liveth and ſinneth not, yet by iniquity here he meaneth, not only ſin, but miſery cauſed hereby, as is common in other places.

Verſ. 11. For all mine enemies I was a reproach, even to my very neighbours, &c. That is, I had ſo many and great enemies, that all men counted it a reproach unto them to ſhew me any countenance, although formerly my neer neighbours and friends, I was a terrour to them, by reaſon of Saul, that raged ſo againſt Abimeleck, and other Prieſts of God for my ſake, they feared to be ſeen comming neer me, or having any thing to do with me.

Verſ. 12. As a dead man out of minde. Hebrew, Out of heart. So ſpoken, becauſe no man thought upon him in his heart, but they were towards him, as to one long dead, who is remembred no more but forgotten, for ſo the dead are ſet forth, Eccle. 9. 5. Pſal. 88. 13. And as a broken veſſel, then which nothing is more neglected, as being of no uſe.

Verſ. 13. Calvin. For I have heard the reproach of many, or as Calvin hath it, Of great ones. Juſtifying that reading the rather, becauſe it is not ſo greivous to be ſpoken ill of amongſt many of the vulgar ſort, that are light and vain, but have no power, but when Princes or other great ones ſhall ſpeak reproachfully of a man, he may wel feare then, that there is evil towards him: And this he further confirmeth from the next words, Feare on every ſide, they take counſel againſt me. For this did not the common ſort, but the Nobles about Saul, as being of his counſel.

Verſ. 15. My times are in thy hands. That is, The times ſet for me to ſuffer and to be delivered, ſo that I ſhall not be under affliction any longer then the times ſet by thee; in this reſpect my moſt potent enemies have no power, do thou therefore, who alone canſt do it, put an end to the time of my perſecutions, and grant me a time of peace and comfort.

Verſ. 19. How great is thy goodneſſe, which thou haſt hidden for them that feare thee. From himſelf in particular, he proceeds to ſhew generally, that the Lord is good and beneficent to all that feare him, and he ſaith, Which thou haſt hidden. To intimate, that he ſeemeth ſometimes not to regard them, when they are under divers ſufferings and long, but there is goodneſs towards them comming, although it yet appeareth not, whereupon they muſt reſt, goodneſs here and goodneſs hereafter, here to break out in time, Before the Sons of men. So that even worldly men ſhall ſee in this life, and do often ſee the righteous riſing out of miſery to proſperity; as Job, Joſeph, David, the Jews returning out of captivity, the Chriſtian Church out of perſecution to honour, in the time of Conſtantine the great: And Col. 3. 3. hereafter there is a life, which is hid with Chriſt in God, And hidden Manna. Of which it ſhall be given to him that overcometh, to eate, Revelations 2. 17.

Verſ. 20. Thou ſhalt hide them in the ſecret of thy face, from the pride of man. Hebrew, רכסי Known prides. Whereby their harſh dealings with the righteous in pride and contempt is meant, and they are ſaid to be hidden in the ſecret of his face, becauſe it is by his face and favour towards them, which the World knoweth not of, that they are thus preſerved, and From the ſtrife of tongues as in a Cottage. Whereby is implyed, that the virulent tongues of malicious men againſt the righteous, are like to a ſtorm, ſharp, and weather-beating thoſe that are in it, but ſuch as they may well contemne, becauſe they are through the teſtimony of a good conſcience, as it were, in an houſe ſufficient to ſhelter them all the time, for which it is ſaid, Bona conſcientia murus aheneus eſto, A good conſcience a brazen wall.

He hath ſhewed marvellous mercy to me in a ſtrong City. That is, as if he had been in a ſtrong City, ſafe from the aſſaults of all enemies, for ſometime God is compared to a Rock, ſometime to a Tower, and here to a City ſtrongly fenced with Wals, Gates, and Bars. Verſ. 21.

I ſaid in my haſtening away. Calvin, In my trepidation, conceiving, that his bodily fleeing is not meant, but an aſtoniſhment of mind through ſome ſudden great danger: But others expound it of his fleeing either from Saul or Abſalom, which I rather prefer, becauſe, according to the proper ſignification of the word, he did tremblingly flee, and this he is not aſhamed here to confeſs, to ſhew the weakneſs of his faith, for which he was unworthy of ſuch mercy; but this notwithſtanding the Lord heard him, as he addeth to more, to magnifie his grace for our comfort, when in diſtreſſes we pray, but feel not that life of faith, but weakneſs of doubting in our praying, God will not yet reject any that feare him. Verſ. 22. Note.

Love the Lord, Becauſe he is ſo gracious to you, cleave to him by the love of all your hearts, as he requireth, He will abundantly repay proud doers. As his grace abounds to ſuch as feare him, ſo to deſpiſers of him and his Laws, ſhall be abundance of wrath; the word rendred abundantly, is עליתו Upon the remainder, whereby their poſterity may be underſtood, as if it had been ſaid, he will repay the proud doer to the Generations coming after him, or remaining when he is gone, for ſo they are often threatned to the third and fourth Generation, and as the righteous are commonly ſet forth by humility and meekneſs, ſo the wicked by pride and loftineſſe, becauſe the wicked generally have pride in them, as the original of all their vile and harſh carriage towards the righteous. Verſ. 23.

Be of good courage, and he ſhall ſtrengthen your heart. Having laid a foundation in loving God, feare nothing, and if yee ſuſpect your own weakneſs, flee to God by prayer, and yee ſhall with his ſpirit be ſupplyed with ſtrength to beare you up in all time of danger. Verſ. 24.

PSAL. XXXII.

Of David Maſchil, that is, Inſtructing.

Bleſſed is the man, whoſe wickedneſſe is forgiven. David having ſundry times profeſſed his innocency and godly care to walk in the waies of Gods commandements, now to ſhew that his confidence was not in this, and to teach the ſame to others, for which he intituled this Pſalme Maſchil, he ſaith in effect, that he was not bleſſed by reaſon of his own righteouſneſs, no nor any other man, how juſt and innocent ſoever, or what good works ſoever he doth, but in this, that his ſinnes were pardoned and not imputed unto him; ſo that neither doth he hereby ſpeak comfort to any that live wickedly ſtil, nor aſcribe juſtification in any part to a mans own righteouſneſs, or the good works which he doth: Againſt theſe that live and go on in ſin, but yet count themſelves bleſſed, and juſtified by faith in Chriſt, becauſe to beleivers ſin is not imputed, and againſt them Verſ. 1.

that aſcribe juſtification in part to their own righteouſneſs, holding that we are juſtified by beleiving, and the juſtified thus makes themſelves more juſt, by living righteouſly and doing good works; and that deny ſuch a ful juſtification from ſin by Chriſt, as lets the beleiver cleare both from guilt and puniſhment, holding that a man muſt ſatisfie in part, for the puniſhments by his ſinnes deſerved, here by acts of penance, and hereafter by ſuffering the fire of Purgatory; for if all our ſinnes be forgiven, we are at the ſame inſtant acquitted, both from all guilt and all puniſhment, it being ſuch a forgiving of debts, as never was heard of, to keep the debter ſometime in priſon and miſery, notwithſtanding after forgiving: And the Juſtice or righteouſneſs, whereby a ſinner is juſtified, is the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, of God, as is ſaid, 2 Cor. 5. 20. That we might be made the righteouſneſs of God through him. And how can this be imperfect, and ſuch as needs increaſe, ſith the righteouſneſs of God is perfect, but that a ſinner by beleiving is made ſo righteous, that he is without ſin, or can attain to ſuch perfect righteouſneſs in this life, by his moſt godly care, as to be altogether without ſin, I deny, becauſe his righteouſneſſe whereby he is juſtified, is not his own, but Chriſts altogether, and made his by imputation, as our ſinnes were made Chriſts, 2 Cor. 5. 20. For thus Saint Peter ſaith of himſelfe, That I may be found, not having mine own righteouſneſſe, but Chriſts by faith. And Rom. 4. He teacheth at large, that juſtification is by imputation, there being hereof only theſe two parts, Remiſſion of ſinnes, and imputation of Chriſts righteouſneſs: And that he only is thus juſtified, that beleiveth and ſheweth his faith by his works, turning by true repentance from all ſin, and doing good from time to time, according to his ability; appeareth by the next words, In whoſe ſpirit there is no deceit. Becauſe he doth neither in his heart ſecretly love any ſin, nor yet beare himſelfe, now that he is juſtified, as juſt by his own inherent righteouſneſs, but ingenuouſly confeſſeth, that in him ſtil, there is corruption, the fleſh fighting againſt the ſpirit, ſo that he cannot do the good that he would, as Gal. 5. 17. Rom. 7. And as David alſo ſaith, I confeſſed my ſinns unto thee, O Lord, and thou forgaveſt me, Verſe 4. So that the new upſtart Sect of the Antinomians, who deny ſin in the juſtified, or confeſſing ſo any more, may feare that they are out of the way of forgiveneſs, and that is but a vain imagination, that they are juſtified perſons, for they are hereby proved indeed to be far from it: And for doing good, this is James his doctrine, that we are Not juſtified by faith only, but alſo by works. Meaning, as he after expreſſeth himſelfe, that we are then juſtified by faith, when we ſhew our faith by our works: So that the wicked liver, that beleiveth, but faith works not upon his heart to purifie it, nor by love to put him on to do good, is yet far from this bleſſedneſs, his ſinnes are not forgiven, but he is ſtil in them: But forbearing the puniſhment of a mans own ſinnes in part, ſo far as he is able without periſhing for ever, it may ſeem to make, that judgment begins at Gods houſe, and yee are judged, that yee might not periſh with the World, and I beat down my body, ſaith Paul, leaſt I ſhould prove a reprobate, and the fire ſhall try every mans work; that is, The fire of judgments in this World: To this I ſay, That no man is ſo forgiven his ſinnes, as to be acquitted from all ſufferings in this life, thereby deſerved, or ſo, as that he needs not put himſelfe to penance therefore by faſting and ſorrowing, but whatſoever judgments the juſtified ſuffer, are only in this life, and that not as puniſhments for their ſinnes, whereby Gods wrath due therefore, is in any part ſatisfied, but as chaſtiſements to uſher on godly ſorrow for ſin paſt, and carefulneſs to live better for time to come, as fathers chaſtiſe their Sons, Heb 12. 7. 2 Cor. 9. 10. And accordingly David ſaith, It is good that I have been afflicted, for I am hereby taught to keep thy commandements.

To conclude, that which is here ſaid of the bleſſedneſs of him, whoſe ſinnes ſins are forgiven, is alſo often ſayd of the Charitable, as Pſal. 112. Bleſſed is he that conſidereth the poor, Bleſſed is the man that feareth the Lord, &c. Matth. 5. Bleſſed are the pure in heart; bleſſed are the Peace-makers, and Meek, &c. But in theſe and the like, it is ſtill always to be underſtood, not that we are bleſſed for theſe things, but that ſuch are bleſſed in this, that their ſins, from which yet they cannot be free, when they do all that is required according to their power, are mercifully forgiven them. For even in ſuch if God ſhould mark ſtrictly what is done amiſs, none were able to abide it; every one muſt confeſs ſtill he is an unprofitable ſervant, and all our Righteouſneſs is as filthy Rags, Iſa. 64. 6.

When I was ſilent, my bones wore away with age: The Prophet David having with joy declared the Bleſſedneſs of him, whoſe ſins are pardoned, Verſe 1. Now ſheweth, how he attained to this great bleſſing for his own particular, Viz. By confeſſing them, for When or Becauſe (for the word כי ſignifieth either;) He was ſilent, as Baſil hath it, not ſeeking medicine for his wound or ſickneſs of ſin by confeſſion, he was like unto a man in a deep languiſhing diſeaſe, decaying and waxing feeble, and by roaring this feebleneſs was more increaſed, that is, Whilſt he cryed out for pain under his ſufferings, and yet confeſſed not nor prayed; in ſtead of comfort his Terrour grew greater: But then he confeſſed his ſins and had the comfort of forgiveneſs before pronounced ſo great a Bleſſing. That we all might learn of him in our miſery cauſed by ſin likwiſe to confeſs, being aſſured that in ſo doing we ſhall have comfort, otherwiſe if in ſtead of going to God by confeſſing, we fret and cry out only through Extremity of pain and ſtreights, wherein we find our ſelves to be, we ſhall have our miſery aggravated to the macerating of us, and the weakning of our vitall ſtrength, ſet forth by bones, till we dy and periſh under ſuch paſſions. And that this is the Application that we all ſhould make of Gods Grace and favour ſhewed to him upon confeſſion, appeareth further, V. 5. Verſ. 2. Note.

Therefore ſhall every meek one pray to thee in a time that thou mayſt be found: A like paſſage to this, ſee 1 Tim. 1. 15. And for the words added about the time, ſee the like Iſa. 55. Seek the LORD whilſt he may be found, call upon him whilſt he is neer; whereby is not intimated, that God will not be found of the truly penitent at any time; but that they who let upon Repenting and ſeeking him afterwards, and take not the preſent time of Grace offered, are in danger of ſeeking to him in vain, as is alſo taught, Luk. 13. 29. And in the Example of Eſau, whereas it is further ſayd, The floods of water ſhall not come nigh him, He meaneth when he is now in danger of drowning, and being ſwallowed up with miſery, as a flood; not ſeeing any way to eſcape, he ſhall be delivered as Noah in the Ark. Verſ. 5.

Thou ſhalt compaſſe me with Songs of deliverance: Here the Prophet applyeth that again to himſelf which he had ſpoken touching every meek or mercifull man, by being ſaved out of deadly danger, as he had cauſe given him, he ſayth, That he ſhould ſing hereof, and praiſe God abundantly therefore, and ſo muſt every one of us make conſcience to do in like caſe; ſome render it, Thou haſt compaſſed me, but the word is a future, and it is beſt ſo to render it, as ſhewing the conſtant practiſe of the faithfull for deliverances from time to time. And thou art compaſſed about, as is here ſayd, when our words and hearts, and good works of Charity and Righteouſneſs make a melodious Conſort, ſinging altogether Glory to the higheſt. Verſ. 6. Note.

I will counſell thee, mine Eye ſhall be upon thee: Calvin, I will counſell upon thee with mine Eye: The firſt is moſt agreeable to the Hebrew, and moſt ſenſible. The meaning being, I will not only teach and counſell thee what to do, but I ſhall be continually looking, to ſee whether thou doſt ſo or no, not reſting in this, that I have once taught thee, but providing with my beſt care that thou mayſt do ſo continually, rebuking and punishing thee, if thou doeſt otherwiſe, but incouraging and countenancing thee, if thou doeſt Verſ. 7.

ſo. And this ought to be the care of every King and Ruler over his People, or elſe he diſchargeth not his duty: See this performed by David, Pſalm. 101. See the like Phraſe, Jer. 40.4. Ezr. 5.5. Dent. 11.12.

Verſ. 9. Be not yee as the horſe and mule: To make men capable of his Inſtruction, he firſt ſeeks to remove the two Impediments, that commonly hinder from taking it, and profiting thereby, ſtupidity and dulneſs, for where this is, no goodneſs, although taught never ſo plainly, will enter, for what is teaching to a bruit beaſt.

2. Obſtinacy and ſtoutneſs, againſt which they muſt be intelligent that will learn, and tractable, when the truth is taught them in any thing. And becauſe the firſt in many is a defect in nature, they muſt pray to the Father of Lights to inlighten them by teaching, and ſuch as have underſtanding for the world; that it may be turned into ſpirituall underſtanding of things pertaining to Salvation; and againſt Obſtinacy conſider, that forced obedience is nothing worth, if for fear of puniſhment only a man be withheld from doing Evill, as many are in well governed Kingdoms, for then the Heart refreineth not, which is all in all, and without it Externall Obedience is nothing elſe, but as that of an Horſe by bit and bridle.

Verſ. 10. Many be the miſeries of the Wicked: Here he ſeeketh further to move mens hearts willingly to obey, and not by compulſion by propounding the miſeries that ſhall be to ſuch, and on the other ſide the mercies, that ſhal compaſs obedient beleivers round about.

Verſ. 11. Rejoyce (O yee Righteous) That is, Yee that have your ſins forgiven you, not others, for rejoycing in the LORD is peculiar to ſuch, and who are theſe, but the upright hearted, as in the laſt words, that from the Heart obey the word, for thus do all the truly faithfull, neither is there true faith in him that doth not, Act. 15.9.

PSAL. XXXIII.

Verſ. 1. SHout joyfully (yee Righteous) in the Lord, praiſe is comely for the Righteous. As he ended Pſal. 32. So he beginneth this, uſing more arguments to move hereunto. And the ſame is meant by the word here uſed, ſignifying Shout joyfully, and by the word there uſed ſignifying Rejoyce, wherefore our New Tranſlat. renders it alſo Rejoyce, and Calvin Exult, the words following, are a reaſon, why the juſt and not others are ſtirred upto this, Praiſe is comely for the Upright: GOD is not honored by the Wickeds praiſing of him, but only when the upright hearted do it: yea, ſayth Auguſt. A Righteous life is a prayſing of God, contrariwiſe a Wicked: Whereby yee may ſee (O yee wicked) how abominable yee are to the Lord, even ſo abominable that he loveth not, but is averſe from your very praiſing of him: See alſo, Iſa. 1. Chap. 66.

Note.

Prov. 15. 8.

Verſ. 2. Praiſe the Lord upon the Harp: The upright muſt not only praiſe God by ſinging, but alſo uſe all other ſuch means as are apt to make their ſinging the more delightfull unto him, as ſweet and pleaſant Muſick, and ſometime loud ſounding Muſick, as Pſal. 150. Calvin commends this only under the Law, when God was praiſed by ſacrificing and Muſick added thereunto, by ſounding with Trumpets, ſinging, playing upon the Harp, the Organ and the Pipe, &c. And therefore ſayth, as other Ceremonies of the Law, this praiſing by muſicall inſtruments hath no place in the Church of God at this day. For the voice of man ſpeaking that which the ſpirit dictates, is beyond all muſick with ſinging and Inſtruments in his Ears, and yet if it be not underſtood, is forbidden, 1 Cor. 14. Therefore ſingnig and muſick, it not being underſtood, which is ſung or playd to, is not only inconſiderate zeal amongſt the Papiſts that uſe it, but alſo impious perverſneſs; Thus Calvin.

Calvin.

vin. Auguſtine ſpeaks nothing of it, but by Allegory, by the Harp underſtanding praiſe for proſperity and Adverſity: becauſe the wood of the Harp whereupon the ſtrings are, making a pleaſant ſound, when they are ſtricken, is downward below, but the Pſaltery, the other Inſtrument here named is ſo framed, that the hollow part yeilding the ſound is upward. Now we are not to ſeek theſe Inſtruments elſewhere, for we have them in our ſelves, the Harp, when we praiſe God for ſuch good things as befall us concerning this life, yea and for ſufferings here alſo, as Job, when he had loſt all: The Lord giveth and taketh away, bleſſed be the Name of the LORD: And the Pſaltery, when we praiſe GOD for higher Bleſſings, wherewith he bleſſeth us in Chriſt: And whereas the Pſaltery is ſayd to have ten ſtrings, we have it compleate, when we praiſe God in our lives lead according to Gods ten Commandements, having but one only true God, honouring his name, keeping his Sabboth, not as the Jews by bodily reſt, giving themſelves to feaſting and pleaſure all day, for they that do ſo had better dig all day then reſt, &c. And herein I think Auguſt. was right, we are required to praiſe God with theſe muſicall inſtruments being underſtood ſpiritually; the People of God under the Law of Ceremonies according to the Letter, we under the Goſpel, as hath been ſayd, and ſo we have ſtill our ſpirituall ſacrificing and Incenſe, when we honour God by our ready Obedience, looking for acceptation of our ſervice in and through the ſweet perfume made by the Incenſe of his merits alone. And thus I conceive our praiſing of God without muſicall Inſtruments at this day is beſt approved, and the Papiſts muſick condemned, becauſe they underſtand this literally, which now is to be done ſpiritually, and ſo far forth only with ſinging as may be with underſtanding, the ſounding with muſiccall inſtruments at the Inſtant, which makes the new ſervice of God and the old all one, being layd down. For by as good reaſon may they offer the fat of Rams and Incenſe, as keep up muſick in Churches ſtill, and Altars as they do: For the Argument brought againſt them before by Calvin, I cannot ſee ſuch force in it, becauſe as under the New T. ſo under the Old all things were to be done to Edification, and therefore that Argum. is as good againſt their practiſe then as now, if in muſick and ſong going together, there were no Edification by reaſon that it is not underſtood by all the Congregation. It is true there is no Edification in teaching, unleſſe it be in a Tongue underſtood, but in making Melody to God by ſong and muſick there may, though not underſtood, Viz. The heart being hereby made to rejoyce in God, in thinking upon the Harmony made to him continually in Heaven, to beare a part, wherein we ſhall one day come, and this is one Grace, wherein we ſhould be Edified, for ſuch is joy in the Spirit.

Gal. 5. 22.

Sing to the Lord a new ſong, ſing skilfully in praiſing: Calvin, Sing luſtily: Ainſw. Do well, playing on the inſtrument with triumphant noiſe, which is neareſt to the Hebrew הֵיטִיבוּ but to render it word for word, it is, Do good, ſtrike up with Exultation, that is, Make good, or excellent muſick upon the Harp and Pſaltery before ſpoken of, as men uſe to do, when they would with their beſt skill expreſs greateſt joy. And a new Song we are bidden to ſing, as alſo Pſal. 40. 4. 96. 1. 98. 1. 144. 9. Iſa. 42. 2. Revel. 14. 3. In reference to the time of the Goſpel, wherein all things are new, and yet the ſame that were before, but ſet forth in a new manner, the Melody that is made, not being ſo much in the voice and muſicall inſtrument, as in the heart; according to which it is ſayd, Singing and making Melody to the Lord in your hearts. So the ſame Commandement is called both The old Commandement, and the new, 1 Joh. 2. 7.

this, as if he had ſaid, In men he loveth juſtice, but this, although it be a truth, is not to the purpoſe here, for he proceeds to prove what he had ſaid, Verſe 4. Of his doing all things righteouſly, and this he doth by ſhewing, it is his nature ſo to do, for the love that he beareth to juſtice; if any man ſhal ſay, Is this ſuch a matter of a new ſong? Do not, and have not al almoſt ever acknowledged this, that God is juſt: Ainſworth, It is true in general, but coming to be tryed by ſufferings, ſcarce the hundreth part of men acknowledge it, but murmure and complain, as if they were unjuſtly dealt withal; and therefore it may wel be called a new ſong, to acknowledge this even in all things, and to give him thanks, as is commanded, 1 Theſ. 5. 17. And as Job did, when he had loſt all. The Earth is full of his goodneſs. So Iſa. 6. 3. The whole Earth is full of his glory. As in reſpect of temporal bleſſings, ſo and cheifly in reſpect of his Son, ſent into the World to redeem and ſave us: And even in our ſufferings we muſt look up to God, as doing it in goodneſs for our benefit, as Hebrews, 12. 9. and Pſalme 119.

Verſ. 6. By the word of the Lord the Heavens were made, and by the breath of his mouth, all their hoaſts. Having Verſe 4. ſaid, The word of the Lord is right. Now he beginneth to prove it, by an induction of particulars; and firſt, Of his making the Heavens and all the Stars by his word and ſpirit, where by Word Chriſt is underſtood, who is ſaid to be his Word, and that Word whereby all things were made: And for the breath or ſpirit of his mouth, hereof is expreſly ſaid, Gen. 1. 2. The ſpirit of God moved upon the waters. Or ſat upon them as an Hen, to hatch and forme them into that glorious and excellent expanſion which we behold, for what are the Heavens, Hebrew, but שמים There are Waters. And the Heavens and their Hoaſts are firſt mentioned, becauſe the moſt glorious of all Gods works, as Pſal. 19. 1. And this word and ſpirit are commonly by the Ancients taken for Chriſt the Son of God, and the holy Ghoſt; although Calvin thinks, that they were deceived, whereas they hence brought an argument to prove the divinity of the holy Ghoſt, againſt Sabellius: For if the Word be God, what can the Spirit be, whereby the Word is brought forth but God alſo?

Verſ. 7. He hath gathered as an heap the waters of the Sea. Of which ſee alſo, Gen. 1. And it argueth an infinite power to do this, when theſe waters are fluid by nature, and not otherwiſe to be kept within their bounds, yet that they lying higher then the earth, ſhould be kept from overflowing it ever ſince the beginning of the World.

Verſ. 10. The Lord ſcatters the counſels of Nations. From his works of Creation and providence in containing the Seas, the Prophet paſſeth on to other acts of his providence towards men; whole Nations, and many plot and deviſe daily againſt the Nation which he hath peculiarly choſen, his Church, the people of Iſrael; but their devices and counſels take none effect, but are from time to time fruſtrated, as thoſe of the Egyptians firſt, then of the Amalekites, Medianites, Moabites, Philiſtims, and Syrians; As is ſhewed in Exodus, Judges, Kings. Therefore, Verſe 12. The Nation choſen by him is pronounced bleſſed, becauſe both their enemies counſels vaniſh, and his ſtand alwaies firm and ſtable, Verſe 11.

Verſ. 12.

Verſ. 13. The Lord looketh down from Heaven upon the Sons of Adam. Having ſhewed the happineſſe of the Nation by him choſen, now he proceeds to the reaſon, and that is, The Lord knoweth the hearts and waies of all men, as he muſt needs do, becauſe he made all their hearts, and he ſeeth, that neither any King nor mighty man, is of power to ſave himſelfe, neither are Horſes of any avail, Verſe 14, 15, 16, 17. but the Lords choſen people, that feare him, are ſaved from death, and famine.

Verſ. 18. 19.

Verſ. 20. Our Soule hath looked to the Lord. It being ſo as is before ſaid, that there is no power in Creatures, but only in the Lord, to ſave and deliver in time of of danger, or to aſſault and prevail, we that are his Church and people, ought to make this uſe of it, to have our eyes towards him, not towards any humane or created ſtrength, and then as Verſe 21. We ſhall be ſure of a joyful event, and that it may be ſo, we muſt ſtil alwaies be praying, as Verſe 22. Let thy mercy be upon us (O Lord) as we truſt in thee.

PSAL. XXXIV.

OF David, when he changed his countenance before Abimelech, and he expelled him. Of this ſee, 1 Sam. 28. How for feare being in the Court of Achiſh King of Gath, leaſt he ſhould ſlay him, being now in his power, as an infeſt enemy of the Philiſtims, he changed his behaviour, letting ſpittle fal down upon his beard, and ſcrabbling upon the wals as a mad man, by which meanes he eſcaped this danger, and here he praiſeth God for it, and ſtirs up all the faithful to put their truſt in him, in ful aſſurance, that they ſhall likewiſe be kept ſafe, in what dangers ſoever they be: Touching his fact in thus diſſembling, whether it were juſtifiable or not, ſee my Expoſition upon that place: Touching the King before called Achiſh, here Abimelech, it is to be underſtood, that this was the general name of the Kings of the Philiſtims, as we may ſee, Gen. 20. and Chapter 26. As Pharaoh was the name of the Kings of Egypt, and Caſar of the Roman Emperours, his proper name being Achiſh: For the word Countenance, as Calvin renders it, the Sept. Face, Some, Behaviour. It is טעם properly ſignifieth Taſte, but becauſe, as by the taſte meat is known, ſo by the countenance or behaviour the man is judged of, it is uſed to ſet this forth both here and elſewhere.

I will bleſſe the Lord at all times Although David by his policy eſcaped the danger of Achiſh, yet he thankfully aſcribeth it unto God, who wrought with it for his deliverance, and probably by inſtinct taught it him for his own preſervation; as Joſhuah to feine a fleeing before the men of Ai, for his greater advantage: And hence we ſhould learn by what policy or meanes ſoever we eſcape dangers, not to aſcribe it to our ſelves, but to God alone, and therefore to praiſe him unceſſantly. Verſ. 1. Note

The Angell of the Lord pitcheth his tents about them that feare him. See the like, Matth. 18. 11. Where I have handled the queſtion, whether every one of the Elect hath his Angel-Guardian, or each one more, as Pſal. 91. 11. But is it not comfort enough, that God by his providence is alwaies neer unto us to ſave us from dangers, and if ſo, what need of the guard of Angels? Ainſworth, The Lord herein condeſcends to our weakneſs, that we might be the more confident, when we know that he provides for our ſafety in all places, and at all times by his ſo glorious and mighty Miniſters, who are ſaid to be ſent out for the good of all that are choſen to life: And doubtleſs it was a ſingular comfort to Jacob, when being in danger by Eſau, he ſaw the Angels of God pitching their tents about him, for which cauſe he called the place where, Mahanaim, Gen. 32. 1. Verſ. 7. Heb. 1. 1.

Taſte and ſee, that the Lord is good. Here the Prophet David layeth the fault of not having that comfort, which we might in Gods goodneſs towards us upon our ſelves, as he that hath pleaſant and nouriſhing meate, but will not taſte of it, is without the comfort thereof, wherefore he exhorteth us to amend this fault, which is by committing our ſelves to his protection at all times, and then obſerving how graciouſly he dealeth with us, hence ariſing to more confidence. Verſ. 8.

Verſ. 20. He keepeth all his bones. Here he ſheweth that the providence of GOD is extended, not only to every one that feareth him, but even to every ſmal part of the body of ſuch, his bones which be very many, and elſewhere the LORD ſaith to the ſame effect, the very haires of our head are numbred.

Verſ. 21. Calvin. Evill ſhall ſlay the wicked. Some, ſaith Calvin, hereby underſtand miſery, as if nothing were meant, but that they ſhal periſh miſerably, but by evil is rather meant, the evil which they do, as is expreſſed in the ſinging Pſalme, ſo that the righteous to their comfort, may look upon them in their malicious practiſes againſt them, as working their own ruine, which ſhould deter all men from perſecuting the righteous at all times, for though they be able to do nothing againſt, theſe Malignants ſhall come to the deſtruction in the end, which they machinate againſt them: But the Servants of GOD ſhal be redeemed, which implyeth, although even now in danger of death, ſhall be delivered, as Verſe 22.

Verſ. 22.

PSAL. XXXV.

THIS Pſalme is framed, ſo that each Verſe beginneth in the firſt letter as the Hebrew Alphabet, the firſt with א the ſecond with ב the third with ג the fourth with ד &c. Which is an elegancy amongſt the Hebrews uſed in ſong, and is moſt notable in Pſalme 119.

Verſ. 1. Strive (O Lord) with them that ſtrive againſt me. When David compiled this Pſalme is uncertain, but Calvin thinks, whilſt yet Saul lived and perſecuted him, for by ſaying, Strive O Lord with them that ſtrive with me. He intimateth, that he had many enemies who ſtrove againſt him with their tongues, by ſlandering and ſpeaking evil of him, to make him odious to all men, againſt theſe he prayeth, that the Lord would clear his innocency, ſtopping their foule mouths: And by ſaying, Fight againſt them that fight againſt me. That many were up in armes againſt him to deſtroy him, but in either caſe he makes the Lord his refuge by prayer, as we muſt alſo do upon the like occaſions, and in him be comforted againſt all the calumnies and violent attempts of men againſt us: And thus Auguſtine underſtands it, as made for the comfort of all the poor members of Chriſt, againſt their cruel Perſecutors.

Note.

Verſ. 2. Lay hold upon the ſheild and buckler. This is ſpoken after the manner of men, that come to help others againſt their enemies, and not that God hath need of, or doth uſe any ſuch kind of weapons, the breath of his mouth alone being ſufficient to confound all, even moſt Potent enemies.

Verſ. 4. Let them be aſhamed and confounded that ſeek my Soul. In this and Verſe 5, 6, 7. &c. David teacheth the diſtreſſed Servants of GOD in his own example, what to pray, not doubting, but that they ſhal be heard and ſaved; as followeth, Verſe 9. 10. Where he ſpeaketh of rejoycing herein, yea and the rejoycing of his very bones, hereby meaning, that all his parts, and whatſoever ſtrength and vigor was in him, ſhould be ſpent in celebrating his praiſes, which ſpeaks againſt them that are remiſs and negligent about this duty.

Verſ. 9. 10.

Verſ. 11. Cruell Witneſſes roſe up againſt me. Here is laid down the cauſe of his calling upon God for help, before going, he prayed, Verſe 1. That God would Strive with them, that ſtrove againſt him. That is, By calumnies and ſtrife of the tongue, now he ſheweth, how they ſo ſtrived againſt him, Viz. By falſe accuſations of things, which he knew not of, whereby they ſought to bring him in danger of his life, and this may have reference in particular to his ambitious ſeeking of the Kingdome, and the deſtruction of Saul, for that ſome accuſed him of this, appeareth, 1 Sam. 24. 10. Where he

he ſaith, Why doſt thou hearken to mens words, that ſay, David ſeeketh evill againſt thee.

They rendred me evill for good, the bereaving of my Soule, or life. For by their falſe accuſations, they ſtirred up Saul to take away his life, and for that end, he came out to ſeek him with three thouſand men: But what good had David done them? Very much in killing Goliah, the terrour of them all, and ſlaying the Philiſtims, the ſpoylers of their Country: And Verſe 11. Expreſſeth further what good he meant, Viz. His faſting, and mourning, and praying for them in their miſery. Verſ. 12.

Yet I in their ſickneſſe put on ſackcloath. By ſickneſs any affliction is here to be underſtood, as Verſe 15. Halting. When he cometh to ſpeak of himſelf, ſets forth any weakneſs or miſery likewiſe, whereby he was diſabled and brought low: His putting on ſackcloath and faſting, as if his Friend or Brother, or Mother had been afflicted, Verſe 14. Is ſpoken of to ſhew, how far he was from all hatred againſt them, yea, how great his love was towards his deadly enemies, as we are all commanded to be likewiſe affected, Matth. 5. 45. And to pray for them, as is intimated alſo that he did, in ſaying, My prayer turned into my boſome. That is, ſaith Ainſworth, Either I prayed for them oft times in ſecret, or let it turn into my boſome, if I prayed for any evil to come upon them: Geneva notes, with inward affection or bowing down my head: But Baſil beſt, I received the fruit of my prayers for them, upon my booſome, for ſo עַל ſignifieth, and this he did through inward comfort to God-ward, upon the diſcharge of this his duty, although extreamly provoked to the contrary by their malice: And thus it ſhall be to every one, that ſincerely prayeth for his enemies, becauſe he is now aſſured in his conſcience, that he is the Child of his heavenly Father, Math. 5. 45, 46. That yee may be the Children of your Father which is in Heaven. Or may it not be meant, my prayers for them took no effect in them, to abate their malice towards me, but cruelty was by them repayed me, and curſing from their mouths. For the expoſition preceding, the word turning, makes againſt the firſt, as arguing not a direct going on, and here is nothing ſpoken of evil, whereby it might be underſtood, as an imprecation againſt himſelf according to the other. Verſ. 13. Verſ. 14. Note. Ainſworth. Geneva. Baſil. magnus.

But in my halting they rejoyced, they gathered together, the abjects gathered together, they teared me, and were not ſilent. Having ſhewed, how he behaved himſelfe, when his enemies were in miſery, which alſo may be referred to the words before going, Verſe 12. Evil for good. Which though no particular be ſpoken of before, was abundantly done by him after the overthrow of Saul and Iſrael with him by the Philiſtims, when he mourned and ſhewed his love towards Saul as much as he could, by thanking the men of Jabeſh-Gilead, and praiſing them for fetching his Corps from the Philiſtims, and giving it a more honourable burial, 2 Sam. 1. 11. 12. Having I ſay, ſhewed this, he now cometh to move the Lord the more, by the heinouſneſſe of the thing done on their part, to ſhew, how ſpiteful their doings were towards him; at his miſeries they rejoyced, and that not only a few of the great ones about Saul, but even the ſcum of the people, and a multitude of the baſer ſort, whoſe mouths were alſo opened againſt him without end, although they knew no cauſe; but in them the Proverb was verified, like Prince like People; Saul being inſeſt againſt him, the people were generally ful of rage alſo: The word נכים Nachim, rendred Abjects, Signifieth men of a ſmitten or broken condition, men of no worth, for it comes of נכה ſignifying to ſmite; yet ſome render it actively, Smiters, expounding it ſmiters with the tongue: but the former is to be preferred, becauſe he addeth, Men that he knew not, Or took no notice of, they were ſo baſe; ſee the like, Job 30. 8. And for their tearing of him, it was with the tongue by ſpiteful words; the word ſignifieth alſo divided, for which ſome render it ſo, but this is more genuine. Note. Verſ. 15.

Verſ. 16. With Hypocriticall mockers in feaſts, they gnaſhed upon me with their teeth: Calvin, With perfidious perſons, mockers for a Cake of Bread: But Ainſworth, Hypocrites, Scoffers for a Cake of Bread: It ſeemeth to be a further Deſcription of the Abjects ſpoken of, Verſe 15. as if he had ſayd, baſely turning themſelves into any colour, to help on my miſery by bitter Scofs, being drawn to this to humour Saul by his feeding them. For to this Effect it is ſayd, Prov. 28. 21. That ſome will tranſgreſſe for a morſell of bread. Others take it either thus, or as ſpoken of making him their Table talk, when they fed themſelves deliciouſly, choaking him with ſuch intolerable Scoffs, alledging, Hoſ. 7. 8. Where the Enemies of Ephraim are ſet forth as banquetters, Ephraim as the bread, that they fed upon. But Calvin holdeth, that the great ones about Saul feaſting with him are particularly here meant, as the vulgar and baſer ſort before.

Verſ. 17. 18. 19. 20. &c. My darling, Hebr. only one from the Lion. Of this ſee before, Pſalm. 22. 21. and from hence to the end of the Pſalm, He prayeth for deliverance from his Enemies, and that they might be confounded, and his freinds made joyfull.

PSAL. XXXVI.

To him that excelleth of the Servant of the Lord, David. Of this Addition ſingularly here, The Servant of the Lord: See before Pſalme. 18. It doth denote ſomething in either ſet forth, declaring a difference betwixt him and his wicked Enemies, there his wonderfull mercy in delivering him out of their hands, for which his Eyes were towards him, as a Servants to his Maſter; here their profligate wickedneſs, wholly addicting themſelves to do Evill, from which he abhorred, as it becomes Gods Servant to do.

Verſ. 1. The tranſgreſſion of the Wicked ſayth, in the midſt of my heart, there is no fear of God before his Eyes: Hebr. Tranſgreſſion ſayth to the Wicked: That is, His obſtinate, and ſhameleſs giving himſelf to live in all manner of Wickedneſs, telleth him as by a lively voice, what ſhew ſoever he makes to the contrary, that he hath no fear of God in him, and this I ſay, becauſe I know it in my heart to be ſo, as if I heard his wickedneſs ſpeaking ſo much, and I know in the midſt of my Heart, through the inward greif and ſorrow that I have therefore. And this is true touching all, that do, Dare operam peccato, live and go on in groſs ſins from time to time, being touched with no Repentance therefore, their ſinning outwardly proclaims what they are inwardly, although they ſet a good face upon it, and ſay that they have a good heart.

Note

Verſ. 2. For he flattereth himſelf in his own eys til his iniquity be found out to hatred. Here he ſheweth that the wicked harden themſelves to the doing of Evill through a better conceit, which they have of themſelves; when as others, that fear God hate and abhor their doings, and look upon their caſe as abominable to God and dangerous. And this layeth open the Originall and Nurſe of ſo great wickedneſs, as abounds in the world, that men againſt their own Conſcience, that accuſeth them to be without all true fear of God and againſt the judgment of good men, who hate their doings, ſooth up themſelves, asif they were accepted before God as well as the beſt, N. Tran. Till his iniquity be found to be hatefull.

Note.

Verſ. 3. The words of his mouth are wickedneſs and deceit: That is, Saith Calvin, he hath ſomething to ſay to excuſe and juſtify himſelf to the deceiving of his own Soul, and the hardning of him in ſin. He ceaſeth to underſtand to do good, That is, He is averſe from all good Inſtruction and Reaſon, whereby he might be perſwaded better.

Calvin.

Verſ. 4. He meditates Iniquity upon his bed: That is, In his retiredneſs through the the corruption of his heart he beginneth to enter into this evill way by himſelf alone not being drawn on to it by others. He perſiſts in a way not good: not only beginning and going on far in a wicked courſe, but without Repentance always going on. He abominates not evill, being carryed by a contempt of God on in his wickedneſs; and then he ſumms up the differences betwixt the Wicked, and ſuch as fear God thus.

1. He flatters himſelf in his wickedneſs; this man judgeth and condemneth himſelf. Note.

2. He deviſeth reaſons to harden his heart in ſin; this man reaſons againſt ſinning in any thing, in ſtead of extenuating, aggravating his leaſt ſins.

3. He ſtopps or turns away his Eares from hearing Reaſon againſt his Evill ways, this man is willing and deſirous of good inſtruction, that he may be more ſtirred up to good, and againſt evill.

4. His meditations in private are, how he might practiſe this or that wickedneſs; this mans meditations are, how he may yet grow better, and what abundance of ſin he is already guilty of, to be accordingly humbled therefore.

5. He goes on in Evill, waxing dayly worſe and worſe; this man perſeveres in good, and cannot by any means be beaten, or allured out of the Way hereof.

6. He being ſo Evill, as hath been ſayd, abominates not himſelf therefore, but in contempt of God pleaſeth himſelf ſtill therein; this man through the fear of God, trembles and abhors himſelf, even for his Infirmities: yet it is not to be conceived, that every wicked man is ſuch in all degrees, but that there are ſuch, When there is no dram of Grace to reſtrain them, others not being ſuffered to be ſo exorbitant for the common Good of thoſe politick Bodies, whereof they are members, and not that they are any whit the more in the way of Salvation.

(O Lord) thy mercy is in Heaven, thy truth unto the Clouds. Calvin, to the Heavens, New Tranſlat. Thy faithfullneſs to the Clouds: Reſpecting rather the ſenſe then the ſignification of the word. Having ſet forth the abomination of wicked Enemies, to God and his people, now he proceedeth on the contrary ſide to ſet forth Gods mercy and Goodneſs for the comfort of all them that fear him, both to make the wicked aſhamed and to fear, and to comfort all ſuch as fear God, againſt their wicked practiſes, and himſelf in particular. In this and V. 6. are four Excellencies in God ſpoken of. Firſt, Mercy or Goodneſs. Secondly, His truth or faithfullneſs. Thirdly, His Righteouſneſs. Fourthly. His Judgments. His mercy, In the Heavens Pſalm. 57. 11. Unto the Heavens, Pſal, 108. 5. Above the Heavens: And the ſame is meant here alſo; it is ſo great that it filleth the World below and Heaven above alſo. His truth unto the clouds, For he dealeth truly and faithfully with all creatures, keeping touch with all in every thing, that he hath promiſed: And the Heavens and Clouds, haply are mentioned in reference to the Rain-bow, which he ſayth he would place in the Clouds, for a ſigne that the Earth ſhould never be drowned again. His Righteouſneſs like the mountaines, To adminiſter all things by his providence moſt juſtly in puniſhing thoſe that are ſo intollerably addicted to all manner of Wickedneſs, and doing Good to thoſe that fear him, and delivering them out of their Hands: His judgments like a great deep: Or Abyſſe, the bottom whereof cannot be ſounded, whereby is meant, that although the Wicked for a time may live in proſperity, the Righteous in miſery, they in honour, theſe in diſgrace, yet the juſt judge will one day put a contrary difference between them, making theſe happy and honorable, them infamous and miſerable for ever: but yet this judgment lyeth hid, as the bottom of an Abyſſe, no ſuch thing appearing to men a long time. Thou ſaveſt both man and beaſt: So good is the Lord, that his Goodneſs in governing the World is extended to all his Creatures, yea Verſ. 5. Gen. 9.

even the very beaſts, therefore much more to men, and ſpecially to ſuch as fear him, and truſt in him. ſo that they ſhall be ſaved from the hands of their Enemies here, and from Death and damnation hereafter, and partake of this Heavenly Kingdom for ever and ever. And in this ſenſe the Apoſtle ſayth, God is the Saviour of all men, eſpecially of them that beleeve.

Verſ. 7. How precious is thy mercy, and the Sons of men ſhall truſt under the ſhadow of thy wings: That is, Not all promiſcuouſly, but the faithfull that live in his fear: Of the Wicked it is ſpoken contrariwiſe before, ſo that if they truſt, they ſhall be deceived, the like Phraſe is alſo uſed of the Faithfull, Pſalm. 91.

Verſ. 8. They ſhall be ſatisfied with the fatneſs of thy houſe: That is, They ſhall have joy in thee, as they that are feaſted in the houſe of a King, where all Delicacies, both of meat and drink abound, for a good Conſcience is a continuall feaſt, and this is in the Senſe of Gods Grace and favour in Chriſt, juſtifying from our ſins, there being no worldly thing that can ſatisfy, yet becauſe Godlineſs hath the promiſes of this life, and of that to come, I hold with Calvin that the one is ſo promiſed here, that the other is not excluded. For all ſuch as fear God and truſt in him ſhal be fed corporeally, Pſ. 37. 1. and Spiritually with the light of Gods countenance, Pſal. 4. 7. and Eternally with hidden Manna, Revel. 2. 17.

Verſ. 10. 11 12. After promiſes of favour to them that fear God, here he addeth prayers, both for them and for himſelf, concluding with Threatning to the Wicked that they ſhall fall and never riſe up again.

PSAL XXXVII.

Verſ. 1. FRET not thy ſelf at the Wicked neither be envious at evill doers: Having before ſhewed the Ruin of the Wicked, Pſal. 36. 12. Now he admoniſheth all ſuch as fear God, not to be vexed to ſee them or any of them for a time in proſperity, to be diſcouraged in the ways of godlineſſe, or to ſin by envying hereat. For their proſperity is but like the green Graſs, which is ſoon cut down and withereth.

Verſ. 3. Truſt in the Lord and do good, dwell in the Land and thou ſhalt be fed aſſuredly: Having in the former Verſes made Application of that ſpoken of the Ruin of the Wicked, Pſal. 36. 12. Now exhorteth and comforteth the Righteous, by promiſing, that it ſhall be unto them as he prayed, Pſal. 36. 11. But he begins with truſting in the Lord, as the foundation of doing Good and of all Bleſſings: For Philoſophers excelled in morrall Virtues, Temperance, Patience, and Contempt of the world, but doing theſe things not out of faith, they were not accepted. By dwelling in the Land he meaneth, that the faithfull ſhall have a ſetled Habitation, and that God will take care for them to feed them with Food ſufficient, ſo that they need not be diſtracted with worldly Cares, but caſt all their Care upon God. And that feeding with food ſufficient is meant, is further confirmed, Verſe. 19. Where he ſayth, That in time of famine they ſhall have enough, So that other Expoſitions referring this feeding, to feeding upon faith, or feeding others with Truth, &c. are worthily by Calvin rejected.

1 Pet. 5. 7. Matth. 6.

Calvin. Ainſworth. Ainſworth renders the words, Feed on faith, and he takes the words before going, Dwell in the Land: Either for a promiſe or a command to keep in the Land of Canaan, as Iſaack did in time of Famine. But here is no word ſignifying Faith, but Truth, or Verily, therefore render it word for word, and it is, Feed thee verily, For thou ſhalt have wherewithall to do it, and likewiſe Truſt in the Lord, do good and dwell in the Land, Can have none other ſenſe, but as of a promiſe that thou ſhalt do ſo, poſſeſſing it as an Inheritance, thou and thy Seed after thee for ever, as is expreſſed, Verſe 29.

Yet

Yet Ainſworth hath one thing here remarkeable, that this Pſalm is begun with the firſt Letter of the Hebrew Alphabet, and every two Verſes go on in order with the reſt, to the laſt letter of that Alphabet.

Delight thy ſelf in the Lord, and he will give thee thy hearts deſire: That is, Let this be thy joy, that the LORD is thy portion, and not that thou haſt worldly things which will deceive thee, and then thou ſhalt never want, but have thy hearts deſire, becauſe in him is a confluence of all comforts and bleſſings, See the like, Iſa. 58. 14. Verſ. 4.

He will bring forth thy Righteouſneſs as the Light. If any Godly man being in miſery for a time, ſhall ſay, I cannot find any ſuch comfort in the Lord as thou promiſeſt, here is ſomewhat ſpoken that may ſatisfy him. The darkneſſe of miſery ſhall be turned into the Light of felicity unto thee, only wait Gods leiſure, till it ſhall ſeem good to him to do it. Verſ. 6.

Be ſilent or ſtill to the Lord, wait for him. Till he ſhall be pleaſed to do for thee, as is before promiſed, be not impatient or murmure, but wait. The word חול here uſed as Calvin noteth, ſignifieth either mourn or wait, and if we take it for mourn, it is meant of mourning ſilently, but he followeth the firſt, Wait. Then he repeateth again in more words that which he had ſayd, Verſe 1. concluding Verſe 8. That this were to do Evill to vex at the Wickeds proſperity. Verſ. 7. Calvin.

They that wait for the Lord ſhall inherit the Earth: Here is a reaſon why we ſhould not vex at the proſperity of the Wicked, for although now they flouriſh, yet they ſhall be cut off, and the Righteous ſhall have the better of it, even in this world, for however they be tumbled and toſſed about, yet their comfort is great in all places, through the Lord, for whom they waite or ſtay a time, firſt in miſery, or the Righteous are promiſed the inheritance of the Land, becauſe if the people of Iſrael had been ſuch, they ſhould alwaies have injoyed the Land of Canaan, and it ſhould never have come into the poſſeſſion of their Enemies. For it was for ſin that they were caſt out, and that they were conſumed with Wars, and therefore to the Righteous is promiſed alſo, Abundance of Peace. For the fruit of Righteouſneſs is peace, Iſa. 32. 17. Verſ. 9.

Better to the Righteous is a little, then the Riches of many Wicked: the word מהון here rendred Riches ſignifieth alſo a multitude, or abundance, which ſome refer to people, as if it were meant, a few Righteous are better then many or multitudes of Wicked, and ſome joyn it, and the word רבים many together, as if it had been ſaid, Then great riches of the wicked: but either of theſe is more forced, and it agreeth better to the Argument in hand to render it as before; For whereas the Righteous inheriting the Earth, is ſpoken of, Verſe 15. If it ſhould be objected, they have but little in compariſon of many wicked, here it is reſolved, this little is better to him, then their abundance to many of them, if they be put altogether. And a reaſon is rendred V. 17. Their bones, That is, Their ſtrength ſhall ſoon be broken, but the Lord will eſtabliſh the Righteous: That is, Be as a continuall fountain of good unto them, ſo that they ſhall never want, but the Riches of the wicked are vaniſhing by Gods Judgments, ſo that their abundance is turned in a ſhort time into want. Thus Calvin, And the little of the Righteous is better alſo, becauſe his Goods are truly Goods coming from Gods bleſſing and uſed to his Glory, but the Goods of the wicked are Evills, according to the ſaying, Bona hujus mundi ſunt bonis bona, malis mala, Becauſe they are ill gotten, and if not, turned to be a means of more licenciouſly doing Evill, by Rioting, Pride, Oppreſſion, and coveteouſneſs, from Hamon here uſed to ſet forth Riches, Ainſworth noteth the Word Mammon cometh. Verſ. 16. Calvin. Note. Ainſworth.

The Wicked ſhall periſh, and the haters of the Lord as the fat of Lambes, Here that which was ſayd, Verſe 18. is further amplified, as the fat of lambs melteth away with the heat of the fire, ſo their Riches ſhall fade, and he calleth them haters of God, hereby denoting how much they deceive themſelves Verſ. 20. Note.

ſelves when they ſay, that they love God: So Commandement the ſecond.

Verſ. 21. Calvin.

The wicked borroweth and payeth not again. This ſaith Calvin, is expounded of the unjuſt dealing of the wicked, whereunto he granteth, that it may be applyed, but it is properly meant, that he is through the curſe of God made ſo poor, that he hath need to borrow, but when he hath done ſo, his Eſtate waſting more and more, he hath not wherewith to repay what he borrowed; and this is further confirmed, Verſe 22. They that are curſed of him ſhall be rooted out, Their Eſtates being conſumed and brought to nothing; I take the former words both waies, he borroweth and Payeth not, Either becauſe he is brought low, and ſo unable, or unconſcionable, and ſo wil not, thus alſo Ainſworth.

Verſ. 23.

The ſtepps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and he will love his way. Hebrew, The ſtepps of a man. Yet it is not meant of every man, but of thoſe that feare him, for it is ſpoken of one, whoſe way is loved by the Lord, ſuch are directed by him in the courſe of their life, to do that which is pleaſing unto him, and ſo he through the favour, which he beares towards them, makes all their waies proſperous, as Pſal. 35. 27.

Verſ. 24.

Though he fals, he ſhall not be utterly caſt down. Hebrew, He ſhall not be caſt off. It being meant, Though he be afflicted and that often, as Prov. 24. 16. yet he ſhall riſe again, he ſhall not ſink under the burden of his afflictions, God wil never caſt away his fatherly care over him: Some, ſaith Calvin, underſtand it of falling into ſin, and riſing again by repentance, and ſome, of his courage in adverſity, and his not fainting under ſufferings; but he rejects both, the firſt, becauſe outward proſperity is the argument in hand, and the ſecond, becauſe it doth not ſufficiently expreſſe the meaning, that although he be greivouſly afflicted, yet the Lord wil deliver him; and he renders the word, Non collidetur, He ſhal not be daſht in pieces. Ainſworth is for both falling into ſin and miſery in this World: Baſil is for falling into ſin, becauſe Verſe 23. The Lords directing of his ſteps is ſpoken of, without whoſe direction the beſt man living falleth into ſin; but herein lyeth his comfort, that when being for a time left to himſelfe, as Hezekiah was, and David alſo, and by this meanes he falleth; the Lord is at hand to lift him up again, and to ſet him right, which the next words ſhew, The Lord ſuſteineth him with his hand, For ſo he renders them; let the Reader follow whether he pleaſeth, or rather both with Ainſworth, for falling is ſpoken of both waies, Gal. 6. 1. as of falling into ſin, Michah 7. 9. into affliction.

Verſ. 25. Luk. 16.

I never ſaw the righteous forſaken, nor his ſeed begging. This may ſeem ſtrange, becauſe Lazarus begged, and ſometime other righteous perſons are in ſo great want, that they cannot live without begging,; yet David had this from Moſes, Dent. 15. 4. Where to the people of Iſrael, being obedient, ſuch a bleſſing is promiſed, that there ſhal be no poor amongſt them. Calvin reſolveth it, that even the beſt have their ſinnes, which God correcteth them for, ſometime one way, ſometime another, as he ſeeth moſt meet for each one of them for their greater good: And thus a good man may be puniſhed with want, even to beggery: So Paul was often in want, but he had learned to want and to abound, and in all things to be content; yet he concludeth, that in his greateſt poverty, he liveth wel of that little which he hath; Baſil applyeth it only to Iſrael, the ſeed of the righteous Progenitors, whom God never left: Ainſworth, That he is not brought to poverty, nor his ſeed, by liberality to the poor, contrary to the opinion of worldings, who wil not give for feare leaſt their Children ſhould want it another day: And this I take to be beſt, for the words next following, Verſe 26. All the day he is gratious and lending, his ſeed is bleſſed. He and his Children have never the leſſe but the more for his liberality to the poor, according to that Prov. 11. 24. there is That ſcattered, but is more increaſed. It is then thus ſaid, not that it falleth falleth out thus to all the righteous, no one being ever excepted; but thus generally God dealeth with them, and hereby we ſhould be encouraged to deeds of charity to the poor, not fearing want in ſo doing: And on the other ſide, although every one that beggeth his bread is not hence to be taxed, as none of the righteous ſeed: (For we may be made ſo poor by perſecution, as the poor of Lions in France) yet we ſhould rather take any paines to get each one his bread, then to beg; and for the moſt part, they that go about begging, are a curſed Generation, in whom that curſe takes effect, Let their Children be Vagabondes and begg their bread. Note.

The reſidue of the Pſalme is ſpent in exhorting, as Verſe 2. To depart from evill, And to do good. Uſing reaſon to perſwade hereunto, Verſe. 28 29. Then deſcribing him to be one that talketh of wiſdome, and hath the Law of God in his heart, Verſe 30. 31. After this he noteth the attempts of the wicked againſt him, and Gods fruſtrating them, Verſe 32. 33. then he exhorteth again to truſt in God, Verſe 34. And addeth a reaſon taken from the ſtability of ſuch, and inſtability of the wicked, Verſe 35. 36. But for this he bidden us mark the end of the juſt and of the wicked, Verſe 37, 38, 39, 40. For otherwiſe we might judge amiſſe, if wee look at the preſent evil condition of the righteous, or the proſperous of the wicked. Verſ. 27. 28 30. 32.

PSAL. XXXVIII.

A Pſalme of David for a remembrance. The Sept. addeth, For a remembrance of the Sabboth. Which Auguſtine following, ſaith, that it was to put us in minde of reſting or ceaſing from ſin, which bringeth even upon the beſt ſo great miſeries: But to leave that, as not being in the Hebrew, it was compiled by David, that hereby he might helpe himſelfe, to remember his ſufferings, to be thankful to God ever after being delivered, and careful of his waies, leaſt he ſhould again fal into the like or greater miſeries; and not only for himſelfe, but as he was a publick perſon in compiling it, he had reſpect to the publick good of the Church, hereby teaching us all, to remember our chaſtiſements, of which we are ready to be forgetful, ſo ſoon as we have any eaſe, that they may not only work upon us to humble us for our ſinnes, and to make us repent for the preſent, but alwaies after; otherwiſe he that hath ſmitten us, holds his puniſhing hand ſtil over us, and wil judge us again and again: See the like Title, Pſal. 70. And for the grievances here complained of, Baſil takes them to be the death of his Son Ammon, Abſaloms conſpiracy, Achitophels joyning with him, and Shimei his curſing him: For the firſt Verſe ſee the ſame, Pſal. 6. 1. Auguſt. Baſil.

Thy arrows ſtick faſt in me. David being afflicted looks not ſo much at men, the inſtruments, as at God, by them puniſhing him, as when Shimei rayled upon him; He curſeth, becauſe God bad him curſe, ſaid he. See the like, Pſal. 18. 15. Pſal. 91. 5. Job 6. 4. Yet as by arrows peircing words of wicked enemies, ſo God ſmiting or peircing the body with paines and ſickneſſes may be underſtood: But the comfort of Gods Servants is, that although they be grievous, they are but the hand of God, their loving Father, who if he woundeth will heale them again, as Hoſ. 6. 1. There is no reſt in my bones by reaſon of my ſinnes. TO him that excelleth, to Jeduthun, a Pſalme of David. Of Jeduthun ſee, 1 Chron. 25. 3. He and his Sons were appointed to be ſingers in Gods houſe, wherefore it is meant, that this Pſalme ſhould be committed to him, and them, to be ſung from time to time: ſee the like Title Pſal. 77. 1. For the time of compiling it, Baſil ſaith, That it was, when Shimei curſed him; Auguſtine on the word Jeduthun, Trarſiliens ſaith, That the ſignification of the word is rather to be lookt at, then the name; it is a Pſalme for him that paſſeth beyond them, that is, Worldly things to Heavenly.

I ſaid I will keep my way from ſinning with my tongue. David had ſaid before, Pſal. 38. 14 That in the midſt of his miſeries he was, as dumb, now he amplifieth the ſame, by declaring his reſolution againſt breaking out into impatient ſpeeches, and he ſaith, He kept a bridle to his mouth, to this end; whereby is intimated, how hard a thing it is for a man being provoked, to refrain from evil and curſed ſpeaking, ſee for this, James 3. Whilſt the wicked are before me; That is, Leſt they ſhould upon my letting any ſuch words come from my mouth, take occaſion to rejoice, as having taken me by this meanes in a great ſin: Thus Expoſitors generally, but Calvin wil not only have this meant, but alſo the wickeds continuing in proſperity about him, as if he had ſaid, I reſolved, though they proſper and increaſe never ſo much, and ſo my oppreſſions be the greater, yet to beare it patiently and in ſilence: But Baſil by the wicked before him, underſtands Shimei, when he moſt admirably refrained himſelfe, being by that baſe rayler ſo greatly provoked, yet he did not only refrain from evil ſpeeches, but reſtrained Joab from taking revenge upon him, ſaying nothing but this, He curſeth, becauſe God bad him curſe. And of David we learn the like patience in time of provocation, and becauſe we cannot otherwiſe, we muſt put a bridle, as it were, in our mouths, by ſtriving to be thus patient, that the ill language of others againſt us, may not draw the like from us. Verſ. 1. Calvin. Baſil. Note.

I was dumb through ſilence, and I held my peace from good. He did not only reſolve againſt ſpeaking to offend, but he did indeed refrain ſometime, yea, from ſpeaking good, that is, What he might juſtly have ſpoken in his own defence, ſo Calvin; but he ſaith, ſome expound it of his ſilence in reſpect of praiſing God, by reaſon of his great troubles. Verſ. 3. Calvin.

The fire waxed hot in the midſt of me, &c. Here David confeſſeth his own weakneſs, he was not able alwaies to contain, but brake out at length into ſpeeches of impatience; thus Satan is ready, when the Servants of God reſolve, and ſtrive moſt againſt ſin, to ſtir and blow up the fire of wrath: Baſil, when I reſolved upon patience, thoughts of my hainous ſinnes came into my minde, in the matter of Uriah, and then I was tormented with griefe, as if I had had a fire within me: And although I ſpake not to Shimei curſing me, yet I ſpake to the Lord, having death before mine eyes, of which I was worthy, and from which, for the frailty of mans life in general, I ſaw that I could not be long free, eſpecially beginning already for them to pine away; Auguſtine, when I refrained ſo from ſpeaking, for feare of ſpeaking evil, that I ſpake no good, I was troubled at this my ſilence, leſt my ſin ſhould be counted greater for this ſilence, then my vertue in refraining from ſpeaking evil. Verſ. 4. Baſil.

Make me to know, O Lord, my end, and the number of my daies. This is by Calvin expounded, as ſpoken out of impatience, as if he had challenged the Lord for laying upon him ſuch loads of miſery, when as his life was ſo ſhort, and he ſhould not have time after theſe his grievous ſufferings, by joyful daies to be made amends therefore: But the words inforce Verſ. 5. Calvin.

moſt foulely. But although the word יתר ſignifyeth to remain, or to be left, yet how out of it this Expoſition ſhould be made of neglecting his owne loſſe, I ſee not: for the other ſignification of the word excellent, or honourable, to render it hereby both agreeth beſt, and this underſtood, the Proverb is notable for the commending of righteouſneſſe above all worldly things to us all. Riches and honours attained to hereby, ſaith Chryſoſtome, in wicked men, are but like unto an old Whores ill-favoured face painted over to make it ſhew beautifull, but take away the painting, and then it appeares baſe and contemptible, but righteouſneſſe makes the face faire and ſhining, at the leaſt in another life, like the face of our Lord Jeſus in his Transfiguration. One renders it, The juſt is abounding above his neighbour, expounding it in wealth, with which God bleſſeth him in his juſt dealing; whereas the wicked, who is drawne away by his owne deceitfull imagining that by wicked meanes hee ſhall become rich, through Gods curſe is oftimes blaſted in his eſtate, and made poore. But neither doth this reading agree with the originall, neither is it often verified in that ſenſe, wherefore I reject this Expoſition alſo.

Note. Chryſoſt. Cajetan.

Verſ. 27. Lavater. The ſlothfull man roaſteth not what he tooke in hunting, but the ſubſtance of a diligent man is precious. Lavater for ſlothfull here hath deceitfull, expounding it thus: as when a man hath hunted all day, and taken veniſon, yet ſometime it happeneth ſo that the dogs eat it up, and he never roaſteth it, or hath good of it; ſo by the juſt judgement of God the goods ill gotten by the fraudulent, ſometimes are torne againe from him, or ſpent by others, he never having any comfort thereof. But the ſubſtance of the diligent is precious; that is, what by honeſt labour is gotten, is durable, as precious gold. To this of Lavater doe I ſubſcribe, and the word רמיה here uſed ſignifieth not ſlothfull, but deceitfull; but becauſe the word diligent is oppoſed to it, our NewTranſlation rendered it ſlothful, reſpecting rather the condition of Hunt-men here ſpoken of, who are ſlothfull for doing any works of husbandry, being onely addicted to the pleaſure of hunting, and hawking, then the ſignification of the word. The Vulgar Latine in following the ſenſe alſo, not the ſignification hath it, non inveniet fraudulentus lucrum ſuum, the deceitfull man ſhall not finde his gaine. The words properly ſignifie the deceitfull man ſhall not burne what he tooke in hunting; whereupon Rab. Joſeph ſaith, that it was the manner of old, when a man had taken fowles, to burne their wings, and that hereunto it was alluded, it being meant, that as he that taketh fowles, but keepes them not till he hath burnt their wings, hath no profit of them, becauſe they flye away againe; ſo he that getteth worldly wealth by deceit; wherefore this gaine is nothing worth, but that which is gotten by honeſt labour, is gaine to be valued and accounted of indeed, as gaine that will continue.

R. Joſeph.

Verſ. 28. In the way of righteouſneſſe there is life, and in the path-way thereof there is no death. Having ſpoken much in this Chapter in the commendation of righteouſneſſe, now he concludeth with the greateſt motive of all others to follow after righteouſneſſe; to them that doe ſo is life, that is, joy and proſperity here, and life everlaſting hereafter, and here is no death, or which is as a death, ſorrow and ſadneſſe in wordly reſpects: For he meaneth not, that the righteous ſhall not dye by a naturall death, for ſo all men muſt, Rom. 5. 12. Heb. 12. but that they ſhall have no ſuch ſorrow, as hath beene ſpoken of, which as the Apoſtle ſaith, is unto death, nor ſuffer death eternally as the wicked ſhall.

CHAP. XIII.

Verſ. 1. A wiſe ſonne heareth his fathers inſtruction, but a ſcorner heareth no rebuke. Heb. A wiſe ſon the inſtruction of his father; that is, in his life, and doings repreſents his father, ſo that in him, as in an inſtruction penned to ſet forth his fathers goodneſſe, and good teaching of him, it may apparently be ſeen; but the ſcornfull,

ſcornfull, wicked, proud ſonne, who is impatient of any reproofe, or correction, is ſo farre from being one that commends his good Father by his life, that he diſgraceth him.

A man ſhall eate good by the fruit of his mouth, but the ſoule of tranſgreſſours ſhall eate violence. The firſt part of this Proverb ſee before, Ch. 12. 14. The meaning is, he that inſtructeth others in goodneſſe, ſhal another day be rewarded accordingly, as Daniel ſaith; They that turne others to righteouſneſſe, ſhal ſhine as the ſtarres in the Firmament; but contrariwiſe, they that with their mouthes either ſinne by lying, common ſwearing, curſing, or any corrupt talking, or ſet forth any corrupt doctrine, to the depraving of others in opinion, or life, inſtead of this ſweet fruit of the Tree of Life, ſhall be compelled to eate, and feed continually upon a moſt tormenting and violent death, as all the damned doe for ever-more: wherefore it ſtands every one in hand, as by a bit and bridle, to keep his tongue from evil ſpeaking, and as at that time he deſireth to gather, and enjoy good fruit, to utter good ſpeeches, which may be to the uſe of edifying from time to time. Verſ. 2. Dan. 12. Pſal. 11. 6.

He that keepeth his mouth, keepeth his life, but he that openeth wide his lips ſhall have deſtruction. Moſt aptly doth this follow after verſ. 2. wherein Tranſgreſſours with their mouthes are threatned with violence; therefore let every one keep his mouth, as his life: if evil words indanger thy life, as they doe, take heed of them, as of death it ſelfe. And well were it with evil tongued perſons, if they were in danger of a corporall death only, for by thy words, ſaith Chriſt to ſuch, thou ſhalt be condemned; for which cauſe let us remember, and with all carefulneſſe put in practiſe that of Pſal. 39. 1, 2. for openeth his mouth wide, the vulgar hath, that is inconſiderate in ſpeaking, and ſo ſpeaking wickedly, which is true ſence. Verſ. 3. Mat. 12. 36. Note.

The ſoule of the ſluggard deſireth, and hath not, but the ſoule of the diligent ſhall be made fat. Thus Hebr. and the Caldee ſpeakes to the ſame effect, but the vulg. Piger vult & non vult, He willeth, or deſireth, and deſireth not; That is, he is ſo long in deliberating before he putteth to his hand to doe, that for want of action and labour he wanteth ſuſtenance; or becauſe Hebr. it is only the ſloathfull deſireth not, which may as well be ſupplyed obtaineth not, as deſireth not, and then here is ſhewed, how vaine they are, that would willingly enjoy good things, but this is all that is in them, they are not induſtrious to get them; and as it is touching the things of this life, ſo it is touching thoſe of a better to come; a man may wiſh for them with Balaam, but it is the diligent, and carefull to doe good, that ſhall be ſatiated here-with, they that are not ſhall never have them, although they beleeve they ſhall. Verſ. 4. Numb. 23. 10.

A righteous man hateth lying, but a wicked man is loathſome, and cometh to ſhame, Hebr. ſhall make to ſtinke, and to be aſhamed. Of ſtinking, thus Jacob ſpeaketh to his ſonnes, after that bloudy maſſacring of the men of Shechem, telling them, that they had made him to ſtinke in the noſtrils of the Nations about: And the Hebrewes told Moſes, when they were the more hated by Pharaoh for his ſake, that he had made them to ſtinke before Pharaoh. So it is here meant, that wicked lyers ſtinke, and are an abomination to all the godly; That is, ſo as that they abhorre their company, and to be amongſt them; they that doe not, are made by them to ſtinke, and to have ſhame ſpoken of them, becauſe they aſſociate themſelves with ſuch companions. Verſ. 5. Gen. 34. Exod. 5.

Righteouſneſſe keepeth him that is upright in the way, but wickedneſſe overthroweth the ſinner. To the ſame effect he ſpake before, chap. 11. 3. the meaning is, the man that hath an upright heart declineth not from the right way, howſoever he be tempted; but he that hath not, is ſoone ſeduced, when temptation cometh, as one over-throwne, and caſt downe. Verſ. 6. Chap. 11. 3.

There is that maketh himſelfe rich, yet hath nothing; and that maketh himſelfe poore, yet hath great riches, Hebr. There is that maketh himſelfe rich, מתעשר, and not all, or not any thing; That is, he hath not any thing: Of theſe words, divers expoſitions are given by divers; ſome, there is, that vain-gloriouſly pretendeth himſelfe to be rich, and liveth accordingly, but is indeed a poore man. Verſ. 7.

Another againe, that is rich, ſaith, and doth ſo, as if he were poore, the better to avoyd charges; ſome, there is a man that is poore, who makes himſelfe rich through the contentation of his minde; another that is rich, makes himſelfe poore, through his covetouſneſſe, becauſe he is a rich man that is content with his owne eſtate, and he poore that is covetous.

Gregor. Nazianz. in his Poems ſaith, A covetous man that is rich, emulating the greedy Horſe-leech, holding ſome things in his minde, and thinking ſome things, and beholding ſome things againe, with no good eyes, and lightly feigning ſome things to himſelfe through vaine hope, through deſiring is alwayes more indigent. And the Apoſtle ſaith, Godlineſſe is great gaine with contentation.

1 Tim. 6. 6.

The covetous man for his unſatiable deſiring of riches, is by Nazianzen compared to Tantalus, and the Dragon, that keepeth treaſures, but maketh no uſe of them.

Greg. Nazianz.

Laſtly Beda, There is a man that makes himſelfe rich having nothing, in that being poore in this world, yet he gets him faith, and other graces; but that rich man, who is voyd of grace, is poore; to which that of James agreeth, The poore in this world, rich in faith. And that written to Laodicea, Thou ſayeſt, that thou art rich, but knoweſt not that thou art poor, and miſerable.

Beda.

Iam. 2. Revel. 3.

The Reader may follow any, or all of theſe expoſitions, and let both the vaine-glorious and covetous take notice each one of his ſinne, to turne there-from, and above all riches, let us all aſpire after the ſpirituall.

Note.

Verſ. 8.

The ranſome of a mans life is his riches, but the poore heareth no rebuke. Of this alſo there are divers expoſitions.

1 A rich man is in danger of being called in queſtion, becauſe he is rich, and by this meanes he hath ſometimes much trouble, and contention, from which he cannot come off, but by paying good ſums of money; but the poore man heares nothing of any ſuch trouble, being never ſo called in queſtion, or ſuffering ſo much as a check at the Judges hands, becauſe they care not for medling with thoſe that have nothing, but only ſuch, as by whom gaine may come in.

Some, when a man of wealth hath done ſomething againſt the Law, for which he is in danger to be called in queſtion for his life; he by his riches giving largely is acquitted, whereas a poore man without hearing is preſently condemned, and executed.

Some, a man that hath wealth is hereby incouraged, and regards not the menaces or quarrels of other men againſt him, becauſe he hath where-with to defend himſelfe, and ſo cannot be made to yeeld to the will of others, in that which he conceiveth to be evil, and conſequently dangerous to his ſoule, and therefore he is hereby ſaid to run ſo in his life; but a poore man being required by the rich and mighty to doe any thing, and threatned if he doth it not, is preſently overcome through feare, he ſtands not to heare any further threatning, becauſe he dares not.

Thus Auguſt. The poore man being required by the rich to teſtifie for him, anſwereth, he dares not; but then he promiſeth him a reward; and if he will not, threatens him: then the poore, unable to beare this, yeeldeth, and giveth falſe teſtimony, and by this word bearing, the vulgar renders it, the poore man heareth no reproofe. But herein the ſence is more reſpected then the ſignification of the word, which is, to heare.

Auguſt. De temp. Ser. 213.

Laſtly, riches laid up in Heaven by charity, are a ranſome, which Chryſoſtome proveth by the Parable of the rich man, that laid up his goods for many yeares; for as he by this meanes loſt his ſoule, ſo he that is charitable, ſaves it; for he that hideth his goods, laying them up, and not diſtributing them to the poore, looſeth his ſoule; but he that brings them forth, and diſtributeth them, delivers it. According to this then the meaning is, riches given away in almes, are as a ranſome of the ſoule; and he that contrariwiſe hoordeth them up, ſhall one day heare that ſharpe reproofe, Thou foole, this night ſhall they fetch away thy ſoule from thee: But the poore man having nothing to give, ſhall never heare any ſuch rebuke. And this

expoſition is of all others moſt genuine, and next unto it, that of Auguſtine immediatly before going.

Lavater ſaith, that Clemens Alexand. expounds theſe words, as I have ſaid; but becauſe the bloud of Chriſt is the only price of our Redemption, he rejecteth this; and there is good reaſon I confeſſe to doe ſo, if by Redeeming, or Ranſoming ſhould be underſtood properly the paying a price ſufficient; but underſtanding by a ranſome parting with our worldly goods to the poor, for Chriſts ſake, which who ſo doth, ſhall be delivered from death, and received into everlaſting life; I ſee no cauſe of rejecting it, but imbracing it, as the beſt ſence; yet the ſame Lavater hath another expoſition upon the laſt words, which is not improbable, the poore man heareth no rebuke, whereby the idle are rebuked and threatned with want for their idleneſſe, and ſo they come to be pinched with poverty, which if they would have hearkened to ſuch reproofe, they needed not to have falne into, but might have had alſo where-with-all to have borne it out, if at any time they had been indangered; for ſo he expoundeth the firſt words of riches, being a mans ranſome, alledging the ſaying of Anacharſis, Rich men are like unto great flyes, that break through the Spiders web, in which little flyes are catched, and hang, and dye; ſo rich men, by the ſtrength of their owne wealth, breake through the net of the Law, when poore men are hereby condemned, and hanged. Lavater. Matth. 25.

To conclude, the ſcope of this place is to ſet forth the commodities both of riches, and poverty; becauſe either of them hath its commodities, as well as diſcommodities; the rich are many times indangered by their wealth, but ſometimes againe they have a benefit hereby; if they fall into the enemies hands in warre, they are ſpared for a ranſome; if they have enemies, that ſeeke by ſuits in Law to wrong them, their wealth will defend them; ſo the poore that indureth much miſery, if there be any rebellion in the Land made by great men, whereby they at length being over-come, ſuffer great blame, and often looſe their lives, with the poore the King medleth not in this caſe, neither doth he heare any rebuke; the rich being begged off, and denying reliefe, is railed upon by the ſturdy Rogue, but the poore man not. &c. thus, and divers other wayes he heareth no rebuke. Muffet

The light of the righteous rejoyceth, but the lamp of the wicked ſhall be put out; That is, the proſperity of the righteous, which commonly in Scripture is ſet forth by light, is ſtable, and permanent, but if the wicked have a little ſuch light, it ſoone goeth out, and ends in the darkneſſe of miſery. Verſ. 9. Lavater.

Thus Lavater, and ſome others, who alſo expound the light of fame, which to the righteous increaſeth, but to the wicked is ſoone put out, and ſo put out as that it cannot be lighted, or come to ſhine any more; as flax flaming, that hath water poured upon it, is not only put out, but oppreſſed, as the word here ſignifieth, never to flame any more.

And it is to be noted, that two words are here uſed, אור light, ſignifieth a greater light, as the light of the day, and נר a Lamp, or Candle, as Job 18. which is put out either by wind, or water; ſo the good name and proſperity of the wicked is put out by the wind of his pride, and the water of his voluptuous lying, or covetouſneſſe.

Some by light underſtand knowledge, which bringeth to the righteous great joy, there being nothing in the world wherein he ſo much delighteth, as in the knowledge of the Word, and things of God; and this light is daily increaſed more and more, it being his continuall ſtudy, and meditation: from a little light of the Prophets ſuch increaſe to the dawning of the day, and the ariſing of the Day-ſtarre in their hearts; but the Lamp, or little light which the wicked have, goeth out againe, as is ſhewed in the fooliſh Virgins, and ſo they had no joy of the Bridegroomes coming, but ſorrow for being ſhut out. And they that receive the ſeed of the Word into ſtony ground, have joy, for a time, but perſecution ariſing, this withereth. Pſal. 1. Pſa. 119.89.100 2 Pet. 1. 19. Mat. 25. Mat. 13.

Only by pride cometh contention, but with the well adviſed is wiſdome. This is chiefly ſpoken in caſe of mens conſulting together about truth, or errour, the beſt or woſt way of doing things: if they be proud, that reaſon together, one preferring his Verſ. 10.

his owne opinion, and another his, there muſt needs be ſtrife, brawling, and falling out; but if humble, as the well adviſed, or ſuch as enter into a ſerious conſideration of their owne weakneſſes are, then things are wiſely and peaceably tranſacted.

The proud man thinkes himſelfe ſo wiſe, that he ſcorneth the advice of others, and doth of his owne head whatſoever he luſteth, but by this meanes many contentions ariſe; ſo one ſelf-conceited man becomes the Author of one Hereſie at one time, and another of another, till all the Churches of God are filled with contentions. But he is not wiſe, but fooliſh, that doth ſo, how good a conceit ſoever he hath of his owne wit; he only that is well adviſed, before he attempts the broaching of any new opinion, is wiſe, and he is well adviſed, that ſeekes firſt the approbation of others, that be learned, and godly; wherefore Chriſt often commends humility to his Diſciples, when ſtrife began to ariſe, as the only meanes to quell it, and the like were to be wiſhed now, to take away our ſtrifes.

Verſ. 11. Wealth gotten by vanity ſhall be diminiſhed, but he that gets it by labour ſhall increaſe. This ſentence is plaine, and therefore they that get wealth by Gaming, Stage-playing, or keeping Brothel-houſes, or Tipling-houſes, cannot expect that their wealth ſhould continue; but the honeſt Paines-taker in a lawfull Vocation may, and that inſtead of waſting, it ſhould increaſe more and more, and this hath been often proved true by experience in many.

Verſ. 12. Hope deferred maketh the heart ſicke, but when the deſire cometh, it is a tree of life. Some expound this altogether of the hope of everlaſting life, of which St. Rom. 8. 17. Paul ſpeaketh, ſaying, The creature groaneth, and we alſo having received the firſt fruits of the Spirit, ſigh together, looking for the adoption of the Sonnes of God. Some, becauſe this hope is not ſo deferred, but that it bringeth preſent joy, for the certainty of the thing hoped for underſtand not it, but generally the hope of any good in this world, when the time is come, but yet it cometh not, this makes the heart to pine away; but the deſire accompliſhed in due time, and not deferred, heateth, and reviveth a mans languiſhing ſpirits; But hope of the life to come, ſaith Gregory, erecteth the minde to eternity, and feeleth nothing, that a man ſuffereth in the meane ſeaſon.

Verſ. 13. He that deſpiſeth the Word ſhall be deſtroyed, but he that feareth the Commandement ſhall be rewarded. By the word here is meant, not only the written Word of God, but alſo collations, or doctrines rightly raiſed here-from, by the preachers of the Word; he that deſpiſeth them, and their teaching, and threatning, deſpiſeth the Word of God, and ſhall periſh; but he that trembleth at the Word, Eſa. 66. 2. as Joſiah did, fearing to doe againſt it, ſhall have a reward; ſo much doth God ſtand upon reverence to be given to his Word, that although he that doth ſo, doth but his duty, yet he ſhall be rewarded therefore, with bleſſings here, and hereafter.

Verſ. 14. The way of the wiſe is a fountaine of life, to depart from the ſnares of death. Here by the way, or law of the wiſe, is meant his teaching the Word, or Commandement before ſpoken of, whereby is commended the expoſition before going, againſt the contempt of Gods Miniſters; the Word taught by them is Gods Word, and it keeps from the ſnares of death, which are every where laid to take, and will take them that are not inſtructed, or being inſtructed againſt them, deſpiſe it.

Verſ. 15. Good underſtanding giveth favour, but the way of tranſgreſſours is hard; That is, he who feareth God, hath ſo much favour done him by God, that he is kept from trouble, whereas the wicked by meanes of the many troubles, that come upon them, finde their wayes harſh, and rugged.

Lavater underſtandeth the way of the wicked to be hard, in reſpect of his hard and harſh dealing; but contrariwiſe, the intelligent finde favour both with God, and men, for their love and kindneſſe ſhewed in all their dealings. But he expounds it alſo of the troubles, and miſeries which befal the wicked, the Adulterers, Drunkards, Theeves, Curſers, and common Swearers.

Chryſoſtome followeth that of the meekneſſe, and goodneſſe of the man of underſtanding, derstanding, whereby all men are drawne to love him, and to desire his acquaintance, comparing him to the Sun that dispelleth all fogs and mists when it shineth, and to Christ, who reconciled Angels and men together, being before at a great distance.

Every prudent man dealeth with knowledge, but a foole layeth open his folly; this is much like unto Chap. 12.23. but there the wise mans concealing his knowledge is commended, here his doing according to wise counsell in all things, whereas the foole by his rash and inconsiderate doings layeth his folly open. that we might learne to doe all things advisedly, and nothing rashly, lest we repent afterwards to our losse. Vers. 16. Note.

A wicked messenger falleth into mischiefe, but a faithfull ambassadour is health. The Vulgar, The messenger of the wicked: It is true both wayes, hee that is sent out about matters of trust by his Prince, if he be unfaithfull, incurreth his displeasure, and suffers death sometimes for it; Againe, the messenger of the wicked that is sent about a wicked businesse shall suffer for it as the Captaine with his fifty, that were sent to fetch Eliah, they were consumed with fire from heaven: and railing Rabshekah, who was sent to blaspheme the living God, and to detract from godly Hezekiah, perished both he and his whole Army. So likewise servants sent out by their Masters about their private affaires, if they be unfaithfull and deceive their Masters, shall be found out and suffer for it. Lavater instanceth in the Popes Legats a Latere, by him sent out to the Princes of the earth, as is shewed Revel 16. But the faithfull Ambassadour is health, such was Paul and the rest of the Apostles, because by their meanes salvation came to the Nations of the earth, and such are all the faithfull Ministers of Christ, who are sent by him to preach the Gospel, whereby faith cometh, and consequently life and salvation for evermore. Vers. 17. Lavater. 2 Cor. 5 20.

Poverty and shame shall be to him that refuseth instruction, &c. This is commonly verified, for as he that submitteth to his teachers and governours, and their good instructions proveth well, and liveth afterwards in good reputation, so he that despiseth them, head-strongly going on in his owne evill wayes, shall not prosper, but live in poverty and disgrace. Vers. 18.

Let them that be young therefore, and rebell against their Parents or governours thinke upon this, and turne obedient, humble and tractable, as knowing this will make most for their future good and credit, being otherwise in danger, although they bee rich for the present, to come into a most despicable condition. Note.

The desire accomplished is sweet to the soule, but it is abomination to fooles to depart from evill. The Septuagint, The desires of the godly delight the soule, but the workes of the wicked are far from knowledge. Hereby it seemeth that the seventy Translators understood the desire here spoken of to be the desire of the godly, that is, their desire universally of being indued with all good graces, and to grow herein, and when it is thus with them, and they attaine them accordingly, this is an exceeding great joy to their soules; others that doe the same things, but not from an heart so affected, cannot finde such sweetnesse herein. Moreover it may also be referred to their desire, that others by their instructions may be converted, for when this is effected, very great is the joy of their soules, as St. Paul often sheweth in his owne example, calling the Corinthians his joy and his crowne. Vers. 19.

There is another reading of Pagnin. Cajetan, and some Hebrewes, The desire broken, or interrupted, is sweet, for so the word נחיה also signifieth, and then this is given for the sense, the pleasure taken in any thing, if it be sometimes intermitted, is the sweeter, when a man cometh to it againe; yet the wicked cannot endure to cease from their sinfull pleasures at any time, but dwell and abide in them, till that by common use they come to be tedious and irksome to them. But this exposition doth not arride me; for if it were admitted, here should be a reproofe of wicked persons for not putting spaces betwixt their sinfull pleasures, as if using them more rarely they were the more justifiable. One makes these words to cohere with the former Cajetan. Pagnin. Rodolph.

former thus, there he said, that shame and poverty shall be to them that despise instruction, here yet because that going contrary to instruction they doe for the present enjoy their desires, and this is sweet unto them, he saith it is an abomination to them to depart from evill. Vers. 12. there are the same words in effect. The desire coming is a tree of life. By desire here, I thinke, that the honour to which it is promised, that they shall come, that heare instruction is meant, it being as if he had said, it is true, yet there appeareth no such difference betwixt the despiser of instruction and him that hearkneth to it, but the time shall come, when this honour by such expected shall come, and when it cometh it shall be sweet and comfortable, God hereby manifesting himselfe to be one, that regards obedience and dutifulnesse in youth, whereby others may be drawne on to doe likewise, and no more despise their teachers; but notwithstanding all this, fooles are so farre from being reformed, that it is an abomination to them to depart from evil'; yea, as some adde, to see any of their companions to depart therefrom, as thinking themselves by their meanes left the more naked and ashamed.

Lavater.

Vers. 20. He that walketh with wise men shall be wise, but the companion of fooles shall be destroyed; The vulgar shall be made like, Hebrew, it is either destroyed, or made evill; יֵרוֹעַ, which last reading is followed by Muffet, and is best. To walke with the wise, is, to keep company with the godly, who are able to instruct others in the wayes of God, by conversing with, and observing their doings, and sayings, a man may become wise; but contrariwise they are corrupted, that converse with the evill, as by being amongst those that are sicke of any infection, a man is in danger of being infected likewise.

Note. Some note here, that it is said, He that walketh with wise men, not with a wise man, to intimate, that he who desireth to be wise, must not onely associate himselfe with one, but with more wise men, this vertue of making wise, not working so much by ones conversing with one, but there is need of the helping hands of many to effect this. If one wicked man converseth with one that is godly, the godly man is more in danger of being corrupted, then the wicked likely to be converted, as there is more strength in a little vinegar to make a little honey sharpe, then in the honey to make the vinegar sweet.

Some for companion of fooles, have feeding fooles, as also the word רֵיעַ signifieth, but it answereth best to the first part of the proverb, to hold to the first reading.

Vers. 21. Evill pursueth sinners, but to the righteous good shall be repayed; that is, although a wicked man may long be spared, and feeles no evill, yet it certainly followeth after him, as the shadow doth the body, and will at length overtake him, and then he shall suffer for all his wickednesse, neither shall he be able by any meanes to save himselfe here-from; and in the meane season, there is a conscience within every man, that committeth any notorious wickednesse, that pursueth and terrifieth him, even as Hounds doe a timerous Hare by their crying after it. And on the contrary side, although the righteous goeth a long time, and seeth no good more coming to him then to others, or not so much, yet he shall finally be repayed for all his labour and constant going on in righteousnesse (which is inseparable from charity) in Gods heavenly Kingdome: besides, he shall bee blessed even in this world, although for a time it may much frowne upon him, as it did upon Job.

Vers. 22. A good man leaveth an inheritance to his childrens children, and the wealth of the wicked is laid up for the just. Here is further prosecuted the argument in hand before, because he had said, Good shall be repayed to the righteous, Now he inlargeth himselfe further, and saith, that the good which shall be done to him in this world, shall not be floting and fading soone away againe, but continue to him and his posterity to the third and fourth generation; contrariwise, if the wicked getteth goods here, when as it is said, evill shall pursue him; these his goods shall not continue to him, and his, but come by some meanes or other into the hands of the just, as God hath divers wayes to bring this about: yet the just abhor by theft, or deceit, or unjust judgement to take his wealth, or any part of it, bee hee never ſo wicked, for then they ſhould not bee juſt.

There is much food in the tillage of the poor, but there is that is deſtroyed for want of judgement. The Vulg. In the fallows of fathers, and in others they are gathered without judgement. Hebr. is ראשים ſignifieth either poore or heads, which latter ſignification the Vulg. following hath it Fathers, and ſome render it Princes; for the next word alſo נסחפה ſignifieth either loſt or deſtroyed, or gathered. But the New Tranſlation doth beſt expreſſe the meaning, which is that a poore man having but a little ground, but well and skilfully tilled, reapeth abundance of increaſe of it, when as others having a farre greater breadth of ground either through want of skill in husbandry, or of induſtry, reap but little profit; hereupon comes the Proverb, A little ground well tilled. Verſ. 23.

Lavater out of Pliny telleth of Furius Creſinus, that he being a poore man, that had a little ground, through his great induſtry had much increaſe, but his neighbours grounds about him bearing little: they complained to the Senate of him, ſaying, that he had bewitched their corne; then he going to the Senate, carried his mattocke and ſpade, and other inſtruments of Husbandry with him, and his daughter, that holpe him work, and ſaid, Loe theſe are my Witch-crafts, whereupon he was acquitted. Lavater.

One Paridius alſo, who had two daughters, having a piece of ground, that was a Vineyard, gave a third part of it to one of them, when ſhe married, and by his good husbandry ſo improved the reſt, that he reaped as much fruit of it, as he had before done of the whole, and the like he did, when he had given another part to his other daughter alſo.

He that ſpareth his rod hateth his ſonne, but he that loveth him, chaſteneth him betimes. He had ſpoken before of a fathers leaving an inheritance to his children, Verſe 22. Now becauſe children not well nurtured, if they have an inheritance left them, may ſoone ſquander it all away, he ſpeakes of correction. It is not love, but hatred in thee to forbeare correcting thy ſonne if he doth wickedly, or ſevere correcting of him, if his wickedneſſe deſerves it; for thus Ely was the cauſe of his ſonnes, and families ruine. There is much iniquity in the heart of a childe, but the rod of correction drives it away. Therefore he that loveth him, chaſteneth him betimes, Heb. in the morning, whereby is meant both his care to doe this above all other worldly buſineſſe, becauſe he intends this firſt in the morning, and his freedome from paſſion, when he doth it, and laſtly, his frequent doing of it: his freedome from paſſion, becauſe he correcteth him not preſently when he hath angred him, but having firſt taken his nights reſt before, and his frequent doing it, as need requireth, becauſe that every morning, after he hath deſerved it, he ſpareth him not, but duly chaſtiſeth him. Verſ. 24. Chap. 22.

The righteous eateth to the ſatisfying of his ſoule, but the belly of the wicked ſhall want. Some by the eating of the righteous to ſatisfaction, underſtand that he keeps his ſtomach alwayes good by his temperance, ſo that when he ſits downe to eat, he feeds to ſatisfaction of nature, and is hereby ſtrengthened; but the wicked, that commonly keep no meaſure, at length are ſo weakned by exceſſe in eating and drinking that their bellies want, and bodies decay for want of an appetite. Some, the righteous getteth worldly goods to the ſatisfying of his ſoule, becauſe he is content with that he hath, but the wicked are never ſatisfied, but ſtill have, as it were, as hungry bellies when they moſt abound, and by reaſon of their covetouſneſſe indeed they keepe their bellies empty enough, that they may fill their purſes the more. Some, the juſt have enough, but the wicked ſhall be poore, and want neceſſaries for this life; and this is to bee preferred as the moſt genuine, and true meaning of the words. Verſ. 25.

CHAP. XIV.

Verſ. 1. Every wiſe woman buildeth her houſe, but the fooliſh plucketh it downe with her hands. By the wiſe womans building her houſe, here is meant her providence, and induſtry to be ſuch, that her husband himſelfe, and his whole family doe all fare the better therefore, and are in the more proſperous condition; as the mid-

Exod. 1. wives of Egypt, who feared God, built their houſes, that is, made them eminent, becauſe God, that liked well of their doings, built them houſes, ſo that they did it through Gods bleſſing upon them. And Abigail, the wiſe wife of Nabal, built

1 Sam. 25. her houſe, when by her providence her family was preſerved from ruine, and ſhe was afterwards promoted to be wife to King David.

But the fooliſh plucks it down, when either by her wickedneſſe the whole family is corrupted, as by Jezabel, who was the ruine of her husband Ahab, and of all his ſonnes, or by her fooliſh, and prodigall waſting, the family decayeth and becomes poore.

It is obſerved by ſome, that a woman new married to a man of old, lived in her father in-laws houſe, till ſhe had gotten ſo much, as wherewith to build her an houſe, and then ſhe removed thither, and to this it ſeemeth here to be alluded. When God made woman at the firſt, hee is ſaid to have built her, for ſo the word בנה there uſed ſignifieth; now as ſhe was built, ſo ſhe muſt be a builder by governing well, and ordering all things in the houſe for the beſt, as the Apoſtle ſpeaketh ſay-

1 Tim. 5. 14 ing, I will that young widows marry, beare children, and guide the houſe. And both Ariſtotle and Demoſthenes ſay, that all things in the houſe ought to be cared for, and ordered by the woman, all things abroad by the man. And it is to be noted here, that Heb. two nownes of the plurall number, wiſe women are uſed, but a verb of the ſingular, to intimate, that they doe all, as one, build their houſes, and ſhe is a fooliſh, no wiſe woman that doth not. Of all others Deborah, and Heſter were moſt famous for their building, not of private houſes onely, but of States and whole Kingdomes, raiſing them up againe, when they were dangerouſly decayed: For the fooliſh woman, ſaid to plucke downe her houſe with her owne hands,

Note. The note of one is good, that her coſtlineſſe in rings, and bracelets, and jewels, and chaines, and apparell, and other implements without end, to ſet forth her pride, is one, and that none of the leaſt meanes, to plucke it downe, and her caring more to keepe her hands, and body fine, then to keep up her houſe.

Verſ. 2. He that walketh in his uprightneſſe, feareth the Lord, but he that is perverſe in his wayes, deſpiſeth him. Becauſe much is ſpoken of the feare of God, both in this and other bookes of holy Scripture, it is here ſhewed, who feareth God indeed, and who not, viz. He that walketh uprightly, eſchewing evill, and do-

Gen. 17. 1. ing good from a good heart, not in hypocriſie; as Abraham was bidden to walke before God, and to be upright, and David is often praiſed for this; but he that either liveth in any ſinne, or doth good diſſemblingly for his owne ends, and not for Gods glory, walkes perverſely, and inſtead of fearing God, deſpiſeth him. It is not a mans ſaying that he feareth God, that will juſtifie him from being a deſpiſer of him, if he walkes contrary to his will.

The Vulgar, He that feareth God, and walkes uprightly, is deſpiſed of him that goeth in an infamous way, and ſo the word him is taken to be meant of him, that feares God, whom the wicked deſpiſe, as counting him moſt fooliſh, not of God, as indeed it is. Neither will the Hebrew beare this reading, becauſe therein, as in other Proverbs, there is an oppoſition in the latter part to the former, whereas in this reading there is none, and ſo it makes the letter ו redundant.

Verſ. 3. In the mouth of the fooliſh is a rod of pride, but the lips of the wiſe ſhall preſerve them; That is, a fooliſh man is like unto him, that hath a rod in his hand, and is herewith ſtriking ſuch as come in his way, but ſhall himſelfe be well beaten at the laſt for this his proud, and diſgracefull ſmiting of others; for even ſo he, that with his tongue is raſh to ſpeake things that he ought not, as through his pride ſcorning to have his tongue kept under by any man, ſhall ſmart for this, as with a rod, rod, when he ſhall be puniſhed for his licentiouſneſſe of ſpeech; of ſuch kinde of men David complaineth, ſaying, They ſay, our tongues are our owne, who ſhall controle us? But the lips of the juſt preſerve them; they are ſo circumſpect and wary, whereſoever they come, that they forbeare ſpeaking any thing that may offend, or exaſperate others againſt them; and in caſe that they be provoked, yet ſo diſcreetly, and moderately they ſpeake to all men, that they paſſe on in ſafety, whereſoever they come. Pſal. 12.

Gregory underſtands this of a Preacher, given altogether to ſpeake againſt the vices of his people, and to reprove them ſharply therefore, but never commendeth their vertues, or good things in them; And Jerome, of a Father, or Maſter, or Lord, who with much pride and diſdaine ſpeakes to his ſubjects, or ſervants, or children; but the righteous, in meekneſſe, and humility; but I reſt in the firſt. Greg. in mor. Hieron.

Where no Oxen are, the crib is cleane, but much increaſe is by the ſtrength of the Oxe; That is, where good husbandry is neglected, a famine, and ſcarcity of corne enſueth, but where it is uſed there is commonly plenty. And becauſe Preachers are compared to Oxen, it is alſo meant, where Preachers are not, there is a famine in reſpect of Spirituall food, mens ſoules are as it were hunger-ſtarved, but full fed, where plenty of preaching is. Verſ. 4. 1 Cor. 9.

A ſcorner ſeeketh wiſdome, and findeth it not; but wiſdome is eaſie to him that underſtandeth: That is, he that hath a long time ſlighted living in the feare of God, and grace, which is neceſſary to ſalvation, although afterwards he ſeekes grace, whereby he may be ſaved, That is, the grace of repentance, and remiſſion of his ſins, yet he findes it not, as Eſau by long ſlighting the Birth-right, at length loſt the Bleſſing pertaining thereunto; but to him that giveth himſelfe to learne, and to fear God betimes, who is the true underſtanding man, this grace is eaſie, it is readily granted to him to be truly penitent, and ſo to be forgiven, and to have aſſurance of his ſalvation. Verſ. 6.

Some by the Scorner underſtand him, that thinkes himſelfe ſo wiſe, that he contemneth all teaching, that comes from others: ſuch ſeeke wiſdome, but finde it not, becauſe they reject the helps granted them by God to attaine unto it; but he that underſtands his owne weakneſſe, and how eaſily he may be deceived, if he be led by his owne ſence, and therefore humbles himſelfe to be taught by others, ſhall eaſily attaine unto it. Lyra.

Some, he that ſpends his young time in jeaſting, never applying his minde to any thing ſerious, he ſhall afterwards ſeeke wiſdome, but in vaine; I preferre the two former, taking it to be againſt both the ſelf-conceited, and ſuch as delay the time of repentance; they are, as one ſaith, like unto Hounds, which by a ſtrong wind blowing, loſe the ſent of the Hare, and then they may ſeeke to finde it againe, but all in vaine: A notion worthy to be thought upon by all, that deferre their converſion, the time ſhall come when they ſhall ſeeke, but not finde, although they be never ſo earneſtly deſirous. Note.

Goe from the preſence of a fooliſh man, when thou perceiveſt not in him the lips of knowledge. Againſt being the companion of fooles ſee before, chap. 13. 20. now the ſame is repeated againe with another reaſon, viz. His fooliſh and foule mouth makes him unworthy to be kept company withall; neither can a good man beare his evill language, but it muſt needs offend him. Verſ. 7.

The wiſdome of the prudent is to underſtand his way, but the folly of fooles is deceit; That is, the thing to which the wiſe are moſt intent, is to underſtand in every thing what is well pleaſing to God, and right, and by what meanes he may moſt benefit himſelfe, and others here, and walke ſo, as that in the end he may be ſaved; but fooliſh wicked men are not intent to any ſuch thing, and if they make any ſuch ſhew of ſeeking, it is nothing but deceit, all their coming to heare, and inquire after the right way is, not to walke therein, but only to make a ſhew before men; yet herein their folly appeares, becauſe God ſeeth with what minde they doe it, and will reward them accordingly, neither ſhall their diſſembling in the end doe them any good, but rather hurt; becauſe feigned holineſſe is double iniquity, ſaith Auguſtine. Verſ. 8. Simulata ſanctitas duplex iniquitas.

Fooles make a mocke at ſin, but among the righteous there is favour. The word rendred ſinne here is חטאת ſignifying either ſinne, or a ſacrifice for ſinne, as the word is uſed, Eſa. 53. He ſhall make his ſoule a ſacrifice for ſinne.

Lavater. And Lavater hereby underſtandeth the Sacrifice of Chriſt, at which heathen fooles make a mocke, ſaying, It is likely, that God could finde no other way to Redeeme man, but by the death of his only beloved Sonne; [illegible] they mocke at ſinne, that is, they count it a light matter to ſinne, not worthy ſorrowing therefore, but of rejoycing to recount, or to ſee it acted; or becauſe לוץ alſo ſignifieth to interpret; they interpret ſinne, the meaning may be, They make a favourable conſtruction of their owne, and the ſinnes of others, that be their conſorts, but an harſh one of the ſinnes of thoſe that they love not, which are better then they, by ſetting their leſſer ſinnes upon the tenter. But among the righteous there is favour; That is, if they fall out one with another, their mutuall love and good will is ſuch yet, that they are ſoone reconciled againe; or when the wicked foole makes a mocke at ſinne, they humble themſelves, and mourne for their owne ſinnes, and for the ſinnes of others, and ſo they come againe into Gods favour; as the foole, that is ſo lightly affected at them never doth, nor ſhall; or, the righteous have a complacency one with another, as the word רצון ſignifieth, and like well of the ſame good things, being delighted when they are acting them, as the wicked are, when they be acting of ſinne, and laughing at it.

Cajetan. Cajetan the foole interpreteth ſinne; That is, ever maketh the worſt of other mens ſinnes; but amongſt the righteous is as favourable an interpretation made of things done amiſſe by others, as may be.

Rodolph. Rodolph, The foole ſpeaketh ſinne, to the offending of the eares of the godly, but gracious ſpeeches are amongſt the righteous.

Aquila. Aquila renders it, Sinne will illude the foole; That is, whereas they hope to ſpeed well at the laſt, although they live long in ſinne, they ſhall be deceived, for ſinne will bring them to confuſion; but the righteous, to whom favour and all good is promiſed, ſhal truly finde favour.

Laſtly, ſome, the foole mocketh at ſacrificing for ſinne, and therefore offereth no ſuch ſacrifice, and ſo liveth in Gods diſpleaſure; but the righteous, ſacrificing as God hath commanded, hath favour and reconciliation with God; of all theſe, I preferre that which goeth upon rejoycing, and laughing at ſinne; and contrariwiſe, the endeavours of the juſt to ſpeake, and doe ſo, as that God may be there-with pleaſed, yet he ſhall not erre that followeth any of them.

Verſ. 10. The heart knoweth his owne bitterneſſe, and a ſtranger intermedleth not with his joy; That is, the griefes or joyes of mens hearts are knowne only to themſelves, not to others; much like unto this is the ſaying of the Apoſtle, No man knoweth the things of a man, but the ſpirit that is in him.

Lavater.

1 Cor. 2. 11

Muffet. Muffet, No man by his mirth and jeaſts can make that heart to rejoyce, that is wounded, and troubled.

Cajetan. Cajetan, This is ſpoken of a wiſe man, it being meant, that if he hath bitterneſſe of heart, he keepeth it to himſelfe, and ſheweth it not to others; and likewiſe if he hath joy; as it is ſaid of Socrates, That no man could ever ſee any alteration of his countenance, for things falling out ill, or well unto him; and his ſaying was, Reaſon muſt be put upon ſorrow, as a Breaſt-plate upon the breaſt, to hide it.

Socrates.

Seneca. And Seneca ſaith, Admit not Griefe, if thou canſt keepe it off, if not, hide it.

Gregor. in Mor. Gregory, The heart knoweth its owne bitterneſſe; That is, knowne to every one is his griefe for his ſins, but he that is a ſtranger to ſuch ſorrow, ſhall not partake of the joy thereof, when he that mourneth ſhall be comforted.

To the ſame effect alſo Beda; Others, when a man hath been in ſorrow, and miſery, and hath met with none to condole it with him, in caſe that he be reſtored to joy, he will call for none to rejoyce with him, it being a common thing amongſt men, he that hath not borne a part with me by ſympathie in my ſorrow, ſhall beare none in my joy. This is true, chiefly touching Chriſt, If we ſuffer with him, we ſhall be glorified with him.

Rom. 8. 16.

The

The houſe of the wicked ſhall be over-throwne, but the tabernacle of the iuſt ſhall flouriſh. By houſe here underſtand Palaces, and ſtrong built houſes, which a man would thinke ſhould ſtand many Ages, by tabernacles, poore habitations, or cottages; thoſe ſhall decay, and come to ruine, theſe ſhall wax more illuſtrious. Verſ. 11.

Beda by houſes underſtandeth the wickeds ſetling of themſelves in this world, as wherein, and in the good things hereof they place their felicity; and by tabernacles, the account which the righteous make of their being here, but as Pilgrimes, or, Souldiers in Tents, the happy permanent being which they expect, being in Heaven; thoſe ſhall be deſtroyed by death, but theſe changed from temporary habitations to everlaſting; both theſe are good, and cannot well be disjoyned, becauſe godlineſſe hath the promiſe of this, and the life to come. Beda. 2 Cor. 5. 1. 1 Tim. 4. 8.

There is a way that is right before a man, but the end thereof is the way of death; That is, ſome ſinfull way wherein he walketh ſeemeth right unto him, becauſe not only he, but moſt men goe therein, but in the end he ſhall finde it to be the way to everlaſting death; for ſo our Lord hath taught us, ſaying, Broad is the way that leads to death, and there be many that walke in it. But becauſe of the pleaſures, and profits, and worldly honours that are herein, it ſeemeth right and good. Verſ. 12. Mat. 7. 14.

The way alſo to Life, by holding Juſtification by workes, ſeemeth to many to be right, and other ſuperſtitious wayes, becauſe all Chriſtians generally have moſt anciently walked herein; but they will in the end prove the way to death, becauſe Chriſt only is the right way, and by the merits of his Death only, to hold Juſtification attainable, and to ſerve God in Spirit and in Truth, not with locall or outward formall worſhip, which he hath ſhewed ſhould be no more under the New Teſtament be done. Ioh. 14. Ioh. 4. 21.

Thus Lavater; but ſome by this way ſeeming right, underſtand the way of proſperity of wicked men, becauſe all things ſucceed well unto them, and they enjoy plenty here, they thinke that they are in a good way, although they live moſt wickedly, but in the end it will prove evill and deadly; ſo likewiſe Pſal. 49. Pſal. 73. Job 21. &c. and this teacheth thoſe in thoſe times, that argue from their good ſucceſſe, that their way is good, although againſt the Word of God. Lavater, Rodolph.

Even in laughter the heart is ſorrowfull, and the end of that mirth is heavineſſe; That is, there are ſome who have heavie hearts, yet outwardly they feigne mirth, but they cannot alwayes doe ſo, for in the end ſorrow and heavineſſe altogether ſhall over-whelme them; which is true in thoſe, that having an accuſing conſcience ſeeme to ſmother it, by going into merry company; this continueth ſtill notwithſtanding, and if no better meanes be uſed to qualifie this ſorrow, the end will prove moſt lamentable; therefore when it is thus with thee, remember thy ſinne, and repent, and ſeeke to God for pardon, and ſo the end ſhall be joy. Verſ. 13.

Some ſay, that the ſame is meant here, which Chriſt ſaith afterwards, Woe to you that laugh now, for yee ſhall waile and weepe; as if it had been ſaid, The laughter of wicked men is not to be looked at, as mirth to be envyed by them, that lead not ſo merry a life, for there is ſorrow of heart coming to ſuch, although it be not yet ſeene, and in the end it will appeare to be ſo, when their laughter ſhall be turned into ſorrow for evermore.

Some, there is a mixture of joy and ſorrow in this life, which to thoſe that improve it not aright, to be weaned from the love of the world, proveth in fine all heavineſſe. So Auguſtine ſaith, that God mingleth the bitterneſſe of ſorrowes with joyes, that we might not be too much affected herewith, and have our mindes kept down to things below, and not lifted up to things above. Auguſt. Hom. 9. in mat.

A back-ſlider in heart ſhall be filled with his owne wayes, but a good man from himſelfe; Hebr. מעליו above him; That is, he ſhall be filled with good things above him. Verſ. 14.

Lavater thinkes, that it is hereby meant, that every one ſhall be rewarded according to his doings, he that ſlides back from good to evill, ſhall be rewarded with evill; but the good man perſevering in good, ſhall accordingly receive good, Lavater.

expoun-

expounding מעיו from it, that is, this his goodneſſe; and this doth ſo well agree, and the word beares that reading ſo well, that we may reſt in it, and ſeeke no more expoſitions.

Verſ. 15. Ambroſ. De Offic. The ſimple beleeveth every word, but the prudent man looketh well to his goings. The vulg. renders it innocent; whereupon Ambroſe underſtands him that meaneth well, and becauſe he thinkes that others doe ſo to, he beleeveth their ſayings, whereby he is many times circumvented; but it is ſimple, oppoſed to prudent, which is never in a good ſence, and therefore it is commonly taken as ſpoken of one ignorant, and voyd of the wiſdome required, he is ready to beleeve, and to be carried away with every blaſt of new doctrin, as the Weather-cock with the wind; but the prudent will underſtand his way, for ſo it is, Hebr. and it is meant the way that is by another propounded to him to turne unto, he wil firſt ſee good ground, and reaſon out of the Word of God, otherwiſe he is not to be moved; and if they, that now adayes are turned to ſo many new wayes, had been prudent, they would never have done ſo, to the cauſing of ſo many Schiſmes in the Church, and the hazzarding of their owne ſoules.

Note.

Verſ. 16 A wiſe man feareth, and departeth from evill, but the foole rageth, and is confident. Here the difference is further ſhewed betwixt a wiſe man and a foole, the one feareth to take into new wayes, for which he ſeeth no ground, or warrant, and ſo is kept from evils that others fall into; but the other, as mad to be in ſuch wayes, is angry at thoſe that feare, and turneth into them with all confidence, and aſſurance, not doubting but he is right, and all others that goe not with him wrong. And the word התעבר rendred angry, or raging, cometh of עבר to paſſe, and according to this ſignifieth, maketh himſelfe to paſſe, boldly, and confidently, or thruſteth on himſelf, as blind Bayard, fearing nothing in his new way.

Verſ. 17. He that is ſoone angry dealeth fooliſhly, and a man of wicked devices is hated. Anger blindes the minde, being as it were a ſhort madneſſe, and therefore the Cholerick haſty man muſt needs doe in many things fooliſhly, and procure much hatred to himſelfe therefore; but here are rather two ſorts compared together, the haſty man called in Hebrew, ſhort noſed, and he that concealeth his anger, not breaking out preſently, but deviſing how to be revenged; the one of theſe doth fooliſhly, but the other, as malicious, is hated of all men; for he that is ſoone angry, when he hath vented his wrath, is oft-times ſoone friends againe, but he that meditates revenge, is commonly implacable, a very Satan.

Verſ. 18. The ſimple inherite folly, but the prudent are crowned with knowledge; That is, they that care not for divine knowledge, and ſuch as pertaineth to ſalvation, ſhal have folly and ſinne with them, as an inheritance, from which they can never be removed, and conſequently the reward of their folly, which is the fruit of this inheritance, Death and Damnation for evermore; for of Death, as the fruit of ſinne, Rom. 6.22.23 the Apoſtle ſpeaketh, ſaying, What fruit had yee of thoſe things whereof yee are now aſhamed? And againe, the wages of ſinne is death. On the contrary ſide, the prudent weare knowledge, as a Crowne, eſteeming of nothing ſo much as it, and having the higheſt honour nereby, as Joſeph in Egypt; and finally, they ſhall for this be crowned in the Kingdome of Heaven with a Crown incorruptible.

Verſ. 19. The evill bow before the good, and the wicked at the gate of the righteous; That is, the righteous ſometimes by Gods bleſsing come to great honour even in this world, ſo that they who before thought themſelves as good, or better, come and bow unto them, as Joſephs Brethren did to him, and the people to Mordecai, coming into the ſame favour with Ahaſhuerus, that Haman had been in, to whom all men bowed, and Pharaoh expreſly commanded it to be proclaimed, where Joſeph came, Abrech, bow the knee; and Revel. 3. 9. I will make them to come and worſhip at thy feet, ſaith the Lord to Philadelphia. And his bowing at the Gate ſheweth yet more, viz. the great poverty that they ſhall fall into, when the juſt ſhall be rich, ſo that they ſhall begge at their Gates; and this is not without coherence with the former words, ver. 18. For this is the folly that the ſimple inherite in this world, and the crowne of the righteous; they have beggery, as an inheritance, theſe wealth, and worldly dignity, as their crowne.

The

The poore is hated even of his owne neighbour, but the rich hath many friends; that is, either he hateth to have familiarity with him, as being too ſordid, or he preſſeth upon him, and troubleth him ſo much for food, and other things, that he beggerh daily of him, that he is odious to him; but the rich is ſought to daily: if there be any pretence of alliance or knowledge of him, there are that will frequent him, and to get his favour, and benefit by him, humour him in all things: But theſe, ſaith Alan. are the laterals of Princes, Palatine dogs, the artificers of flattery, the forgers of praiſe, the potters of falſehood, who ſound into the ears of the rich with a loud ſound trumpet of praiſe, who that they may draw forth gifts, anoint their heads with the oyle of flattery. To the ſame effect almoſt with this is the common ſaying, Verſ. 20. Alan. Qui ut emungant munera caput adulat. oleo mungunt.

Dum fueris felix multos numerabis amicos:
Nullus ad amiſſas ibit amicus opes.

And this verſe cohereth alſo with the former, the wicked ſhall bow to the righteous; that is, being by poverty forced, and this his poverty ſhall make him odious, no man caring now to make friendſhip with him, as being moſt baſe and contemptible; yet it followeth,

He that deſpiſeth his neighbour, ſinneth, but he that hath mercy on the poore, is happy; which is, as if he had ſaid, Although this be the common manner of the world to deſpiſe the poore, but to magnifie the rich, yet this is no warrant for any juſt man to doe ſo, for it is a ſinne. A man may be deſpiſed for his wickedneſſe, but not ſimply for his poverty; yea, although he be thy enemy, thou muſt love him, relieve him in his need. And he that doth ſo, is bleſſed, becauſe ſuch ſhew themſelves children of God. Verſ. 21. Matth. 5. 45.

Doe not they erre that deviſe evill? but mercy and truth ſhall be to them, that deviſe good. Here by deviſing good, is meant ſtudying, how with his worldly goods he may doe good to ſuch as need, ſuch ſhall be repayed with mercy, and truth from God, who will not faile to be true of his word, but as he hath made many gracious promiſes to ſuch, ſo he will undoubtedly performe them. They that deviſe evill, are ſuch, as ſtudy how to deceive others, that out of them they may inrich themſelves: this is a foule, and dangerous errour, and going out of the way of mercy into the way of dreadfull judgements. Verſ. 22.

In all labour there is profit, but the talke of the lips tendeth onely to penury; that is, he who ſpeakes much of good husbandry, and talkes, how all things ſhould be done for the beſt, but is idle, and doth it not himſelfe, ſhall be poore, when the Paines-taker ſhall be rich, profit coming in of his labour; yet, as Lavater noteth, this is to be underſtood, through Gods bleſſing, ſought by daily prayer, becauſe otherwiſe a man may labour in vaine, as the Pſalmiſt teacheth. And there is the like reaſon of labouring to get learning, he that talketh of learned men, and bookes, but is not ſtudious, hath a ſoule empty of learning for all this. Verſ. 23. Lavater. Pſal. 127.

The crowne of the wiſe is their riches, but the fooliſhneſſe of fools is folly; that is, wiſe men having gotten riches juſtly by abour, as was before ſaid, Verſ. 23. purchaſe to themſelves honour by rightly uſing them to charity, and otherwiſe doing good; for thus riches are turned, as it were, into a Crowne, it being hereby ſhewed, that the poſſeſſour of them is a Maſter, and not a ſervant to them, as the covetous, which hold them faſt, and do no good therewith; or, as another hath it, a rich man that is wiſe, is magnified by all men, as a King, and hearkened unto, and obeyed; but if he be a foole, let him be never ſo rich, he is not accounted of; all men ſay, he is rich indeed, but he is a foole: And all thoſe rich men are ſuch, as ſpend their riches in ſumptuous buildings, gorgeous apparel, delicious fare, whores, and hawkes, and hounds, but apply not themſelves to excell others in wiſdome, whereby they may helpe the better to governe the Commonwealth, and their owne families in the feare of God, being alſo hoſpitable, and charitable. And riches are ſaid to be the crowne of the wiſe, becauſe if a man be poore, although very wiſe, he is not regarded; but in caſe that he be eminent for worldly wealth alſo, which ſhould make all rich men to labour to be wiſe alſo, and learned, and not Verſ. 24. Lavater. Muffet. Note.

not ignorant, like the common ſort, and to this end to read and ſtudy much, as having time and leaſure enough, if they well conſider, that without thus doing, their riches are to them but like a fooles coat and bauble, making their folly the more notorious, as being by their wealth ſet up on high, and the eyes of all men upon them; and as Origen ſaith, inſtead of making them wiſe, make them mad through pride that hereby growth upon them.

Verſ. 25. For Verſ. 25. it differeth little from Verſ. 5. onely it is ſhewed, what good cometh by a true witneſſe, he delivereth ſoules; that is, when by falſe accuſation men are in danger to be condemned to dye, true witneſſes by their teſtimony given for them, ſave them.

Lavater. This alſo is by Lavater extended to Preachers of the Goſpel, becauſe Chriſt Act. 1. ſaith, Ye ſhall be my witneſſes, and hereunto we may add, 1 Joh. 1. That which we have heard and ſeen, we teſtifie; and I cannot ſee, but that holy Martyrs may here be brought in alſo, for both Preachers by teaching, and converting to the truth, and Martyrs by ſealing it with their bloud, worke mightily upon others to converſion and ſalvation of their ſoules. And if by a falſe witneſſe ſpeaking lyes, we alſo

Greg. Mor. l. 5. c. 13. Notable is the ſaying of Gregory in ſetting forth the ſtrong confidence of thoſe that feare God. In the way of God, it is begun at feare, that a man may come to fortitude, for as in the way of the world boldneſſe cauſeth fortitude, ſo in the way of God, boldneſſe brings forth weakneſſe, and as in the way of the world feare cauſeth weakneſſe, ſo in the way of the Lord, fortitude, becauſe our mindes doe ſo much the more ſtrongly deſpiſe the terrours of temporalls, by how much the more truly they ſubmit through feare to him, that is the Authour thereof, which being ſetled in the fear of God, ſee nothing without to be feared, becauſe that while they are joyned through feare to him, the Maker of all, they are by a kinde of power elevated above them all. And his children ſhall have a place of refuge. Here by children ſome underſtand the children of feare, ſome the children of God, and ſome of him that feareth God, which I rather aſſent unto, becauſe the man that feareth God, is commonly comforted by this, that God will be both for him and his children; ſo here, he ſhall have ſtrong confidence, and his children alſo that feare God, by recounting in what great favour with God the father was. The feare of God is a well of life; that which is here called, the feare of the Lord, Chap. 13. 14. is called the law of the wiſe, where ſee the Expoſition.

Verſ. 28. In the multitude of people is the Kings honour, but in the want of people, the deſtruction of the Prince. This is ſpoken to make Kings carry themſelves ſo, as to have the love of their people, that is, uſing all love and courteſie towards them: For who would not keepe their hearts faſt towards him, upon whom their honour and ſafety ſtands?

Plato. It was never knowne, ſaith Plato, that any King periſhed for want of money but of friends. A multitude of ſubjects is an honour to a King, becauſe ſo many conſent together to make him their King, herein acknowledging him worthy to reigne over them, and becauſe by their helpe he getteth victories over his enemies, which make him glorious. But by multitude we muſt not underſtand onely their numbers, but theſe multiplyed and increaſed in wealth, and ſo both made the more magnanimous, and able to ſupply him with tribute, when need requires.

But

But through want of ſubjects thus qualified and knit to him in love, he is deſtroyed, for want of ſuch as have wealth and magnanimity, by foreigne enemies invading him, and for want of love, through inſurrections in his owne Kingdome.

He that is ſlow to wrath, is of great underſtanding, but the haſty of ſpirit exalteth folly. Something to the ſame effect of the laſt clauſe hath beene already ſaid. Verſ. 17. for being ſlow to wrath, ſee alſo Jam. 1. 19. Be ſwift to heare, ſlow to ſpeake, ſlow to wrath; that ſuch are wiſe appeareth, becauſe they have all the properties required in a wiſe man, whom as Valerius ſaith, the Ancients were wont to repreſent by three heads, of a Dogge, a Lion, and an Eagle; Of a Dogge for memory; Of a Lion for his ſtout doing, as the preſent caſe requireth; And of an Eagle for his ſore-ſight of things to come, as an Eagle ſeeth things afarre off: And theſe three are ſaid by Ariſtotle to be ſloweſt to wrath of any other creatures, and ſooneſt pacified; for the Lion, as he writeth, although in the purſuit of a man, if he falleth downe before it, ſpareth him; and the Eagle is of all fowles moſt eaſily tamed; and a Dogge, for the property before-ſaid, is like unto a Lion according to Pliny. He then that is likewiſe ſlow to anger, and ready to bee againe pacified, is aptly ſet forth by theſe three, who amongſt them have all the parts required in a wiſe man, viz. Memory, and Sagacity, whereby to fore-ſee and gather what is to be done, and courage to doe accordingly, when the time cometh. Verſ. 29. Valerius.

A ſound heart is the life of the fleſh, but envy is rottenneſſe to the bones. A ſound heart, that is, a mind quiet, and not vexed at things falling out ill, makes the whole body the more healthfull, but that which vexeth either at his owne croſſes, or at the proſperity of others, is deſtruction to the body, as when it is rotten fleſh, and bones, and all. Some underſtand it of ſuch as have a good heart towards others, being affected towards them, as they ought with joy for their welfare, and ſorrow for their miſery, and of ſuch as contrariwiſe are ill affected; the firſt argueth one to be a lively member of the ſame myſticall body, of which Chriſt is the head, the other one dead and rotten. Gregory expounds this of all things weakly performed outwardly, becauſe the fleſh is weake, yet a good heart puts life hereinto, and it is accepted of before God, as if done in the beſt manner; but contrariwiſe things ſtrongly done from an envious and malicious heart, are rotten and ſtinking, like rotten bones, which are oft ſpoken of to ſet forth ſtrength, which doth well further ſet forth the ſpirituall meaning of this Proverb. Verſ. 30. Greg. Paſt. cur. pars 3. admon. 6.

He that oppreſſeth the poore, reproacheth his Maker, but he that honoureth him, hath mercy on the poore. A poore godly man is the image of God, and therefore the wrong that is done to him in word or deed, redounds to God. 2. He is more the image of God, as Lyra ſaith, then a rich man, becauſe man was made naked, when after Gods image, and not apparrelled in goodly cloaths. 3. He is a member of Chriſt, and one with him. 4. God hath made him ſo, and therefore to deſpiſe him for his poverty, is to deſpiſe God. 5. God hath made him the rich mans brother, being a common Father to them both, witneſſe thoſe words in the Lords prayer, which both the rich and poor ſay, Our Father which art in heaven. He therefore honoureth God that ſheweth him mercy, whoſe creature and image, and member he is. Verſ. 31. Lyra.

The wicked is driven away in his wickedneſſe, but the righteous hath hope in his death; that is, the wicked ſometime is for wickedneſſe baniſhed out of his Country, yea, all the wicked Jewes were ſerved ſo, being carried into Aſſyria and Caldea. And he that is ſo, when he dyeth, and deſireth to enter into heaven, he ſhall be driven away with Goe ye curſed, &c. but then the righteous hath ſure and certaine hope of being received into that moſt bleſſed place; if any other, that hath alwayes lived in ſin hath hope firſt or laſt, his hope is but vaine. Verſ. 35. A Kings favour is towards a wiſe ſervant, but his wrath againſt him, that cauſeth ſhame; that is, when he ſeeth his ſervant doe wiſely in that which he imployeth him about, as being for his honour, he beares a ſpeciall favour to him therefore; but if he doth fooliſhly, whereby he hath diſhonour, he is full of wrath, and diſpleaſure at him, as being much aſhamed of his doings. And that which is ſpoken of a Kings ſervant is true touching any other mans, to acquit himſelfe well he muſt not onely ſerve his maſter with his body, but alſo with his minde, being provident, and wiſely going about his affaires to doe all for the beſt, as Abrahams ſervant did, when hee went to fetch a wife for Iſaac from Padan-aram, *Gen.*24.

CHAP. XV.

Verſ. 1. A Soft anſwer turneth away wrath, but grievous words ſtirre up ſtrife: Even as lightning pierceth the hard bones, but hurteth not the ſoft fleſh, and as a Canon ſhot againſt a banke of earth ſhattereth it not, but a ſtone wall it doth, ſo fierce words coming from fury are appeaſed by gentle and reverent ſpeeches lowly uttered; but contrariwiſe, as ſteele and flint-ſtone being ſmitten together, there come forth ſparkles of fire; ſo clamorous and virulent ſpeeches being oppoſed to the like, the fire of ſtrife is kindled and groweth into a flame; for the furious ſeeing the mildneſſe of another, againſt whom he is ſo fierce, beginneth to be aſhamed, and ſo he is as greene wood, or water to fire, ſtopping it from going any further; but two haſty harſh-ſpoken perſons meeting together, as fire meeting with more fire raging the more.

Verſ. 2. The tongue of the wiſe uſeth knowledge aright, but the mouth of fooles powreth out fooliſhneſſe, that is, ſuch conſider both the matter and manner of

Col. 4. 6. ſpeaking, and order their ſpeeches accordingly, ſo that they carry a grace with them in the eares of the hearers, as being ſeaſoned with ſalt, and ſo, ſweet and ſavoury. But whilſt fooles ſpeake regarding neither matter nor manner, they powre out folly, as one ſaith, Flumen verborum, guttam ſapientiæ, a whole floud of words, but a drop of wiſdome.

Lavater. And this Lavater noteth to be intimated in the word נבע to flow forth, as out of a fountaine, the ſame things being often repeated moſt vainly, no regard being had to that which is ſaid by thoſe that are wiſer, through the high conceit that he hath of his owne underſtanding.

The Vulgar for uſeth knowledge aright, hath adorneth knowledge, and the word חטוב Hebr. ſignifieth maketh good, or pleaſing, or gracious, which is the ſame in effect with adorning. Here then after gentle and meeke ſpeaking, Verſe 1. is commended unto us, and ſpecially to teachers ornate ſpeaking, with as much brevity as may be, not ruſticall and ſordid; for the foole is taxed for powring out folly, implying his loquacity and ruſticity.

1 Cor. 2. It is true, the Preacher ought not to ſpeake in the inticing words of mans eloquence, but in the plaine evidence and demonſtration of the Spirit; but as Auguſt. 4. de doct. Chr. Auguſt. ſaith, thy Oration muſt not be ſo naked, as to be frigid, nor ſo inculr, as to be ſordid, but gravely adorned, that it may not diſpleaſe; yet he ſaith, the preacher ſo taketh ornaments of ſpeech unto him, as that he careth not for them, being carried more in uſing them by the ardency of affection, then by the induſtry of the tongue: Even as a valiant ſouldier taketh guilded armour, but regardeth not ſo much this adorning, as the ſtrength thereof, and the ſharpneſſe of his ſword to pierce and wound the enemy withall.

Gregor. Nazian. And Nazianzen, Knowledge is not to be painted like an Harlot, but adorned as a Matron; and another, ſpeech being but as the Apparrel to the body, that which is is decent, is to be put on, but it is not to be over-cloathed, to make it goe the more heavily: knowledge is a light coming in at a Glasse window, which if it be much daubed with painting, is dimmed. For the next words, the foole powreth out foolishnesse; Herein it is alluded to a violent storme of raine, which doth not so much water, and make the earth to fructifie, as wash it away, and the Corne sowne therein, whereas the distilling raine goeth to the root in a gentle manner, and refresheth all things; so a divine Oration wisely composed, and uttered, enters into the hearts of the Hearers, although uttered in fewer words, more significant, and well set together, whereas the long declamation of a Foole uttered fast in many words, takes little or no effect in the hearers. A thing to be greatly noted for our direction, in teaching to keep us from this errour, into which many run through preposterous zeale, that we may not make knowledge despicable, by so foolish a setting of her forth, but amiable to all by adorning her, as we ought to do by a Matron so noble.

Note.

The eyes of the Lord are in every place, beholding the evill and the good; The Lord beholdeth all things, but specially good men doing well to reward them, and the evill to punish them, see Psal. 139. Vers. 3.

A wholsome tongue is a tree of life, but perversnesse therein is a breach in the Spirit. The vulgar, A placable tongue; that is, a tongue softly spoken, according to v. 1. Hebr. it is, a healing tongue, That is, speaking comfort to such as are humbled, and contrite for their sins, this is a tree of Life, because as that in Paradise being taken and eaten of, when man by sinne had made himselfe sicke, as it were, and dying, would have made him whole againe, and to live for ever; so this healing tongue brings back from despaire and death the wounded by sinne, to hope and life for evermore. Vers. 4.

August.

August. August. Muffet.

Muffet. yeelds this reason of the Tree of Life healing, and making to live for ever, death cometh by the distemper of the foure humours of the body, but eating of the fruit of that tree would have brought them to an even and equall temper, and consequently to an endlesse life; for the next words, Muffet differing from all others, hath the mischievousnesse of it, is as a breach made by the wind; That is, as a strong wind blowing downe houses and trees; so an envious tongue is the cause of great ruines, and the word רוח may be rendred either in the Spirit, or with the Wind, and this last doth very well agree, and the sence is good, as one part of a tree is rent from another by a strong wind, and other things before lying together all blowne farre asunder; so by a perverse tongue divisions and dissentions are often made, never to be united or reconciled againe.

Lavater.

They that are for the other reading say, it is as a breach, or corruption in their owne spirits, or the spirits of others, who are hereby infected, especially if it be the tongue of a Preacher teaching false doctrine; but I rather thinke because the perverse tongue is opposed to the healing tongue, and by the healing tongue cometh life and comfort; so on the contrary side, it is meant by the perverse tongue provoking to horrible sinnes, cometh a breaking in peices, as it were, or tearing to death his life, that is thus vexed and provoked hereby: or, the spirit is so broken and wounded by meanes thereof, as that it cannot againe be healed, but he dyeth in despaire. To this purpose it is commonly said of him, or her, that by his tongue exasperateth another, he vexeth my very soule.

A foole despiseth his fathers instruction, but he that regards reproofe is prudent, chap. 1. 8. He exhorted the Sonne to heare his Fathers instruction, now he condemneth them for fooles, that doe not, and commends them for being in the way of wisdome, that beare his corrections also; for the word יערום here used is a future, shall be wise, or prudent; as also the vulg. hath it, where some note, that the prudence here spoken of, is the same of which Christ speaketh, Be yee wise as Serpents, and therefore a Serpent-like wisdome is here meant, to which they shall attaine, that heare their Fathers instructions and reproofes, taking heed to doe accordingly, and that is the greatest wisdome that is, seeing more, and understanding more then others. Vers. 5.

Matth. 16. 16

As the Serpent is said to put the juyce of Fennell upon the eyes of her young ones, whereby they are made sharper-sighted then other Creatures; so by Parents

inſtructions, and reprooſes, as by the ſharp juyce of Fennell, children came to have eyes to ſee, and perceive beyond other men; but they that deſpiſe them, muſt needs be fooles, becauſe they will much more deſpiſe the inſtructions of others, that be further from them, and have not ſo great authority over them.

Verſ. 6. In the houſe of the righteous is much treaſure, but in the revenues of the wicked there is trouble. Muffet, the wicked mans revenue waſteth of it ſelfe The Sept. ſhall periſh. The vulg. The houſe of the juſt, great fortitude, the word חסן ſignifieth either fortitude, or treaſure; but fortitude, ſeemeth to me to agree beſt; The houſe of the righteous is ſaid to be ſo, becauſe it ſtandeth ſtrongly from generation to generation, if the ſon treades in his fathers ſteps, or obſerveth his precepts; as in the verſe before-going. But the comings-in of the wicked through the curſe of God upon them, waſte, and crumble away, till they come to nothing. But the word Hebr. ſignifieth, as it is rendred, trouble, and the ſence given by ſome is, a juſt mans revenues, or his increaſe come in quietly in harveſt time; but thoſe of the wicked, are often times ſeized upon by others for debt, or other cauſes: or, a juſt man dying and leaving wealth, it is kept together for his children, who have great portions divided quietly amongſt them; but about the goods of the wicked oft times contention ariſeth amongſt the children or kinſfolk, one ſtriving to get from another. Or as ſome have it, who follow the rendring by fortitude, and noting, that ſometimes fortitude is put for increaſe of the fruits of the earth: In the houſe of the juſt is much increaſe, but the wicked toyling and troubling himſelf, as much as he, or more, reapes little but trouble. But this agreeth not; becauſe if he had meant ſo, he would have ſaid, in the field, not in the houſe: For the other Expoſitions, thou canſt not chuſe amiſſe.

Gen. 4. Job. 6.

Verſ. 7. The lips of the wiſe diſperſe knowledge, but the heart of a foole doth not ſo, vulg. is unlike. Expounded by Gregory, when as the juſt goeth alwayes on in declaring the ſame truth conſtantly, thus ſowing the ſeed of life, as the good preacher is compared, Mat. 13. the wicked is variable and unlike himſelf, ſometimes teaching one thing, ſometimes another, even in ſubſtantialls. But becauſe the words are לא כן not ſo, I rather aſſent unto them that ſay, the juſt is diligent in ſowing the good ſeed of knowledge, when he hath attained it, for the benefit of others; but the heart of the foole is not likewiſe ſet, by ſowing, to increaſe ſaving knowledge, but rather to ſet forth himſelfe, and his eminent parts of learning, that he may be magnified of men, not they edified. Vain men may count ſuch wiſe and learned, but God both counteth & calleth them fools: how they are ſaid to conceal knowledge.

Verſ. 8. See ch. 12, 13.

Verſ. 9. The ſacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord, but the prayer of the upright is his delight. Verſ. 9. The way of the wicked is abomination to the Lord, &c. Theſe two Verſes do ſo cohere together, that the following verſe is a reaſon of the precedent; therefore is the ſacrifice, and ſervice of the wicked abomination to God, becauſe his way is abomination: for a man is accepted by him, or not accepted, as his way is; that no man living in ſin may have any hope, but depart from ſin, and then hope for acceptance.

Verſ. 10. Correction is grievous to him that forſaketh the way, but he that hateth reproof ſhall dye. The vulg. Doctrine is evill to him, Hebrew מוסר ſignifying either. But Salomon ſeems here to ſet forth two degrees of the wicked; one that takes no delight in teaching; the other, that doth not only not delight in it, but hates it: the firſt is out of the way, and ſo in danger; but the other muſt dye without remedy for ever and ever.

Some expound it of Preachers, that live wickedly, thus, their owne inſtruction is evill for them, and that in three reſpects. 1. Becauſe it is a condemning of himſelfe, for as Proſper ſaith, to teach well, and to live ill, is with a mans own tongue to damn himſelfe. 2. He hereby ſcandalizeth, and maketh others to fall. Whereupon Chryſoſtome, It is better to do well and not to teach, then to teach well, and not to doe: becauſe he that doth well, may benefit others by his example; but he that doth ill, although he teacheth well, benefits none but ſcandalizeth many. 3. He highly diſhonoureth God, whoſe ſervant he pretends to be, becauſe as the ſame

Chryſ. hom. 10. oper. imperf. in Matth.

Chry-

Chryſoſtome ſaith, by the doings of the ſervants, men gather what manner of one their maſter is; For which the Lord challengeth the Jewes, his ſervants that taught well, ſaying, My name is through you blaſphemed amongſt the Gentiles. Rom. 2.

Some laſtly underſtand it thus; it ſhall be evill for them, that have lived under good inſtruction, but yet are wicked ſtill: and if they have by ſharpe reproof and correction, and many ſufferings been laboured upon to reduce them into the way, but they have deſpiſed them all, hating ſuch as by whom, for them nothing remaineth but damnation; becauſe they would not bear temporall puniſhments, they ſhall bear eternall in hell. Some take this to be ſpoken to children, that are well taught, and duly corrected, but profit not hereby; but it is beſt to underſtand it generally, as hath been ſaid, becauſe it ſhall be ſo to all, who are not moved either by teaching or chaſtiſement. Rodolph:

Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord, how much more then the hearts of the children of men? Here by a compariſon of things lying moſt hid, it is ſhewed that other things hidden from other men, are yet manifeſt to God, viz. from his knowledge of hell, and death: we heare of hell, and of the ſtate of the dead, but know nothing of it by ſight but the Lord doth; although none that dye and go down into the pit are ever ſeen of us more, yet God ſeeth in what a condition they are. Therefore much more the hearts of all men, whether they be good or evil, upright or not, becauſe, that although this is not known to other men, yet every mans heart is known to himſelf, and how is it known, but by the underſtanding, which God hath given him? therefore, he that giveth this underſtanding, knoweth it much more as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, He that giveth man knowledge, ſhall not he underſtand? It may ſeeme to be a compariſon of little force to prove, that God knoweth the hearts of men, becauſe one man by the words or doings of another, may have ſome near conjecture, what manner of heart he hath; but there is nothing, whereby we can know the ſtate of the dead, who periſh, but by the word through faith. Therefore, ſome take it not to be comparative, but enumerative, both hell, and death, and the hearts of men are all known to God. And the Hebrew is וְ גַם which is not a note of compariſon, yea, for, yea, it is ſo, ſo, for the heart of man is knowne, ſeemeth to make for it; or rather hereby he proveth hell and death, to be knowne to God, becauſe the hearts of men are knowne. But it is commonly tranſlated both by Vulgar Latine, and Caldee, as a compariſon from hell to the heart. And the Septuagint diſ-agreeth not, which hath it, How not; To follow therefore this reading, if thou likeſt not the ſence already given, take another; Hell and death, where ſinne ſhall be puniſhed, are ſeen of God, much more then, mans heart, according to the wickedneſſe whereof this judgement ſhall be; for the judge muſt firſt know the cauſe, before he determineth of the puniſhment. Or elſe, they are before the Lord, that is in his power, together with all the damned ſpirits; therfore much more man, who is weaker then they. But I adhere ſtill to the firſt, as moſt genuine, and it is worthy the conſidering, that God knoweth the heart, and ſeeth all things therein, to ſtir to get us good and upright hearts, and here to harbour nothing ſinful or evill. Verſ. 11. 1 Cor. 2. 11. Note.

A ſcorner loveth not one that reproveth him, neither will he goe to the wiſe, That is, he, who mocketh at godlineſſe, hateth ſuch as bring his faults to light, rebuking and ſeeking to reclaim him from them, whereas indeed, he ought to love ſuch above other men, becauſe they indeavour to cleanſe away his faults, againſt the time that he muſt appeare before the ſevere judge of all the world, being otherwiſe in danger of condemnation therefore. But the ſcorner who hateth ſuch, will not therefore come in their company, if he can avoid them, and this is the ſigne of a ſcorner then, to aſſociate himſelfe with merry and diſſolute companions, but not with the godly. Verſ 12. Note.

A merry heart maketh a chearfull countenance, but by ſorrow of the heart the ſpirit is broken. This is ſpoken ſaith one, that we may take heed of worldly ſorrow: the Lord ſpeaking herein as a mother to her childe, that cryeth much, thou wilt marre thy face, if thou doeſt thus; ſo the Lord hereby deterreth from griefe, and vexation for worldly things, and diſtracting cares about them, by tel- Verſ. 13. Muffet.

ling us, that this is a damping and deading to the ſpirit, but to keep the minde free from ſuch vexations, and joying in the holy Ghoſt, makes a chearfull countenance, and therefore, a chearfull heart upon all occurrences; and this is a thing, which we all affect; and therefore the means hindring it, are to be taken heed of, viz. worldly ſorrow; and the ſpirit of God is to bee ſought for, and begged; the peculiar fruit whereof, is true joy, and joy in tribulation. Notable is the ſaying of Philo: Divers affections fight in the mind, but that which gets the victory, ſets up the banner in the face, as in a Towre; ſadneſſe, and envy, the pale colour; wrath, a clay colour; modeſty, a purple; joy, white and red, duly mixed, to make the beauty of the face the more.

Verſ. 14. The heart of him that hath underſtanding ſeeketh knowledge, but the mouth of fooles feedeth on fooliſhneſſe: It may ſeeme ſtrange, that he who hath knowledge, ſhould ſeek knowledge; but it is commonly ſeen to be ſo; knowing men being the moſt diligent of all others in reading and hearing, to increaſe that more, which they have already attained: For they thinke, that they know but in part, and in that which they know, they find ſuch ſweetneſſe, as that they are hereby drawn to indeavour the increaſing thereof.

And it is to be noted, that he ſaith, ſeeketh knowledge in his heart, intimating that knowledge is cordiall to him; and that great is the delight that he taketh herein, above all other things in this world, as in the food of his ſoul; but fools are delighted with fooliſh and vaine things; ſome with jeſting and vaine talking, ſome with reading vaine bookes, ſetting forth no truths, but phantaſies, ſome with gaming, Paſtimes, drinking, or whoring, or raking together of worldly goods, &c. which are as meat unto them. And it is to be noted, that the word feede commeth of רעה to feed, as bruit beaſts doe, of which foure ſorts are ſpecially noted to feed upon the foure Elements, the Salamander upon the Fire, the Cameleon upon the Aire, the Herring upon the Water, and the Mole upon Earth: ſo the envious and contentious foole feeds upon the fire of ſtrife; the proud upon the aire of vainglory, the voluptuous upon the water of ſenſuall pleaſure, and the covetous upon the excrements of the earth, gold, and ſilver; to increaſe which, is all their delight and pleaſure.

Note.

Verſ. 15. All the dayes of the afflicted are evill, but he that is of a merry heart hath a continuall feaſt; A man in affliction, and diſcontented at it, and impatient in his minde, hath no joy of his life, but is alwayes as one weary, and tired with the preſent time, wiſhing in the morning, that it were evening, and in the evening, that it were morning; but the man, that is chearfull in his heart, both in proſperity and adverſity is like unto him, that is at a feaſt, where he hath variety, of meats to delight his taſte, of friends about him, to delight his eyes, and of a faire roome, neat and well furniſhed, and the ſweetneſſe of Muſick, and friendly talke, to delight his eares. But as Muffet noteth, None can have this merry heart, but the faithfull, who have joy of juſtification from ſin, and conſequently, of deliverance from exile and death; he that liveth in groſſe ſinnes, or in hypocriſie cannot, if hee bee merry, it is but Sardonicus riſus, Laughter fore-running deſtruction, the vulg. All the dayes of the poore are evill, which is all one; becauſe poverty impoſing a neceſſity of hard labour, and hard fare, is a continuall affliction; Yet the godly poore, through the joy that is in his heart, turneth his courſe and ſpare dyet into a continuall feaſt, he is as well as the rich, that fare deliciouſly every day.

Chryſ. hom: in Cor.

Therefore Chryſoſtome ſaith, it is neither wealth nor poverty, that makes men happy, or miſerable, but a mans owne mind, for how healthy, and ſtrong are bodys fed only with bread? when as other bodyes, fed with all variety of dainties, are weake and languiſhing: They that weare a Diamond, if they have a ſicke mind, cannot be of a good and quiet heart: but Philoſophers, even in chaines, and want, injoy pure pleaſure. Some underſtand the firſt words here, as the words of another man, a worldling, in whoſe opinion the poor and afflicted mans daies are all evill, but he ſaith, nay, the merry or chearful heart, even in ſuch is a continual feaſt, which is little differing from the former.

Verſ. 16. Better is a little with the feare of God, then great treaſure and trouble therewith;

with. Theſe words are added as a reaſon of that which is ſaid, ver. 15. an heart full of heavenly joy and comfort, although one be poore, is a continuall feaſt, becauſe the little that ſuch a one hath, who is a man fearing God, is better then wealth laid up in abundance, in the treaſury of him that hath an evill conſcience, and for this, trouble, and feare in his minde.

Better is a dinner of hearbs, where love is, then a ſtalled Oxe, and hatred there-with. This alſo hath ſome coherence with ver. 16. as that with the 15. for they that have but a little, are glad oft-times to dine with hearbs, or as the manner of our Country is, amongſt the poore, with bread and apple, cabbage, turneps, water-gruell, or the like, which coſteth but a little; now in caſe that a man hath no better dinner then ſo, yet if he hath the love and favour of God, as they have that feare him, this dinner, to live with ſuch ſimple food is better, then to have great cheere, as they that have a great deale, but are hated of him; as it is ſaid of Eſau, that he was, and all the wicked are, being therefore called veſſels of wrath. Verſ. 17.

Another expoſition is generally followed, as if loving, and peaceable eating and drinking of friends together were meant upon poore commons, and feaſting, and fallings out, and quarrellings at the ſame; but Lavater after this mentioneth the other, and I thinke it not only fit to be mentioned, but to be preferred, becauſe men having little, but fearing God were ſpoken of, ver. 16. and meant of treaſures, but having no inward peace, but trouble for ſinne. Yet Chryſoſtome ſpeaking of a dinner of poore men, and a dinner of the rich, the one conſiſting of hearbs, or other meane fare, with all other accommodations moſt ſimple, but the other of all varieties, all other things alſo being of the beſt, ſaith, That he would rather goe to that of the poore then of the rich, becauſe Chriſt is there, and ſo love; as if this compariſon were made between theſe two feaſts. Lavater.

A wrathfull man ſtirreth up ſtrife, but he that is ſlow to anger appeaſeth ſtrife; That is, the one ſtirres up ſtrife where none was before, the other appeaſeeth it by his meekneſſe, and patience where it was, for which Chryſoſtome ſaith, As water quencheth hot iron, ſo patience doth fiery anger. Verſ. 18. Chryſ. Hom. 21 in Heb.

The way of the ſlothfull man is as an hedge of thornes, but the way of the righteous is made plaine. As a man that is to goe through thornes, goeth ſlowly, and timorouſly; ſo a ſlothfull perſon goeth creeping about his buſineſſe; but the righteous man, who abhorres from his ſoule the ſin of ſloth, and idleneſſe, and is induſtrious, and laborious in his Calling, is knowne by his very pace, and manner of his going, as the ſlothfull idlesbee is by his; he goeth apace about it, and loytereth not; but the other, as one that is without all ſpirit, or heart unto his worke, he upon a plaine way, as it were, the other as upon thornes, ſoftly, as fearing to ſet his feet downe upon the ground, being ſtaid by the way ſometime by one, whom he meeteth to prate withall; ſometime by another, as he that hath hedges in his way, that he muſt be long in getting over. Gregory applieth this, to ſuch as forecaſting what dangers there are in entring into, and walking in the way of God, are hereby deterred, and ſo make ſlow haſt to enter hereinto. Verſ. 19. Gregor. Mor. l. 30. c. 13.

The ſimilitude of an hedge here uſed is taken from hedges, that Husband-men uſe to make with buſhes, to keep beaſts from comming into their Corne fields: for as by ſuch an hedge the wicked are kept from, and when they have good motions in their mindes, to come into the way of righteouſneſſe, and holineſſe, retarded from entring hereinto; but the righteous, who are the elect of God, looke not at the ſufferings which may befall them in ſo doing, unleſſe it be to deſpiſe them, for the glory to come, enter and walk herein without feare, as in the beſt and ſmootheſt way that they can goe in.

Some, by the ſlothfull here underſtand the wicked, wrathfull, and contentious perſon, becauſe the righteous are oppoſed hereunto, and ſo expound it thus; The wicked furious man, of whom he ſpeakes, ver. 18. hath his way like an hedge of thornes, if any walke or converſe with him, he ſhall be pricked, and vexed with his harſh manners; but if with the righteous, he ſhall meet with nothing to offend him, ſo ſmooth through his meekneſſe and gentleneſſe is his way; wherefore the vulgar vulgar renders it, his way is without offence. Laſtly, ſome underſtand this, as ſetting forth the difference betwixt the ſlothfull and the induſtrious, in regard of their fields, thoſe of the one are over-growne with thornes; or the way thereunto, becauſe he ſeldome goeth and cometh that way; but the way of the other is ſo often traced by his going and coming, that it is plaine, and his field is kept free from briers and thornes, by ſtubbing up, that corne or graſſe may plentifully grow therein.

And this is favoured by the Septuagint tranſlation, which hath it, via fortium, the way of the ſtrong; of all theſe expoſitions none but may well be received, and good uſe may be made thereof.

Verſ. 20. For ver. 20. ſee before, chap. 10. 1. only whereas it is there ſaid, A fooliſh ſonne is an heavineſſe to his mother, here, deſpiſeth his mother; That is, either by ſetting at nought her precepts, againſt which ſee, chap. 1. 8. or by ſpeaking diſgracefully of her to others; and he that doth either of theſe is fooliſh, and wicked, for he doth herein againſt himſelfe, becauſe upon the honouring of his Parents, and ſpecially of his Mother, depends both his life, worldly bleſſings, and honour, as Plato hath well noted, and the Scripture teacheth the ſame, both in Commandement five, and Deut. 5. Eccleſ. 3. The bleſſing of the mother eſtabliſheth the houſe of her ſons, and the glory of a man is from the honour of his parents. They are Gods true Images in their old age, ſaith Plato to thee, and therefore above all Images to be worſhipped; the worſhip and honour done to them being done to God, and the contempt of them puniſhed, as the contempt of God himſelfe, Deut. 21.

Verſ. 21. Folly is joy to him that is deſtitute of wiſdome, but he that hath underſtanding walketh uprightly. This differeth not much from ver. 14. the wicked foole is affected with things vaine, they are, as it were, meat and drinke unto him, as is there ſhewed; and his deſire is to live in vaine pleaſure, but the wiſe takes moſt care to walke in the wayes of God, and herein is his joy.

Verſ. 22. Without counſell purpoſes are diſappointed, but by a multitude of Counſellours they are eſtabliſhed; the Cald. without ſecrets, and סדר ſignifieth both ſecret and counſell, but from the ſignification of the word, it is by ſome expounded thus; when men thinke to goe about great matters, but this purpoſe is not kept ſecret, but firſt divulged, this is a great hinderance to the worke intended, and oft-times preventeth the effecting of it.

But by the words oppoſed, whereby Counſellours are called יעצים it appeares, that Counſell is alſo meant here, but counſell ſecretly taken, and ſo kept, till the time cometh of doing, as is adviſed.

Verſ. 23. A man hath joy by the anſwer of his mouth, and a word ſpoken in due ſeaſon, how good is it! Having commended counſell in great undertakings, now he commendeth him that giveth good counſell, ſhewing, that he ſhall have joy thereof, when as it being followed hath a good effect, and he hath honour of all men for it; this is a word indeed ſpoken in due ſeaſon.

And likewiſe there is joy in him, that by a milde and wiſe anſwer to thoſe that are upon quarrelling, prevent it, as ver. 1. and to them that ſpeake ſo ſeaſonably againſt any mans ſinne, or in the commendation of vertue, that it takes effect in the hearts of the Hearers, for their reformation; for this the Apoſtle calleth the Corinthians converted by him, his joy. It may alſo be underſtood of the Counſellours mouth, whereof the conſulter hath joy, it proving good, who haply, if he had followed his owne minde, and not taken counſell, might have repented, when it had been too late.

Verſ. 24. Col. 3. 7. The way of life is above to the wiſe, that he may depart from hell beneath; That is, he ſets his minde upon things above, as is commanded, that is, heavenly, beleeving, living, and doing ſo, as that he may when he dyeth, aſcend to heaven above, and avoyd coming in hell beneath, which all they ſhall be in danger to doe, that minde not heavenly things, but are drowned in worldly cares, ſaying, What ſhall we eate or drinke, or where-with ſhall we be cloathed? which Chriſt hath forbidden. Matth. 6.

Beda

Beda. The way of life is above, becauſe it is taught of God above, and man of himſelfe knoweth it not, till that God teacheth it him. Some it is above, becauſe an hard way, and ſo above our power, if we were left to our ſelves, it being as it were a ſteep aſcent: but the way of death is beneath, downe, which a man may eaſily goe, and he goeth herein that liveth in ſinne; much like unto which is the ſaying of our Lord, Streight is the way that leadeth to life, and there be few that finde it, but the way of death is broad. Matth. 7. 14.

The Lord will deſtroy the houſe of the proud, but he will eſtabliſh the border of the widow. By proud men here underſtand mighty men in this world, that being without conſcience of right or wrong, oppreſſe the poor, and take their inheritances from them, as Ahab did Nabeths vineyard from him; Such may flouriſh for a time, but in the end they ſhall be deſtroyed, and through Gods juſt judgement loſe their lands and inheritances; but the poore thus wronged by them, ſhall in their poſterity enjoy theirs again; for by the Widow, who is moſt ſubject to oppreſſion, the poore and weake are generally underſtood, and by their borders their lands, the borders whereof were ſet, when inheritances were divided amongſt them. But all Widowes, as Lavater noteth, are not the widowes thus ſpecially patronized, and protected by God, but ſuch as are deſcribed, 1 Tim. 5. Of Gods care of Widowes, ſee Exod. 22. 22. Eſa. 1. 17. Jam. 1. ult. Of his deſtroying the proud, ſee the example of Pharaoh, Senacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, and Herod, and of Ahab and proud Jezabel. Verſ. 25. Lavater.

Ambroſe ſaith, that God taketh widowes eſpecially into his protection, becoming as an husband unto them, for their encouragement to live and ſerve him in Widow-hood; and that he is offended for no ſinne ſo much committed by man againſt man, as for the oppreſſion of widowes, as appeareth by many places. Beda expounds this of heretickes inſulting proudly over the true Church, and the Church, which is as Chriſts widow in this world, whoſe borders God will eſtabliſh, and inlarge all over the world. Ambroſ. offic. l. c. 29. Beda.

The thoughts of the wicked are abomination to the Lord, but the words of the pure are pleaſant. Wicked men have evill thoughts, and godly men pure thoughts and ſpeeches, the one are abomination to God, although they breake not out into act, the other coming from a pure fountaine, the heart, and being ordered according to the rule of purity, the word of God, are pleaſant to him, and he taketh delight herein. Hereby it appeareth, that God knoweth the thoughts of men, which even Zeno the Stoicke knew well, and therefore to one asking him, whether a man doing evill, might not avoid the knowledge of God? anſwered, no, nor thinking it. 2. Evill thoughts are ſinnes, and abominable ſins contrary to the opinion of naturall men, that thought is free. 3. He is a wicked man that hath evill thoughts in his heart, although he ſpeaketh good words. 4. Although a man of evill thoughts: a man of evill thoughts may ſpeake good words, yet they are not pleaſing to God, for thoſe words onely are pleaſing to him that come from the pure in heart. 5. None but good words come from ſuch at any time, if through over-ſight any doe, they looke better thenceforth to their wayes, that they offend not with their tongue. Verſ. 26. Matth. 5. 5. Pſal. 39. 1.

And they that are pure in heart, utter themſelves in ſpeech edifyingly, not being ſullenly ſilent, nor vainglorioully talkative. Some reſtraine the thoughts here ſpoken of, to the unchaſte, ſome to thoughts and inventions of miſchiefe in one man againſt another; and contrariwiſe the words of the pure, to chaſte and true, free from fraud, but of this reſtraint I ſee no reaſon.

He that is greedy of gaine troubleth his owne houſe, but he that hateth gifts ſhall live. This is ſpoken to deterre men from covetous ſeeking to get the world by right or wrong, ſuch can never live in quiet, but through their unjuſt dealing bring trouble and ſuits in Law upon themſelves and poſterity, to whom they leave their inheritance ſo ill gotten. But he that is averſe from taking bribes to prevent juſtice, will certainly avoid all other unjuſt dealing alſo, and therefore hee ſhall alwayes live in peace and quietneſſe. Verſ. 27.

The heart of the righteous ſtudieth to anſwer, but the mouth of the wicked poureth out evill things. Not much unlike to this is Verſe 2. and Chap. 14. 33. Verſ. 28.

and therefore for expoſition, the Reader may have recourſe thither, onely theſe words, The heart of the righteous ſtudieth to anſwer, are in vulgar Latine rendred, meditateth obedience, becauſe the ſame word ענות ſignifieth humble as well as anſwer, and becauſe humility is the foundation of obedience. But thus it anſwereth not to the next words of the wicked mans mouth pouring out evill things. Therefore to hold to the New Tranſlation, the meaning is, hee premeditateth before he ſpeaketh, and ſo ſpeaketh to the purpoſe that which is ſolid: but the foole, whatſoever cometh to his tongues end, without any premeditation, by which meanes not onely idle and vaine prate comes from him, but alſo filthy words, oaths, and lyes, and fooliſh jeaſtings &c.

Verſ. 29. The Lord is farre from the wicked, but he heareth the prayer of the righteous: That is, he is like one afarre off for hearing, being otherwiſe neare to every man. Bernard conſidering that there be two impediments of hearing, nigh deafneſſe, the other a farre diſtance, ſaith, that ſometime God heareth not, becauſe hee ſtops his eares, and will not heare, viz. in caſe of hard-heartedneſſe towards the poore, as he ſaith, He that ſtops his eares againſt the cry of the poore, ſhall cry unto God, and he will not heare him; ſometime he heareth not, becauſe he ſtands as it were at a farre diſtance, as in caſe that he be proud that prayeth, For God lookes upon the proud afar off, but is neare to the humble.

Bernard.

Verſ. 30. The light of the eyes rejoyceth the heart, and a good report maketh the bones fat. Here are two things mentioned which are very pleaſing to men, ſome beautifull object ſet before the eyes, and a good report made of them coming to their eares, and therefore they are herein naturally much delighted; and this good report is their fame ſpread amongſt their neighbours, this is even as a fatning to the bones, as meat of the beſt, wherein one takes great pleaſure; ſo is every man pleaſed with a good report going of him, and to ſee friends and lovers flocking about him, pleaſant gardens and orchards, and faire buildings of his owne, a comely loving wife, faire children, &c.

The word rendred report is שמועה hearing is rendred therefore by ſome, a good meſſenger. Here are two things compared together, the firſt, light coming to the eyes, and good news to the eare; of the one it is ſaid, that it delighteth the heart; that is, the light of the morning with ſome comfort reſtored after a ſad and ſorrowfull night cheareth the heart of the other, It is a fatning to the bones; the meaning being according to ſome, that there is as much joy and comfort in this hearing, as in that ſeeing.

To me the words ſeeme to have coherence with verſe 29. where he had ſaid, The Lord heareth the prayers of the righteous; now to ſhew what a comfort this is, he ſaith, as the light is a comfort to the ſight, and ſo to the heart, ſo and much more is this hearing, being ſo great a joy, that it is enough to renew and ſtrengthen, not onely the inner, but the outward man alſo, as it is when the bones are filled with marrow, that all may flye wickedneſſe and purſue righteouſneſſe, that God may heare them calling upon him to their ſo great joy.

Note.

Verſ. 31. The eare that heareth the reproofe of life abideth amongſt the wiſe.
Verſ. 32. He that refuſeth inſtruction, deſpiſeth his owne ſoule, but he that heareth reproofe getteth underſtanding. Something like unto this hath beene ſaid, verſ. 10. By reproofe of life, underſtand reproofe tending to the reformation of a mans life, and conſequently the attaining of life everlaſting, by ſaying the eare that heareth, he meaneth the man that heareth and obeyeth, he ſhall abide amongſt the wiſe; that is, be ſet up with them, and advanced to wealth and honour in this world, if God ſeeth it meet for him, and he be fit for it, but howſoever he fareth here, he ſhall have place amongſt them in the glory to come; contrariwiſe death and deſtruction ſhall be to ſuch as hate reproof, as verſe 10. and thus he ſhall prove one that deſpiſeth or ſetteth light by his owne ſoule in the end, that deſpiſeth inſtruction and reproofe, going on notwithſtanding this obſtinacy in his evill wayes.

But he that heareth reproofe getteth underſtanding; that is, as was ſaid at the firſt, cometh by this meanes to be one of them that are wiſe to ſalvation. All

which tendeth to ſhew the neceſſity of reproofe, and making a good uſe of it, as a man tenders the good of his owne ſoule, ſo that he is a foole, and void of all wiſdome, that hateth reproofe. Note.

The feare of the Lord is the inſtruction of wiſdome, and before honour is humility, Chap. 1.7. The feare of the Lord is the beginning of wiſdome, or the head of wiſdome, the principall part thereof, the ſame is meant here, they are wiſe and well inſtructed and taught that feare God; and becauſe none ſubmit themſelves thus to do but the humble, before any man comes to this, and ſo to the honour that ſhall be to the wiſe, he is humble, and not proud. Verſ. 33.

CHAP. XVI.

THe preparations of the heart in man, but the anſwer of the tongue is from the Lord. When a man by ſtudy is beſt prepared to ſpeak, or to make an Oration, or Sermon. yet if God giveth him not utterance in going about to ſpeake, hee ſhall be confounded. There is need then of a double grace to him that would ſpeake well. Verſ. 1.

1. Of preparation of the heart, whereby he attaineth the knowledge of good things to be uttered by him, having conned them by heart, as we ſay.

2. Of elocution to ſpeake them for the inſtruction of others: For in ſaying, The preparations of the heart in man, he meaneth not, that they are in him without God, but when through the helpe of God his preparation is made to ſpeake, there is further need of the help of God and of his Spirit to utter the matter ſo prepared; for without his helpe a man ſhall either be confounded, not knowing what to ſay, as ſome have ſometimes beene, or things may ſlip from him beſides his matter premeditated, to doe more hurt, then good; to prevent which, Gods aſſiſtance muſt be deſired, that a man may freely ſpeake, as Paul deſireth the Epheſians to pray, that a doore of utterance might be opened unto him, and that he would moderate and guide the tongue ſo in ſpeaking, that herewith nothing may be ſpoken, but according to the preparation made. Eph. 6.19.

Pelagius urged much this ſentence to prove free-will in man, becauſe he that can prepare his owne heart muſt needs have liberty of will ſo to doe; but Auguſtine anſwereth, that although the preparations of the heart are in man, yet hereby it is not implied, without God co-operating with him in his ſtudies. Some underſtand this of the anſwer of the tongue, onely in caſe of being queſtioned, when ſo, for him to anſwer ſo as to ſatisfie the queſtioner, is from God. This is too ſtrict, yet ſomewhat is ſaid, which is alſo meant here, the beſt prepared matter, when it cometh to be uttered, cannot take effect in the hearers without God, and his Spirit working therewith, as is ſaid, 1 Cor. 3.7. Pelagius. Auguſt. Cajetan.

All the wayes of a man are cleane in his owne eyes, but the Lord weigheth the ſpirits. Chap. 12.15. it is ſpoken almoſt to the ſame effect; the meaning is plaine, a wicked man is ſo fooliſh (for he is there called a foole, that is here called a man;) that he thinketh even his owne wayes and doings good and right, as ſuppoſing that he hath reaſon to juſtifie them; For as Quintilian ſaith, there was never a reaſon wanting to any hainous wickedneſſe, and the ſame is true touching thoſe that are in the way of errour, their opinions ſeeme to themſelves good and true, though never ſo erroneous. But the Lord weigheth the ſpirits, the things done by them may be good, as giving almes, praying, reading, preaching, and hearing of the word, but their hearts and ſpirits not being right that doe theſe things, they are wicked and abominable to God; if vain-glory or worldly gaine be herein aimed at, or by theſe outward performances it be thought that God is well pleaſed, the heart being afarre of. Verſ. 2. Quintilian. Sceleri nunquam defuit ratio.

This ſerves to ſhew the blindneſſe of wicked men and hereticks, and the cauſe why they goe on in their evill wayes, and are not reformed, although their ſinnes and errours be plainly laid open, yet they will not thinke of them; but as of truth Note.

truth and righteouſneſſe, as the wicked Jewes ſaid, That the wayes of the Lord were unequall, and their owne wayes equall; but this ſhall not ſtand, but as in a well ordered Commonwealth things are weighed by the Kings Standard, and then they that have falſe ballances are found out and puniſhed, ſo God will bring to weighing in his ballance all their doings and opinions, ſet forth here by the word ſpirits, becauſe they are carried unto them by an evill ſpirit, if the thing done bee evil, and not by the Spirit of God ſpeaking in his word, or if for matter it be good but done with an evill heart, or in an ill manner, for all ſuch ſhall be weighed and judged alike to condemnation.

Verſ. 3. Commit thy workes to the Lord, and thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed; That is, whereas wicked men are conceited of their owne doings, that they are right and juſt, which yet coming to be weighed will be found otherwiſe, Verſe 2. Let thy workes, who feareſt God, be regulated by his word, and by prayer commit them for good ſucceſſe to him, and then thou ſhalt not thinke to bring them to a good paſſe in vaine, but as thou thinkeſt and expecteſt, it ſhall be done. For thus the Apoſtle directeth, ſaying, Be carefull for nothing, but in every thing by prayer and ſupplication, let your requeſts be made knowne to God; thus thy thoughts ſhall be eſtabliſhed. The Hebrew word is roule, expounded by ſome, referre all to his glory, then thy thoughts ſhall be directed aright when thou doeſt thus, neither ſhalt thou erre, as they doe that ſeeke themſelves in their good workes; I thinke it beſt to joyne both theſe together.

Matth. 5. 16.

Verſ. 4. The Lord hath made all things for himſelfe, yea, the wicked for the day of evill. God in making men and women, and all other creatures ſought his owne glory, as the maine ſcope and end of all his workes.

But how is it ſaid, that he made the wicked for the evill day? that is, the day of judgement; for all things which God made were good, and man being made good is not made wicked by God, but by being drawne away by his owne concupiſcence, and inticed, or as Eccleſiaſtes ſaith, by ſeeking to himſelfe many inventions. His making of him then for the day of evill is nothing elſe, but his ordaining him to everlaſting condemnation for this wickedneſſe to the glory of his juſtice. For as Auguſtine ſaith, the good he hath both made and ordained, but the wicked he made not ſuch, but onely ordained them to their juſt puniſhment; for he both made and ordained kindes and natures, but privations, ſuch as wicked are, he made not, but ordained, as it is ſaid of the light, that he made it, but not likewiſe of the darkneſſe. But why doth the Lord ordaine ſome to judgement? This may be reſolved from the word here uſed in ſpeaking of ſuch, the wicked, he ordaineth them to evill, becauſe they are wicked, not as many hold, meerly of his owne will, as the potter, being hereby carryed, onely makes ſome veſſels to diſhonour, for this would be little to the praiſe of his juſtice, and his will is declared to be to the contrary, Ezek. 18. 2 Pet. 3. And by that ſimilitude taken from a Potter, it is onely ſhewed, that God could have done ſo, that no man may open his mouth againſt his doing in condemning ſome, when he electeth others, but not that he may not open his mouth in vindicating God from being contrary to himſelfe, or his juſtice from cruelty towards his poore creatures. But I have ſpoken enough upon this Rom. 9.

Verſ. 5. Every one that is proud in heart, is an abomination to the Lord, though hand joyne in hand, he ſhall not be unpuniſhed. The proud in heart are here ſpoken againſt, becauſe many, who neither have proud looks, nor rich apparrell, are yet proud and ſtout. Though hand joyne in hand. This is the ſame with Chap. 11. 27.

Verſ. 6. By mercy and truth ſinne is purged, and by the feare of the Lord men depart from evill. Deliverance from ſinne, and purging therefrom, as the meritorious and efficient cauſe thereof, is the bloud of Chriſt, and therefore mercy and truth doth not thus cleanſe from ſinne: but that almes-deeds cleanſe, our Lord teacheth, Luke 11. 41. and Dan. 4. 17. but this is, when he that beleeveth in Chriſt doth acts of mercy, and ſo is declared to be cleane from ſinne, wherewith all they are ſtill polluted, that onely beleeve being without good workes, what outward meanes elſe ſoever they uſe; it is true, the act of beleeving at that inſtant cleanſeth the ſoule in the ſight of God, if it be by a true faith, but this faith is not true and lively, unleſſe it be thus operated by love; a true Beleever then is made cleane by beleeving, but then only doth it appeare that he beleeveth ſo, when he bringeth forth fruits of mercy and love, and therefore now we may ſay, he is cleanſed indeed. And as a man is thus purged from ſinne paſt, ſo by the feare of God he is kept from ſin for time to come. Jam. 2.

Some alſo interpret this purging from ſinne in reſpect of temporall Judgements, out of which Mercy helpeth, and from which being falne into them, Mercy delivereth; becauſe he ſhall have mercy that ſheweth mercy. Muffet. Matth. 5.

Some to avoyd the Popiſh tenet, founded here about the merit of good Works, expound it of Gods mercy in Chriſt, whereby ſinne is purged; but there needs no ſuch ſhift to avoyd that errour, as may be gathered from that hath been already ſaid. Lavater.

When a mans wayes pleaſe the Lord, he maketh even his enemies at peace with him. The ſcope of this place is to ſtirre up to the good before commended to our practiſe ver. 6. becauſe he that doth ſo, walketh in wayes pleaſing to God, and if he hath enemies in this world, he both can, and will reconcile their mindes towards him, ſo that the Wolfe and the Lion ſhall dwell with the Lambe, and the Kid. Verſ. 7. Eſa. 11.

Some expound it of Spirituall enemies, the Will, Affections, and Deſires, which are worldly, and when they are ſo, be a mans great enemies; but when a man is converted, and ſo his wayes are pleaſing to God, theſe are quiet, and ſubject themſelves to the ſpirit in him; but the contrary is true, for even in thoſe that have the Spirit, there is the fleſh fighting againſt it, therefore this is only an incouragement to feare God, and to ſeeke to pleaſe him, not men, for God will provide, that men ſhall doe no harme to ſuch, although they be of a contrary minde; yea, ſometimes they ſhall be brought from a contrary to be of the ſame minde, and ſo of enemies to be moſt loving friends; Verſe eight is the ſame in effect with Chapter 15. 16. Gal. 5. 17. Rom. 7.

A mans heart deviſeth his way, but the Lord directeth his ſteps. This is not much unlike to ver. 1. only that which is there ſaid of ſpeaking, is here ſaid of going about this, or that, or doing, herein man may determine what he will, but ſhall not be able to goe, or doe, but as God pleaſeth, that we may crave his aſſiſtance in all things, and be comforted againſt the threatnings of enemies. Verſ. 9.

A divine ſentence is in the lips of the King, his mouth tranſgreſſeth not in judgement; That is, according to the high place wherein God hath ſet him, he giveth him many times a divining faculty, as it were, to finde out the truth, when he ſitteth in judgement. This Salomon ſpake by his owne experience which he had of the truth hereof, in the caſe of the two Harlots, that came before him. Verſ. 10.

This may alſo be underſtood of a King, ſetting himſelfe to enact good Lawes with his Counſell about him, concerning the Common-wealth, when he ſincerely doth thus, ſeeking not ſo much his owne private as the Publique good, God whoſe Vice-gerent he is, doth ſo extraordinarily aſſiſt him, as that his ſayings are as Oracles, and accordingly by the people to be received, and obeyed; the ſcope of this is to make the King ſo by all his Subjects to be reverenced, as that when he hath given his judgement without any tergiverſation to reſt herein, and not to preſume to oppoſe him, who is ſo neare to God, and ſo extraordinary gifted by him as not to erre, and therefore to acquieſce in his Sentence; he that doth not, but reſiſts, ſhall reape to himſelfe damnation, becauſe he ſo little conſidereth the neare relation betwixt God and him. Some, becauſe no King elſe is free from erring, ſay that Chriſt is meant here, and the King following the rule preſcribed unto him, as Deut. 17.

A juſt weight and ballance are the Lords, all the weights of the bag are his work; ſee before, ch. 11. 1. how wel pleaſing to God juſt weights and ballances are; but here the Kings ſentence being ſpoken of, ver. 10. as Divine; that is, Gods Sentence Verſ. 11.
